THE PREFACE TO THE READER.

IT may not be improper to acquaint the Reader with a ſhort Character of the following Centuries, the Hiſtory of which the learned and judicious M. Du Pin hath handled with ſo much Juſtneſs and Impartiality, notwithſtanding the Diſcouragements he has met with from the Heads of his own Church, for his free and ingenuous Account of the preceding ones.

Altho' the Authors of the ſeventh and eighth Centuries are not to be compared with thoſe of the former, yet ſome flouriſhed in them that are not to be deſpiſed; 'tis true the greateſt part of them were only Compilers or Imitators: Yet we may ſtill find among them ſome Remains of Learning, Judgment, good Taſte, and even Eloquence. It was in this Age they began to reduce the Arts and Sciences to a Method, and to digeſt the Doctrines of Religion into Syſtems. It was then that the firſt Treatiſes on all the Points of Divinity appeared. The Diſcipline of the Church which was much relaxed by the Irregularities of the greater part of Chriſtians, and chiefly of the Eccleſiaſticks, was ſupported by ſeveral good Canons of the Councils. The Church of Spain made a great Number in the ſeventh Century, and that of France in the eighth; but the People payed ſo little regard to them, that they were obliged to uſe the Authority of the Princes Edicts to get them executed. The Church of England produced ſeveral great Men and good Laws: The Grecian Eloquence degenerated very much from its former Splendor; their Sermons were for the moſt part only Declamations, full of Fuſtian and Trifles; and their dogmatical Compoſitions were very dry and barren; the Spiritual Meadow ſhews how fond Men were at that time of Fables, and the Acts of the Council of Nice, how ignorant they were in Criticiſm. The Penitentials, which ſeem'd to be deſign'd for the Preſervation of the Diſcipline of Penance, corrupted its Purity, and deſtroy'd its ancient Severity; as likewiſe the caſuiſtical Books which ought to have ſecured Morality, became the Cauſes of its Corruption: Publick Penances grew very uncommon, and private ones more frequent: Auricular Confeſſions, of all ſorts of Sins, was then much in uſe. Prieſts ſaid Maſs every Day. The Communion was received in both Kinds, but the Bread they offer'd, was leſs than in former times. The Rites and Ceremonies of the Roman Church were introduced into moſt of the Weſtern Churches, but particularly thoſe of France. The Popes became very powerful in their temporal Sovereignty, by the Donations of Pepin and his Succeſſors. Great Ignorance and Licentiouſneſs reigned among the Biſhops and the reſt of the Clergy; and the Princes labour'd exceedingly to reform them. Some Biſhops willing to reform their inferior Clergy, were obliged to make them live in Cloyſters like the Monks; it is from this the Order of Canon Regulars took their Riſe, which Chrodegand Biſhop of Mets ſeems to have inſtituted. In ſhort, there was much Superſtition, and little ſolid Piety in this Age; as witneſs the Adoration of Images, which was now firſt broached: And here we cannot enough admire, with what Juſtneſs and Fidelity our excellent Author relates the Diſputes which were carried on in the ſecond Council of Nice, on that Subject. And this Piece of Hiſtory alone is ſufficient to let any rational Man ſee, how late that idolatrous Innovation was introduced into the Church, and how little the primitive Chriſtians even dreamt of it.

The Ninth Century.

The Ninth Century was perplexed with ſo many intricate Controverſies quite through it, that ſcarce any Perſon, but one of Mr. du Pin's great Abilities, and firm Judgment, would have dared to meddle with it; yet he hath done it with that Clearneſs, Integrity, and Faithfulneſs, that it is render'd one of the moſt profitable Parts of Church-Hiſtory. Indeed, the Roughneſs of the Way hath forced him out of his former Method, and this Part of his Hiſtory appears in a different Dreſs from his former; yet the ſame Ingenuity, Learning, and Freedom, is ſo viſible throughout, that no Man that hath any thing of the Critick, can doubt it to be his; and, the different Method hath made the Controverſies of the Age ſo clear, that that Hiſtory, which in our Annals ſeems very confuſed, is, by his Way of Management, rendered not only clear and intelligible; but extreamly pleaſant and delightful, ſerving to give Light to ſome of the greateſt Conteſts, which have diſturbed the Church in theſe Latter Ages; particularly thoſe of Predeſtination, and Grace, Chriſt's Real Preſence in the Sacrament, &c. Some of the Controverſies being ſuch, as are at this Day hotly debated, between the Church of Rome and the Proteſtants: It may be juſtly ſuſpected, that our Author ſhould repreſent Things moſt fairly for the Romiſh Side, in which, by his Profeſſion, he is engaged, few being impartial in ſuch Caſes; but, to the juſt Commendation of Mr. Du Pin's Integrity, it ought to be ſaid, that he hath even in thoſe Points, no farther inclined to his own Side, than the Zeal of the contending Parties hath juſtly obliged him, and the Words of the Controvertiſts will fairly bear, which is confeſs'd, are ſometimes through the Heat of Contention, and ἀμετριοφρονοῦντες, very extravagant; but that ought to be imputed to the Author he is ſpeaking of, not Mr, du Pin: So that conſidering the Temptation our Author had to be partial in the Hiſtory of this Century, more than in any of the former, he is more to be admired for his Impartiality and Integrity in this, than in the Former Volumes.

Tenth Century.

The greateſt Part of the Hiſtorians, who have delivered their Opinions concerning the Character of the Tenth Century, have repreſented it as an Age of Darkneſs, Ignorance and Obſcurity, accompanied with notorious Diſorders and Irregularities. The Author of a Treatiſe, call'd, The Perpetuity of the Faith, has undertaken to vindicate it from these Censures, and to make it appear on the contrary, That it is one of the most happy Ages of the Church, and that its Disorders being only such as were common to the Preceding, it has some very remarkable Advantages: But a third Writer, who would seem to keep the middle Way between both these Extremes, appears (in my Opinion) to have come nearer to the Mark. For if on the one Side, the Author of the Perpetuity has well observ'd, that there were Holy Men, and some clear-sighted Persons in that Century; it cannot be denyed on the other side, That Ignorance, Vices and Irregularities were generally very predominant. The inconsiderable Number of Authors, who wrote; the few Works they left; the Rudeness and Barbarism of their Stile; the Matters contained in their Dissertations; and the Complaints that even those Writers themselves make, of the Disorders which prevailed in their Time; are evident Proofs, That the Censures pass'd upon that Century, are not without sufficient Ground: And if a due Comparison be made, between the Writers, the Works, the Subjects treated of, the Constitutions of Councils, the Church-Discipline, and the Manners of the Christians of the same Age, with those of the preceding; it cannot but be readily acknowledg'd, that it is in many Respects inferior to them.

Lesser Perpet. Part III. p. 365.

'Tis true indeed, that there were Irregularities in all the Ages of the Church, but that they were Commensurate to those which were so common in the Tenth Century; or that they were spread abroad so far, or become so general, is an Assertion, which cannot be maintained with any Manner of Probability: For who can avouch with Assurance, That that Age had as great a share in Learning and Eloquence; was as fruitful in illustrious Personages and Ecclesiastical Writers; or was as productive of excellent Works and regular Constitutions as the preceding Centuries? Who would adventure to compare the Popes John IX, X, XII, and XIII. and the other Bishops of Rome, who lived in the Tenth Century, I will not say, to S. Leo, or S. Gregory, but even to those Popes, who were less eminent in former Times? Or who would attempt to set up Ratherius, Atto, Flodoard, Luitprand, Metaphrastes, and other Ecclesiastical Writers, whose Number is very small, not to say in Opposition to S. Athanasius, S. Basil, S. Ambrose, S. Augustin, Eusebius, and Theodoret; but even to the more common Authors of the preceding Ages? Upon the Whole, it ought to be certainly determin'd, That 'tis not without good Reason, that that Century, in Comparison of the foregoing, and even of those that follow it, has been generally stil'd, The Age of Darkness, Ignorance, and Obscurity. However it must be acknowledged, That 'twas not altogether dark, and that it brought forth some Lights, which penetrated the Darkness, and dispers'd Part of the Obscurity. The most ingenious M. Du PIN followed these Luminaries, and took them for his Guides, in writing the Ecclesiastical History of the Age in which they flourished, and in giving an impartial Account of the Matters treated of by them; which he has done with that Clearness, Generosity and Integrity, which is so inseparable from the Character of this great Man.

The Eleventh Century.

In the Eleventh Century, different Opinions arose concerning the holy Sacraments; the Latin and Greek Churches came to an open Rupture; the Popes took upon them to depose Emperors and Kings; and scholastick Divinity, the Source of an infinite Number of Questions, took then its first Rise. The Minds of Men being recovered, as it were, from that Lethargy, wherewith they were seiz'd in the preceding Age; they began to apply themselves to Study, in the beginning of this: Insomuch that in a short Space of Time, all Europe was fill'd with judicious and learned Personages, who communicated their Knowledge to others, either by Publick Lectures or Writings.

The Controversies, that afterwards arose, were likewise a powerful Motive to excite them to Study; and gave Occasion to those, who were endow'd with extraordinary Parts, to exercise their Pens, and to shew their Learning. Some were very successful in imitating the Ancients, both in their Style and Manner of Writing; but the greatest Part of them still retain'd somewhat of the Barbarism and Courseness of the former Age, and others fell into that uncouth and barren Method of handling Matters, which is more especially peculiar to Logicians. The most notorious Disorders were regulated; enormous Crimes were restrain'd; and the Bishops took a great deal of Pains in reforming Church-Discipline; which nevertheless, was not restor'd to its ancient Perfection. Thus much may serve to give a general Idea of the Eleventh Century, which the learned M. DU PIN (according to his usual Method) has improved to the best Advantage.

The Twelfth Century.

The Twelfth Century contains a greater Number of Authors than the Ages before it, some whereof may be compared to the greatest Lights of the Church. We here find the Empire and the Church at Difference; The Church of Rome disturb'd by obstinate Schisms; The Popes at War with the Emperors; The Kings and Bishops in Dispute about their Rights. The Dignity of the Sacraments, and the external Worship in Religion, as also its Principles are attack'd by monstrous and ridiculous Heresies. Scholastick Divinity becomes the common Study, and the Body of the Canon-Law, such as it is at present, was form'd and established in this Twelfth Century. The Church is stock'd with abundance of Monastick and Regular Orders. The Immunities and Exemptions of the Revenues of the Church and Ecclesiastical Persons are vigorously supported by the Bishops, and maintained by the Decrees of Councils. And finally, the Manners of Ecclesiasticks and the external Ceremonies of the Church are reformed in this Age by several very useful Regulations. This is what the Reader will find in the History and Extracts of the Authors and Councils of this Twelfth Century.

The Thirteenth Century.

The Thirteenth Century was covered with some Remains of that Ignorance and Barbarism, which reigned in the last preceding Ages: But this is so far from being any just Prejudice against this History, that it should rather invite the Ingenious Reader's Curiosity, when he considers, that the excellent Historian has enlightned these dark Ages, by giving a clearer Account of them than any one Writer before him; for he has brought to light some notable Pieces of History which seem'd to be buried in Oblivion, and collected together the several Fragments which were scatter'd in many Volumes, and plac'd them in such a clear light, that the Darkness of the Times serves to set off and commend the Judgment of the Historian. It is his peculiar Excellency, that he gives a just Idea of the most considerable Ecclesiastical Writers in all the Ages of the Church; not by general Characters, but by giving an account of the Matters handled in their Works, and taking judicious Extracts out of them; and particularly, he has added to the History of each Century such useful Observations, as give the Reader a general Idea of the great Transactions then on foot: So that nothing seems to be wanting to render the Translation of this Century compleat, but some Remarks which may be of use to the Protestant Reader, of which I shall therefore present him with a few, relating to the Controversies between the Roman Church and the Church of England.

It has been observed by Monsieur Du Pin and others, That School-Divinity was corrupted in the 13*th* Century, by introducing into it the Principles of Aristotle's Philosophy, whereby all Matters of Doctrine were resolved into a great many curious and useless Questions, and decided by the Maxims of that Philosophy (which yet was learned not from the Greek Originals, but the corrupt Versions of the Arabians) as if they were of equal Authority with the Scriptures: And as this mixture corrupted the Simplicity of the ancient Christian Faith, so it was the cause of many Mischiefs, among which I reckon this to be none of the least, that it furnish'd Men with such Principles as were subservient to maintain the Popish Doctrine of Transubstantiation, which begun in this Century to be established. As for Instance, this Philosophy taught Men, that Quantity is an Accident distinct and separable from Body, from whence they inferr'd the Possibility of the Replication and Penetration of Bodies, and maintain'd, as the School-men do to this Day, that the same Body may be in a thousand distant Places at the same time; that the same ſame Man may be alive at London and kill'd at Rome; that the whole Body of a luſty Man, with all its ſeveral Parts, may be crouded within the Compaſs of a Pins head, by which Doctrines they defended ſome of theſe Abſurdities, which are implied in Tranſubſtantiation, viz. That the Body of Chriſt is at the ſame time in Heaven and Earth, and in all the ſeveral Places where the Euchariſt is celebrated, that it is whole in the whole Loaf, and whole in every the leaſt part of it, and many other ſuch like Abſurdities, which are real Contradictions to the Nature of a Body, if Extenſion is eſſential to it, as it is held to be by the beſt Philoſophers both Ancient and Modern.

The firſt pretended General Council in which Tranſubſtantiation is ſaid to be eſtabliſhed, was the fourth Lateran Council under Innocent III. in the Year 1215. But Du Pin has plainly prov'd, that the Canons which go under the Name of this Council, were not made by the Council it ſelf, but only by Pope Innocent III. who read ſome of them in the Council, and after its Diſſolution added many more as he pleas'd, Diſſert. 7. de Antiq. Eccl. Diſcipl. Ch. 3. Sect. 4. which is a Trick that the Popes had commonly uſed in the 12*th* Century, who publiſh'd their own Conſtitutions as the Decrees of Councils, Du Pin Hiſt. Eccl. 12*th. Cent.* P. 217

I ſhall not pretend to give an Account what was the Doctrine of the firſt Eight Ages of the Church concerning the Euchariſt, which may be learned from Archbiſhop Uſher, Biſhop Coſins, and others. But to me it ſeems an Invincible Argument, that Tranſubſtantiation was not then believed, that the Jews and Heathens did not charge the Chriſtians with the Abſurdities and Contradictions, which are the obvious and natural Conſequences of that Doctrine.

As to the Term of Tranſubſtantiation, Du Pin ſays it was firſt uſed by Celles Biſhop of Chartres, and Stephen Biſhop of Autun, in the 12*th.* Century, p. 355. As to the Doctrine it ſelf, it appears to have been firſt publiſhed by Paſchaſius in his Treatiſe of the Body and Blood of our Saviour about the Year 832. wherein he aſſerts, That after the Conſecration under the Figure of Bread and Wine there is nothing but the Body and Blood of Chriſt; and which is yet more wonderful, he adds, It is no other Fleſh than that which was born of Mary, ſuffered on the Croſs, and roſe again from the Grave. He might very well call it wonderful Doctrine, not only for its apparent Abſurdity, but for its Novelty (ſince the like Expreſſions had never been uſed before) which is ingenuouſly confeſs'd by Bellarm. de Scriptor. Eccl. ad annum 850. and by Sirmondus in the Life of Paſchaſius prefixed to his Works, Par. 1618. and may be plainly proved from the Writings of the moſt learned Men in this Century. For, firſt, Claudius Biſhop of Turin, aſſerted the contrary Doctrine eighteen or nineteen Years before Paſchaſius's Book upon this Subject was publiſhed (which Doctrine was never oppos'd by thoſe who cenſur'd ſome other Opinions of his) as Dr. Allix ſhows from a Manuſcript Commentary of this Author's upon St. Matth. Remarks upon the Ancient Church of Piedmont, p 62, &c. II. In the ſame Century, after this Doctrine was publiſhed, it met with great Oppoſition from many eminent Men, ſuch as Ratramnus, Joannes Scotus, Amalarius, Florus, Druthmarus and Erigerus, all which are owned by Du Pin to have oppos'd the Doctrine of Paſchaſius, Cent. 9th. p. 84. to whom may be added Theodolphus Biſhop of Orleans, Walafridus Strabo Abbot of Richenou, Ahyto Biſhop of Baſil, and Rabanus Maurus Archbiſhop of Mayence, who did alſo oppoſe the Doctrine of Paſchaſius in the ſame Century; and particularly Rabanus in his Penitential, which was written in the Life-time of Paſchaſius, cenſures his Doctrine about the Euchariſt as a Novel Error, as is prov'd in a Diſſertation about Bertram's Book of the Body and Blood of Chriſt annexed to the Tranſlation of it, and printed at London in 1686.

I ſhall only add, that the Doctrine of Bertram's Book againſt Paſchaſius about the Euchariſt appears plainly to have been generally received by the Church of England in the Tenth Century, from the Paſchal Homily which Elfric Archbiſhop of Canterbury tranſlated into the Saxon Tongue about the Year 970. which is publiſhed at London in 1566. and atteſted to be a true Copy by the Hands of fifteen Prelates and ſeveral Noblemen; for this Book was commanded by a Canon to be read publickly to the People, as is obſerved by Dr. Cave Hiſt. Lit. p. 589. and contains the ſame Arguments, and for the moſt part the ſame Expreſſions which were us'd by Bertram againſt Tranſubſtantiation, as is prov'd by Archbiſhop Uſher in his Anſwer to the Jeſuites Challenge, c. 3.

And that Bertram's Book was directly levell'd againſt Tranſubſtantiation, as it is now defin'd by the Council of Trent will plainly appear, by citing a few Paſſages out of many that are in that little Book to this Purpoſe: For firſt he ſays expreſly, that the Euchariſt is the Body of Chriſt, not corporally but ſpiritually, and then he proves, That what is orally receiv'd in the Sacrament, is not Chriſt's natural Body, becauſe it is incorruptible; whereas that which we receive in the Euchariſt, is corruptible and viſible: And again, Chriſt's natural Body had all the organical Parts of a humane Body, and was quickened with a humane Soul, whereas his Body in the Sacrament hath neither; he proves that the Words of the Inſtitution are figurative, becauſe the Symbols have the Name of the Thing ſignified by them. 2. He ſays expreſly, That as to the Subſtance of the Creatures, what they were before Conſecration, they remain after it. Bread and Wine they were before Conſecration, and after it we ſee they continue Beings of the ſame kind and nature: He denies any natural Change, and affirms it to be only ſpiritual and inviſible, ſuch as was made of the Manna and Water in the Wilderneſs, into the Body and Blood of Chriſt.

Theſe Things are ſo plainly and frequently aſſerted in this Book, that I muſt tranſcribe the greateſt Part of it, if I would produce all the Paſſages which are to this Purpoſe; and therefore I cannot but wonder to find Du Pin ſo far miſtake the Queſtions which are handled by Bertram, as he does, in the Hiſtory of the Ninth Century, where he makes the Senſe of the firſt Queſtion to be this; Whether the Body and Blood of Chriſt be in the Euchariſt without a Veil, ſo as to appear to our outward Eyes; and the meaning of the Second to be no more than this, Whether the Body of Chriſt be in the ſame manner in the Euchariſt, as it was on Earth, and is in Heaven, and whether it be there in as viſible and palpable a Manner? for it cannot be ſuppos'd that ever any Man in his Wits ſhould maintain that the Body of Chriſt in the Euchariſt is viſible to our Eyes, with all its Lineaments and Diſtinction of Parts, and that the Fleſh and Bones there are palpable to our Hands; or that the Body of Chriſt in the Euchariſt is both earthly and corruptible as it was upon Earth, and ſpiritual and incorruptible as it is now in Heaven. Theſe are ſuch wild Imaginations as could never enter into the Mind of any Man of ſound Senſes; and therefore Bertram cannot be ſuppoſed ſuch a Fool, as to confute them ſeriouſly with many Arguments, and that in a Letter to the Emperor; which were no leſs Ridiculous, than if a Man ſhould write a Book on purpoſe to prove that a Man does not appear viſibly in the ſhape and figure of a Horſe, or a Mouſe like an Elephant. The main Queſtion of Bertram's Book then is not, as Du Pin puts it, Whether the Body of Chriſt be in the Euchariſt in as viſible and palpable a Manner as when he lived upon Earth; which I believe was never affirmed by any, either in that Age or any other. But, Whether in the Sacrament we receive the ſame Body of Chriſt which was born of the Virgin, crucified, and roſe again (ſuppoſing what is agreed on all hands that it is not viſibly there) and this he flatly denies, and plainly diſproves, in direct Oppoſition to Paſchaſius, and the Doctrine of the preſent Roman Church. He ſays indeed, the Elements are truly Chriſt's Body and Blood; but then he explains himſelf, they are not ſo as to their viſible Nature, but by the Power of the Divine Word; and then he adds, the viſible Creature feeds the Body, but the Virtue and Efficacy of the Divine Word feeds and ſanctifies the Souls of the Faithful. From which, and many other ſuch like like Expreſſions, it plainly appears that he did not believe the Sacrament to be a meer Sign and Figure of Chriſt's Body and Blood, but thought they were really preſent, not in a carnal but ſpiritual Senſe. 1. In regard of the ſpiritual Virtue and Efficacy of them, which by the Divine Bleſſing is communicated to the Faithful; in which ſenſe only they can be profitable to the Soul, for the Fleſh profits it nothing; and if Du Pin contends for the Real Preſence only in this Senſe, the Church of England will readily grant it; which has taught her Catechumens to ſay, that the Body and Blood of Chriſt are verily and indeed taken and receiv'd by the Faithful in the Lord's Supper. But if he contends for a corporal Preſence of Chriſt's natural Fleſh and Blood, the Doctrine of Bertram is no leſs expreſly againſt it, than that of the Church of England; and the latter may as eaſily be reconciled to Tranſubſtantiation, as the former.

And this I have the longer inſiſted upon, both becauſe moſt of the Writers of that Age, whom we have alledg'd againſt Tranſubſtantiation, follow the Principles, and make uſe of the Arguments and Expreſſions in Bertram's Book, and chiefly becauſe this Book ſeems to have been the Model by which the firſt Reformers fram'd this Article of the Euchariſt; for ſo Biſhop Ridley, who had a great hand in compiling this Article, intimates; as we find in the Preface of a Book De Cœna Domini, Printed at Geneva, in 1556. where he ſays, That it was this Book which firſt put him upon examining the old Opinion, about the Preſence of Chriſt's very Fleſh and Blood, by Scripture and Fathers, and converted him from the Errors of the Church of Rome in this Point; which is alſo affirm'd by Dr. Burnet's Hiſtory of the Reformation, Part II. Book I. p. 17. And this is what I thought fit to remark, for the Benefit of the Engliſh Reader, concerning the Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, which is ſaid to be eſtabliſhed in the Thirteenth Century, by Innocent III. concerning whom, I obſerve in the ſecond Place,

That this Pope was the firſt who publiſhed a Cruſade againſt the Albigenſes, which is a Way of enlightning Mens Underſtandings, by beating out their Brains, and converting them by the irreſiſtible Force of Sword and Gun; the ſame way which Mahomet us'd for propogating his Religion in the World, was followed by this Pope, whoſe cruel and barbarous Actions are no leſs agreeable to the Spirit of Mahomet, than they are contrary to that of Chriſt. The ſame Pope founded the Office of the Inquiſition, which at firſt did only draw up a Proceſs againſt Hereticks, and ſollicit the ordinary Judges to condemn them, but in a little time the Power of judging and condemning Hereſy was committed to them, and the Secular Judges did only execute their Sentence. And it is obſervable, that the Inquiſition was eſtabliſhed much about the ſame Time with Tranſubſtantiation; the Cruelty of the one being a fit Match for the Abſurdity of the other: And indeed this Holy Office was a neceſſary Engine to cram down the Throats of Mankind ſuch a choaking Morſel as Tranſubſtantiation.

M. Du Pin in this Hiſtory has given us ſome account of the barbarous Proceedings againſt the Albigenſes by the Croiſade and the Inquiſition, without paſſing any Cenſure upon theſe Actions; but leſt any ſhould ſuſpect by his Silence, that he approved them, I will now briefly ſhew you what Opinion he had of all corporal Puniſhments, when they are uſed by Eccleſiaſticks. And this will appear from his Book of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, Diſſert. 7. where 1*ſt.* in the Preface he tells us, That the Civil Power reſpects Mens Bodies, which may be forced to a Compliance, and therefore the Civil Magiſtrate may puniſh Men with corporal Puniſhment and Death; but the Eccleſiaſtical Power reſpects Mens Minds which cannot be forc'd; and therefore the Governors of this Society can only reclaim Men from their Vices by Exhortations and Commands, which if they do not obey, they can inflict no other Puniſhment but that of Excommunication. And then 2*dly.* in Ch. 1. Sect. 5. of the ſame Diſſertation, he proves that the Church has no Authority in Temporal Affairs, becauſe it cannot force Men by corporal Puniſhment, and Deprivation of their Goods: For, ſays he, 'tis a thing unheard of among the Ancients, that the Church ſhould inflict any other Puniſhment than that of Excommunication, or Depoſition. He owns, that after the Emperors became Chriſtian, their Affection to the Chriſtian Religion, and Deſire to preſerve the Empire in Peace, mov'd them ſometimes to baniſh or fine thoſe who were Ringleaders of Hereſy; which was very often done of their own proper motion; and ſometimes, but ſeldom, at the deſire of the Fathers of the Church: But it was only in the latter Ages that the Church obtain'd of the Emperors a Power to inflict corporal Puniſhment. For proof of this he ſhews, 1*ſt. That Chriſt gave to the Church no Power but what is ſpiritual, nor did order the Obſtinate and Diſobedient to be otherwiſe puniſh'd, than by excluding them from Communion.* But this is not all, for he ſhews in the 2*d.* place, (whatever Power Churchmen may have received from Magiſtrates over Mens Bodies) That nothing is more contrary to the Deſign of the Goſpel than ſuch a Power as ſtrikes Terror into the Minds of Men, which he proves from the Words of our Saviour to the Apoſtles, when they would have call'd for Fire from Heaven upon the Samaritans, Luke 9. 25. Ye know not what Spirit ye are of, for the Son of Man came not to deſtroy Mens Lives, but to ſave them. 3*dly.* He ſhews, That Chriſt forbad his Apoſtles to uſe the temporal Sword in defence of Religion, from the Rebuke that he gave to St. Peter for drawing his Sword; Put up thy Sword into the Sheath, for all they that take the Sword, ſhall periſh by the Sword, Matth. 26. And laſtly, he proves, That Eccleſiaſticks cannot uſe the temporal Sword, or civil Power, to force and puniſh Men, from the unanimous Conſent of the Fathers, whom he there quotes. And this may ſuffice to ſhew what Opinion Du Pin had of this Wolf of a Paſtor, Innocent III. and the ſanguinary Methods he us'd to extirpate Hereticks, by the Cruſade, and the Inquiſition; ſince he declares, not only that Churchmen have no ſuch Power from Chriſt, and that it was never practis'd in the firſt and beſt Ages of the Church, but alſo, that it is contrary to the Deſign of the Goſpel to uſe ſuch Cruelties; and to the Mind of Chriſt to defend, and much more to propagate Religion by ſuch violent and bloody Methods.

The fourteenth Century.

The Fourteenth Century furniſhes us with many Subjects very pleaſing; for it repreſents to us the Conteſts between the Regal Dignity and Prieſthood, or rather the Kings and Popes (for the Kingly Function and Prieſthood do always fully agree, although the Men who are raiſed to thoſe great Dignities, differ much about the Bounds of their Power) the Deſtruction of a famous and powerful Order, the Church of Rome divided by a Schiſm of forty Years Continuance, the Decay of the Greek Empire, endangering the Ruin of it, the Greek Church diſturbed with frivolous Queſtions, the Order of Franciſcan Monks torn in pieces by odd Opinions, and extravagant Practices; divers Errors taught by Divines, and condemned by the Biſhops, or Univerſities, and ſeveral Diſorders ſuppreſſed by the Conſtitutions of Councils, and Biſhops. The Divines which flouriſhed in this Age followed the Method of the Schools, as their Predeceſſors had done. The Commentators upon Holy Scripture, the Preachers, and Monks produced nothing great, nor excellent, and the Hiſtorians nothing exact, or perfect. But the Study of the Civil Law came to its Perfection almoſt, and Human Learning, which had been a long Time neglected, was much ſtudied and improved about the Middle of this Age, by a certain Number of ingenious Men, who, by imitating the Antients, were eminent for their Skill in Languages, Oratory, and Poetry, and brought again into the World a Deſire of Antiquity, and a Love of profitable and certain Sciences.

VOL. II.

CONTAINING

An Account of the LIVES and WRITINGS of the Primitive FATHERS, that Flourished in the Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh, Twelfth, and Thirteenth, Centuries of Christianity, with Censures upon all their BOOKS, determining which are Genuine, and which Spurious.

St. ISIDORE of Sevil.

St. Isidore.

ST. Isidore the Son of Severianus, and Grand-Child of Theodorick, King of Italy, was born at Sevil. He succeeded his Brother St. Leander, in the Bishoprick of that City, about the Year 595. He held a Council in 623, and died in 636, having governed the Church of Sevil forty Years. This Bishop was a Man of great Reading and profound Learning, and has written upon divers Subjects. His Works may be divided into five Classes. The first comprehending those which concern Arts or Sciences. The second his Commentaries upon the Scripture. The third his dogmatical Tracts. The fourth his Treatises of of Church Discipline. And the last his Works of Morality or Piety.

The Book of Etymologies, or of Origins, is the largest of those of the First Class: He wrote it at the Request of Braulio Bishop of * Saragosa who divided it into twenty Books, and made up what Isidore had not finish'd. This Work is an Epitome of all Arts and Sciences; he explains the Terms, lays down the Principles, and shews what is most in use in each of them. What relates to Ecclesiastical Matters is as follows. In the Sixth Book he maketh a Catalogue of the Books of the Old and New Testament: In which he places, in the fourth Classis of the (a) Canonical Books the Primitive Church of Christ. St. Cyprian, (or rather Rufinus) in his Tract De Expos. Symb. having reckon'd up the Books in Order, which made up the Canon in his time, and omitting those which were accounted Apocryphal, says, Hæc sunt, &c. These are the Books which are received into the Canon by the Church; the other Books (meaning Tobit, &c.) are not Canonical. The same Catalogue of Canonical Writers do Origen in Eusebius Hist. Eccles. l. 6. c. 25, and the Council of Laodicea, c. 59. give us: So that there can be no doubt, but for the first four hundred Years, and more, the Canon was exactly the same that we now have. Indeed the Apocryphal Books were read in the Churches of the purer Ages to the Novices and Catechumens (as were also Clemens and Ignatius's Epistles, and Hermes's Book called Pastor, yea, and some of the later Fathers, as St. Jerome, Austine, and Innocent, give them very honourable Titles, calling them Sacred, Divine, Canonical; but then they mean not by Canonical as the Church of Rome doth, Canones Fidei a perfect rule both for Faith and Manners, but Canones Morum & Historiæ, profitable to instruction, and to inform Men in the History of the Jewish Church: And so far is this Doctrine of S. Isidore Orthodox in the Judgment of the Church of England our Mother. Art. 6.]

St. Isidore.

[(a) Canonical Books——Tobit, Ecclesiasticus.] As the Jews never acknowledged these Books to be Canonical, so neither did St. Cyprian, (or rather Rufinus) in his Tract De Expos. Symb. having reckon'd up the Books in Order, which made up the Canon in his time, and omitting those which were accounted Apocryphal, says, Hæc sunt, &c. These are the Books which are received into the Canon by the Church; the other Books (meaning Tobit, &c.) are not Canonical. The same Catalogue of Canonical Writers do Origen in Eusebius Hist. Eccles. l. 6. c. 25, and the Council of Laodicea, c. 59. give us: So that there can be no doubt, but for the first four hundred Years, and more, the Canon was exactly the same that we now have. Indeed the Apocryphal Books were read in the Churches of the purer Ages to the Novices and Catechumens (as were also Clemens and Ignatius's Epistles, and Hermes's Book called Pastor, yea, and some of the later Fathers, as St. Jerome, Austine, and Innocent, give them very honourable Titles, calling them Sacred, Divine, Canonical; but then they mean not by Canonical as the Church of Rome doth, Canones Fidei a perfect rule both for Faith and Manners, but Canones Morum & Historiæ, profitable to instruction, and to inform Men in the History of the Jewish Church: And so far is this Doctrine of S. Isidore Orthodox in the Judgment of the Church of England our Mother. Art. 6.]

Cypr. de exp. symb.

Con. Laod. anno 320. Euseb. Hist. Eccl. l. 3. c. 15, 16. Aug. de civ. Dei, l. 18. c. 36. Hieron. præf. in Conc. Flor. & Trident.

[* Cæsar-Augusta.]

of the Old Teſtament, Eccleſiaſticus, the Book of Wiſdom, Judith, Tobit, and the two Books of the Maccabees. He diſtinguiſheth three Senſes of the Scripture, the Hiſtorical, Moral and Allegorical. He ſpeaks of the Authors of the Canonical Books, and of thoſe that have compoſed Harmonies of the Goſpels. He reckons up but four General Councils. He makes a Paſchal Cycle. In fine he treats of the principal Feſtivals of the Jews and Chriſtians, and of the Adminiſtration of the Sacrament. He ſaith, it is called a Sacrifice, becauſe it is made ſacred by a myſtical Prayer, in remembrance of the Paſſion of our Lord. He defineth (b) a Sacrament, the Sign of an Holy Thing communicating Holineſs. He places in that rank Baptiſm, Chriſm, and the Euchariſt, which are, ſaith he, Sacraments, becauſe under the Veil of Corporeal Things, the divine Vertue does ſecretly operate Salvation. To the Unction he joyns the laying on of Hands, which brings down the Holy Ghoſt. He ſpeaks of Exorciſm. He makes the Apoſtles Authors of the Creed: which he thinks to have been called a Symbol, becauſe it is the Badge whereby Chriſtians know one another. He ſpeaks of Prayer, of Faſting, and of Penance, which, he ſays, is a voluntary Puniſhment for ones Sins. He defines Satisfaction, the Excluſion of the Cauſes and Occaſions of Sin, and the Ceſſation of Sinning. He calls Reconciliation the end of Penance. He diſtinguiſheth two ſorts of Exomologeſis or Confeſſion, the one of Praiſe, the other of Sins; and ſaith, both the one and the other are chiefly made to God. Laſtly, he makes mention of the Rogations or Litanies.

St. Iſidore.

[(b) A Sacrament—communicating Holineſs.] The Sacraments may in a pious and good Senſe be ſaid to communicate Sanctifying Grace and Holineſs, not ex opere operato, as the Church of Rome teacheth, but ex opere operantis, being moral Inſtruments of conferring and conveying the Grace of God to the Souls of all worthy Partakers of them, God being pleaſed by and with them, to work Spiritual Graces and Endowments in us: Non propter virtutem Sacramentorum quæ ſumimus, ſed propter vim fidei in Chriſto, qua illis communicamus. Not through any vertue in the Sacraments which we receive; but through Faith in the Receiver.]

Conc. Trid. ſeſſ. 7. c. 8.

In the ſeventh Book he treats of the Names and Attributes of God: Chap. 1. Of the Son of God, of his Qualities, of his metaphorical and natural Names. Chap. 2. Of the Holy Ghoſt. Chap. 3. of the Trinity, and of the appellative and relative Names of the Perſons. Chap. 4. Of Angels and their different Orders. Chap. 5. He explains alſo the Names of the Perſons mention'd in the Bible; he gives the definition of the Patriarchs, the Prophets, the Apoſtles, the Martyrs, the Clerks and Monks.

In the eighth Book he ſpeaks of the Church, of Hereſy, of the Number of the Sybils, &c.

The three Books of the differences of Names, or of the proper Signification of Words, written by the ſame Author, are a Grammatical Work; and the Book of the Nature of Things to [King] Siſebut, a Phyſical Treatiſe, of which we have nothing here to ſay.

To this Claſſis of St. Iſidore's Works may be added his Hiſtorical Tracts; which are a Chronological Abridgment, from the beginning of the World down to * Heraclius's Empire. An Hiſtory of the Goths, from the 176*th*. Year of Chriſt, to the Year 610. with an Epitome of the Hiſtory of the Vandals and Sueves. The Treatiſe of Eccleſiaſtical Writers, which we have defended in the Preface of the preceding Volume, and the Treatiſe of the Life and Death of certain Saints.

[*To the 17*th*. Year of the Empire of Heraclius, and to the Year 626.]

The Treatiſes that St. Iſidore writ upon the Bible, which may make up the Second Claſſis of his Works, are theſe: Some Prolegomena's, wherein he treats of the Authors of the Books of the Old and New Teſtament, ſome Annotations upon the Pentateuch, upon Joſhua, upon the Books of Kings, and upon Ezra, wherein he maketh ſome Remarks Literal or Moral, which are often grounded upon Names, which he explains according to his Fancy, or upon Obſervations of little ſolidity; a Book of Allegories on the Octateuch, which is a compendious Collection of Allegorical Expoſitions made by the Fathers before him; and a Commentary upon the Song of Solomon, which he expounds of the Church and Jeſus Chriſt, with great perſpicuity and brevity.

Of the Dogmatical Tracts of St. Iſidore, we have none remaining but two Books againſt the Jews, written to his Siſter * Florentina; in which he hath gathered ſome Paſſages of the Holy Scripture to prove our Religion. The Firſt of theſe two Books is upon the Paſſion, the Reſurrection, the Reign of Chriſt, and upon the Judgment. The Second is upon the Calling of the Gentiles, and the Eſtabliſhing of the Church: The Proofs he brings are ſolid, and his Reflections judicious.

[* Florentina, Dr. Cave.]

Among his Books of Diſcipline, that of the [Eccleſiaſtical or Divine] Offices is the moſt conſiderable. It is divided into two Books: In the Firſt he treats of the Parts and Ceremonies of Divine Service; he confeſſes, in the Primitive Church, Prayers were read with a plain turn of the Voice more like pronouncing than ſinging: He diſtinguiſheth two ſorts of Hymns, thoſe of the Scripture, of which the Holy Ghoſt is the Author, and thoſe of Mens Compoſition. He ſaith, St. Hilarius was the firſt that made any of them, and that after him St. Ambroſe did alſo compoſe ſome which have been recited in the Church of Milan, and from thence paſſed down to the other Weſtern Churches. And further ſays, that St. Ambroſe firſt eſtabliſhed the Uſe of Anthems, and that Reſponſes were invented in Italy. He diſtinguiſhes Seven Parts in the (c) Maſs, or the Canon, which he believes was (d) eſtabliſh'd by St. Peter. 1. The Admonition to the People, to ſtir them up to pray. 2. The Prayer to God, that he would receive the Prayers and Oblations of his People. 3. A Prayer for the Living who offered the Sacrifice, and (e) for the Dead. 4. The Prayer for Peace. 5. The Prayers for ſanctifying of the Bread and Wine. 6. The Confirmation of the Sacrament. 7. The Lord's Prayer. The Nicene Creed was alſo recited, and at laſt they bleſſed the People. Then he obſerveth that the Communion muſt be taken Faſting, and that

St. Iſidore.

[(c) Maſs or Canon.] The Word Miſſa or Maſs, is an old Latin Word, and ſignifies generally the whole Service of the Church, but more eſpecially the Holy Sacrament of Chriſt's Body and Blood. It was called Miſſa, or Demiſſio, becauſe no Man was ſuffered to remain in the Church, that could not or would not receive the Sacrament; and therefore ſuch Perſons as had a mind to ſee and hear, but not receive, were all, without exception, diſmiſſed by the Deacon, after the Sermon was ended with theſe Words. Ite, miſſa eſt: Go, ye are diſmiſs'd. And if any delay'd they were urg'd to depart by the Deacons and Exorciſts, ſaying aloud, ſi quis non communicet, det locum; Whoſoever will not receive let him go out. The Roman Church puts a different Senſe upon this Word Maſs, underſtanding by it, that Solemn Service, wherein they do pretend to offer unto God the Body and Blood of his Son, as a propitiatory Sacrifice for the Sins of both the Quick and Dead. Iſidore takes it here in the firſt Senſe, calling it, Ordo Precum. i. e. The Form of Prayers: But M. Du Pin, by joyning it with the Word Canon, (a Word of much later uſe, and which ſignifies in the Roman Church, the Rule or Form of celebrating their Maſs) ſeems to bring it over to the latter, but againſt the Senſe of St. Iſidore of Sevil.]

[(d) Eſtabliſhed by St. Peter.] But erroneouſly; for in the Apoſtle's time the Holy Sacrament was celebrated without any Ceremonies or Prayers, ſave that at the Conſecration of the Elements, the Prieſt repeated the Lord's Prayer over them. And this St. Jerome ſays was done by the Inſtitution of Chriſt himſelf. Dominus docuit Apoſtolos ut Orationem Dominicam dicerent ſuper Sacrificio Corporis. And Innocent III. himſelf tells us, that St. Peter celebrated the Sacrament at Antioch, with three Prayers only: Primus B. Petrus Apoſtolus Miſſam Antiochiæ dicitur celebraſſe in qua tres tantum Orationes, in primordio naſcentis Eccleſiæ dicebantur. So that it is abſurd to think St. Peter the Author of ſo long an Office.]

[(e) Prayers in the Sacrament—for the Dead.] It is evident from ſome very Ancient Records of the Church, That it was a Cuſtom among the Chriſtians, Ab Antiquo, to pray for the Souls of the Faithful departed, in the dreadful Myſteries. Whether it were decreed by the Apoſtles themſelves, as St. Chryſoſtome plainly tells it was, in his Comment on the Philippians, may be a very great doubt; but it is certain it was in uſe about 200 years after Chriſt. This is proved from Tertullian, De Monog. c. 10. who thus ſpeaks, Let the faithful Widow pray for the Soul of her Husband, &c. And to the ſame effect in Coron. Mil. c. 3. So alſo St. Cyprian, Ep. 66. Euſeb. de Vit a Conſtant. l. 4. c. 7. and Epiphanius Har. 3. &c. And this we find practiſed by many of the moſt eminent Fathers of the Church. Nazianzen prayed for his Brother Caſarius, Ambroſe for the Emperors Valentinian and Theodoſius; and St. Auſtine for his Mother Monica. But all the Prayers made for the Dead, by the firſt Chriſtians, contained no other Petitions for them, than what are very Warrantable and Pious, and which our Liturgy ſeems, in a great Meaſure, to authorize, viz. That God would haſten his Kingdom, and ſpeedily give them a Conſummation of Bliſs not imputing to them their Sins in the day of Judgment; to which they joyned a thankful remembrance of their Virtues and Holy Examples, which they begged Grace to imitate. Theſe with the Alms to the Poor, which generally accompanied them, were the Oblationes pro mortuis, ſpoken of by the Fathers. The Romiſh Church hath abuſed this Cuſtom, by praying for Perſons who died in their Sins, whom they ſuppoſed to be detained in their feigned Purgatory; which is contrary to the Doctrine and Practice of the Primitive Church: for they acknowledged no ſuch places as Purgatory, nor Remiſſion of Sins after Death.]

St. Isidore. the Sacrifice was offered for the Dead. He speaks of the Office of the third, the fifth, the ninth Hour; of Vespers, Compline, Vigils, Matins, of the principal Festivals of the year, of Lent-Fast, of the Fast on the 22*d.* of September, of the Fasts on November the 1*st.* and January the 1*st*, of the Fasts on Fridays and Saturdays in some Churches. He observes, that altho' the Custom of the Church was not to fast from Easter to Whitsunday, some Monks nevertheless did fast in that Interval out of Devotion. Lastly, he owns, that Churches have diffrent Uses and Practices in many things.

The 2*d.* Book of Offices is concerning Ecclesiastical Persons. He says, all that are ordained to serve the Church, are called * Clerks, becaufe St. Matthias, who was the first ordained by the Apostles, was chosen by Lot; or because all Clerks are also called by Lot to the Lord's Inheritance: Or else lastly, because the Lord is their Lot and Portion. He puts them in mind, that they ought to live retired from the World, to abstain from Worldly Pleasures, not to go to the Publick Shows, nor to Publick Feasts; to follow their Employment without engaging themselves in Secular Affairs; not to put Money to Usury; to take no Presents for performing the Functions of their Ministry; to be wise and modest in their Carriage, and reserved in their Talk; not to keep company with Women; to be Sober, Chaste and Constant in Prayer. He distinguisheth two sorts of Clerks; some living under the governance of their Bishops; and others, called * Acephali, which can neither pass for Laicks nor Ecclesiasticks. He taketh notice, that all Clerks had a (e) Tonsure, and that the Crown of their Head was all shaved, and had only a little Circle of Hair round about the Head, in form of a Crown. Having spoken of Clerks in general, he speaks of all the Orders in particular. As to to the Bishops which he calls Sacerdotes, he says, that they are ordained by the laying on of Hands; that a Man must be 32 years old to be a Bishop, and ought to have always lived single, or to have had but one Wife; that in their Ordination they give them a Staff and a Ring; that they ought to make choice of a Learned and Virtuous Man, and free from Crimes; that a Bishop ought to take care of the Poor, and use Hospitality towards Strangers. He does not forget the Chorepiscopi, whom he calls the Bishop's Deputies. He says they may ordain Readers, Exorcists and Subdeacons; but that they cannot ordain Presbyters nor Deacons. He extols the Dignity of Presbyters, by saying, they partake in the Dispensation of the Mysteries with the Bishops; that they preside over Churches as they do; that they consecrate the Body and Blood of Christ, and preach the Word of God, as they do; but that Ordination is reserved to the Bishops, to maintain the Authority and Splendor of the Priesthood, and to prevent Divisions. Deacons are the Dispensers of the Mysteries consecrated by the Presbyters; they give the Cup to the Laity, who may not take it from the Altar. Subdeacons do also handle the Sacred Vessels; also it was decreed, that they also should be bound to Continency. The other Persons of the Clergy are the Readers, the Singers, the Exorcists, the Doorkeepers. There are many kinds of Monks. The Cenobites are they that live in common; the Hermites they that withdraw into Deserts; the Anchorites they that shut up themselves in Cells; these are the several sorts of good Monks. St. Isidore describes and commends the Life of the Cenobites, then he speaks of Penitents; they cut their Hair, they wear Hair-cloth, they strew Ashes upon their Heads, to put them in mind that they are but Dust, and shall return to Dust. By Penance, Remission of Sins committed after Baptism, tho' never so great, is obtained. Clerks do it before God, others before the Bishop. True Penance consists in the Amendment of Life. Afterwards he commends Virgins, and gives them some wholsome Advices; as also Widows, and those that are married, and likewise Catechumens. He gives an account of the Exorcisms and the Salt [used in them.]

Then he passeth to other Points, and expounds the Creed, which he believes to have been composed by the Apostles in common before they dispersed themselves to preach the Gospel. He treats of Baptism, and distinguisheth it into three sorts; the Baptism of Water, the Baptism of Blood, and the Baptism of Tears. He observes, that the Sacrament of Baptism, that it may be valid, must be conferred in the Name, and by the Invocation of the three Persons of the Trinity: that it is God that baptizeth and not Man, and therefore that it matters not, whether it be conferred by an Heretick; that Original Sin in Infants is remitted in Baptism, so, that if they should die without it, they should be excluded from the Kingdom of Heaven; that Bishops and Presbyters are the Ministers of that Sacrament; that the Holy (f) Chrism is given after Baptism, to render the Persons baptized, the anointed of Jesus Christ; and lastly, that the Bishop lays his Hands upon them, that they may receive the Holy Ghost; that Men do not give it, but pray to God to give it; and that the Bishop only may administer that Sacrament.

St. Isidore.

We have a few Letters of St. Isidore; the 1*st*, and 2*d.* contain nothing remarkable: The 3*d.* to Helladius, is concerning Discipline. There he shews, that a Presbyter fallen into the Sin of the Flesh is to be deposed and put to Penance, without any hope of being restored. He teaches the same Doctrine in his Book of Offices; which shews the Falsity of another Letter fathered upon him, directed to Massanus, the Author whereof goes about to expound the Canon of the Council of Ancyra, about the Deposition of Clerks fallen into the Sin of the Flesh, and to prove it should be understood of those only who do not do Penance, pretending that those that do it, ought to be restored; which Doctrine is so contrary to that of Isidore, that there is no doubt, but that Letter is the Fiction of some Impostor, and perhaps of the famous Isidore Mercator.

I pass the same Judgment on the 4*th.* Letter directed to Claudius, wherein the Question of the Procession of the Holy Ghost is handled against the Greeks; on the 5*th.* directed to Redemptus, in which the Question of unleavened and leavened Bread is debated against the same Persons; and on the last to Eugenius of Toledo, about the Authority of the Pope. It is visible, these Letters were written in the time of the Quarrel between the Greeks and Latins, which was not begun in the Life of Isidore of Sevil.

Lastly, we will join to the Works of Discipline, the Rule of the Monks, composed by St. Isidore, accommodated to the use of his Country, and proportion'd to the strength of the weaker sort.

St. Isidore's Learning did not hinder him from being eminent in Works of Piety, of which he hath left us these, viz. Two Books of Synonyma's or Soliloquies, and a Treatise of the Contempt of the World, which are Discourses supposed to be had in a Man, between his Soul and his Reason, and contain Advices, Instructions, Christian Meditations, Prayers and Sentences of Piety and Remorse. Some body hath made a Collection of some of these Sentences, and intituled it, The Rule of good Living. To which is added, a Piece, intituled, The Lamentations of Repentance, with a long and good Prayer about Amendment of Life, and another shorter against Temptations.

But the most considerable of the moral Works of St. Isidore, is his Collection of Sentences out of St. Gregory's [Morals,] divided into three Books. The 1*st.* contains some Christian Considerations about the Doctrine of the Creed. The 2*d.* about Virtues. The 3*d.* about Temptations, and the Remedies whereby we may be healed and sanctified.

The Book of the Combat between Vices and Virtues, attributed to St. Austine, to St. Leo, to St. Ambrose, and at last to St. Isidore, is none of theirs, but belongs to Ambrose Ausbert, Abbot of St. Vincent of Benevent, as is observed in his Life, tho' Sigibert ascribeth to Isidore a Book bearing the same Title.

By what we have said of the Works of Isidore, it is plain enough, that this Bishop was well read, but he had not so much Fineness of Wit and Elevation of Mind; there is nothing commendable in his Style but the Clearness of it; he is neither eloquent nor polite; his own Opinions are often false, and he does not always make a good Choice when he borrows of others. He contents himself with a superficial Knowledge, and does not search the Bottom of Matters. His Remarks are but trivial, and often mistaken: Nevertheless he was much esteemed, in his Age, a Prodigy of [(e) Tonsure, and that the Crown of their Head was all Shaved.] Tonsure, or cutting the Hair short was in he purest times of the Church imposed upon the Clergy, as being indecent for them to wear their Hair long, according to the Fashion of those times The 4*th.* Council of Carthage, which was held, *A. That no Clergyman should wear long Hair or a Beard. Clericus, nec Comam nutriat, nec barbam; but on the other side, Rasure, or making the Crown of the Head bald by Shaving, was accounted a detestable Ceremony, and much condemned by the Fathers, *Clemens Alex. Optatus Mel. [(f) Chrism.] Chrism or Unction, was an ancient Rite used in the Jewish Church to denote the conferring of Gifts and Graces on the Persons anointed, and thence derived to the Christian Church. Our Saviour and his Apostles used it in working their miraculous Cures of the Sick, Jam. 5. 14. Mar. 6. 14. And after Miracles ceased in the Church; it was continued in the Administration of Baptism, to signifie (say the Fathers) that the Persons baptized are cut off from the wild Olive, and ingrafted into Christ the true Olive-tree, and made Partakers of its Fruits and Benefits: Or to shew, that they were become Champions for Christ, and like the Heathen Athletæ, were anointed for their spiritual Warfare, or rather to denote their Admission to the great Privileges of Christianity, to be a chosen Generation, a royal Priesthood, an holy Nation (as the Apostle speaks 1 Pet. 2. 9.) to which all Persons were designed by Chrism. The same Ceremony was used by the Church in Confirmation, and to the Sick in the beginning of their Sickness, to strengthen and recover them, but not as it is in the Church of Rome, as a sacramental Viaticum for Persons dying.]

Learning, and an Oracle. The Fathers of the 8*th*. Council of Toledo, give this illustrious Testimony of his Knowledge: 'The excellent Doctor of our Age, Isidore, the 'greatest Ornament of the Catholick Church, the last of 'the Fathers, with regard to the times, but such as may, 'for his Learning, be compared to the first, the most learned Man of past Ages.' Altho' this Commendation be hyperbolical, yet it must be confessed, Isidore was a Man of Desert, and that Braulio was in the right, in saying, God seemed to have given him to Spain, and raised him up in that time, to make the Monuments of the Ancients known, and to hinder Men from falling into extreme Barbarity and Rusticity. BRAULIO Bishop of Saragosa.

Braulio.

Braulio, Bishop of Saragosa, Friend to Isidore of Sevil, wrote two Letters to him, and made an Encomium upon that Father, containing the Catalogue of his Works, wherein he tells us, that he not only hath set in order, but finished his Treatise of Origins. He wrote also the Life of Æmilianus a Spanish Hermit, vulgarly called, St. Milan. Moreover the Life of St. Leocadia is attributed to him. He was present in the 4*th*. 5*th*. and 6*th*. Councils of Toledo, and died in 646. after he had been Bishop 20 Years. [His Epistles and Encomium are extant in St. Isidore's Works, and his Life of Æmilianus in Mabillon's Sæc. Ben. 1. pag. 205.] Braulio.

St. COLUMBANUS.

St. Columbanus.

St. Columbanus, a Monk of the Monastery of Bencor in Ireland, went into France towards the Year 590. with 12 Monks of his Monastery, and withdrew himself into the Solitude of Vosge, near Besancon, where he founded the Monasteries of Luxeuil and of Fontaines. After he had governed them 20 Years, he was banished by King Theodorick, upon the Motion of Queen Brunehaut. After which, he retired into Switzerland, then belonging to the Kingdom of Theodebert, where he preached the Gospel to some Pagans remaining in that Country: But Theodebert being overcome and taken Prisoner by Theodorick, Columbanus was forced to fly into Italy in the Year 613. where he founded the Monastery of Bobio, and died there in 615.

The Author of this Saint's Life, and Sigebert of Gembloux, say, he was a great Student and a witty Man; that in his Youth he composed a Commentary on the Book of Psalms which was elegantly written; and that he had published many other Works, useful for Prayers and Instruction. They say, the Title of the Commentary on the Psalms is found in an old Catalogue of the Library of St. Gal; but the Work it self is not there. In the Monastery of Luxeuil there is a Manuscript Commentary on the Psalms, the Author of which is not known. Some would have it pass for that of St. Columbanus, but it hath not yet been printed, and we know nothing of it, but from him who hath collected the Works of that Father.

There are yet extant some of the poetical Works of St. Columbanus, of which Sigibert maketh mention. The first of them is a Letter to Hunaldus upon the Shortness of Life, and the Vanity of worldly Goods. The Preface of which begins with the Letters of the Name of St. Columbanus, and of him he writes to; so that taking all the first Letters of each Verse, one finds Columbanus Hunaldo. The 2*d*. is a Letter in short Verses, written to Sedulius; in the end whereof he taketh notice, That he was come to the 18*th*. Olympiad, that is, that he was 72 Years old at least. The 3*d*. is an Epigram upon Women. The 4*th*. is a Poem in Hexameters, intituled, Monasticon, containing several Precepts of Morality. The last is in Prose upon the Vanity and Misery of this Life.

But these Works are not comparable to his Rule, which is found in the Collection of Benedictus Anianus. It is full of Wisdom and Instruction; for there he does not content himself to prescribe Rules only, but shews the Excellency and Usefulness of them, and grounds them upon Testimonies of Scripture, or upon some Principle of Morality. He lays down for the Foundation of his Rule, the Love of God and of our Neighbour as a general Precept, whereupon all the other are superstructed. Then he commends Obedience and Silence. He appoints, that Monks shall eat in the Evening, and shall feed on such plain Meat, as may sustain them without Hurt to their Health. He will have them to eat every day, that they may be able to pray and to read daily. He orders them to be content with things absolutely necessary, which are very few; to flee from Wealth and Vanity; to be chaste in their Thoughts as well as in their Actions. That which he appoints concerning the Office which was then called the Course, is somewhat obscure. Yet this he seems to prescribe: That they shall meet together three times in the Night, and three times in the day to pray; that in the Office of the day, at each hour they shall say three Psalms at each Office, and some other Prayers; that the Night Office is to be lengthened or shortened, according to the length or shortness of the Nights; that from October to February, they must say in the ordinary Office of the Night, 36 Psalms and 12 Anthems, at three several times, and in the rest of the year 24 Psalms only, with 8 Anthems; but for the Saturday and Sunday Night, the Office is made up of 75 Psalms and 25 Anthems in Winter; which number is to be augmented or lessened according as the Nights increase or decrease. He observes, some other Monks perform the Night-office at 4 times, and sing both in Winter and Summer, 12 Psalms in the usual Service, and 36 in the Service of the Saturday and Sunday Nights; but he does not approve of that Practice, as being too tiresome in Summer, when the Nights are short. Then he recommends to his Monks that Spirit of Discretion, that can discern betwixt Good and Evil; and that Mortification of Spirit consisting in doing nothing according to Self-will: These are all the Articles of that Rule which were found in the Collection of Benedictus Anianus. There is another added to it, of the Perfection of a Monk, from a Manuscript of the Monastery of Bobio; but it is evident, that is not the same Author's, but is a Note of some other Monk. Some have thought that we had but one part of St. Columbanus's Rule, because that in the Harmony of the Rules there is one Article of it cited, which is said to be the 33*d*. of that Abbot's Rule; but this is an Error in the Quotation, and it must be taken out of some other Author. After this Rule follows his Penitential, containing a Decree of what Penance is to be imposed upon Monks taken in a Fault, how light soever it may be. It is there supposed, that they must confess it, and then are prescribed Penances for each of those Faults. Some very light ones are punished somewhat severely; one may judge of it by the following Instances: He that shall not say (Amen) at Table, shall have six Lashes; he that shall talk in the Refectory, as many; he that shall not forbear Coughing at the beginning of a Psalm, shall also be treated after the same manner; and he likewise that shall touch the Chalice with his Teeth, or shall smile in the time of Divine Service; they that have spoken roughly and frowardly, shall receive fifty Lashes, as well as they that have answered again to their Superior. There are other Penances enjoyned besides Whipping; as Fasting, Silence, Separation from the Table, Humiliatio. These Penances seem to be more rational, and fitter to correct Men than Whipping, and yet they are not the most common and usual. St. Columbanus.

There was found in the Manuscript of Bobio with St. Columbanus's Rule and Penitential, some spiritual Instructions fathered upon this Saint, agreeable enough to the Style of his Rule. They contain some Exhortations to Piety, and a spiritual Life, fit for Monks, the Titles whereof are as follows. 1. Of the Trinity. 2. Of the Mortification of Vices, and the Acquisition of Virtues. 3. Of the Contempt of the World, and the Love of heavenly things. 4. That we ought to work and labour in this Life, to rest in the next. 5. That this Life should not be called Vita but Via. 6. That this Life is like a Shadow. 7. Of the Blindness of those who serve the Flesh and neglect the Spirit. 8. That we ought to tend to our heavenly Country, the End of this present Life. 9. Of the last Judgment. 10. Of the means of fleeing from the dreadful Wrath of him who is to judge us. 11. Of the Love of God and of our Neighbour. 12. Of Remorse, and of the Vigilancy wherewith we ought to wait for the coming of the final Judgment. 13. That we must have Recourse to Christ, the Fountain of Life. 14. Several Advices for the Spiritual Life. The 15*th.* which was not in the Bobio Manuscripts, is of The Fervency wherewith we ought to serve God. There is mention made there of Grace, according to St. Austine's Principles, but it does not seem to be of the same Style with the rest. The 16*th.* was not in the said Bobio Manuscript neither, but it hath more of St. Columbanus's Style. It is very short, and is intituled, What is that which is and which shall be? In it he compares this Life with that which is to come. The 17*th.* Instruction is A Discourse of Faustus Bishop of Ries, to some Monks.

After the 13*th.* Instruction, in the Bobio Manuscript, there is a small Tract of the eight principal Vices, which are, Gluttony, Fornication, Covetousness, Wrath, Sorrow, Idleness, Vain-glory and Pride, and sets down in a few Words, some Remedies against these Vices.

Some produce also some Letters of St. Columbanus, taken out of another Manuscript of Bobio, of the Truth of which Letters there can be no doubt. The 1*st.* is directed to Boniface Bishop of Rome, the third or fourth of that Name. St. Columbanus says, in that Letter, he had already written to the Pope St. Gregory, concerning the Difference between his own Church and that of Rome, about the Day on which Easter ought to be celebrated, and intreats Boniface to let him keep to the Custom he had, of celebrating that Festival, as the Ancients of his Country did, tho' he now lived in France. He propounds the Example of St. Polycarp, and of Anicetus, to shew that Men may differ in their Practice about the keeping of Easter, without any Breach of Unity and Peace, and annexes the Canon of the first Council of Constantinople; whereby it is ordered, that Christian People living among barbarous Nations, shall live after their Customs: Which is an Argument, that St. Columbanus was not unacquainted with Ecclesiastical History, and the Canons of the Church. The next Letter is to a Council of French Bishops, assembled upon his account. It is written with a great deal of Wisdom and Elegancy, is very witty, judicious and learned. He thanks them, at first, for having met together about his Concerns, and intimates to them, that he could wish they would meet oftner, and that, according to the Canons, they would hold Councils once or twice in the Year, to put a stop to the Divisions and Disorders of their time. He prays to God, that their Meeting may be for the Church's good; and that they would not only treat of the Celebration of Easter, but moreover make all necessary Provisions to restore the Discipline to its former State. He does earnestly press their own Duty upon them, and gives them Lessons of Humility and Charitableness, and then, coming to the matter in hand, he sets forth the Difference between the French and the English Bishops, about the time of the Celebration of Easter. He observes, that the Western Churches were not agreed upon the Day of that Festival; That many always kept it from the fourteenth Day of the Moon to the twentieth, so that when the fourteenth fell on a Saturday, they kept the Feast of the Resurrection on the very next Day, whereas the French and Italian Bishops put off the Celebration of it to the Sunday following. He says, that he hath justified the ancient Custom of the Western Churches, in the Writing he sends them, in three other Tracts, directed to Pope Gregory, and in a Book sent to Arigius, one of the Bishops of the Council. But without engaging in that Dispute, he only prays the Bishops to give him leave to observe a Custom, of which he is not the Author, which is practised in the Country from whence he comes, and intreats them that they would let him live in Peace and Silence in his Solitude, near the Bones of seventeen of his Brethren, as he hath lived these 12 years, that he may continue praying for them. He tells them, that it were better done of them to comfort poor old Men and Strangers, than to trouble and molest them. He adds, that he durst not go to the Council, for fear he should be forced to engage in the Dispute, but that he cannot forbear declaring sincerely to them, that he gives more Credit to the Tradition of his Country, to the ancient Cycle of fourscore and four years, to that of Anatolius, to Eusebius and St. Hierom, than to Victorius's Testimony, a new Author, who hath written very obscurely: Nevertheless, he would not have them to think, that he says this out of a contentious Spirit, he desires only, that every one might keep his own Custom, and follow his own Tradition. Then he exhorts them to the Practice of Humility and Charity. He makes a Comparison of the Monks and Bishops, and says, St. Hierom advises these to imitate the Apostles, and those to follow the Holy Fathers, because Clerks and Monks have very different Practices and Obligations; that every one is to follow his Calling, and perform his Duty. He prays to God, that through his free Grace he would cause his Commandments to be kept by all. In the end, he does beseech them to pray to God for him and his Fellows, as they pray for them, and not to look upon them as Strangers, seeing all Christians are Members of one Body. St. Columbanus.

It is not known what this Council is, it must have been held towards the year 600. because it is 12 years after St. Columbanus's Coming into France, a little before St. Gregory's Death: Some believe it to be the Council held at Challon, upon the River Soane, in the year 603. in which Arigius Bishop of Lyons presided: But perhaps it might be some other Council: For this was assembled about the Business of Desiderius Bishop of Vienna. This Letter is written before the foregoing.

St. Columbanus's Letter has lately been attributed to St. Gregory, who is mentioned in the two preceding Letters: There he does very confidently set down the Authorities he depends upon, to shew that Easter should always be celebrated by the twentieth of the Moon in March, before the Equinox, and treats the Cycle of Victorius with a great deal of Contempt: And does also refute Pope Victor's Opinion, that Easter is not to be kept at the same time with the Jews. He exhorts the Pope to alter his Opinion and Practice about that; and then asks him, whether he should communicate with those who are ordained Bishops, contrary to the Constitutions and Canons, by Simony, or having committed some Crimes in the time they were Deacons? In fine, he consults him what is to be done with Monks, who depart from their Monasteries, without their Abbot's Leave, renouncing their Vows. He lets him know, he would gladly have come to Rome to see him. He commends his Pastoral, and prays him to send him some of his Works, and chiefly those upon Ezekiel. He acquaints him, that he hath perused the six Books of St. Hierom on that Prophet, but that that Father hath not explained half of it.

St. Columbanus's fourth Letter is written to Pope Boniface IV. of that Name, upon the Motion of Agilulphus King of Lombardy: By this Letter it appears, that that Prince assisted the Defenders of the three Chapters, and that he had persuaded St. Columbanus, that there was some cause to suspect the Church of Rome of Error; that the Pope himself was consenting to it, or at least permitted it; that Vigilius dyed an Heretick; and that the fifth Council ought to be rejected. St. Columbanus entertaining these Opinions, writes a vehement Letter to Boniface; wherein he exhorts him to watch over his Flock, and condemns Vigilius's want of Vigilancy. He saith, he died an Heretick, and wonders they should put his Name in the List of Catholick Bishops. He exhorts the Pope to clear both himself and his Church from the Suspicion of Heresie, by calling a Council, to make an exact Exposition of the Catholick Faith, and to condemn all those that swerved from it. He believes, that the Fifth Council approved Eutyches's Error, and confounds the two Natures; and yet he says, at his coming into Italy, they wrote to him, that Communion with Rome ought to be shun'd, because they there held Nestorius's Heresy: Which shews, he was not rightly informed of the Fact he wrote of. It had been better for him to have only exhorted the Pope, as he does, to endeavour to suppress the Schism and Division in Italy, about the Business of the three Chapters, by tolerating those that defended them.

'Tis said, that St. Columbanus had written some Letters to King Theodorick, but we have none of them. Jonas speaks also of a Letter directed to Clotharius; but it is lost, as well as his Book against the Arians, mentioned in the same Author, his great Treatise of Easter, two Letters to St. Gregory, and his Writing to Arigius upon the same Subject. They say, moreover, he had made a Commentary upon the Gospels, but it is not mentioned in ancient Authors. They ascribe yet to him a little Treatise of Penances for Monks, Clerks and Laicks; but it does not seem to me to be his. Father Flemingus, an Irish Franciscan, hath collected the Works of this Father, and printed them at Louvain, in the year 1667. since which they have been printed in the last Edition of the Bibliotheca Patrum at Lyons, with the Works of two other Irish Writers.

The first of which is a Tract of St. Ælerau, or Ererau, containing a mystical and moral Interpretation of the Names recited in the Genealogy of Christ, which are applyed to our Lord's Qualities or Precepts. This Ælerau, surnamed the Wise, was a Presbyter; it is said, he also wrote the Life of St. Patrick. There is another Ererau, an Irish Abbot, who wrote a Monastical Rule.

The second Tract added to St. Columbanus's Works in this Edition, is a very large Penitential of one Cumianus or Cuminus, an Abbot, in which there are several remarkable Things, and amongst others, that there are 12 principal Means of obtaining Pardon of our Sins, grounded upon Testimonies of the Holy Scripture, viz. 1. Baptism, 2. Charity, 3. Almsgiving, 4. Tears, 5. Confession, 6. Mortification of the Flesh and Spirit, 7. Change of Manners, 8. Intercessions of the Just, 9. Faith, 10. Converting of others,

CUMIANUS or CUMINUS.

Cuminus.

[Epiſtolarum Hibernicarum Sylloge.*]

THere are many Cuminus's in Ireland. This probably is he, of whom there is ſtill extant a Letter to Segenius, Abbot of Hi, publiſhed by Biſhop Uſher, in his * Collection of Letters of Iriſh Men, wherein he would perſuade the Iriſh, that they ought to leave their Cuſtom of keeping Eaſter, and conform to that of the Roman Church. The Author of the Penitential is of the ſame Opinion; and therefore may be believed to be the ſame Man, but it is not known who nor whence he was. Some believe 'tis Cuminus, Abbot of Hi; but it is not likely, ſeeing the Letter is written to Segenius, who was Abbot of Hi, many years before this Cuminus took Poſſeſſion of it. I ſhould rather think 'tis Cuminus, ſirnamed Fada, that is, the long, Son to King Fiachna, who alſo is ſuppoſed to be Author of an Hymn, which begins with theſe Words; Celebra Juda feſta Chriſti gaudia. He was born, if one may believe the Annals of that Country, in the year 592. and died 662. The Letter now mentioned was written about 634.

HESYCHIUS.

Heſychius.

[* A City of Dalmatia.]

AUthors are much divided about this Author's Age and Profeſſion, whoſe chief Work is a Commentary upon Leviticus. Cardinal Perron aſcribed it to Heſychius, Biſhop of * Salone, who lived under the Empire of Honorius, in the Time of Pope Zoſimus, and of St. Auſtine, becauſe there is a Letter of that Pope directed to this Heſychius Biſhop of Salone, and a Letter of that Biſhop to St. Auſtine. Trithemius and Sixtus Senenſis did believe, that this we now ſpeak of, was a Diſciple of St. Gregory Nazianzen. Bellarmine, Poſſevin and Miræus aſcribe the Works, bearing Heſychius's Name, to Heſychius, Patriarch of Jeruſalem, to whom the fourth Letter of the firſt Book of St. Gregory's Letters is directed. The moſt common Opinion is, that this Heſychius was a Prieſt only, and of Jeruſalem (but ſome place him in the Fifth, others in the Seventh Century, which is plain) for 1. The Author diſcovers himſelf to be ſo, in the Preface and Book which he wrote at Jeruſalem (a). And 2. in an old Manuſcript of the King's Library, it is obſerved in the Title, that this Heſychius was of Jeruſalem; and the Title of the Letter, which is inſtead of a Preface, ſhews he was but a Prieſt. It is worded thus; To the Deacon Eutychianus, Iſychius, a Sinner, Servant of Jeſus Chriſt and Presbyter: Notwithſtanding which, he might poſſibly have been afterward raiſed to the Dignity of Patriarch of Jeruſalem; but there are no other Proofs of it, but the Authority of ſome Manuſcripts, and ſome new Authors, in the Title of which he is called by the Name of Biſhop; which is not very convincing: And Photius, who made ſome Extracts of this Author's Sermons, calls him no other than Presbyter. As for the time in which he lived, there's no queſtion but he is much later than the Biſhop of Salone, ſeeing he writes againſt the Eutychians and Neſtorians: Nay, he ſeems to have lived after St. Gregory, becauſe he maketh uſe of St. Hierom's Tranſlation; but he was before the Ninth Century, becauſe his Commentary is quoted by Amalarius, l. 14. of Divine Offices, c. 36. and by Rabanus, in his Preface upon Leuticus, as well as by Freculphus and Strabo; yea, and before the Eighth, if he be the ſame which Photius quoteth, as very likely he is: Which makes me think, he lived in the End of the Sixth or in the Beginning of the Seventh Century: It is true, there was one Heſychius, Prieſt of Jeruſalem, in the Fifth Century, in the Time of St. Cyril, mentioned in Euthemius's Life, and in Theophanes's Chronicle; but this does not ſeem to be ſo ancient, for in St. Cyril's Time St. Hierom's Tranſlation was not uſed in the Church. I know, it may be anſwer'd, that that Quotation is none of that Author's, but the Tranſlator's, becauſe we have not the Greek Original of that Work: But I am perſuaded, it was written in Latin by its Author, who does carefully mark the Differences between the Vulgar Edition and that of the Septuagint, and likewiſe of the Tranſlations of Aquila and Theodotion, and ſometimes quotes the Greek Terms of thoſe Tranſlations, which he renders into Latin. This Commentary is clear and plain, he gives the literal Senſe, adding now and then to that Explication, ſome ſhort Allegorical or Moral Reflections. It is divided into seven Books, it hath often been observ'd, that this Author speaks of a Practice of the Church of his Time: That they burnt the remainder of the Oblation after the Celebration of the Mysteries, and the Communion of the Faithful.

In the Bibliotheca Patrum there are Two Homilies in Greek and Latin, upon the Virgin, bearing the Name of Hesychius, Presbyter of Jerusalem.

Combefis attributes, moreover, to this Author, the second Sermon of St. Gregory of Nyssa, upon Christ's Resurrection; and he proves his Opinion. 1. By the Authority of a Manuscript of the King's Library, where this Sermon is found under Hesychius's Name, Priest of Jerusalem. 2. Because it seems to be of a meaner, more close and dogmatical Style than that of St. Gregory of Nyssa. Lastly, because it sets down an Opinion directly opposite to that which is brought in the first Sermon on the same subject, bearing also the Name of St. Gregory of Nyssa; for the Author of this supposes, that Christ rose from the Dead on Saturday in the Evening, and gives that Sense to St. Matthew's Words, Vespere autem Sabbathi: Whereas the Author of the second Sermon supposes, That he arose on Sunday Morning, and shews these Words (Vespere autem Sabbathi, or Sabbathorum) are to be understood thus, When the Week was past. But if this Homily be Hesychius's, it is not his of whom we speak, but his who lived in the Beginning of the Fifth Century. To the End of that Homily Combefis hath added the Fragment of a Place of Hesychius's Harmony of the Gospels, touching the Hour of Christ's Death. Cotelerius hath made an Abridgment of it in the beginning of his third Volume Of the Monuments of the Greek Church. This Work contains the solutions of several Difficulties about the seeming Contradictions of the Evangelists.

Hoeschelius hath published, with Adrian's Introduction, the Titles of the Chapters of the twelve lesser Prophets, and of Isaiah, bearing the Name of Hesychius also. This Work might also be his, who lived in the fifth Century.

The Treatise of Temperance and Virtue, dedicated to Theodulus, which contains two hundred Maxims of the Spiritual Life, is the same Hesychius's, for in the Thirty first Maxim of the first hundred, it is observed, that the Author dwelt in a Monastery, and lived under the Conduct of a Superior.

It is probable likewise that Hesychius's Church-History, a Fragment whereof is quoted about Theodorus Mopsuestenus, in the fifth Council, Collection V. p. 470. and in Justinian's Edict, belongs to the Monks of the fifth Century. Hesychius.

Lastly, we may attribute to this the two Sermons, of which Photius recites some Fragments in the 269*th*, and 275*th*. Volumes of his Bibliotheca: The one is taken out of a Sermon upon St. Andrew, and the other out of a Sermon upon St. James, the Lord's Brother: I say the first is taken out of a Sermon upon St. Andrew, tho' in Photius's Title there is the Name of St. Thomas, because the Extract contains really a commendation of St. Andrew, and there is now extant a Latin Translation of that whole Discourse on St. Andrew, in which Photius's Extracts are found. He says, in that Sermon, That St. Andrew is the first of the Apostles, the first Pillar of the Church, even before St. Peter, the Foundation of the Foundation it self. In the Sermon upon St. James, he says also almost the same things of that Apostle, calling him, the Prince of Bishops, the Head or Chief of the Apostles, the Top of the Heads themselves, the most shining Lamp, the brightest Star. Thus they always extol the Saint, of whom they speak, above the others. Cotelerius tells us, in his Notes, he had collected many other Manuscript Pieces of this Hesychius, which he would have publish'd, if he could have hoped for a Life long enough.

There was another Hesychius, Presbyter of Constantinople, mention'd also by Photius in the 51*st*. Volume of his Bibliotheca. 'I have read, says he, four Discourses of Hesy-
'chius's, Presbyter of Constantinople, upon the Brazen Ser-
'pent: The Style of them is full of Ostentation, and cal'culated to stir up the Passions. He brings in the People
'of Israel speaking to Moses, and that Prophet making
'Speeches to the People. He relates also some Discourses
'of God to the People, and to Moses, and the Answers of
'Moses and the People, in the Form of Prayers or Excu-
'ses. These Speeches take up the greatest part of his Work,
'which maketh up a large Volume.' That Author was Catholick, as far as one can judge by his Work.

We have none of those Discourses now, nor any Tract of that Author, but the loss of these Declamations is not very considerable.

EUSEBIUS, Bishop of Thessalonica.

Eusebius.

THis Bishop having sent to St. Gregory, his Reader Theodorus, with some Writings, he gave them to a Monk, named Andrew, whom he had formerly been acquainted with, who was shut up in a Monastery of Rome. This Monk, who was of the [*] Sect of those who believed Christ's Flesh was always incorruptible, falsified them, so that it seemed as if this Bishop had advanced same heretical Propositions: But St. Gregory knowing the Genius of that Monk, because he had made some Greek Sermons under his Name, discovered that Fraud, and wrote about it to Eusebius of Thessalonica, as it appears by the 69*th*. Letter of the Ninth Book of that Pope's Letters. Photius tells us, that same Monk had written a Letter to Eusebius, and pray'd him for God's sake to read it; and that Eusebius having read it, wrote him an Answer, in which he shews him at first that he knew not how to write, and that he continually committed many Faults wherein he was so much the more to blame because he forsook his Profession, and disturbed the Privacy which he had embraced, to carry on a Business which he was not at all fit for: He then attacks his Error, and shews first, against him, that the Word Corruption is not only applyed to Sin, but the Holy Fathers used it to signify the Dissolution of Bodies. 2. He reproved him for having maintained, that Christ's Body became incorruptible at the Moment of its Union to the God-head, an Opinion which was indeed Julian's (Bishop of Halicarnassus, turn'd out of his See by Justinian, for rejecting the Council of Chalcedon) tho' Andrew pretended to write in that Letter against the Errors of Severus and Julian. The 3*d*. Error he charged that Monk with, was of having said, that Adam's Body, before his Fall, was not created mortal and corruptible, when as he should have said, That Man in his Nature was mortal and subject to Pain, but should by Grace have been preserved from Death and Sickness, had he not fallen. The 4*th*. Proposition he found fault with, in Andrew's Letter, was, that he had written, That the World was incorruptible: He did also confute some more of Andrew's Propositions in that Writing, and exhorted him to a Retractation. But this Monk, instead of following that Advice, made presently another Book, to defend his Errors, against which Eusebius wrote ten Books; wherein he shew'd, that Andrew, out of an intolerable Boldness, had gone about to make a new Exposition of Faith, whereas he should have kept to those made by the Councils; and that he had adulterated and misquoted many Passages of the Fathers. Then he confuted the four principal Errors, he had condemned in his first Writing. He shewed the different Senses the Word Corruption is capable of, and how many ways it hath been taken. He cited several Places of the Fathers, for the confuting of those Errors, and laid open the Falsifications of the Places quoted by Andrew. He shewed, that Christ was subject to natural, tho' not to vicious Passions, during his abode on the Earth, and that after his Resurrection he is become immortal and impassible. He did not matter the Name of Phthartolatre, that is, Worshipper of Corruption, which Andrew gave to the Catholicks, and omitted nothing that was necessary to maintain the Doctrine of the Church, and to render that of his Adversary ridiculous. His Style was plain and clear, pure enough, and did not want Judgment. There is nothing of him now extant. This is gathered out of the 162*d*. Volume of Photius's Bibliotheca.

BONIFACE IV.

Boniface IV.

BOniface IV. held the Roman See from 607. to 614. Bede says, that in that Pope's Time, Mellitus Bishop of London came to Rome, in the eighth Year of the Emperor Phocas, and that he was present at a Council, which this Pope held at Rome, in the Year 610. in February; in which they made some Constitutions for the Church of England. Holstenius hath published a pretended Decree of this Council, wherein it declares, That Monks may be Bishops, and perform the Sacerdotal Functions; and a Letter of this Pope to [*] Athelbert a King of England, in which he declares all those excommunicated that shall hinder the Execution of the Decree now mentioned, even the King's, Athelbert's Successors. These two Monuments seem very suspicious to me. The Style of them is altogether barbarous, and they are fill'd with impertinent and frivolous reasons. For instance he says, it is evident that the state and profession of Monks maketh them fit to be Ministers of the Word of God, seeing they are called Angels, and Angels are Ministers; which Reasoning is frivolous: but the reason he gives why they are called Angels, is yet more ridiculous. Monks, saith he, are cover'd, like Cherubims, with six Wings, the Cowle that covers their Head, maketh two, the Tunick's Arms make other two, and we may confidently say, the two Extreams of the Habit, which covers the Body, are two Wings more. Thus you have the Cherubims six Wings: This is some Monk's Fancy, rather than the Work of a Council of Bishops, or of a Patriarch.

The Letter of Pope Deusdedit, Boniface the IV's Successor directed to Gordian Bishop of Sevil, is a Monument evidently false. Isidore was Bishop of Sevil from the Year 600. to the Year 636. and Deusdedit held the Holy See in that interval. Thus the very Title does evince the Falsity of that Letter, it being evident that under Deusdedit's Pontificate, there was no Gordian Bishop of Sevil. The Author of that Letter declares that according to the Decrees of the Holy See, married Persons, which accidentally stood together Sureties for their Children at the Font, ought to be put asunder, and may be married again; which is a gross Error, authorized by no ancient Constitution. In fine, the Style of this Letter is the same with the Pope's other Letters, forg'd by Isidore.

JOHN PHILOPONUS.

John Philoponus.

John, sirnamed Philoponus, that is, Laborious, a Grammarian of Alexandria, of the Sect of the Tritheites, flourish'd in the beginning of the Seventh Century, and composed several Books.

The first is a Writing against Jamblicus the Philosopher's Treatise of Idols. That Philosopher had undertaken in that Treatise, to shew, that Idols had something Heavenly in them, and that the Deity dwelt there; which he prov'd both from the wonderful Fabrick of Images, and the Incredible things ascribed to them. Philoponus had refuted the two Parts of that Work with a great deal of Elegancy and Strength. Photius speaks of that Work in the 216*th*. Volume of his Bibliotheca.

He wrote moreover a Treatise of the six Days Work against Theodorus Mopsuestenus, dedicated to Sergius Patriarch of Constantinople; wherein he endeavours to demonstrate, That Moses hath related the History of the Creation of the World more plainly and conformably to the Phænomena's of Nature than any thing Plato said of it. Photius mentions that Treatise in the 43*d*. Volume of his Bibliotheca, and there is an Extract of it found in the 240*th*. Volume. It is divided into four Books, publish'd by Corderius, and printed at Vienna, in the Year 1630. in Quarto, together with a Tract of the same Author about Easter, whereof there is no Mention made in Photius, who speaks of three Works more of the same Author. The first is a Treatise of the Resurrection, wherein he rejected the Resurrection of the Body. The second is a Writing against the * fourth Council, divided into four Parts; in which he maintains, that the Bishops of that Assembly approved Nestorius's Doctrine. And another Treatise against the Catechetical Discourse of Joannes Scholasticus, Bishop of Constantinople, concerning the Holy and Consubstantial Trinity, preach'd under the Empire of Justin junior. He hath also written several other Philosophical Treatises ‡ upon Aristotle's Books, printed in several Places, and a Treatise against Proclus's Opinion of the Eternity of the World.

This Author was as pure pleasing and elegant in his Style, as impious in his Doctrine, and weak in his Reasonings. One may see by this Treatise of Easter that in his Time the Greeks used Leavened Bread in the Eucharist.

Theodosius, Conon, Eugenius, Themistius Theodorus.

Philoponus's Treatise of the Resurrection was confuted by Theodosius the Monk, by Conon, Eugenius and Themistius. These three last made a Book, intituled, An Invective, in which they treated him as a Man unworthy the Name of a Christian, tho' they agreed with him in not receiving the Council of Chalcedon. This Themistius seems to be that Heretick whose Fragments are found quoted in the sixth Council who was of the Sect of the Agnoetæ, and had written an Apology for St. Theophobius; against which another Monk, named Theodorus, of the Sect of * those who said the Deity had suffer'd, writ a Book; in which he did refute the four Arguments urg'd by Themistius, to prove that Christ was subject to Ignorance. Themistius wrote an Answer to that Work, to which Theodorus opposed three other Books. Photius saith, they did both of them write indifferent clear and strong. See the 23*d*. 24*th*, and 108*th*. Volumes of his Bibliotheca, for we have not now these Works.

NICIAS.

Nicias.

*Here is another Adversary of Philoponus; he was call'd Nicias, and was a Monk: He composed a Book against the seven Articles of Philoponus, mention'd in his Book, intituled, the Arbiter, or the Judge. His Style was plain and concise, his Answers satisfactory, and all to the purpose. He hath also made a Treatise against Severus, and two Books against the Pagans. See Photius in the 50*th*. Volume of his Bibliotheca.

ANTIOCHUS.

Antiochus.

Antiochus, a Monk of the Monastery of St. Sabas in Palæstina liv'd in the beginning of the seventh Century, when Jerusalem was taken by Chosroes King of Persia, and Palæstina pillaged by the Saracens. He hath made a Book, intituled, A Pandect of the Holy Scripture, because it is made up of 190 Moral Discourses; containing Precepts and Maxims upon the principal Duties of a Christian, grounded upon Places of the Holy Scripture. In the 130*th*, he maketh the Catalogue of Heresies related by St. Epiphanius, to which he adds the Names of the Authors of Heresies, who appeared since. In the End there is a long Prayer intituled, Exomologesis, to beg of God that he would turn away his wrath from his People. The Preface speaks of the Taking of Jerusalem, and with what cruelties the Saracens used the Monks of Palæstina. This Treatise is in Greek and Latin, in the first Addition to the Bibliotheca Patrum, and in Latin alone, in the last Bibliotheca, in which they have put the 81*st*. Discourse, under another Title.

JOHN Bishop of Thessalonica.

John of Thessalonica.

THis Bishop, who is quoted in the 7*th*. Council, hath left us an Homily upon those Women that carried the Perfumes to imbalm Christ's Corpse. In that Homily he maketh divers Remarks, to set forth the Circumstances of our Lord's Resurrection: These are some of them. He saith those Women came the Night between the Saturday and Sunday to Christ's Tomb; That Mary, the Mother of James, was the Mother of Christ, so called, because she was Mother-in-Law to James, the Lord's Brother, that is, Joseph's Son by a former Wife; That she that accompanied her, was Mary Magdalen; That they found Christ risen; That the Hour of his Resurrection is uncertain; That Mary Magdalen went a second time to Christ's Tomb, with other Women, very early; That she returned thither twice more; That the four Evangelists speak of four different Journies of the Women to the Tomb; That there are five or six Maries; Mary Magdalen, out of whom Christ had cast seven Devils; Mary the Mother of James, which is the Virgin-Mother of God, Mother-in-Law to James the Greater; Mary, the Mother of James the Lesser, and of Joses; Mary, the Wife of Cleophas, the Virgin's Sister; and Mary, Martha's and Lazarus's Sister. The distinction of these Maries may have some ground; but the four Journies to Christ's Tomb, are a conjecture without probability.

John of Thessalonica.

ty. This Homily hath already been publish'd in Greek by Sir H. Sevil, among the Suppositious Homilies of St. Chrysostome; and Combefis hath publish'd it with a Translation out of a Manuscript, in which it is attributed to John, Bishop of Thessalonica. He had found out one more, upon the Virgin's Assumption, little differing from the Writing attributed to Melito, but he did not judge it worth publishing. In the 7*th*. Council, Act. 4. are found some Fragments of John of Thessalonica's Dialogues, the first whereof was between a Gentile and a Catholick, and the second between a Jew and a Christian. In the 1*st*. he proves against the Gentile, That Angels and Souls may be painted, as being corporeal; and in the 2*d*. he shews, that the (h) Pictures of Christ and of the Martyrs, which were in use among Christians, are not Idols.

John.

[(h) Pictures of Christ and of the Martyrs, which were in use among Christians, are not Idols.] The Charge of Idolatery, being so great a Crime, so stupid a Sin, and so strictly forbidden in Holy Scripture, hath always been denied by the rankest Image-worshippers among Christians, and that with much seeming detestation. The Fathers of the second Council of Nice, who were strenuous Patrons of Image-worship against the Iconoclasts of that time, did yet disclaim that Charge lately laid upon them by a Council of Constantinople, tho' the reasons brought to clear themselves of it are very weak and frivolous, as the most learned Bishop of Worcester hath sufficiently evinced. Not doth the Church of Rome, tho' as gross Idolaters as the Heathens themselves, seem to bear any Impeachment more grievous than of Idolatry. And then tis no wonder, that this Writer, who perhaps was guilty of the same Sin, should assert, that the Pictures, then in use among Christians, were no Idols. And indeed as they were used by the Church at first from the year 380. to St. Gregory the Great's time, viz. To represent the History of the Bible to the illiterate and ignorant Laity, or to adorn the Church withal, we do not account them Idols; tho' as the Christians for the first 300 years and more, would not endure any Pictures in their Churches, witness that zealous Fact of Epiphanius in the Church of Anabathla; so it may reasonably be thought, it was the Foundation of that Image-worship, which soon followed in the more superstitious Ages. And if the Christians, of whom this Bishop speaks, made no other use of them, we acknowledge, that they are not Idols. But if the Pictures of Christ and his Martyrs were worshipped by those Christians of whom he speaks, according to the custom of those times, it will be impossible to excuse them from Idolatry, notwithstanding the distinctions made by the Image-worshippers, between an Image and an Idol; for in Holy Scripture, every Image being bowed down to and worshipped, tho' but with a relative Worship, is thereby made an Idol.

GREGORY of Antioch.

Gregory.

Gregory Bishop of Antioch, who sate in that See from the year 572 to the year 608. made a Discourse upon the same Subject; but it is less Dogmatical, and contains nothing but Prosopopœia's of Joseph to Pilate, and of Pilate to the Jews; some Reflections of Death speaking to her self, and Complaints of the Women upon Christ's death; some Discourses of the Angel with the Jews and Women, and of Jesus Christ with those Women.

Gregory.

JOHN, ARAUSIUS, HELLADIUS, JUSTUS, NONNITUS, and CONANTIUS, Bishops of Spain.

John, &c.

John, an Abbot and afterwards Bishop of Saragosa, Braulio's Brother flourish'd towards the year 620. Ildephonsus assures us, that he was well read in the Holy Scripture, and that he laboured to instruct by his Discourses more than by his Writings; that nevertheless he had elegantly written some Prayers to be sung in Divine Service, and also a Table to find out Easter-day every Year. We have nothing now of this Author.

The same Ildephonsus ranks among Ecclesiastical Authors, Arausius Bishop of Toledo, and his Successor Helladius; but seeing he confesseth, they have writ nothing, it was needless to encrease the number of Authors with them. This last had for his Disciple and Successor, one named Justus, a witty and worthy Man, who had written a Letter to Richilan, Abbot of the Monastery of Agali, in which he shewed him, that he ought not to leave his Flock. These three Bishops govern'd the Church of Toledo from the Year 606, to to 634, or 635. This last signed the Council of Toledo held under Sisenand, in the year 633. and was but three years Bishop.

John, &c.

St. Ildephonsus puts also in the rank of Ecclesiastical Authors Nonnitus, Bishop of Gironde, who lived in the same time, but he speaks of none of his Works.

He speaks, lastly, of Conantius, Bishop of Palenzo, as of a Man as Prudent and Grave, as Eloquent and Learned; and he saith, he applied himself to regulate the Order of Divine Service; that he had made Hymns to new Tunes, and a Book of Prayers taken out of the Psalms. We have not now those Works.

BONIFACE V.

Bonif. V.

[* King of Northumberland.]

[† Wife of K. Edwin]

Bede mentions three Letters of this Pope about the Conversion of the English. The 1*st*. is directed to Justus, who from Bishop of Rochester became Archbishop of Canterbury, wherein he grants him the Pall, and congratulates him for King Adelvad's Conversion. The 2*d*. is directed to * Edwin an English King, wherein he exhorts him to leave Idolatry, to worship the true God, and embrace Christ's Religion. The 3*d*. is to Queen † Edelburg, whom he congratulateth upon her Conversion, and exhorts her to endeavour that of the King her Husband.

Bonif. V.

MODESTUS, Bishop of Jerusalem.

Modestus.

We have no other Monument of this Author, who flourished towards the year 620. but an Extract of one of his Sermons mentioned by Photius in the 275*th*. Volume of his Bibliotheca. The first is taken out of a Sermon upon the Women of the Gospel which carried Balm to anoint Christ. He tells us there, that Mary Magdalen, out of whom Christ cast seven Devils, was a Virgin, and that she suffer'd Martyrdom at Ephesus, whither she went to St. John the Evangelist, after the Virgin's death. Which shews how far they were then from the Opinion which hath obtained since, that Mary Magdalen is the same with the Woman that was a Sinner, [Luke 7. 37.] The 2*d*. Sermon of Modestus, mentioned in Photius, was a Sermon upon the death of the Virgin, the Mother of God, which he calls, A Dormitory Sermon after the manner of the Ancients. Photius speaks of no Extract of it; he only taketh notice, 'tis a long Discourse, containing nothing necessary, and nothing like the former. The 3*d*. Sermon is upon the Festival of the Meeting [of Christ and Simeon] or the Presentation of Jesus Christ in the Temple. Photius sets down an Extract of it in which the Virtues of Anna, and the Virgin's Purification, are discoursed of Figuratively and Rhetorically.

GEORGE of Alexandria.

George.

It is thought, that George, the Author of St. Chrysostome's Life, was the Bishop of Alexandria, who succeeded John the Alms-giver in the year 620, and held that See till 630. This Life is a great deal larger than that of Palladius, but less faithful, and full of many Untruths. His Style, in the judgment of the Learned Photius, is very plain, and somewhat flat. He offends against the Laws of Grammar, and is not exact in the construing of Words.

George.

George. It is needleſs to make the Extract of this Life, becauſe what it contains more than is in Palladius, and the other ancient Hiſtorians, is either falſe or doubtful. He hath often miſrepreſented the matters of Fact, which he relates upon truſt from other Authors. He alledges many of them contrary to the Teſtimonies of St. Chryſoſtome, and the Authors of his Time. He hath counterfeited many Letters, and falſly attributed them to the Emperors Arcadius, and Honorius, and Pope Innocent. He confidently aſſerts contrary to the Truth of Hiſtory, That this Pope excommunicated the Emperor Honorius and Empreſs Eudoxia. He hath reported an infinite number of things evidently falſe. Photius, who made a long Extract of this Life, confeſſes himſelf that he hath ſaid many things contrary to the Truth of Hiſtory; but he thinks, the Reader may pick out that which is true and uſeful, and paſs by the reſt. Methinks it were better and fitter to fetch things out of the Originals, than to miſpend ones time to read them in thoſe ill Copiers and Plagiaries. This Work was publiſhed in Greek by Sir H. Savil, in the laſt Volume of St. Chryſoſtome's Works, printed at Eaton; together with the Life of the ſame Father by other later Authors, who copied out this Man's Fictions, and added others to them, after the manner of the modern Greeks. George.

HONORIUS.

Honorius. POpe Honorius, whoſe Name became ſo famous by reaſon of his Condemnation in the 6th. Council, was raiſed to the Pontificate the 13th. of May, 626. and died October 11*th*. 628. Beſides the two Letters he hath written to Sergius upon the Queſtion of the two Wills in Chriſt, which will be ſpoken of in the Acts of the 5th. Council, where they are inſerted, we have ſome others upon particular Matters. The 1ſt. is directed to the Exarch Iſacius, to whom he complains, that certain Biſhops adviſed a Lord to forſake Adaluade, the lawful King of the Lombards, to ſide with the Tyrant Ariovalde; and he deſires him, after having reſtor'd Adaluade, to ſend thoſe Biſhops to Rome to him, that he may puniſh them for their Diſloyalty. We learn of Paul, the Deacon, that Adaluade was turn'd out by the Lombards, becauſe he had loſt his Senſes, and that Ariovalde was put in his room.

The Second Letter of Honorius is directed to the Biſhops of the Provinces of Venice and Iſtria. He recommends to them Primogenius whom he had conſecrated to be Arch-Biſhop of Grado, and prays them, to admit him into the place of him who had been deprived of that Church.

The three next Letters are concerning the Queſtion of the two Wills in Chriſt.

The fifth and ſixth are taken out of Beda; therein he congratulates Edwin King of Northumberland for his Converſion; he exhorts him to Perſeverance in the Faith and Piety; he recommends St. Gregory's Works to him for his reading, and tells him, he ſends two Palls to both the Metropolitans of his Kingdom.

The ſixth ought to be directed to thoſe two Metropolitans, named Honorius and Paulinus, the one Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, the other of York. He exhorts them to diſcharge the Duties of their Miniſtry worthily, and grants to them, that when either of the Biſhops of thoſe two Sees ſhall happen to die, the Surviver may ordain another in his Room. Honorius.

Honorius's two laſt Letters are taken out of the Collection of Canons of Cardinal Deuſdedit. In the firſt directed to the Biſhops of Epirus, he tells them, that he ſends them the Pall for Hypatius, whom they had ordained Biſhop of Nicopolis; but becauſe he had been ſuſpected of having had a hand in his Predeceſſor Sotericus's Death, his Will is, that when the time of Peace ſhall give him leave, he ſhould come to Rome to clear himſelf by (i) Oath before St. Peter's Tomb, from having been any ways acceſſary to it; and he ſays, that Sotericus had thus cleared himſelf from ſome Suſpicions againſt him. The ſecond is directed to Sergius Subdeacon, about a buſineſs concerning the Biſhop of Cagliari. That Biſhop was at variance with certain of his Clerks; the Parties had been cited to Rome; the Biſhop had appeared there, and his Clerks being not come thither, the Pope had ſent an Advocate from Rome to bring them; but the Governor of Sardinia detained them in Africa, to keep them out of the Pope's Juriſdiction, which obliged him to intreat Sergius to ſue to the Praefectus Praetorio to do him Juſtice, by ordering that Governor to ſend thoſe Clerks to Rome. He tranſmitted to him at the ſame time a Copy of Valentinian and Theodoſius's Law to ſupport his Pretenſion.

[(i) Oath before St. Peter's Tomb. This Action, tho' but a Ceremony in ſwearing, yet being intended as a piece of Divine Honour to St. Peter, was an idolatrous and ſinful Cuſtom which crept in with Saint-Worſhip.]

SOPHRONIUS.

Sophronius [* A Sect that held, that there was but one Will in Jeſus Chriſt after the Union of the two Natures.] SOphronius, of Damaſcus, elected Patriarch of Jeruſalem in the Year 629, was one of the great Oppoſers of the * Monothelites; when he was but a Monk he oppoſed that Error ſpringing up at Alexandria, and did his Endeavours to hinder Cyrus from entertaining it. He was the firſt Patriarch that condemned it, and before he died, he ſent a Biſhop to Rome to demand the ſolemn Condemnation of it. Photius in the 231*ſt*. Volume of his Bibliotheca ſays, he had peruſed a Synodal Letter of that Patriarch, directed to Honorius then governing the Church of Rome, in which he did exactly explain and defend the Doctrine of the Church; that he obſerved there, that Magnus had been excommunicated, together with Apollinarius, and that Theodoret had not been baniſhed out of the Church, tho' he did not agree with St. Cyril; that he diſtinguiſhed there two Origen's, the one Elder, the other Sirnamed Adamantius, altho' they be really the ſame; that he mentioned one James of Syria Author of the Sect of the Acephali; that he prayed Honorius, that, in caſe he had forgotten in his Letter ſome thing which he ſhould have ſaid, he would ſupply it, and amend what he ſhould think amiſs in it; That he cited the Teſtimonies of ſeveral Fathers, whereof Photius maketh the Catalogue, to confute thoſe Mens Opinions, who pretended, there was but one Operation in Chriſt. This is the ſum of that Letter, as it is reported by Photius.

This Patriarch of Jeruſalem wrote alſo another Synodal Letter on the ſame Subject, directed to Sergius Patriarch of Conſtantinople, mentioned in the 11*th*. Act of the 6*th*. Council. It contains a long Profeſſion of Faith, in which, after a large Diſſertation upon the Myſtery of the Incarnation, and having encountered the Hereſies and Errors oppoſite to the Faith of the Church, he concludes, that the two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt have each their diſtinct Operations. He names and condemns an infinite number of Hereticks. He aſſerts, the Souls to be created when our Bodies are formed, and that we ſhall riſe with the very ſame Bodies we have. He attributes the contrary Opinion to Origen, againſt whom he proves the Eternity of Pains.

Beſides theſe Two Dogmatical Monuments, we have Four Sermons fathered upon Sophronius; the firſt is on our Saviour's Birth, wherein the Cruelties of the Saracens, who had invaded the Town of Bethlehem, are mentioned. The Second is a Panegyrick of the Angels, full of Praiſes and Prayers, as alſo the other two (k) Sermons of the Praiſes of the Croſs. Photius found out the true Style of that Author, when he obſerved that he uſed extraordinary Terms, and goes skipping along. By this Character it is plain enough, that it is another Sophronius, ſpoken of by the ſame Photius in the Sophronius

[(k) Sermons of the Praiſes of the Croſs.] The Croſs of Chriſt was at firſt a ſtumbling Block to the Jews, Fooliſhneſs to the Gentiles and a Reproach to the Chriſtians themſelves, who were in deriſion called the Diſciples of a crucified God. To ſhew therefore their Conſtancy, and love to their Profeſſion, they did frequently croſs themſelves on their Breaſts and Foreheads, to teſtifie their ſincere Belief, that Jeſus who was crucified was their Saviour, and that they were not aſhamed of his Croſs. Theſe were the only Croſſes, (or Croſſings rather) that were uſed by the Chriſtians for 300 Years and more after Chriſt, for Arnobius ſays, Crucem nec habemus, nec optamus: We neither have Croſſes nor deſire any. But after it pleaſed God to promiſe Conſtantine the Great Victory over his Competitors in the Empire, by making the Sign of the Croſs to appear to him in the Air, with this Inſcription, In hoc ſigno vinces, which he therefore put immediately into the Imperial Standard, to be adored by all the Soldiers according to the Cuſtom, and was always Victorious with it, it ever after came to be in very great Eſteem and Honour among the Chriſtians. Wooden Croſſes were made and placed in the Publick Markets, the Sign of the Croſs was uſed in Celebrating the Sacraments, Honourable Titles were given to it by the Fathers, who called it, Signum Fidei, Trophaeum Dominicum, Signum Chriſti, & Dei. At laſt, in this Superſtitious and Idolatrous Age it was admitted into the Church together with the Images of Chriſt, and his Saints, exceſſive Praiſes beſtowed upon it by this, and other Biſhops, in their Sermons, who were zealous for Image-Worſhip, and became an object of Adoration together with them.] 1. Cor. 1. 23. *Aug. Sophronius

5*th.* Volume of his Bibliotheca, in these Words. 'I have 'read a Book of Sophronius's for St. Basil, against Eunomius; 'he is more learned and short than Theodorus; he does not 'keep close to all that Eunomius hath said, but undertakes 'to oppose and confute the principal Points of Eunomius's 'Heresie, his Character is to be peremptory and decisive, 'his Style is free and plain, yet not tedious, although he 'be full of Logical Arguments.

There is a bad Piece, intituled St. Peter's and St. Paul's Journeys, tho' St. Peter's only be mentioned, attributed to Sophronius of Jerusalem, but 'tis a ridiculous Forgery, not worth mentioning.

We may more justly attribute to Sophronius of Jerusalem, St. Mary the Ægyptian's Life, quoted in the 7*th.* Council, Act. 4. by St. John Damascene, in his (l) Book of Images, and by Nicephorus Calist. l. 7. c. 3. In the 7*th.* Council are cited two Fragments of a Discourse of Sophronius's upon St. Cyrus, and St. John, for the Images of Saints. A Book likewise called the Spiritual Meadow, [Limonarium, or Pratum Spirituale,] is attributed to him. He died in 636. He is reckoned among the Fathers of the Church, and much quoted by Romish Authors in their Controversy with Protestants, was a credulous and superstitious Person, a great Patron of Images, and a zealous Defender of Image-Worship, and the other Errors which sprang up about his time. Insomuch, that it is no wonder that we meet with Books of such Titles as this under his Name, better becoming an Heathen than a Christian, for which Reason his Writings are of small Esteem with judicious and pious Men.]

JOANNES MOSCHUS.

J. Moschus

[*Surnamed Eviratus.]

THE Author of the Spiritual Meadow, is called Joannes Moschus. *, Presbyter and Monk, who having run through the Monasteries of the East, came to Rome with his Scholar Sophronius, believed to be him, we have now spoken of, tho' without any certain proof. He gathered into that Book what he had learned of the Life, Actions, Sentences, and Miracles of the Monks of divers Countries. There he relates many strange Stories and Miracles that deserve little Credit. We shall not stand to relate them, but shall only remark what may be useful to clear the Church-Discipline. He observes in the third Chapter, there was a Presbyter who did baptize, and anoint the Baptized with the Holy Chrism; but that he would have left that Function, because that when he baptized Women, he felt some Motions troublesome to him. In the 25*th.* he says, that a Friar having pronounced the Words of Consecration upon some Loaves he had brought to offer upon the Altar, when the Priest offered them, he did not see the Holy Ghost coming down, as it used to do, and that he was warned by an Angel, that those Loaves had been consecrated before, because that Friar had pronounced in the way the Words of Consecration, and that this Priest forbad them afterwards to suffer any other to learn them, but such as were to offer the Holy Sacrifice, and that no Body should pronounce them, but in the time of the Consecration. In the 26*th.* he reports, that a Monk, to prove there was no Salvation to be had out of the Church, had shewed to one of his Brethren engaged in Nestorius's Error, Hereticks in a place full of Fire and Filth. In the 27*th.* he says, A Priest would not say Mass, unless he saw the Holy Ghost descending upon the Altar, tho' the Hour of the Celebration of it ought always to be the same. In the 29*th.* he relates, that a Stylite Monk of the Communion of the Catholicks, sent to another Stylite of the Sect of the Severians, for a share of his Communion Bread, and that having thrown it into boiling Water, it was presently dissolved, but that having afterwards thrown a Particle of the Eucharist of the Catholicks into it, the Water cooled, and the Eucharist remained intire, without moistening it. In the 30*th.* he relates another (m) Miracle of the Eucharist, that a Severian having forced his Wife, a Catholick, to throw the Communion-Bread away, he did see it shining in the Mire, and that two Days after he had seen an Æthiopian, saying to him, we are both condemned to the same Torment. In the 44*th.* he says, that a Friar who had been negligent during his Life, was after his Death seen by an Old Man in a great Fire up to the Neck, and telling the Old Man, he was beholden to his Prayers for the Favour he enjoyed, of not having his Head also in the Fire. In the 45*th.* he says, A Recluse promised the Devil, he would (n) adore the Virgin's Image no more, to be delivered from his Temptation, and that he was reproved by his Elder for doing so. In the 47*th.* he relates, that the Virgin having appeared twice to a Jester, uttering impious Speeches against her, and having warned him to do so no more, but to no purpose, she appeared to him the third time, and that having signed his Hands and Feet with the Sign of the Cross, he found himself, when he awoke without Hands and Feet. In the 79*th.* he observeth, it was the Custom in Constantinople, to keep the Eucharist they received on Holy Thursday, to the Holy Thursday of the next Year; and that a Catholick being Servant to a Severian, having left with his Master the Key of his Chest where he had laid up the Eucharist in a Linen-Cloth, the Master having designed to burn it, because his Servant did not come back, found that the Particles of the Eucharist had brought forth Ears of Corn. He relates in Chapter 176*th.* that a young Jew finding himself in great Extremity in a Desart without Water, and having called for Baptism on those that accompanied him, one of them baptized him, by throwing Sand on his Head three times, and saying the usual Words, Such an one is baptized in the Name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, that presently after that Jew found himself better; that afterwards it was debated, whether that Baptism was good and valid, and that at last he was sent to Jordan to be baptized there, and he that baptized him was ordained Deacon. In the 190*th.* he relates, that some Children of the Province of Apamea, would needs represent the Celebration of the Holy Mysteries, and that having chosen one of themselves to perform the Office of a Priest, and two others of Deacons, they set some Bread upon a Stone, and that he that acted the Priest did pronounce the Words of Oblation, which he had gotten by-heart, because it was the Custom of his Church, that Children should receive the Communion next after the Clerks, and being for that reason pretty near the Altar, they overheard the Words of the Holy Sacrifice, which the Priests in some places used to utter aloud, that having thus performed all the Ceremonies before they brake the Bread to give the Communion, Fire came down from Heaven which consumed the Oblation, and the whole Stone whereon it was laid; that the Bishop of the place hearing of it, built a Monastery in that place, and made all those Children Monks. To this Example he adds that reported by Rufinus, of the Baptism administred by St. Athanasius, who was then but a Child, to some other Children, and says, that St. Athanasius believed, those that receive Baptism out of Fear, and without Faith, are nevertheless baptized, tho' Baptism does them no good. In the 207*th.* there is mention made of two Angels who stood Sureties for a Girl which had a mind to be baptized. In the 214*th.* it is observed, they baptized in the East on the Day of Epiphany, as well as on Easter-day, and Whitsunday.

J. Moschus

Preachers in their Sermons, and by Historians in their Legends. Many wholly feigned, others in part, or in shew only acted, till Superstition and Idolatry at last were fully established, and by these Delusions are still upheld in the Church of Rome. Indeed St. Austine says, that several Miracles were done in his time at the Martyrs Tombs, and by their Relicks, but as he something scrupled the Truth of them, so he was willing to let them pass as such, because the Faith was confirmed by them, and there appeared no other end of them but to advance the same Worship that the Church professed. Had they been made a Foundation of Saint-Worship, as afterward they were, he would certainly have rejected them as forged, or wrought for a false end and intention, as it is commanded.]

Aug. de Civ. Dei, l. 22. c. 10

Deut. 13. 1, 5.

[(n) Adore the Virgin's Image.] Among the Images of Saints which were admitted into the Church in this Age, and became Objects of Divine Worship, the Image of the Virgin Mary, the Mother of God had a chief place. And tho' this Story were true, that the Devil did tempt a Monk to abjure the Worship of the Virgin's Image, which is really a Doctrine of Devils, yet the Artifice of Satan in this Temptation could be no other than this, to establish that Doctrine as Divine, which he had secretly first brought into practice, by endeavouring openly to extort it from the more zealous Practisers of it. And so make his diabolical Delusions pass for Sacred and Divine Truths.]

Mede's Apost. of later times, p. 10. 24.

[(m) Miracle of the Eucharist, &c.] It is really very strange to meet with so many Miracles in this Age in the Writers of it, Whereas in the three precedent Centuries we find little or no mention of any. Yea, St. Chrysostome says, Nos Miraculis nequaquam indigemus quæ nunc non habemus, &c. As we have no Miracles, so we want none. The Faith having been sufficiently confirmed by Christ and his Apostles, Miracles afterwards became useless, and therefore ceased. But when the Church began to preach Alterum Evangelium, another Gospel, and such Doctrines were imposed and taught, as neither Christ nor his Apostles had ever wrought any one Miracle in Confirmation of, it was thought, the readiest way to gain Credit to the Imposture, either to feign, or outwardly do some Miracles, which might extort Belief from the Vulgar. To this end did not only Men but Devils conspire together in working lying Wonders to confirm the Adoration of Images, the Sacrament, Saints Relicks, and the like. Strange things were done thro' the Artifices of Satan by the Martyrs Bones, stranger related by the ries, of Apparitions, Revelations, Viſions, and Miracles, wrought by thoſe Hermits, whether by foretelling things to come, by diſcovering Mens Thoughts, healing the Sick, commanding Lions and wild Beaſts, or working extraordinary Feats. Death it ſelf did not hinder them from working Miracles, from the Grave they did ſpeak to the Living, and wrought Miracles in their Behalf. Among thoſe wonderful Stories, of little Credit for the moſt part, there be found inimitable Examples of Virtue, extraordinary Auſterities, exceſſive Faſts, wonderful Poverty, and ſuch a Simplicity and Humility, as would ſometimes paſs for Sottiſhneſs; an immoderate Zeal againſt Hereticks, fierce Conflicts with Devils, and ſome witty and Holy Anſwers. The Style of that Work is low and courſe. It was tranſlated into Latin by Ambroſius Camaldulenſis, and printed in Greek in the Bibliotheca Patrum 1624. Cotelerius publiſhed at laſt the Greek of ſome Chapters, which were before wanting, in his ſecond Volume of Eccleſiaſtical Monuments.

GEORGIUS, Sirnamed PISIDES.

Georgius.

[* Hexaemeron.]

Georgius, Deacon and Library-Keeper of the Church of Conſtantinople, ſirnamed Piſides, wrote a Book in Iambick Verſe upon the Creation of the World, which the Ancients call * the Six Days Work. He wrote alſo the Life of the Emperor Heraclius, the Perſian War, a Panegyrick upon the Martyr Anaſtaſius, and another Work intituled Abarica, [or Avarica, being an Hiſtory of the Avares.]

We have the firſt Work of this Author, which is dedicated to Sergius, Patriarch of Conſtantinople, and another Poem of the Vanity of this Life, together with ſome Fragments taken out of Suidas. He is a better Poet than Divine.

This is probably the ſame Georgius, who made ſome Sermons in the praiſe of the Virgin, publiſhed by F. Combefis, whereof ſome are upon the Virgin's Conception, and his Mother's; others upon the Virgin's Birth, her Preſentation in the Temple, her aſſiſting at the Croſs, and at the Sepulchre; they are full of Fables, (taken out of the Apocryphal Book of the Virgin's Birth, falſly fathered upon St. James,) and of extraordinary Commendations of the Virgin, and her Parents. They are Declamations full of Deſcriptions, Exclamations, rhetorical Figures, and emphatical Terms, but void of Senſe and Reaſon, and fitter for Sport than Inſtruction. The laſt of theſe Sermons is upon St. Coſmus and St. Damian.

Georgius.

EUGENIUS Biſhop of Toledo.

Eugenius.

Eugenius having lived in Solitude, and in the Practice of the Monaſtical Life, near the City of Saragoſa, was forced to be Biſhop of Toledo, by order from the Prince. Ildephonſus, who ſucceeded him in that See, tells us, he wrote a Book of the Trinity, and two little Books, whereof the one was in Verſe of divers Meaſures, the other in Proſe; that he had alſo reviſed Dracontius's Work on the Creation of the World, and had made it a great deal better than it was, and had added to it the Work of the ſeventh Day.

Sirmondus hath publiſhed Eugenius's Poems, containing ſeveral Pieces on different Subjects. The Style of them is not very polite, but the Fancies are very exact and judicious, and he is full of very Chriſtian Sentiments. Cardinal Aguirre, in his Notitia of the Councils of Spain, promiſes a Letter of this Eugenius to Protaſius, and a new Book of Epigrams that has never been publiſhed.

Eugenius.

He had a Predeceſſor named Eugenius, whom Ildephonſus ranks alſo among the Eccleſiaſtical Writers; but he ſpeaks of none of his Works in particular; nay, he does not ſay he had written any: Wherefore we ſhall ſay nothing of his Life.

APOLLONIUS, Presbyter of Novara.

Apollonius

THis Presbyter hath compoſed a Poem of the Deſtruction and Ruin of Jeruſalem by Veſpaſian. His Expreſſions are noble, his Terms poetical, and his Verſes have a very ſweet Cadence. This Work is divided into four Books; he is one of the beſt Chriſtian Poets we have. He makes no difficulty of calling upon the Muſes, and to uſe the Names of Prophane Gods.

JOHN IV.

John IV.

THis Pope did not enjoy the Roman See long; for he was raiſed to it in 640, and died in 1641. Anaſtaſius hath preſerved in his Collections an Apology which he made for his Predeceſſor Honorius, in which he pretends, that that Pope was not in the Error of the Monothelites, who acknowledged but one Will in Jeſus Chriſt; and that when he ſaid, there were not two Wills in Chriſt, he underſtood it of two contrary Wills, or of the inferior and ſuperior Part, that is, of Concupiſcence which is contrary to the rational Will; but he never meant, that there was but one Will only in Chriſt, conſiſting of the Divine and the Humane Will united into one.

We have yet two Letters of this Pope; the firſt is written to the Iriſh Abbots in the Name of Hilarius, Arch-Prieſt of the Church of Rome, holding the See, during the Vacancy, in the Place of John, who was elected, but not conſecrated yet, and of two other Officers of the Roman Church, the one having the Title of Secretary of State, the other of Counſellor. They reprove them for not keeping Eaſter at the ſame time with other Churches, and for retaining ſome Relicks of Pelagianiſm among them.

John IV.

The ſecond Letter is to Iſaac of Syracuſe. He declares therein, that Monks ought to be permitted to chuſe, and put into the Churches given them, ſuch Prieſts as they will, yet with this Proviſo, that if they do any thing againſt the Biſhop they ſhall be puniſh'd by the Synod.

THEODORUS I.

Theodor. I.

AFter John IV's Death, Theodorus was choſen in his Room, in November, the Year 641. He wrote two Letters, and a Memoir, againſt Pyrrhus, Patriarch of Conſtantinople, who had been deprived, and Paul put in his room. 'Tis to this laſt, Theodorus's firſt Letter is directed. He ſends him word, that Pyrrhus ought to be condemned and depoſed in a Synod, for commending Heraclius, and going about to make a new Profeſſion of Faith. He tells him, that in caſe he could not get him condemned in his Country, he muſt only pray the Emperor to cauſe him to be brought to Rome, and that he will get him judged in a Council. The ſecond Letter is directed to the Biſhops who had ordained Paul. He finds fault with them for ordaining him before they had depoſed Pyrrhus, and for giving him the Title of Moſt Holy. He takes notice of the Reaſons why he ſhould be condemned, 1. Becauſe he had commended Heraclius; and, 2. Becauſe he had made a new Profeſſion of Faith, contrary to the Apoſtolick Doctrine, againſt the Prohibition of the Councils of Epheſus and Chalcedon. In the Memoir he exhorts the Eaſtern Biſhops, to preſerve the ancient Faith of the Church, and to reject the Novelties brought in by Pyrrhus, and his Confeſſion of Faith.

MAR-

MARTIN I.

Martin I.

MArtin I. being ordained Bishop of Rome, in July 649. held in October following, a Council of 105. Bishops against the Monothelites; in which he condemned Sergius and Pyrrhus, who had been formerly Bishops of Constantinople, and Paul, then in possession of it. At that time the Emperor Constans sent the Exarch Olympius into Italy, with an order to force the Bishops of Italy to receive the * Type published by him. Olympius found the Pope, the Bishops and the Clergy of Italy in a very contrary Disposition, and was forced to enter into Agreement with Martin; but this Exarch being dead, a while after, in Sicily, where he had the Command of an Army against the Saracens, the Emperor sent Theodorus, surnamed Calliopas; who caused Pope Martin to be taken away by Force, in July 653. He remained a whole year in the Isle of Naxos, and came not to Constantinople 'till towards the end of 654. from whence he was banished into Chersona, where he died, in 656. in June.

[*An Edict put out by the Emperor Constans, at the Desire of Paulus Bishop of Constantinople, a Monothelite; whereby it was prohibited to dispute about the Operations and Wills of Christ.]

We have seventeen Letters of his.

The first is a circular Letter to all Bishops, to let them know, he had condemned the Error of the Monothelites.

The second is directed to Amandus Bishop of Utrecht, who had written to him, that he was so much grieved to see the Disorder of certain Clergymen, who committed the Sin of the Flesh after their Ordination, that he had a mind to leave his Bishoprick, to live in Peace and Quietness. He dissuades him from that Design, and advises him to deal with those Sinners with all the Severity that the Canons allow; declaring, that all those that are fallen, after their Ordination, shall remain suspended for ever, and be for ever disabled from performing any Sacerdotal Function: That they shall pass their whole Life in Penance, for the Expiation of their Fault: For, saith he, if we chuse Persons of an innocent Life, to be promoted to Orders, with how much greater Reason should we hinder those who are fallen after their Ordination, from medling with the Holy Mysteries with defiled Hands, and polluted with Crimes? Let them therefore be deposed for ever, according to the Decrees of the Councils; to the end that the Searcher of Hearts, who will not suffer any of his Sheep to perish, seeing the Sincerity of their Repentance, may forgive them at the Day of Judgment. Then he exhorts that Bishop to undergo any manner of Pains, Torments and Toil for the Salvation of his Sheep, and the Service of God. Lastly, he gives him notice, that he hath condemned the Monothelites, in a General Council of his Brethren, and sends him the Acts themselves, to the end he may publish them, and cause them to be received in his Country. He prays him to persuade King Sigebert to send some Bishops to the Holy See, that they may carry home the Acts of that Council, and joyn with him in the Defence of the Faith.

The third is directed to the Emperor Constans, in the Name of the whole Synod. He acquaints him, that he hath condemned the Error of the Monothelites, in a Synod, of which he sends him the Acts.

The fourth is to the Bishop of Carthage, and to all the Bishops of Africa. He approves the Confession of Faith they had sent him, and sends them the Acts of the Council.

In the fifth he makes John Bishop of Philadelphia, to whom he writes, his Vicar in all the East, giving him Power to make Bishops and Priests in the Churches of the Patriarchates of Jerusalem and Antioch, to receive those that will renounce their Error, and to confirm them in their Churches, provided there be no other canonical Impediment: For, saith he, we ought to be the Defenders, and not Betrayers of the Canons. Thus he will not have him to confirm them, who have chosen themselves, nor those whose Election was not canonical. He mentions particularly the Election of Macedonius Bishop of Antioch, who was made Bishop in a strange Country, without the Consent of the People, and without a Decree of Election, as well as that of Peter Bishop of Alexandria. He will have them that shall be admitted, not only to abjure the Error of the Monothelites, but moreover to condemn Theodorus, Cyrus, Sergius, Pyrrhus, Paul, and all of the same Opinion with them; to reject the Type, and to make a clear Profession, that they believe two Wills in Christ. He appoints two Bishops, named Theodorus and Anthony, with an Abbot, to help him in that Function; to whom he directs the three next Letters, to exhort them to joyn themselves with that Bishop, for the Defence of the Faith. In the last, he speaks of Stephen, an Eastern Bishop, whom he had also made his Vicar. He explains that matter in the next Letter, directed to Pancaleo, in which he complains, that they had accused that Bishop, and hindred him from receiving the Letter which he had sent him, to ordain Priests and Bishops. He repeats also here, that those Bishops ought not to be confirmed, who have been elected in another Town, than that whereof they are Priests or Bishops, and without the Consent of the Bishop or the Metropolitan; thus he declares void all the Ordinations made in Sophronius's Patriarchate, which had not been done by his Authority.

In the tenth, he recommends his Vicar to a great Lord, named Peter.

Martin I.

In the eleventh, to the Church of Jerusalem, he acquaints them with the Condemnation of the Error of the Monothelites, and declares void the Ordinations of Macedonius, Patriarch of Antioch, and Peter Bishop of Alexandria.

In the twelfth, he declares to Paul of Thessalonica, that he hath excommunicated and deposed him for his Errors.

In the thirteenth, he acquaints the Church of Thessalonica with Paul's Condemnation, and exhorts them to avoid his Heresy.

In the fourteenth, to Theodorus, he relates what passed, when he was violently taken away from Rome. He says, that he coming out of the Constantinian Church, encompassed with Guards, they said in the Presence of the Exarch, Anathema to him that believes that Martin did change or will change the least Word in the Faith: Anathema to them that shall not persevere in the orthodox Faith unto Death. That Calliopas hearing this, said, he had no other Faith; that he answered him, He would defend that Faith unto Death; and as for the other things charged on him, he was altogether innocent of them; that he had never written to the Saracens; that he sent them no Money neither, only that he had given some Alms to some Servants of God coming to Rome; that it was false that he had uttered any thing against the Respect due to the Virgin, and that he pronounced Anathema to whoever did not reverence and adore her. These are the Terms used by him, non honorat atque adorat; but the Term of Adoring is not to be taken strictly, for in the next Letter they make Calliopas say, he was come to adore the Pope, that is, to pay his Respects to him.

He relates yet the same Story more at large in the fifteenth Letter, directed to the same Theodorus, where he says, that foreseeing what was to come, he had withdrawn himself and all his Clergy into the Constantinian Church, thus named, because it was the first that Constantine had built, near the Bishop's Palace; that he was there the Saturday, 13*th*, of June, in the year 653. when Calliopas came to Rome with an Army; that he sent some of his Clergy to meet him; that Calliopas told them, that he was come to adore the Pope, that is, to pay him his Respects; that notwithstanding, the next Day being Sunday, he sent Word, that he was too much tired to come to him; that on Monday he sent Word to the Pope by his Secretary, he ought not to call Men together, nor prepare Arms and Stones to defend himself; that Martin shewed to them he had sent, that this was false; that he lay sick ever since October, and had set his Bed before the Altar; that about Noon a Multitude of armed Men entred into the Church with a great deal of Tumult, and that they broke at their entring, all the (o) Tapers in the Church. Then Calliopas shewed an Order from the Emperor, declaring, that Martin was to be turned out of the Holy See, and to be sent to Constantinople, and another Bishop be put in his room. Which, says he, was never done; for in the Bishop of Rome's Absence, the Arch-deacon, the Arch-priest, and the principal Secretary do occupy his Place. Martin, unwilling that any body should be killed for him, yielded himself presently to them, and begged only some of his Clerks to accompany him. Calliopas finding no Resistance, bade Martin come along with them to his Palace, which he obey'd; all his Clergy came to him the next day, and many were ready to go along with him; but that same Night, he was violently carried away, without suffering any body to accompany him, but six Men-Servants and a Cook: From thence he was carried away to the Isle of Naxos, where he staid one year, at the end of which he was brought to Constantinople. This is the Abridgment of what is contained in that Letter.

[(o) Tapers in the Church.] As several other Heathen and Jewish Ceremonies were received by the Christians, in compliance with the Jews and Gentiles, that their conversion might be the more easy: So this of burning of Tapers in their religious Assemblies. At first, they were indeed lighted only at the Vigils, to which not Religion but Necessity obliged them; but afterward, in Jerome's time, they were lighted up upon the Tombs of the Martyrs, in honour to them, and in the Eastern Church, were always lighted up at the Reading of the Gospel, and in some Places at the Interpreting of it, and that at Noon-day. At last it was imposed by Gregory the Great, and confirmed by Sabinian, anno 606. Many of the Fathers inveighed fiercely against this Custom, in the Massalians or Euchita, Cur diem Lucernis infringimus, says Tertullian, Quis Lucernas vanas proferre compellit? And so Lactantius, Num mentis compos putandus est, qui datori luminis Candelarum lumen offert pro munere? But Superstition prevailing in the Church, brought in this with other Ceremonies, which, if the most noxious, had been more tolerable.]

Tertul. in Apolog. Lact. Instit. l. 6. c. 2.

The Particulars of his Usage in Constantinople are related in a Letter or Memoir, written under the name of a good Christian to the Bishops of the West. He says, that Martin, being being come up to that Haven, nigh the Church of St. Euphemia, the 17*th* of December, he was left all the Day long in the Ship; that towards the Evening they took him into a Boat, and carried him to the Priſon of the Court of Guard; wherein he was ſhut up fourſcore and thirteen Days, no body being ſuffered to ſpeak to him; that after that ſpace of time, he was brought into the Council-Chamber of the Emperor, where the Accuſers and Witneſſes, prepared againſt him, were ordered to appear; they were Soldiers or armed Men, who accuſed him of conſpiring with Olympius. Martin refuſed and excepted againſt the Witneſſes they brought againſt him, and maintained, he was more innocent by far than thoſe Witneſſes themſelves, and all the reſt that ſided with Olympius; that he came to Rome in quality of Exarch, that he had the Authority and Power in his Hands, and that they were forced to obey him. After this tumultuary Information, they carried him to a Terraſs, where they ſtripped him, and loaded him with Chains, dragged him thro' the Town, and put him in the Priſon of the Prætorium, loaden with the Burden of his Chains, and brought to the laſt Extremity. The next day, the Emperor coming to viſit Paul of Conſtantinople, who was ready to die, and acquainting him with what was done, that Biſhop touched with a Remorſe of Conſcience, fetched a deep Sigh and turning him aſide, ſaid, Alas! 'tis to add to the Account I am to give to God. The Emperor asking him, why he did ſo? Is it not great pity, anſwered he, Biſhops ſhould be thus abuſed? And he earneſtly beſought the Emperor to ſuffer it no longer. After Paul's Death, Pyrrhus ſought to be reſtored; but many oppoſed it, becauſe of the Retractation he had made at Rome. They ſent to Pope Martin, to ask him about the Paſſages of that Affair; he anſwered, that Pyrrhus came voluntarily to Rome; that his Predeceſſor Theodorus made him welcome; that he was entertained at the Coſt of the Roman Church, the Cuſtom whereof was, to find with Victuals all the Strangers who fled thither. They would have forced him to ſay, that Pyrrhus had ſigned his Retractation by Force; but he declared, he would always ſpeak the Truth. After having ſtaid 85 days in that Priſon, they fetched him out of it, to baniſh him to Cherſona, where he died the 16*th*. of September, in the year 656, having ſuffered much. He wrote two Letters from that place of his Exile, which are the two laſt, in which he repreſents his Wants, and the Poverty he ſuffered in that Country. He prays his Friends to ſend him ſome Relief from Rome: For, ſaith he, if St. Peter feed ſo many Pilgrims at Rome, it is very meet he ſhould aſſiſt us, who are his Miniſters, and ſuffer ſo much for the Truth and Religion.

Martin I.

This Pope's Conſtancy and Firmneſs appears in his Letters. They are well written, with Strength and Wiſdom; the Style of them is great and noble, and worthy of the Majeſty of the Holy See. The third, and the ten next, are found in Greek and Latin; either he wrote them himſelf in thoſe two Languages, or they have been tranſlated by ſome Body of that time.

St. MAXIMUS.

St. Maximus.

Maximus, deſcended of a noble Family of Conſtantinople, having been a while chief Secretary of of State to the Emperor Heraclius, withdrew himſelf into the Monaſtery of Chryſopolis, of which he was Abbot. The Fear of the Barbarians Incurſions, and the Errors ſpreading at Conſtantinople, forced him to fly into Africa, after Heraclius's Death, in the Year 641, of the Vulgar Æra. There he ſtoutly oppoſed the Error of the Monothelites, and prevail'd with the Africans, to joyn themſelves with John Biſhop of Rome, to condemn their Opinions. It fell out, that Pyrrhus, Patriarch of Conſtantinople, and Head of that Party, who was baniſhed out of Conſtantinople, becauſe he was accuſed of having poyſoned the Emperor Conſtantine, fled into Africa, where he met with Maximus, with whom he fell into Diſcourſe, and yielded or feigned to yield to his Reaſons; and hoping to be reſtored by the Pope's Help, he reſolved to go to Rome with Maximus. Being arrived there, he preſented an Orthodox Confeſſion of Faith to Pope Theodorus. But hearing afterwards from the Exarch of Ravenna, that the Court was of the Party of the Monothelites, and that he could not be reſtored, unleſs he altered his Mind, he retracted his Opinions, and embraced again his firſt Tenents; which forced Pope Theodorus to condemn him in a Council, in which his Condemnation was ſigned with Ink, mixed with ſome of our Lord's Blood.

Maximus was the Man that did thus ſtir up the Romans againſt the Monothelites, and there is no doubt but he had a good ſhare in the Council Pope Martin held at Rome againſt them; and therefore the Emperor Conſtans's Anger did equally break out againſt him and Pope Martin. They were brought to Conſtantinople: Maximus appeared often before the Judges, and was condemned to Baniſhment in the year 655. He was ſent into a ſmall Town of Thrace, named Byzias, whither Theodorus, Biſhop of Cæſarea, went to ſee him, to oblige him to yield to their Opinion; but when he could not prevail with him, they brought him back to Conſtantinople; and by a ſtrange Cruelty, after he had ſuffered much, they cut off the Hand and Tongue of him, and his Diſciple Anaſtaſius; then he was ſent into Priſon in a Caſtle, called Schemre, where he died, Aug. 13. 662.

This Father wrote a great many Works. Some of them have been publiſhed in divers Collections; but Combefis hath publiſhed a good number of them in Greek and Latin in two Volumes, printed at Paris, 1675. At the beginning of theſe two Volumes is found St. Maximus's Life, written by a Greek, younger than he, but pretty well acquainted with the Affairs of his time, and the authentick Acts of this holy Man's Perſecutions.

The firſt part of thoſe Acts contains the verbal Proceſs of what paſſed at Conſtantinople in the Emperor's Council, when Maximus was brought thither from Italy. In the firſt Interrogatory we find the Depoſitions of Witneſſes accuſing him of injurious Speeches to the Emperors. He defends himſelf againſt them, and maintains againſt the 4*th*. Witneſs, that he was in the right, when he ſaid, that the Emperors, tho' Chriſtians, were not Prelates. 'For, ſaith he, 'he who does not offer upon the Altars, does not baptize, 'does not give the Sacred Unction, does not lay on Hands, 'does not create Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons, does not 'conſecrate Altars, does not wear the Sacerdotal Marks 'nor Habits, cannot be called a Prelate among Chriſtians; 'therefore,' in the Oblation at the Altar, the Emperor is 'named after the Biſhops, the Prieſts, the Deacons, and 'the Clerks, in the Rank of the Laity.' Then they brought in his Diſciple, who was accuſed of being an Origeniſt; but he purged himſelf from that Charge, by ſaying, Anathema to Origen. The ſame day, towards Evening, two of the Emperor's Officers, examined Maximus about the Conference he had with Pyrrhus in Africa. He related to them what was ſaid in that Conference, and declared to them, he would not communicate with the Church of Conſtantinople, nor receive the * Ecthesis nor the Type; and though they urged him to communicate with the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, he ſaid, he would not. He was brought again the Saturday following to the Palace of Conſtantinople, and declared anew, that he did anathematize the Type, and would not communicate with the Church of Conſtantinople that received it. He ſaid, in that Interrogatory, he was 75 years old, and his Diſciple 37. Next after theſe firſt Acts there be two Letters, the one Greek and Latin, written by Maximus to his Diſciple; the other Latin, which is Anaſtaſius's to the Monks of Cagliari. St. Maximus relates, in the firſt, that they would have forced him to ſay, that there are two Operations in Chriſt, but that they make but one, becauſe of the Union, which he would not do. In the ſecond, Anaſtaſius does alſo reject that Opinion, and proteſts againſt the Violence uſed againſt them. The ſecond part of the Acts contains the Conference which Theodoſius, Biſhop of Cæſarea, had with Maximus, at Byzias, in the Preſence of the Emperor's Commiſſioners; in which Maximus declares to him that he could not communicate with the Church of Conſtantinople, in regard, ſhe received the Novelties of the Monothelites; Theodoſius promiſed him, that if he would communicate with the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, they would reject the Type. He maintained, that that was not enough, and that they ought firſt to receive the Condemnation made by the Synod of Rome, held under Martin. Theodoſius reply'd, that that Council was not valid, as having been aſſembled without the Emperors's Order. Maximus anſwered, there were many Synods aſſembled by the Emperor's Orders, which he did not receive; as thoſe held by Conſtantius againſt the Faith of the Nicene Council, and that they did receive that which had depoſed Paulus Samoſatenus, notwithſtanding it was held without the Emperor's Order; that it was ordered by the Nicene Council, that every year, two Councils ſhould be held in the Provinces, without ſpeaking of the Emperor's Orders; and laſtly, that which moved them to approve and receive Councils, was the Truth of the Doctrine they eſtabliſhed. This brought the Diſpute to the Doctrine of the one Operation only. Theodoſius undertook to prove it by ſuppoſitious Paſſages of Pope Julius, of St. Athanaſius, and of Gregory Thaumaturgus; but Maximus having anſwered him, they were Apollinarius's; he produced two more, under St. Chryſoſtome's Name, which Maximus maintained to be Neſtorius's, and proved it immediately. Then he explained a Paſſage of St. Cyril, after which it came again to be diſputed whether they ſhould ſay, One or Two Operations; and at laſt Theodoſius ſaid, he was ready to ſign, that there were two Natures, two Wills, and two Operations in Chriſt. Maximus reply'd, it did not belong to him, who was but a Monk, to exact Profeſſions of Faith from Biſhops; but that if they were really of that Mind, they might write about it to the the Bishop of Rome; and that tho' they were agreed in the Doctrine, he could not communicate with them, 'till they had blotted out of * the Sacred Tables, which they recited at the Altar, the Names of those who had been anathematized in the Council of Rome; notwithstanding that he did advise them, that the Emperor should send an Address to the Bishop of Rome, and the Patriarch a Synodical Decree, agreeable to the Orthodox Doctrine. Theodosius promised him, that it should be done; yea, and engaged him, in case he were sent thither, to go along with him. Being agreed about that, they went to Prayers, and (p) kissed the holy Gospels, the Cross, and the Virgin's Image, and touched them, to confirm their mutual Promises. After that, having discoursed about some Points of Morality, Theodosius ask'd Maximus, whether they could not say, in a good Sense, that there was but one only Will in Christ, by reason of the Union of the two Wills? Maximus affirmed, that they could not. Theodosius, and they that were present, seemed to approve his Sentiment, and the Reasons he gave for it. Having parted good Friends in appearance, the Emperor Constans sent an Order to the Proconsul, Paul, to remove the Abbot Maximus from Byzius, and to bring him to the Monastery of St. Theodorus, near Rhegium. The next day Theodosius came to him, accompanied with two Noblemen, Epiphanius and Troilus. This last asked him, whether he would do what the Emperor should command him? He answered, he would obey his Orders, in all things concerning secular Affairs; but when they told him, it was the Emperor's Will, that he should approve the Type, and if he did do it, they would lead him to the great Church of Constantinople, and receive the Communion of the Body and Blood of Christ with him, and own him for their Father. He complained to Theodosius, that they did not make good what they had promised. Theodosius answering, that the Emperor was against it; Maximus declared, that the very invisible Powers could not force him to do what they required of him. This Answer provoked the Fury of the Company against him, so that they abused him. But at last, Theodosius having appeased the Tumult, Epiphanius asked Maximus, why he dealt with his Prince and Church as Hereticks, seeing, they owned two Wills, and two Operations in Christ? Maximus replyed, that, if it was so, they should not urge him to sign the Type. Epiphanius answered, that that was done by a kind of Condescension. Maximus maintained stoutly, that they ought to declare aloud and firmly, the Orthodox Faith. Epiphanius asked him, whether he had subscribed a Profession of Faith against them? He said, he had. Hereupon Epiphanius threatned him, which he did not seem to matter much. The next day, the Consul Theodosius delivered him into the Hands of the Soldiers, which brought him to Salembria, and then to Perbera, till at last he was condemned to have his Tongue cut out. Combefis hath added to these Acts, some Pieces collected by Anastasius, relating to the Life and Actions of St. Maximus, an Invective made by a certain Monk against the Cruelty used against him, and some Extracts of St. Maximus's Offices, taken out of the Books of the Greek Church.

[(p) Kissing the Gospels, Cross— to confirm their mutual Promises.] These Ceremonies are also the product of the superstitious worship which was established in this Age. For the Christians in the purer Ages confirmed their Oaths and Promises, by kissing the Gospels, testifying not only their Belief of them, but their Fear of falsifying their Words, lest they offended the God therein revealed, and incurred the Punishments threatned to Falsehood and Perjury. But when the Christians did as it were deifie the Martyrs, Cross and Images, they used the same Ceremony toward the Cross, as having an equal Fear and Reverence for that as for God himself and his Holy Gospel.]

The first of St. Maximus's Works is intituled, Questions upon the Holy Scripture, dedicated to Thalassius Presbyter and Abbot. He shews, in the Preface of his Work, that Evil is not an Entity, nor a real Quality, but a Defect of the Creature, whereby it swerveth from its ultimate end, that is, from God; from whence he concludes, that all Evil comes from the Want of the Knowledge and Love of God, because the only means of Salvation, is to know him, to love and serve him, renouncing the Love of the Creatures, the Passions, the Lusts, and the vain Pleasures of this World. This Work contains Answers to 65 Questions. The 1*st.* is about the Nature and Use of Passions; the rest about some places of the Scripture. We must not look there for literal Explications of the Difficulties that might occur about those places of the Scripture; they are allegorical Explications and mystical Observations upon places of the Scripture, or Questions of Divinity, which he takes an occasion to handle from those places. He made himself some Scholia or Glosses upon his own Work, where he explains some Terms used, and establisheth or cleareth some Rules and Principles propounded by himself.

Photius did rightly observe, that this Work is very obscure and tedious to read; that he does so often wander from the Letter and the History, that one cannot keep pace with him; and those only who love Allegories and mystical Speculations, do relish him, and take Pleasure in the reading of him.

The 79 Answers to some other Questions, are shorter, and less obscure than the former, but they are not less stuffed with Explications not at all pertinent to the Letter of the Scripture, and with mystical and moral Thoughts. St. Maximus.

He follows the same Method in the Exposition of the 59*th. Psalm*, as well as in that of the Lord's Prayer, where he loseth himself in his mystical Speculations.

The Ascetick Discourse is more plain, 'tis a Dialogue between a Monk and an Abbot, in which the Abbot does instruct the simple Monk in the principal Rules of a spiritual Life. He shews him, that the Love of God, and the Renouncing of the Creatures, are the Foundation of it; that the Love of our Neighbour is the Effect of the Love of God; that Jesus Christ gave us a perfect Example of that Love; that we ought continually to fight against the Temptations of the Flesh and the Devil, mortifie our Passions, resist the Motions of Lust, reject idle or impure Thoughts, be constant in Prayer, and have always the Fear of God before our Eyes. He complains, that the greatest part of Monks lived disorderly, and that their seeming Virtue was but Hypocrisie. He maketh an excellent Prayer to God for their Conversion. And adds, we ought to trust in his Goodness and Mercy, hoping for Salvation from him, which we cannot obtain by our selves. Photius speaking of this Work, says, it is useful for all Men, and chiefly for them that lead an Ascetick Life, because there he lays down the means how to become a Citizen of Heaven, by teaching Charitableness, and Works of Piety. It must also be confessed, that this Treatise is of the Ascetick Books the most useful, not only for Monks, but all Christians likewise, because it does very well explain the Principles and Fundamentals of the spiritual Life.

Maximus added to this Work 400 spiritual Maxims, which he intituled, Of Charity, because there are many of them about Charity towards God and our Neighbour, in which that Holy Man places the whole spiritual Life, as being persuaded, all other Virtues and Duties are but Branches and Parts of it. There be sundry of those Maxims containing Precepts and Rules touching the Actions of Life, and those are the most useful; but some of the other contain nothing but spiritual and mystical Thoughts. Photius takes notice, that the Style of these two Works is clearer and more elaborate than any of the rest, and that they cannot be found fault with, unless it be because he did not always make use of the purest Terms.

The two hundred Theological and Oeconomical Maxims, contain not only Principles of Divinity, but also Maxims of Morality, and they would deserve, says Photius, to be compared with the four hundred Maxims above mentioned, if the great number of Allegories that they are filled with, did not render them more like the Questions to Thalassius. To these Chapters is annexed a Writing to Theopemptus, upon three Texts of the Gospel, entirely agreeing with the Answers to Thalassius.

Lastly, that Volume ends with 243 Moral Maxims, taken out of a Manuscript of the Vatican, where they are found under Maximus's Name. They are indeed like enough to the 400 Moral Maxims for Style and Matter.

The Fragment drawn out of a Book, intituled, A Resolution of sixty three Doubts, dedicated to the King of Achrida, now L'Ochrida, by St. Maximus, seems doubtful, because in Maximus's time there was no King at Achrida, which maketh it credible, 'tis the Work of some later Grecian, who wrote that Work when there were Kings in Bulgaria.

The second Volume of St. Maximus's Works comprehends his Theological and Polemical Tracts, with his Letters. The 25 first Tracts are divers Writings, or Answers, all tending to the same End, to shew that there be two perfect Natures, two Wills, and two Operations in Jesus Christ; in them he handles that Matter scholastically and acutely. Among those Tracts there is one, in which he defends that which he had said, that the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Son.

The Conference with Pyrrhus is clearer, less cumber'd with scholastical Terms and Reasonings. Therein he relates what was said between them on both Sides. The Issue was, that Pyrrhus perswaded by his Reasons, that we ought to acknowledge two Wills, and two Operations in Christ, went to Rome with him and retracted his Error.

The Treatise of the Soul is upon another Subject. Therein he treats of many Questions touching the Nature of the Soul; he asserts it to be a spiritual Substance, distinct from the Body, simple, immortal, and intelligent. These Points are handled there in a very dry manner, as a Logician rather than Divine.

Maximus's Letters are upon divers Subjects. The five first are upon moral Points. Therein he does chiefly recommend the Love of God, and of our Neighbour, the renouncing secular Desires, Alms-giving, Retiredness, and Repentance.

In the 6*th.* he shews the Soul to be spiritual; and in the 7*th*, that after Death it keeps its Intellectual and other Faculties.

St. Maximus.

The three next contain ſome Allegorical and Moral Obſervations.

In the 11*th*. He exhorts a Superior to deal Charitably with a Nun, which having left the Nunnery, had returned thither to do Penance.

The 12*th*. is a Writing againſt Severus, in which he eſtabliſheth the diſtinction of the Two Natures in Chriſt. He complains in the beginning, that the Empreſs had written ſome Letters into Africa favouring the Severians. He enquireth into the bottom of the Queſtion of the two Natures in this Writing. He explains a paſſage in St. Cyril, and refutes Severus's Error, That the two Natures became one in Chriſt. The ſame Subject is alſo handled in the next Writing directed to a Lord, named Peter.

The 14*th*. Letter, which is the 41*ſt* piece of this Volume, is alſo on the Myſtery of the Incarnation; but in the end of it he ſpeaks of the Incurſions of the Arabians, which ſpoiled the Frontiers of the Empire.

The 15*th*. is a Scholaſtical Tract of the Union and Diſtinction of the two Natures in Chriſt, directed to Conon, a Deacon of Alexandria. To it is joined a Letter directed to the ſame Deacon, to exhort him to ſtand up in the defence of the Truth, without being diſmayed at the ſufferings attending the defence of it.

The 17*th*. is directed to Julian. It is alſo about the diſtinction of the two Natures.

The 18*th*. is written in the Name of George, a Noble-Man of Africa, to ſome Nuns of Alexandria, engaged in the Error of the Monothelites, to diſſuade them from it.

The 19*th*. is written to Pyrrhus, before he was Patriarch, and had declared himſelf openly againſt the Church. Maximus asks him, How this Saying is to be underſtood, that there was but one Vertue or Operation in Chriſt.

The following Letters, to divers private Perſons, are ſhorter than the former, and contain nothing but ſome Moral or Myſtical Diſcourſes.

The Five Dialogues upon the Trinity, which were publiſhed under Athanaſius's Name, are here reſtored to St. Maximus, upon the Authority of the Greek Manuſcripts and Authors, which have quoted them under this Father's Name. We have ſhewed already, that Combefis was in the right, to put them under Maximus's Name, and that they are none of Theodoret's, as F. Garner pretended. After ſo many Writings of the Ancients upon the Trinity, there is no need to make an Extract of this, where that Myſtery is handled after Maximus's Genius Scholaſtically, and in the form of a Conference.

Maximus's Myſtagogy*, are Conſiderations of the Church-Ceremonies. He ſays there, that the Church is the Figure and Image of God, the World, Man, and the Soul. That the Introitus of the Maſs, is a repreſentation of Chriſt's entrance into our Souls. That the Leſſons ſignifie the Faith of Chriſtians. That the Songs are Signs of the Spiritual Joy. That the Goſpel figures the Conſummation of the World, and the Perfection of Chriſtians. That when the Biſhop deſcends from his Chair, he repreſents Chriſt deſcending from Heaven in the Day of Judgment. That the going out of Catechumens teaches us, that thoſe that have not Faith ſhall be rejected. That the Doors ſhut, the Kiſs of Peace, and the ſaying of the Creed, are the Figures of the perfect Union of Chriſtians. That the Triſagion and the Sanctus are Types of our future Glory, and preſent Adoption. This whole Book is full of ſuch Allegories.

St. Maximus.

Laſtly, The laſt of Maximus's Works, is a Collection of ſundry paſſages of Eccleſiaſtical and Prophane Authors, ſet down under different Titles, concerning Virtues, Vices, Womens Duties, Moral Precepts, and Maxims.

We have moreover a Comment, or Scholia of Maximus upon the Books aſcribed to the Areopagite, which is printed with Dionyſius's Works. He writ alſo ſome Scholia upon St. Gregory Nazianzen, which were printed at Oxford in 1681. Petavius hath publiſhed a Kalendar for Eaſter, ending in the Year 641, aſcribed to Maximus.

Photius ſaith, This Author hath extraordinary well turned Periods, but that he often uſeth Hyperboles and Tranſpoſitions, and is not careful at all to ſpeak properly, which renders his Writings obſcure and difficult; That he affects a kind of harſhneſs of ſwelling Style, which renders his Diſcourſe unpleaſing and ungrateful to the Ear; That in his Rhetorical Figures he does not make choice of that which is neat and handſome; that he tires out his Reader with his Allegorical and Myſtical Explications, ſo far diſtant from the Letter, and the truth of Hiſtory, that one cannot ſee any coherence between his Anſwer and the Queſtion; that yet he excels in the Allegorical and Myſtical way; and that they who take delight in it, can meet with nothing more accompliſhed. That his very Letters are not without obſcurity, which is the only Epiſtolar Character he hath kept to; that he is plainer and clearer in his Treatiſe of Charity, and in his Maxims meerly Moral; Laſtly, that the Conference with Pyrrhus is of a Style ſomewhat low, and that he hath not kept the Laws of Logick.

One may add to this Judgment of Photius, that Maximus handles matters after a meer Scholaſtical manner; that he ſpeaks and reaſons as a Logician; that he gives his Definitions, Terms, and Arguments in form; that he maketh uſe of great big Words, ſignifying no more than what might be expreſſed in other Terms; that he is acute and cloſe, ſtriketh his Adverſaries home, and ſtands firm to his own Principles; That he was very quick of Apprehenſion, of Reaſoning and Diſputing, very free of ſpeech, Stiff and Firm. He was of the Opinion of the Latins about the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, Original Sin, Chriſt's Grace, the Celibacy of Biſhops, and the Greatneſs and Power of the Roman Church. He had the Monaſtick Life in high eſteem, and was much given to Myſtical Thoughts. In a word, He was a Scholaſtical, Myſtical, and Speculative Man.

ANASTASIUS, Diſciple of Maximus.

Anaſtaſius

ANaſtaſius, Diſciple of Maximus, who ſuffered ſo much with him for the ſame cauſe, wrote a Letter to the Monks of Cagliari againſt the Monothelites, wherein he refutes thoſe that ſaid, that in Chriſt there were one and two Wills, from whence he concluded that they admitted Three. It is in the Collections of Anaſtaſius Bibliothecarius, [Publiſhed by Sirmondus at Paris 1620,] and among Maximus's Works. He died in Exile at Lazica.

Anaſtaſius

ANASTASIUS, Apocriſiarius of Rome.

Anaſtaſius

THis * Apocriſiarius of Rome ſuffered alſo the ſame Perſecutions for the ſame cauſe. He wrote a Letter to Theodoſius, Presbyter of Gangra, upon St. Maximus's Death. There he quotes ſome Fragments of the Writings of Hippolytus Biſhop of Porto. It is in Anaſtaſius's Collections, and among Maximus's Works.

THEODOSIUS and THEODORUS.

Theodoſius and Theodorus.

THeſe two Brothers made an Hiſtorical Memorial of the Life and Conflicts of Anaſtaſius, and the other Champions of the Faith. This is alſo found among Anaſtaſius's Collections.

Theodoſius and Theodorus.

THEODORUS.

Theodorus.

THeodorus, Presbyter and Abbot of Raithu, to whom Maximus directed his Treatiſe of the Eſſence, and Nature, wrote a Tract upon the Incarnation. There he ſets down at firſt the Errors of Manes, Paulus Samoſatenus, Apollinarius, Theodorus of Mopſueſta, Neſtorius, and Eutyches, about that Myſtery. Then he expounds the Faith of the Church, oppoſite to thoſe Errors. He, ſhews how they have been revived by Julian of Halicarnaſſus and Severus, to whom he oppoſed the Fathers Teſtimonies, but we have not now this laſt part. This Work was publiſh'd in Greek and Latin by Beza, and printed at Geneva in 1576 [Quarto.] Since that time it was inſerted with Turrianus's Verſion in the First Volume of the Auctuarium Biblioth. Patrum. [Tom. 1. p. 319.]

Theodorus.

PETER

PETER of Laodicea.

Peter. WE know nothing in particular of this Author; of whom we have a ſhort and a bad Explication of the Lord's Prayer. It is believed he lived in the Seventh Century. Peter.

THALASSIUS, a Monk.

Thalaſſius. WE have 400. Moral Maxims or Truths, of this Author, famous only for his ſtrict Friendſhip and Concerns with Maximus, to whom he did alſo propound many Queſtions upon the Holy Scripture [Printed in Bibliotheca Patrum, Tom. 12.] Thalaſſius.

ISAIAH, Abbot.

Iſaiah. ABbot Iſaiah's Precepts are much of the ſame kind; they are Advices, Conſiderations and Inſtructions uſeful for Monks. It is alſo thought he lived in this Century. Iſaiah.

THEOFRIDUS, Abbot.

Theofridus. TWO Homilies upon Relicks are attributed to this Abbot of whom we know nothing in particular. Theofridus.

DONATUS.

Donatus. Donatus, the Son of the Valdelenus, Duke of the Country between Mount St. Claude and the Alpes, was brought up in a Religious Life by Columbanus, and was afterwards made Biſhop of Beſancon, toward the Year 630. where he founded two Monaſteries, the one for Men, the other for Virgins. He made Rules for both.

That which he made for Monks is in the ſecond part of St. Benedict of Aniana's Rules and is intituled, Capitula, to ſerve inſtead of Advertiſements to the Friars of St. Paul and St. Stephen; that is, to the Monks of the Monaſtery of St. Paul (for the Monaſtery founded by him, at Beſancon, was called ſo) and to the Canons Regular of the Cathedral Church, which had St. Stephen for its Patron. This Rule contains nothing in it but ſome particular Advices. Donatus.

The other Rules of Donatus, for the Monaſtery of Nuns founded by his Mother Flavia, is larger, well-penned, and contains very wiſe Conſtitutions, taken out of the Rules of St. Cæſarius, St. Columbanus and St. Benedict. It is found in the third Part of the Rules of Benedict of Aniana. That Biſhop was preſent at a Council of Challon, upon the River Saone, in the Year 650.

VITALIANUS.

Vitalianus. Vitalianus was choſen Biſhop of Rome, Auguſt 29*th*. 656. and governed that Church fourteen Years and ſix Months. He hath left us ſome Letters.

The 1*ſt*. is directed to the Archbiſhop of Creet, upon the Biſhop of Lappa's Complaint againſt the Judgment which that Biſhop had given againſt him. Vitalianus ſaith, He hath examined that Matter in a Council, where the Acts of that Proceſs were exhibited, and that the Biſhops acknowledged the Cauſe had been illegally managed, and that the Biſhop of Lappa had been wrongfully condemned: That they were greatly troubled that he had put that Biſhop into Priſon, and hindred him from coming to Rome, to clear himſelf: Therefore he declareth null and void all the Proceedings of the Council of the Archbiſhop of Creet, againſt John Biſhop of Lappa: and at the ſame time pronounceth that Biſhop to be innocent, and, as ſuch, abſolveth him. In the 2*d*. he intreats Vaanus, the Emperor's Officer, to procure that Biſhop's Reſtoration. In the 3*d*. he orders Paul, Archbiſhop of Creet, to cauſe his Churches to be given him again. He complains, that a Deacon had married a Wife, ſince the time of his being in Orders; and that he did miniſter in two Churches: He prays him to put a ſtop to that Diſorder, and to follow no longer Eulampius's Counſel, he being a wicked Man, ſowing Diviſions among them for his own Profit. In the 4*th*. Letter he deſires George, Biſhop of Syracuſe, to be favourable to John of Lappa, and to endeavour his re-eſtabliſhment. Vitalianus.

The 5*th*. Letter, alledged by Bede, is directed to the King of Northumberland, in England. He commends his Zeal, and anſwers him about the Time of keeping Eaſter. He promiſes him to ſend him a Biſhop, when he hath met with one fit for it, and willing to go over into England. He thanks him for his Prayers, and ſends him ſome Relicks.

The 6*th*. is directed to the Benedictine Monks of Sicily: He acquaints them how grievous it is to him, that their Monaſteries and Eſtates have been ſpoiled by the Incurſions of the Barbarians. He tells them, He ſends them ſome Monks of the Congregation of Mount-caſſin, and exhorts them to obey them, and to labour with them for the reſettling of their Monaſteries and Lands.

St. ELIGIUS.

St. Eligius. ST. ELIGIUS, born near the City Limoges, a Goldſmith, and a Friend of King Dagobert, was ordained Biſhop of * Noyon in 646. and died in 663. St. Owen, who wrote his Life, tells us, he made Exhortations to his People every Day, with unwearied Labour; that his Sermons were very ſhort, but they contained important Inſtructions and wholeſome Advices: That Author collected them into one Diſcourſe, containing the moſt uſual Inſtructions, which Eligius gave to his People: They are for the moſt part drawn out of St. Cæſarius's Sermons, which Biſhops did then make uſe of to preach to their People. This Diſcourſe was printed among St. Auſtine's Works, and now is in the end of the fifth Volume: 'Tis an Abridgment of the principal Duties of a Chriſtian. In the firſt place he ſhews the Obligation laid upon Paſtors, to inſtruct their People. He exhorts them to remember often their baptiſmal Vows, and to meditate on the Laſt Judgment. He ſhews them, that it is not enough to bear the Name of a Chriſtian, but that we ought to act and live ſuitable to it. He endeavours to create in them an Abhorrence of profane Superſtitions and the Relicks of Idolatry. Then he gives them ſundry wholſome St. Eligius.

ſome Advices to honour God, to love Enemies, to give Alms, to frequent Divine Service, and Sunday-Sermons, to (q) croſs themſelves often with the Sign of the Croſs, to give to the Church the Tenths of their Gain or Poſſeſſions, to avoid (r) Mortal Sins, to watch over their Actions and Words, to deſpiſe the World, to repent continually, and never to deſpair of Salvation, &c. It is obſerved in this Treatiſe, that every Chriſtian hath a good Angel to aſſiſt him; and when he ſins drives away his good Angel to take a Devil.

St. Eligius.

[(q) Croſs themſelves often with the Sign of the Croſs.] After the Croſs was admitted into the Church, and became an Object of Worſhip, it was accounted of wonderful efficacy to ſanctify all things, to cleanſe and bleſs our Food, confer Grace, conſecrate Sacraments, procure Remiſſion of Sins, preſerve from the Malice of the Devil, and what not; So that Eligius thought no better Advice could be given to the Chriſtians, than to croſs themſelves with the Sign of the Croſs, that they might thereby be ſhielded and defended from all Evils, and ſanctified throughout, though the Effect proved it to be but an idle Conceit.]

[(r) Mortal Sins.] i. e. More heinous and notorious Guilts; for tho' no Sin be ſo venial and trivial, as the Romaniſts teach with one Conſent, as neither to offend God nor deſerve Damnation in its own Nature, and ſo only ſubject them to temporal Puniſhments; yet all Proteſtants diſallow a Stoical Parity, and equality of Sins, and hold that ſome are greater, others leſs; ſome unto, others not unto Death; And though every the leaſt Sin be offenſive to God, and deſerving Damnation in its own Nature, yet they ſay, ſome are Mortal, others Venial. 1. Comparatively, and by God's Favour, as the Sins of the Elect, being committed with Reluctancy, and, without conſent, are more pardonable than the Sins of wilful Offenders. 2. Becauſe ſome Sins exclude not Grace the Root of Remiſſion and Pardon out of the Soul, but others cannot ſtand with Grace, and ſo leave the Perſons in a ſtate of Wrath and Damnation who are guilty of them.]

Bellarm. de amiſſ. grat. & ſtatu. pec. l. 1. c. 4. Matt. 5. 22. 7. 5. 1 Jo. 5. 16. Gal. 3. 10. Rom. 8. 4. Eaſtly Ser. p. 632. Field of the Church. p. 148. 277.

There are Sixteen Homilies more, bearing Eligius's Name; but it is doubted whether they be really his, becauſe they are made up of Paſſages and Quotations of the Fathers, as of St. Auſtine, St. Leo, St. Ambroſe, Cæſarius of Arles, and St. Gregory. Theſe Fathers are likewiſe cited there, under the Name of Saints and Bleſſed; St. Benedict is there called, moſt Bleſſed and moſt Holy Father: They ſay that theſe Citations are affected; they add, That there be even ſome Paſſages of Authors, who wrote ſince Eligius's Time, as of St. Iſidore of Sevil, of Alcuin, of Haymo of Halberſtat: From whence they conclude, That theſe Sermons are the Work of an Author of the Ninth Century: Yet methinks he that compoſed them firſt was older than that Time, and many things may eaſily have been added to them ſince.

However there are yet found in them ſome remainders of the Ancient Diſcipline, not to be ſlighted. This is an Extract of them.

In the Firſt Sermon, for Chriſtmas-day, he ſhews the Happineſs of the Peace, which Chriſt brought to the Earth, and exhorts his Hearers in the end to Almſgiving. He relates the Story of a Gardner, who being uſed to beſtow what he earned upon the poor, was tempted to keep back part of it, in caſe he ſhould fall ſick; that having gathered many Crown-pieces, he got a running Sore in his Foot, which fell into a Gangreen, ſo that the Surgeon appointed a Day to cut off his Leg, ſeeing there was no other Remedy; but in the Night, the Gardner coming to himſelf, and having begged God's Forgiveneſs, for his not having continued in his Almſgiving, and promiſed to continue it hereafter, he was miraculouſly cured, and the Surgeon coming the next Day to cut off his Leg, found him gone abroad.

The Second Sermon is upon the Purification: After having uttered ſome Allegories upon that Ceremony of the Jews, he ſpeaks of the uſe of the Church, to have on that Feſtival (ſ) Tapers light during the Maſs; and ſays, that the Original of this Cuſtom came from the Romans, who having collected the Tribute every fifth Year, offered ſolemn Sacrifices in the end of February, and kindled Tapers and Torches in the Town; which Ceremony was called Luſtrum: That the Church hath changed that Superſtition into an Eccleſiaſtical Ceremony, ordering Tapers to be kindled yearly in the beginning of February, in the time when St. Simeon took our Lord in his Arms. One muſt needs be very credulous, to believe this Conjecture, which hath neither Truth nor Likelihood in it.

[(ſ) Tapers light during Maſs, upon the Feaſt of the Purification.] This Ceremony, tho' not taken from the Sacrifices called Luſtrum, as this Author imagines, being offered in the end of February, yet was certainly inſtituted in imitation of a Feſtival, celebrated at Rome, either in remembrance of Ceres's ſearch after Proſerpina, or in honour of Februa, the Mother of Mars, which were both ſolemniz'd with Tapers burning in their Hands, by the Romans. Theſe Superſtitions the Biſhops of the Church very much abhorred, yet becauſe it conduced greatly to the Converſion of the Gentiles, to make as little Alterations in their Ceremonies as poſſible, therefore did the Heads of the Church inſtitute the ſame Ceremonies to be uſed by the Chriſtians on the Feaſt of the Purification as had been uſed upon the Calends of February at Rome: And this the learned and judicious Rhenanus on Tertullian confidently aſſerts. Negari non poteſt Ardentium Cereorum, quos hodie Chriſtiani diè Purificatæ Mariæ ex more circumferunt a Februalibus Romanorum ſacris Originem ſumpſiſſe. Pertinaci paganiſmo mutatione ſubventum eſt, quem rei in totum ſublatio potius irritaſſet.

The Third Sermon is upon the Faſt of Lent; therein he enlargeth upon the good Effects of Faſting.

The Fourth is on Holy Thurſday: He obſerveth, that on that Day was made the Reconciliation of Publick Penitents, guilty of Crimes, which deſerved that the Biſhop ſhould ſeparate them from the Altar, and then reconcile them: Then he addreſſeth his Speech to thoſe Penitents, and exhorts them to examine themſelves whether they be reconcil'd to God or not, becauſe it may happen, that although they be reconciled by the Miniſtry of the Biſhop, yet they be not not ſo with God, who alone grants the true Reconciliation: He ſhews them, that to be truly reconciled, they ought to be, according to the Apoſtle, new Creatures, purged from the Crimes of the Old Man; That they who continue in their ſinful Habits, ſhould not imagine that they can throughly be reconciled before they have made (t) Satisfaction proportionable to the greatneſs of their Sins. 'If ſaith 'he, ye repent after a godly ſort, and ye be ſtedfaſtly purpoſed and ſincerely deſirous to ſin no more, 'ye ſhall be truly reconciled by Jeſus Chriſt and by 'us, to whom he hath committed the Miniſtry of 'Reconciliation. But if you 'be not in that Diſpoſition, 'do not flatter your ſelves, 'don't deceive your ſelves, 'for ye cannot deceive God 'as ye deceive Men; and 'he who by offending him is 'become his Enemy, can no 'otherwiſe be Friends again 'with him than by making 'him Satisfaction. Do not 'look upon Biſhops as the 'Authors of your Reconciliation; but Miniſters of 'it; It is Jeſus Chriſt who 'does invitibly abſolve and 'reconcile Men: As for us, 'we diſcharge our Miniſtry 'when we do outwardly and 'viſibly perform the Ceremonies of Reconciliation: Nevertheleſs he does comfort 'thoſe who have not repented throughly, giving 'them Hope, that provided 'they forſake their Sins heartily, they may obtain Forgiveneſs, and be truly reconciled.' He adds, 'That 'there be ſeveral means of 'expiating our Sins, and 'obtaining the remiſſion of 'them.' And he inſtances in theſe, a charitable Diſpoſition, Almſ-giving, Sorrow, Confeſſion of Sins, Mortifying of the Fleſh and Spirit, Amendment of Life, the Interceſſion of Holy and Juſt Men, and the Forgiving of Enemies.

[(t) Made Satisfaction proportionable to the greatneſs of their Sins.] Tho' theſe Words ſeem to come up to the Doctrine of Satisfaction, held in the Church of Rome, yet it does not appear that the Fathers of this Age had any other Notion of Satisfaction, than that which was received in the Ages before, which is much different from, and much more Orthodox, than the Popiſh. We have a Definition of it, p. 21. given by Iſidore of Sevil, to this effect: 'Satisfaction is an 'Excluſion of the Cauſes and 'Occaſions of Sin, and a Ceſſation from Sinning;' which is almoſt the ſame with St. Auſtine's Satisfactio eſt peccatorum cauſas excindere, & eorum ſuggeſtionibus nullum aditum indulgere. This is the Nature of true Repentance, which being proportion'd in ſome meaſure to the greatneſs of our Guilts, the more penſive and hearty, by how much our Sins are more heinous and aggravating, is all the Satisfaction that God expects of us, beſides a firm Faith and Dependance on the Merits of Jeſus Chriſt. The Popiſh Satisfaction is a clear different thing, as they define, it, thus: It is an equivalent Compenſation made to the offended Juſtice of God for the Injury done unto him by Sin, partly by our Actions, and partly by our Sufferings, whereby we deliver our ſelves from Divine Vengeance, and ſave our ſelves from Puniſhment. A Doctrine unknown to Antiquity! Of Tears I read, to make Satisfaction I read not, ſaith St. Ambroſe: Yea, Aquinas himſelf ſays, to pretend to make Satisfaction for Sin, is an Injury to Chriſt's Death: And that this Father was of the ſame Judgment with Antiquity, the following Words ſhew, if ye repent after a godly ſort, and be ſincerely deſirous to ſin no more, ye ſhall be reconciled by Jeſus Chriſt, and by us his Miniſters.]

Ambr. in Luc. Ser. 46.

The Fifth Homily is upon the Sacrifice of Iſaac, it is very ſhort, and hath nothing remarkable in it.

The Sixth is alſo upon Holy Thurſday. Therein he exhorts all Chriſtians to Repentance, and to expiate their lighter Faults with Faſtings, Watchings, Almſ-giving, and other Works of Charity. He warns them not to put off their Repentance till the hour of Death, which often ſurprizes us, when we leaſt think of it, without giving us one moment to bethink our ſelves.

The

St. Eligius. The Seventh is a short Exhortation to the Penitents and Faithful, to give God Thanks for graciously granting them the favour of Reconciliation.

The Eighth is a long Discourse to the Clergy, the People, and the Publick Penitents. He exhorts Presbyters, who govern Parishes to be an Example to the People under their Charge. He recommends to all the Faithful the love of their Neighbour, and the forgiving of Enemies; and exhorts them to purifie themselves from light Sins, that they may escape not only the Fire that shall burn the Ungodly for ever; but (u) that Fire also, through which the Righteous who are not wholly purged from their Sins, shall pass in the day of Judgment. He exhorts also great Sinners to repent, covering themselves with Hair-cloth, and lifting up their Hands to Heaven, that they may be reconciled by the imposition of the Bishop's hands; and he warns them not to relapse into Sin after Reconciliation. Lastly, he treats of the Ceremonies used by the Church on Holy Thursday, which are, besides the Reconciliation of Penitents, (v) the Blessing of the Holy Oyl, the Consecrating of the Chrism, the Washing of Feet, of Altars, of Sacred Vessels, of the Floor and the Walls of Churches. He speaks clearly of the real Presence of Christ's Body and Blood in the Eucharist; and says, that, as Christ was really and substantially born of the Virgin; so likewise (w) Christians do truly receive under the Mysteries, the Lord's Body, and Blood, tho' the appearance of the Bread and Wine remain, because Men would [(u) That Fire, through which the Righteous, who are not wholly purged from their Sins shall pass in the day of Judgment.] The Doctrine of Purgatory which M. Du Pin would seem to build upon this Expression, and another of like Importance, p. 59. taken out of the Works of Julian of Toledo, is not the same with that which is meant by their words, which is no other than what the Fathers before them had held, tho' perhaps not so firmly, as it was believed in these latter Ages. Tertullian, Cyprian and Origen, were of Opinion, that after the Resurrection, before the Saints entred into Glory, they should pass through a Purging Fire, to refine their Souls from their Dross, their Wood, Hay and Stubble before they can become Vessels of Honour fit to obtain a place in the Mansions of Bliss. This seems to be St. Eligius's Opinion here, because he says, that the Righteous shall pass through a Purging Fire in the day of Judgment. From these Elder Fathers, it passed to St. Jerome and St. Austine, who speak of it as a Conjecture not altogether improbable, but yet very uncertain. I think, says St. Jerome, that there is a moderate and gentle Sentence of the Judge concerning the Burning away the Sins of Christians. And St. Austine, If betwixt Death and Judgment the Souls of the Departed be laid to suffer a Fire of Transitory Tribulation burning up worldly smaller faults, I reprove it not, because perhaps 'tis true. So feeble was the Belief of a Purgatory among the Ancients for some hundred Years. And as it was only a probable Opinion at most, so it was never looked upon as a separate State, but only as it were a Purgation in their Passage to Glory; for it was a settled Doctrine in the Primitive Church, that there is no middle Place; That a Man cannot be any where, but either with the Devil or Christ, in Hell or in Heaven. There are but two Places after this Life, one for the Elect, another for the Reprobate. So that the Popish Purgatory, which is a place of Torment, wherein they that have not perfected their Obedience here, stay to make Satisfaction for their Sins, and then enter into Heaven, was altogether unknown to the Ancients. And indeed this Pol. Virgil and Roffensis acknowledge. Nemo, saith the latter, nunc Orthodoxus dubitat an Purgatorium sit, &c. No true Catholick now-a-days but believes a Purgatory, altho' there is little or no mention of it in Antiquity; and the Greek Church believes it not to this day. In reality, Purgatory is a Novel Invention as it is now taught, a perfect contrivance for the Church's advantage, never received for Doctrine till the Council of Florence, Anno 1448.

[(v) Blessing the Holy Oyl, Consecrating the Chrism.] It was a Custom among the Bishops, upon some great Festival, with solemn Prayers and Ceremonies, to consecrate that Oyl which the Presbyters used in the Baptism and Confirmation of Children and Others. In some Churches they did it at Easter, and in others particularly in the French Church, where Eligius was Bishop, upon Holy Thursday; and from the Bishops, the Priests fetched it themselves, or in case of necessity, sent for it for the Service of their Churches.]

[(w) Christians do truly receive under the Mysteries, the Lords's Body and Blood——De veritate Carnis & Sanguinis, tho' the appearance of the Bread and Wine remain.] This, and such like Expressions, which might be produced in great Numbers from the Books of the Ancients, who unanimously teach, that in the Sacrament is the Body and Blood of Christ. And tho' before the Consecration it is ἄρτος καὶ οἶνος, meer Bread and Wine, yet afterwards 'tis verily the Body of Christ. Truly his Flesh, truly his Blood, are really no more than the very words of Christ, This is my Body, This is my Blood, and are only true in a figurative Sense, i. e. by a Change of Condition, Sanctification and Usage. In which Sense, the Church of England thus delivers her self in the Catechize, That the Body and Blood of Christ is verily and indeed taken, and received by the Faithful in the Lord's Supper. For we are so certain, that to eat Christ's Body Spiritually, is to eat him Really, that there is no other way to eat him Really, but by Spiritual Manducation. Christ is as really present Spiritually as Corporeally, and we receive it as well by Faith as by Bodily Eating. There can, therefore, be no Grounds from the Words of this Father to infer a Transubstantiation the in Sacrament, since they may be better understood of the Spiritual Presence. Nay, these Expressions, The appearance of Bread and Wine remain under the Mysteries, plainly shew this to be the Sense. They are to the Senses, Bread and Wine; to the Soul, they are really the Body and Blood of Christ; on them we feed by Faith. And thus we must understand the Expression of the same Father, p. 37. seq. ad. w] St. Eligius.

abhor drinking Blood and eating Flesh; but there can be no doubt, but it is verily received. De veritate Carnis & Sanguinis ejus nullus relictus est ambigendi locus. He confesseth, the Apostles did not receive it Fasting; but he says, that for all that, they ought not to find Fault with the Custom of the Universal Church, which requires, that it be always received Fasting; because the Holy Spirit, whereby she is governed, in Honour of so great a Sacrament, would have Christ's Body to enter into the Christians Mouths, before any other Meat was received in; and it is upon that Account, that this Practice is observed every where. Lastly, he treats of the Question of frequent Communion, and enquires whether it be good to communicate every day. Thereupon he says, that there be some Persons, who wish, that they would make choice of those days, in which Men live more Soberly and Godly; but others think, that if they be not guilty of any Sin that deserveth being debarred from the Altar, put to Penance, and then reconciled by the Bishop's Authority, that they may come very often to the Sacrament. He leaves every one at his Liberty to do as he shall think best, according to his Godly Motion; and propounds, after St. Austine, the Examples of Zacchæus and the Centurion. He warns Christians, that if they exclude themselves from the Eucharist, they shall perish with Hunger; but yet, if they come to it unworthily, they shall eat and drink their own Damnation. Lastly, he does vehemently urge great Sinners to Repentance, and to procure their own Separation, from the Altar, by the Judgment of the Bishop; and prays them to consider, That that State of Separation is an Image of the final Judgment, when they see the Just coming to the Eucharist, whilst themselves are excluded from it. In the beginning of that Homily there are some Periods taken out of a Sermon of Cæsarius of Arles, but in that time they commonly used that Bishop's Sermons.

In the Ninth Homily, he exhorts Sinners to cure themselves of their Sins by Repentance.

In the Tenth, he speaks also of the Ceremonies of the Thursday before Easter, that on that day they set some Prisoners at Liberty.

The Eleventh Homily is also upon the Thursday before Easter; he speaks to the Faithful and the Penitents. To the first he recommends Faith and Charity towards God and their Neighbours; on which Virtue he bestows a large Encomium, and recommends the forgiving of Enemies. He speaks of the Practice of the Church, to say every day (x) the Canonical Hours. He stirs up all Christians to Prayer, Fasting and Repentance; he prescribes to Sinners the Confession of their Sins, in order to doing Penance for them; and at last directs his Speech to Penitents, after this manner. 'To those Persons, saith

[(x) Canonical Hours.] The Ancients had their several Hours for Prayer and Devotion both by Day and Night, in imitation of the Apostles. This must be acknowledged on all hands. Tertullian mentions them as of common use among the Christians in his time. Quamvis semper & ubique & omni tempore orandum est, tamen tres horæ ut insigniores in rebus humanis, ita solenniores sunt in precibus Divinis, quod suadet Danielis argumentum ter die Orantis. As Daniel prayed three times a day, so did the Christians in the first devout times. The same also doth St. Jerome deliver as an Apostolical Tradition. Tria sunt tempora quibus Deo flectenda sunt Genua, Tertiam Horam, Sextam & Nonam Ecclesiastica Traditio intelligit; Denique Tertia hora descendit S. Spiritus super Apostolos, Sexta Petrus volens comedere ad Orationem ascendit in Cenaculum, nona Petrus & Joannes ascendebant in Templum. Wherein St. Jerome tells us, That it was an Ecclesiastical Tradition to be observed by the Christians in imitation of the Apostles, to pray at the Third, Sixth and Ninth Hours. And so also the same Father prescribes Hours of Prayers in the Night, and particularly enjoyns Mid-night, so to be observed. But as their Hours for Prayer were but three by Day, and two or three by Night: so they were for private, not publick Devotion, freely and voluntarily performed, not imposed, and being thus used are highly to be approved. But as they have since degenerated into Ceremony and Superstition, and have not only received an Addition of four Hours more to make them up seven; but are imposed on the Priests only in the Romish Church, and by them are made a Burden or a Task, rather than a Duty; they have been justly abolished by our Reformers; not but that 'tis lawful and commendable, for any pious Persons to follow the old Apostolick Custom, if they see it helpful to Devotion.]

St. Eligius.

'ſaith he, who ſtand here in a Penitential Habit, with a foul 'mournful Countenance, their Hair torn and flying abroad, 'teſtifying, as far as we can judge by their Actions, that they 'have lamented their Sins, and mortified in themſelves the 'Vices of the Fleſh. He lets them know, they are to under-'ſtand, that altho' they be deſirous to receive the Impoſition 'of Hands, nevertheleſs they ought to be perſuaded, they 'ſhall not receive the abſolution of their Crimes, if the 'Divine Goodneſs do not pardon them, giving them the 'Grace of Contrition; becauſe, as St. Gregory ſaith, the Bi-'ſhop's Abſolution is then only true, when it is agreeable 'with the Judgment of him, who judges the Secrets of the 'Hearts, which is figured by the Reſurrection of Lazarus, 'whom Chriſt raiſed to Life firſt, before he ordered his 'Diſciples to looſe him; and thus all Paſtors muſt have a 'care, to looſe and abſolve none, but ſuch whoſe Souls 'Chriſt hath quickened again by his Grace.' After theſe Words, he invites them to ſhew ſome Marks of their Converſion; which they having done, by lifting up their Hands to Heaven, he went on in his Diſcourſe, ſetting forth the Effects of true Repentance, which are, to ſatisfy God, to lament their Sins paſt, and to commit them no more.

The 12*th*. Homily is upon Charity on Holy Thurſday.

The 13*th*. for the ſame Day. He exhorts all Chriſtians to purge themſelves from their daily Sins by Prayer and Almſgiving; and he advertiſeth them in the end, That they ſhould not abhor publick Penitents, as being great Sinners, becauſe among thoſe that are not doing Penance, there may be ſome guilty of more grievous Sins. He deploreth the Miſery of thoſe, who do not confeſs them, nor do Penance for them.

In the 14*th*. he exhorts Chriſtians diligently to prepare themſelves for the worthy receiving of the Euchariſt at Eaſter.

In the 15*th*. he ſpeaks again very earneſtly of the real Preſence. 'Know ye, my dear Brethren, ſaith he, and firmly be-[* Vide Note (w)] 'lieve, that, as the * Fleſh which Jeſus Chriſt took in the 'Virgin's Womb, is his true Body, which was offered up 'for our Salvation; ſo likewiſe the Bread which he gave 'to his Diſciples, and which the Prieſts conſecrate daily in 'the Church, is the true Body of Chriſt. They are not two St. Eligius. 'Bodies, 'tis the ſame Body, which is broken and ſacrificed. 'This is Jeſus Chriſt which is broken and ſacrificed, tho' 'he remains ſound and whole.' Then he exhorts all Chriſtians, Clerks, Laicks and Religious, who perceive themſelves guilty of the Sins of Envy, Calumny, Hatred, Fornication and Perjury, to purifie themſelves on this Day, confeſſing their Iniquity to God. And as to thoſe that have committed greater Crimes, and are doing Penance publickly, he warns them to fall no more into thoſe Sins. He adds, that there be grievous Offenders, whoſe Crimes are ſo ſecret, that they cannot be admitted to do publick Penance. 'That 'thoſe Offenders are to be excluded from the Church for 'a while, becauſe that altho' they be not reconciled by the 'Impoſition of Hands, and receive not Abſolution, they 'ought to mortifie their Bodies by Works of Repentance, 'and heal their Souls by good Deeds.

This would make one think, that publick Offences only, were then liable to publick Penance, and as to them whoſe Crimes were altogether ſecret and hidden, they did only adviſe them to ſeparate themſelves from the Church Aſſemblies, and to do Penance ſecretly and privately.

This appears yet by the 16*th*. Homily; for having exhorted all Chriſtians generally to repent, and to abſtain from grievous Crimes for the future, he directs his Speech to two Perſons whom a publick Offence had obliged to do publick Penance. He exhorts them ſincerely to lament their Sins, and to commit them no more. In that Homily there is an unwarrantable Propoſition, related under the Name of the Wiſe Man; that it is as great a Crime for a Man to lie with his Wife, as to eat Fleſh in Lent. Beſides theſe Homilies, we have a Letter of St. Eligius among thoſe of Deſiderius Biſhop of † Cahors.

St. Eligius was an able and learned Man for his time; he had read St. Cyprian, St. Auſtine, St. Gregory, and ſome other Latin Fathers, and imitated them. He was a Lover of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, and a Follower of the Tradition of thoſe Fathers, as near as the Age, he lived in, could permit. His Sermons are better than thoſe of ſeveral other Latin Preachers, both for Matter and Style. [† Of Cadurcum.]

AGATHO.

Agatho.

POpe Agatho may deſervedly be ranked among Eccleſiaſtical Authors, becauſe of the long Letter he writ to the Emperor Conſtantine, inſerted in the Acts of the 6*th*. Council; in which he does largely confute the Error of the Monothelites: But we ought not to value much another Letter, aſcribed to this Pope, directed to Ethelred, King of the Mercians, to Theodorus of Canterbury, and to the Abbot Sexulphus; which ſeems to be a ſuppoſititious Piece, made by ſome Engliſh Monk, and contains nothing remarkable. We ſhall ſpeak of this Pope's firſt Letter, when we come to treat of the Acts of the 6*th*. Council, and of another Letter written upon the ſame Subject and the ſame Occaſion, by Datian, Biſhop of Pavia, in the Name of Manſuetus, Biſhop of Milan, which is alſo among the Acts of this Council. This Pope died the 10*th*. of January, in 682. after he had governed the Church of Rome 3 Years, 6 Months, and 25 Days. Agatho.

LEO II.

Leo II.

AFter Agatho's Death, Leo II, was choſen in his Room. Conſtantine the Emperor, hearing of his Election, did immediately write a Letter to him, ſet down in the end of the 6*th*. Council; but Leo was not ordained till Auguſt, in the Year 682. after the Return of John, Biſhop of Porto, one of the Legates, whom Agatho had ſent to the Council. And ſome believe, his Ordination was put off 'till Auguſt, in the Year following: But it is not likely; for in May, of this Year, he did examine and approve in a Synod, the Acts of the 6*th*. Council; and in the End of the ſame Year, ſent them into Spain. He died the Year after, viz. June 28. 684.

The Emperor's Letter directed to Leo, wherein he acquaints him, that the Council hath confirmed Pope Agatho's Doctrine, and what was done in the 6*th*. Council, is in the Acts of that Council. Baronius pretends, that theſe two Letters are ſuppoſititious, but his Conjectures are grounded only upon falſe Dates (a), added by ſome Latin Author, and wanting in the Greek Original, or upon Anaſtaſius's falſe Chronology.

Beſides theſe two Letters of Leo II. there are four more that were ſent into Spain about the Affair of the 6*th*. Council, the Definition whereof was ſent into that Kingdom by Peter, Notary of the Church of Rome. The firſt is directed to all the Spaniſh Biſhops. He acquaints them with what was defined in the General Council, and exhorts them to receive its Definitions. He recommends the ſame thing in particular, to a certain Biſhop called Quiricus, in the ſecond Letter. In the third, he exhorts an Earl, named Simplicius, to endeavour the maintaining of that Doctrine. And in the fourth, he relates to King Ervigius, how the Faith of the Church was confirmed and explained in the 6*th*. Council, and the Hereticks condemned; and exhorts him to cauſe all the Biſhops of his Kingdom, to receive and ſubſcribe the Definition of that Council. Baronius would bring theſe Letters alſo into doubt, becauſe Honorius's Name is found therein among the Biſhops condemned; but theſe Conjectures are ſo weak (b), that it is not worth the while to anſwer them. Leo II.

(a) Falſe Dates.] In the Title of the firſt Letter it is ſaid, that it was ſent in December, Indict. X. Agatho was then living, but they muſt ſet down ſome other Month, for it was delivered in June, Indict. X. It is known, that theſe Titles, before the true Inſcriptions, are added. The ſecond Letter hath no Date in the Greek, and the Date in the Latin is viſibly falſe. In the Body, there is mention made of the X. Indict. of June before; which agreeth very well with our Hypotheſis. Leo was choſen in the Beginning of 682. Indict. X. In June he receiveth the Acts of the Council, and the Emperor's Letter; he was ordained in Auguſt following, and he writes an Anſwer in the Beginning of the next Year, Indict. XI. Anaſtaſius hath turned all topſy-turvy. He ſays, Agatho was yet living in March 683. that the Holy See was vacant one Year, ſeven Months. If that be true, Leo was not ordained Biſhop till October 683. which cannot be made out. Baronius endeavours moreover to bring into Suſpicion of Falſhood, Conſtantine's Letter to Leo, becauſe he ſays, that he had written of that Matter to Agatho; which is not true, ſays Baronius, becauſe the Emperor's Letter was not directed to Agatho but to Donus. But it is very eaſy to anſwer, that this Letter was written to Agatho, becauſe it was he that received it, and anſwered it. That which troubles Baronius moſt of all, is, that Honorius is anathematized in Leo's Letter; but there is no reaſon for it.

BENE-

BENEDICT II.

Benedict II.

Benedict II. finished what his Predecessor had begun, by writing to the Notary Peter, who was sent into Spain, to cause the Definition of the 6th. Council to be subscribed to, and sent him a Copy of the Letter written to King Ervigius by his Predecessor. Leo's Letters and the Definition of the 6th. Council came too late to be delivered to the 13th. Council of Toledo; so that the Business was terminated but in the 14th. Council, held in that City in 684. in November, where the Faith established by the 6th. Council was confirmed. The authentick Acts of this Council, are an invincible Proof of the Truth of Leo II's and Benedict's Letters against Cardinal Baronius's frivolous Conjectures.

DREPANIUS FLORUS.

Drep. Flor.

Drepanius, a French Poet, flourished towards the Middle of the 7th. Century. We have some Poems of his; the 22d, 26th, and 27th. Psalms put into Verse; the Song of Ananias, Azarias and Misael in the Furnace; an Hymn to St. Michael; an Hymn upon the Paschal Taper; a Letter to Modoin, Bishop of * Autun, upon the reading of the Holy Scripture; a Thanksgiving to one of his Friends, who stood up in his Defence; and a Letter to a Grammarian, to desire him to send him an Answer. His Style is pretty Poetical, he does not use many barbarous Terms, but he does not place them in an Order Poetical enough, and uses sometimes Words fit only for Prose.

ILDEPHONSUS Bishop of Toledo.

Ildephons. Bishop of Toledo.

Ildephonsus, a Monk, and afterwards Abbot of the Monastery of Agali, was elected Bishop of Toledo in 658. which was the 9th. Year of the Reign of King * Recessuinth, and governed that Church nine Years, and two Months. He made a Book of the Ecclesiastical Writers, for a Continuation of Isidorus's, to the End whereof Julian, his Successor, added the Catalogue of his Works, after he had made an Encomium upon him, and taken notice of the principal Circumstances of his Life. He hath composed, says he, several Books very well written, and much to be valued. He divided them himself thus: The first part comprehends the following Tracts, a Writing of his own Weakness, by way of a Prosopopœia; a Tract of the Virgin Mary's perpetual Virginity against three Infidels; a small Tract upon the Proprieties of the three Divine Persons; another Tract containing Reflections upon his daily Actions; another of Reflections upon Sacred Things; a Book of the Knowledge of Baptism; a Treatise of the Advancement of the Spiritual Solitariness, which he joined to the first Part of his Works. The second comprehends several Letters written to several Persons, and sometimes under different Names, in which there be many large Answers. The third part was made up of Masses, Hymns and Sermons. The fourth contained many small Works in Prose and Verse; among which there be some Epitaphs and Epigrams. He had moreover begun several other Tracts, which he left imperfect.

[* Recessuind.]

Of all these Tracts, there is none left to us, but that of Mary's perpetual Virginity, wherein he asserts, against Jovinian, that she kept her Virginity in her bringing forth; against Elvidius, that she remained a Virgin after she had brought forth Jesus Christ; and against the Jews, that she conceived without the Loss of her Virginity. He enlargeth upon the Mystery of the Incarnation, and the God-head of Christ. This Treatise is full of devout Considerations, with a Preface to it, containing many pious Thoughts. The Style is sententious and concise.

Some ascribe moreover to Ildephonsus of Toledo, another Treatise of Mary's perpetual Virginity, and * twelve Sermons on the Purification, the Birth, and Assumption of the Virgin; but the Style of these Works, which are not mentioned by Julian, is so different from that of Ildephonsus, that we may be assured they belong to another Author. They are written in a more dogmatical Way, and are full of Citations from the Fathers, and of Reasonings. Nay, and there are found in them some Passages of Authors that lived after Ildephonsus, as of St. Bernard, of the Author of the Commentary upon the seven Penitential Psalms, which is under the Name of St. Gregory of Ratram, and Paschasius.

[* Dr. Cave VI.]

[(y) The Virgin Mary was sanctified in her Mother's Womb, and was born without Original Sin.] It is very probable that this Work, which is falsly attributed to Ildephonsus in Mr. Du Pin's Judgment, was forged by an Author of a much later Date, since it was the constant Opinion of the Church for above eleven hundred years after Christ, that the Virgin Mary was not only born in Original Sin, as all other Women are, but was also guilty of many Actual Sins. Austine imputes to her Original Sin, Virginis caro, etiamsi de peccati propagine venit, non tamen de peccati propagine concepit, altho' she was born in Sin, yet she did not conceive in Sin. And to the same purpose do Ambrose, Chrysostome, and others, speak of her. And in like manner of Actual Sin many of the Fathers in their Comments upon John 2. 3. think her guilty, for it is certain, that our Saviour did reprove some Fault or Error in her. This Maldonate on John H. part 11. acknowledges, tho' not of their Mind. And indeed the Holy Spirit by her own Mouth gives us an invincible Proof of her Sinfulness, inspiring her to rejoyce in God her Saviour, as standing in need of him to save her from her Sins, as well as other Women. But in these last Ages of the Church, the immoderate Veneration given to the Virgin Mary hath produced an Opinion, that Mary was by a singular and extraordinary Privilege preserved from Original Sin. Scotus was the first School-man that held it, and maintained it in his Disputes, but met with great Opposition in this Point, both in the Schools, and Church, and tho' it got ground a little by time, yet it was a Subject of Contest among the Learned till it was fully determined in the Council of Basil, Anno 1439, in which it was decreed thus, Hitherto a difficult Question hath been made touching the Conception of the glorious Virgin; We having seen, and diligently examined the Reasons, do define and declare, that the Doctrine which teaches her never to have been Actually subject to Original Sin, but always free from it, and from all Actual Sin, is to be received and approved, as the most Catholick Doctrine, and it shall not be lawful for any to teach the contrary. This Decree hath been confirmed by Pope Sixtus the IV, and since by the Council of Trent, so that it is now become an Article of Faith in the Roman Church, unless it be with the Dominicans, who are Heretick in this Point. And from the Roman Forge it may be reasonably supposed, that this Book came, and perhaps from the Franciscans, who are the most zealous Patrons of her immaculate Conception.]

Ildephons. Bishop of Toledo.

Aug. de Gen ad lit. l. 10. c. 18. Amb. cont. 6. in Psal. 118. Chrysost. Hom. 45. in Matt. Chrysost. Hom. 20. in Joan. Luc. 1. 47. Scot. in 3 dist. 4. q. 1.

Conc. Basil. Sessio. 36.

The Works, bearing Ildephonsus's Name, have been published by Feuardentius, [at Paris in 1576,] and are extant in the Bibliotheca Patrum, [Tom. 12.] except the Treatise Of illustrious Men, which was printed together with those of St. Jerome, Gennadius, and Isidore, [at Antwerp in 1639.]

Dacherius hath published, in the first Volume of his Spicilegium, some Letters of Ildephonsus of Toledo, of Quiricus, and Idatius, Bishops of Barcelona.

TAIO, or TAGIO.

Taio.

TAio, Bishop of Saragosa, flourished about the Middle of the 7th. Century. He reduced into five Books, under certain Titles, all that he found in St. Gregory's Works about Divinity, without mixing with it any Arguments, or Testimonies of the other Fathers, save only of St. Augustine. The first Book of that Collection, treats of God and his Attributes. The second, of the Incarnation, and the Preaching of the Gospel, of Pastors and their Flocks. The third, of the divers Orders of the Church, of Virtues and Vices. The fourth, of the Judgments of God, of Temptations, and of Sins. And the fifth, of Reprobates, of the final Judgment, and the Resurrection. This Collection is not * printed, and it does not seem very necessary to publish it. Mabillon, from whom we have learned what we have now said of it, hath published this Author's Letter to Quiricus. The Cardinal of Aguirre promised another Letter of Taio to Eugenius of Toledo.

LEONTIUS Bishop in Cyprus.

Leontius.

LEontius, Bishop of a Town formerly called Naples, now Lemonee, in the Isle of Cyprus, is honourably quoted in the 7th. Council, Act. 4. They produce a long Fragment, which it's said is taken out of the fifth Book of his Apology for the Christians against the Jews. He maintains there, that neither Crosses nor Images are worshipped, but only have outward Respects paid them, terminating in God and Jesus Christ. It is observed in the same place, that he is the Author of the Life of St. John the Alms-giver, of St. Simeon the simple, and of some other Works, and that he lived under Maurice the Emperor. Combefis hath * published two Homilies of that Author, the one upon the Blessed Simeon, when he received Christ into his Arms, and the other upon the Feast-day kept between Easter and Whitsunday, on the Wednesday of the fourth Week after Easter.

MARCULPHUS.

Marculphus.

[* Formularum Ecclesiasticarum.]

THis Author's Preface, to his two Books of * Forms, shews, that he was a French Monk, and that he made that Work after he was 70 Years old, and dedicated it to a Bishop named Landericus, but seeing he does not say, of what Place he was Bishop, some have thought it was Landericus of Paris (a), who was famous in the Reign of Clovis the Son of Dagobert, towards the Year 660. Others pretend that it is a Bishop of Meaux, who lived in the time of Pepin and Charles the Great, towards the Year 780.

However, these Forms are of the time of the second Race of our Kings, for Marculphus having written them about the 70th. Year of his Age, and having gathered the Forms in use in the time of his Ancestors, and those but in small number, there can be no doubt, but the most part of them are very ancient.

We shall speak here but of those concerning Ecclesiastical Matters.

The first is the Form of a Privilege granted by a Bishop to a Monastery. It is directed to the Abbot, and the whole Society of the Monastery. Therein he says, that being willing to provide for their Quiet, and conform himself to the Custom, according to which the Monasteries of Lerins, Agaune, Luxeuil, and a great number more, enjoy the Privilege of Liberty, he made the following Constitutions, to be observed by the Monks, and the Bishops his Successors; that the Monks shall receive Orders from the Bishop; that he shall bless the Altars in their Church gratis; that he shall every Year give them the Holy Chrism, if they demand it of him; that he shall make him their Abbot that shall be chosen out of themselves, by the unanimous Consent of the Society; that he shall in no wise meddle with the Affairs, Persons, or the Revenues, present or to come, belonging to the Monastery; that he shall take nothing of what shall be bestowed upon them, nor of their Offerings made upon their Altars; that he shall not come into their Monastery unless he be called into it; and when he shall be desired to go thither, after the Celebration of the Mysteries, he shall withdraw, to leave them in Peace; that the Abbot shall correct his Monks, and that the Bishop shall not suffer them to be in the City.

In the second Form, the King confirms the Exemption granted by the Bishop, particularly as to what concerns the Revenues, and extends the Prohibition of invading them to all sorts of Persons.

The third is a Form, whereby the King exempts the Bishops Lands from the secular Jurisdiction.

Marculphus.

The 4th. is the Confirmation of an Exemption already granted.

The 5th. is a Form directed by the Prince to the Bishops, whereby he enjoyns them to ordain such a Person, chosen by him, with the Bishops and Lords of his Realm, to be Bishop in the room of a Bishop deceased.

The 6th. is an Order of the Prince to a Bishop to ordain him whom he hath chosen.

The 7th. is a Request of the Inhabitants of a Town to the King, to beseech him to elect such an one Bishop of their Town: At the Foot whereof is the Prince's Order. These Forms do shew, that from that time the Kings of France enjoyed the Nomination to Bishopricks, and that Bishops were ordained by the Metropolitans, without any need to go to Rome.

The 14th, 15th, and 16th, are Forms of Donations made to some Churches by their Princes.

The 19th. is a Permission of the Prince to make a Man Clerk for the Service of a Church, or a Monastery, and to cut off his Hair.

The 26th. is an Order of the Prince to the Bishop, to give again to a private Man a Farm belonging to him, if not, to send one in his Name into his Court, to give an Account of that Business.

The 27th. is an Order to the Bishop to reprove an Abbot, or another Clerk, guilty of some Injustice.

The 35th. is a Confirmation of the Privileges of a Monastery.

The six first Forms of the Second Book, are Forms of a Donation, or abandoning of Goods to an Hospital, Monastery, or Church.

The 30th. is the Form of a private Separation between the Husband and the Wife.

The 39th. is a Form whereby two Persons give to a Church the Propriety of two Inheritances, belonging to each of them, upon condition, that they shall have the Use of them during their Life, and that the Survivor shall enjoy them both.

The 40th. is the Bishop's consenting to that Deed of Use.

The 42d. is a Form of a Letter of one Bishop to another, when he sends him * the Eulogies at Easter.

[* Some Portions or small Pieces of the consecrated Bread, in token of Communion.]

The 43d. is the Bishop's Answer upon the receiving of them.

The 44th. and 45th. are Forms of Letters of a Bishop to the King, or Queen, or to another Bishop, about Christmas-Day.

The 46th, 47th, 48th, and 49th. are Forms of Commendatory Letters. The first to recommend one to a Bishop, known. The second to recommend him to an Abbot.

(a) Some have thought it was Landericus of Paris.] M. Bignon is of that Mind, but M. Launoy believes, it is the Bishop of Meaux, and he proves it, 1. Because Marculphus says in his Forms, that in his time there was an infinite number of Monasteries in France; which he pretends cannot agree with Clovis and Dagobert's time, and proves it by Eligius's Life written by St. Owen, l. 1. c. 21. where it is observed there was not then such a great number of Monasteries in France, and that those that were there, were not very regular. 2. Because in Marculphus there be several Manners of Speech, which he pretends were not in use but since Clovis and Dagobert's time. F. Labbe is of M. Bignon's Mind, and pretends even to shew who that Marculphus is, because in the Life of St. Austrogesilus, Archbishop of Bourges, there is mention made of one Marculphus by Name, who was a Reader during the Life of St. Austrogesilus, and was afterwards Abbot of that Saint's Monastery, in the Suburbs of Bourges. What is said of Marculphus in that Place, happened in the time of Etherius of Lyons, who was dead in 601. Marculphus might then be fifteen, or twenty Years old, he wrote his Forms being above seventy Years of Age, which come up to 560.

[(z) To go in Pilgrimage to the Tombs of St. Peter and St. Paul the Apostles.] Soon after that Peace was settled in the Church by Constantine, the first Christian Emperor, and sacred Learning and Knowledge began to flourish, several inquisitive Persons, that they might gain a more lively and thorough Knowledge of the historical Parts of the Old and New Testament, travelled into the Holy Land, to see the Places so frequently spoken of in the Holy Scriptures, where most of the Matters were transacted. Upon which account it is that St. Jerome, who travelled thither for the same Reason, saith, that it is a Confirmation of our Faith to see the Ground on which Christ's Feet did tread. In Imitation of these Mens Practices did others travel to Jerusalem out of Devotion soon after, placing much Religion in visiting and worshipping the Places of Christ's bodily Presence. But the Fathers of these Ages sharply reproved this growing Superstition. Heaven (saith St. Jerome) is as near thee at home as in Jerusalem, and why wilt thou travel thither, as if Christ were only to be found there. Some make it a part of Religion (saith St. Cyril) to have been at Jerusalem, but Christ never commanded it, and what can justifie us to make that a Part of Religion which Christ doth not? All this did not yet so repress it, but after that Image and Saint-worship was brought into the Church, Pilgrimages to the Tombs of Saints and Martyrs became more frequent, and at length were imposed, and encouraged as meritorious, and procuring Pardon of Sins. Innocent III. granted Pardon of all Sins, to all that went in Pilgrimage to the Holy Land; and Boniface VIII. to all that went to Rome to visit St. Peter and St. Paul's Tomb. Clement VI. granted these Pilgrims to Rome a Power to free the Souls of four of their Relations or Friends out of Purgatory, and gave Commandment to all the Angels in Heaven, to carry the Souls of such as dyed in Pilgrimage, to Heaven immediately. Thus Pilgrimages became a necessary Part of Religion; and because very gainful to the Popes and their Metropolis, were much encouraged and practised, till the Truth recovered strength again by the Reformation, and by enlightning Mens Minds, put out the superstitious Conceits of the Flames of Purgatory.]

'Among the other ancient Forms of France, which Mr. Bignon hath published *, together with those of Marculphus, [* At Paris there are some more found concerning the Church, as the in 1613. 11*th*. which is a Cession made to a Church; the 12*th*. which Octavo, is a Form of a commendatory Letter given to Clerks; the and 1666. 26*th*, 27*th*, and 28*th*. which are Donations to Churches; Quarto. the 44*th*. which is a Form of Exemption given by the King to a Monastery of Virgins; the 45*th*. is a Confirmation of that Privilege.

Among those which are according to the Roman Law, there are Forms of Donation to a Church, N. 1, 34, 35, 36, 37, and 38. And lastly, in the last Forms, published by M. Bignon there are also found Forms of Donations to Churches, and commendatory Letters of Clerks.

COSMA of Jerusalem.

Cosma.

Vidas says, that in St. John Damascene's Time flourished Cosma of Jerusalem, a witty, ingenious Man, very skilful in making Hymns and spiritual Songs, elegantly and learnedly; and that they surpassed all that ever was done or shall be done in that Kind. We have yet thirteen of those Hymns upon the principal Festivals of the Year, which are so much the better, because the Sense of them is taken out of the Holy Scripture, and is nobly expressed. In Imitation of him one Mark made one upon Holy Saturday, and Theophanes another on the Annunciation of the Virgin.

Cosma.

PANTALEON.

Pantaleon.

THE Name of Pantaleon, a Deacon, and afterwards Presbyter of the Church of Constantinople, is found at the Head of four Sermons. The first of the Epiphany. The second of the (aa) Exaltation of the Cross, and the other two upon the Transfiguration.

[(aa) A Sermon upon the Exaltation of the Cross.] Altho' it be very uncertain whether this Sermon do belong to Pantaleon, tho' it bears his Name; yet it is probable that the Feast of the Exaltation of the Cross had been instituted some time before, by the Emperor Heraclius I. anno 630. and so 'tis likely enough such a Sermon might be made upon this Feast, by this or some other Father of this Age and Time, as well as others, which were the common Subject of these Centuries.]

Pantaleon.

The first is in the Bibliotheca Patrum, printed at Cologn. The second was publish'd by Gretser, and the other two by Combefis, who durst not affirm them to be the same Author's. There is nothing remarkable in those Monuments. Possevin says, there were at Constantinople some Sermons of this Author for the whole Year.

St. JULIAN of Toledo.

Julian of Toledo.

ST. JULIAN, Disciple of Eugenius, chosen Archbishop of Toledo in the Year 680. was President in several Councils held in that City, and died in 690. His Successor Felix, having praised his Virtues, sets down the Catalogue of his Books. 'He wrote, saith he, 'a Book of the Prognosticks of another Life, directed to 'the Bishop Idatius; in the beginning of which there is a 'Letter to that Bishop, and a Prayer. This Work is di-'vided into three Books, the first is of the Original of Man's 'Death. The second of the State of the Souls of the Dead 'until the Resurrection. The third is of the last Resurrec-'tion. He made moreover a Book of Answers, dedica-'ted to the same Person; in which he maintains the Ca-'nons and Laws, whereby Christian Slaves are forbidden 'to serve Infidels. We have also an Apology for the Faith, 'dedicated to Pope Benedict, and another Apology for three 'Articles, about which the Bishop of Rome seemed to have 'had some Doubts; a little Tract of the Remedies against 'Blasphemies, with a Letter to Adrian the Abbot; a Trea-'tise of the Proof of the sixth Age, [or of the coming of 'Christ] at the beginning thereof there is a Letter to King 'Ervigius, with a Prayer. This Work is divided into three 'Books; the first contains the Texts of the Old Testa-'ment, shewing, without any need of supputation of Years, 'that the Messias is come: The second Book shews, by the 'Apostle's Doctrine, that Christ came in the fulness of 'Time; The third proves, that the sixth Age, in which the 'Messias was to come, is come; There he distinguisheth 'the five Ages which went before, not by the Years but 'by the Generations. We have moreover a Collection of 'his Poetry containing Hymns, Epitaphs and Epigrams in 'great number; a Book of Letters; a Collection of Ser-'mons, among which is found a little Writing of the Protecti-'on of the House of God, and of those that retire into it; a 'Book intituled, Of the Contrarieties of the Scripture, divi-'ded into two Parts. The first whereof comprehends what 'relates to the Old Testament, and the second to the New; 'a Book of History of what happen'd in France in the 'Time of King Wamba; a Collection of Sentences, taken 'out of St. Austine, upon the Psalms; some Extracts of 'the same Father's Books against Julian; a Treatise of 'Divine Judgments, taken out of the Scripture, with a Let-'ter to King Ervigius; a Treatise against the Persecutors 'of those who fly into Churches; a Book of the Masses 'for the whole Year, divided into four Parts, in which he 'corrected some which were either corrupted or imperfect, 'and made new ones; a Book of Prayers for the Festivals 'of the Church of Toledo, either reformed or newly 'made.

Julian of Toledo.

Of all those Works these only remain:

The Treatise of the Prognosticks, directed to Idatius Bishop of Barcelona, with the Letter and the Prayer: The three Books, to shew the sixth Age against the Jews: And the History of the Acts of Wamba in France.

In the first Book of the Treatise of Prognosticks, he treats of Mens Death; he shews it is Sin that subjected them to Death, and affirms it is called Mors a Morsu, because the first Man became Mortal, by eating of the forbidden Fruit. He believes, that, altho' Death be not good, yet it is useful to the Just, and that a sharp Death remits Sins. He examines why Baptism remitting Original Sin, does not free Men from the Law of Death; and he gives two Reasons for it, taken out of St. Austine, and of Julian Pomerius. He believes Angels assist the Just at their Death, and that Devils do then lie in wait for them. He commends the Piety of the Faithful, who take care to do the last Office to their Parents; hereupon he produces some Passages out of St. Austine, about the Sacrifices offered for the Dead, and the Suffrages of Martyrs.

In the Second, which is of the State of Souls after Death, he says, those of perfect Christians are immediately carried into a Paradise, where they remain, joyfully waiting for the Resurrection of their Bodies: And that they enjoy in that Place the Happiness and the Knowledge of God. He believes those of them who have some Sins to blot out, are detain'd for a while; but neither the one nor the other do enjoy as perfect a Vision of the Divine Substance, as they shall do after the Resurrection, tho' they do already see God, and reign with Christ: That the Wicked, immediately after Death, are precipitated into Hell, where they undergo endless Torments. He establisheth * Purgatory, which he believes to be a real Fire, wherewith Sins remaining at ones Death are expiated in the other World; and that the Time of the Souls abiding there is proportion'd to the number or the grievousness of Sins committed by them. He affirms, that the Souls of the Dead may know one another. He says, the Dead pray for the Living, but not for the Damned; that they know what is done here below; that they pity those they have been acquainted with; that they are earnestly desirous of Mens Salvation; that sometimes they appear to the Living; that the Damned see only some of the Blessed. &c.

[Vid. Note.(x).]

The third Book is of the Judgment and Resurrection: These are his Opinions. Neither the Time nor the Place of the Final Judgment can be known, nor how long it will last. Jesus Christ shall appear descending from Heaven with Angels, carrying his Cross: At the Sight of him the very Elect shall tremble for fear, and that Fear shall purify them from their Sins; but the ungodly shall be in a strange Confusion. All the Saints shall judge the World, together with Christ. All Men shall rise in a Moment, and shall put on again a true Body and Flesh, but incorruptible, without Defect, Imperfection or Mutilation, in a perfect Age and perfect Beauty. The difference of Sexes shall remain, but without Lust, without any need of Food or Raiment. All Children, who had any Life in their Mothers Womb, shall rise again. Angels shall separate the Good from the Bad; the Consciences of both shall be laid open, the ungodly shall be cast down head-long into real Fires, in which their Bodies shall burn without being consumed; there shall be different Torments, according to the Difference of Crimes; and the Children guilty of Original Sin only, shall suffer the easiest Pain of all; It is needless to ask where that Fire shall be; after the Condemnation the Recompence of the Just shall follow, and then the Heaven and the Earth shall be set on Fire; there will be a New Heaven and a New Earth, where the Saints may dwell, tho' they may also ascend up into the Heavens; they shall then see God as the Angels do see him now; they shall enjoy a Liberty so much the more perfect, as they shall no more be obnoxious to Sin; they shall all be happy tho' in different Degrees of Happiness; they shall be wholly employ'd in praising God; they shall place all their Felicity in the perpetual Contemplation and Love of him. These are the Points of Doctrine which Julian gathereth from the Fathers of the Church, for properly this Work is nothing else but a Collection of Passages of the Fathers, chiefly of St. Augustine, St. Gregory and Julian Pomerius.

Julian of Toledo.

The Treatise against the Jews is more of Julian's Composition. He proves in the first Book, That the signs of the Messias's coming, pointed at in the Old Testament, are come to pass; That the Time set down by Daniel agrees with the coming of Christ; and that after Jerusalem's Destruction the Jews can expect no other Messias. In the second he shews, by the History of the New Testament, that Jesus Christ is the Messias, and that the Apostles did convince the Jews of it. In the last he distinguisheth the Ages of the World by the Generations, and shews we are in the sixth Age: The first is from Adam to the Flood; the second from the Flood to Abraham; the third from Abraham to David; the fourth from David until the carrying away into Babylon; the fifth from the carrying away into Babylon to Jesus Christ. He compares the Account of the Years of the Hebrew Text, and of the Septuagint, and prefers the latter, because it was more suitable to his Design, finding by this means 5000 Years run out from the Beginning of the World to Christ's Birth. He extols the Authority of the Version of the Septuagint, and affirms that the Jews have corrupted the Hebrew Text. He adds, That altho' it were not so, yet the distinction of the Generations shews the fifth Age of the World was run out when Christ came into the World.

The History of the Acts of Wamba in Gallia, being no Ecclesiastical Work, we will make no Extract of it here, contenting our selves in observing, that it is found in the first Volume of the Historiographers of France, put out by Du Chesne.

In the Bibliotheca Patrum of Cologn [in 1618.] they have attributed to Julian of Toledo, a Book of Antilogies * or seeming Contrarieties of the Scripture, which had been already printed without the Author's Name; but it was found to be Bertborius's, Abbot of Mount Cassin.

[* at Basil in 1530. at Cologne in 1533. octavo.]

There was also part of a Commentary upon the Prophet Nahum published under Julian's Name: But besides that, there is nothing said of it in Felix's Catalogue, the Style and the manner of the Writing of it, shew plainly enough it belongs to another Author, tho' bearing Julian's Name in the Manuscript upon which Canisius publish'd it.

THEODORUS of Canterbury.

Theodorus of Canterbury.

THeodorus, bred a Monk of Tarsus, was ordained Bishop by Pope Vitalian, and sent in 668 into England, to govern the Church of Canterbury. He arrived there Two Years after his departure [staying long in France as he went] and was well entertained by King Egbert, who had sent to Rome to desire a Bishop to be sent to him. He laboured much in the establishing of the Faith and the Church-discipline in England. He held several Councils, made Bishops, founded Monasteries, made Peace between Princes, kept the People in their Duty; and having thus performed all the parts of a good Pastor, during the space of 20 years, he died in 690. being 88 years old.

He is the First that composed a Penitential among the Latins, made up of Canons, taken out of the Councils of the Greek and Latin Church. This Book was soon spread all over the West, and many undertook to make such like Works, which in process of time became very common and very bad, because every one making Collections of Canons, according to his Fancy; nay, and some inventing them, this kind of Works soon grew full of Absurdities, Contradictions and Errors, favouring Mens Lusts, and authorizing Looseness and Remissness in Discipline. We have not now Theodorus's Penitential whole and in its Purity. M. Dacherius published some Fragments of it; and since that Mr. Petit published part of it [at Paris in 1677.] under the name of Theodorus's Penitential; but he confesses in his Preface, 'tis not the whole Penitential of this Author; and it is credible, that this very part of it was altered, and mingled with several other Canons; for it is not without Errors; Theodorus is cited there as a Third Person, and things are met with there contrary to Theodorus himself (a).

Theodorus of Canterbury.

However, these are the Contents of the first Part, under Fourteen Titles or Chapters.

The First is of the Church. There it is forbidden to celebrate the Sacrifice in a place, where Infidels have been buried. It is declared, There ought to be no Steps to the Altars, where there be Relicks of Saints; that there ought to be a Lamp burning before them every Night, unless the Church be poor; That (bb) Frankincense is to be offered on the Festivals of Saints; that it is not lawful for the Laity to recite the Lessons in the Church, nor to say Alleluiah; but only to sing the Psalms and Responses, without Alleluiah.

[(bb) Frankincense.] This Custom of burning Candles, and offering Incense to the Saints Images, was derived from the Heathen-Romans, who as Polyd. Virgil tells us, Solebant ad Statuas, thus, & cereos accendere, as Cicero speaks of the Images set up in Honour of Caius Marius. This Ceremony did Pope Leo III. about the year 794. bring into the Church; and commanded, That the Priests should burn Incense at the Altars of the Saints. So great Promoters of Superstition were the Bishops of Rome in those Ages, and so careful Nurses of it have they been ever since, that the same Custom is retained to this day in their Image-worship.]

Pol. Virg. l. 2. c. 23. Cicer. Offic. l. 3. Lib. Pontif. Bal. in vit. Leonis.

The Second is of the Church's Rights: It shews, that the Bishop may confirm in the Fields; That the Presbyter may consecrate there; That the Bishop cannot force an

(a) To Theodorus himself.] 'Tis not so much a Penitential as a Ritual, composed of several Canons. In the 11*th*. Chap. it is said, Ergo unam licentiam dedit Theodorus; which shews it is a Compiler that speaks; and having set down a Canon of Theodorus's, draws a Conclusion from it. It cannot be said, 'tis Theodorus himself. He might well say, the Ancients prescribed such a time of Penance; but Theodorus did much retrench it. But after having made a Constitution, he would not say; Ergo Theodorus, &c. There are Errors in this Chapter contrary to the Constitutions he made in the Council of Hereford, which a recertainly his. What is said in the end, That there is no Reconciliation in his Country, because there is no publick Penance, does not agree to the Age Theodorus lived in, nor to the practice of his Church, and several Canons of his Penitential prove the contrary.

Abbot

Theodorus of Canterbury.

Abbot to come to the Synod, without a rational Cauſe; That the Biſhop may judge poor Mens Cauſes, not exceeding fifty Pence; but if the Sum exceed that, the cognizance of it belongs to the King; That the Biſhop may diſpenſe with a Vow, if he judges it fit; That Presbyters only can ſay Maſs, bleſs the People, and conſecrate Croſſes; That Presbyters are not bound to pay Tenths; That they ought not to diſcover their Biſhop's Faults; That Men ought not to take the Sacrament from the hand of a Prieſt, that is not able to read the Leſſons and to perform the Ceremonies; That the Presbyters, ſinging at the Maſs, ought not to put off their † Chaſuble; That Perſons Baptized by a Presbyter that is a Fornicator, ought to be re-baptized; That a Presbyter who had been ordained without being baptized, is to be baptized and re-ordained; and thoſe are to be re-baptized that have been baptized by him (which is a very extraordinary Practice, and contrary to the uſe of the Latin Church of that time;) That Deacons are not to break the Bread of the Oblation, nor to ſay the Collect, nor the Dominus Vobiſcum, nor the laſt Prayer; That they cannot impoſe Penance on a Layman, but they may baptize, bleſs Meat and Drink; That Monks alſo, and other Clerks, may bleſs Meat.

The Third Title is of Ordinations. It ſhews, That in a Biſhop's Ordination Maſs is to be ſung by the Biſhop who performs the Ordination; and ſo likewiſe in the Ordination of Presbyters and Deacons; but for the Benediction of Monks, it is enough, That the Abbot ſay Maſs; That the Monk is from that time to keep his Head covered with his Cowle during the ſpace of ſeven days; That in the eighth, the Abbot ſhall take it away, as the Presbyter takes away the Veil of Perſons newly baptized; That a Presbyter may conſecrate an Abbeſs; but an Abbot ought to be conſecrated by a Biſhop; That the Greeks do bleſs the Virgins and Widows after the ſame manner, but the Latins do not give the Veil to Widows; That among the Greeks, a Presbyter may conſecrate a Virgin, reconcile Penitents, conſecrate the Oyl for Exorciſms, and the Chriſm for the Sick, if need be; but at Rome, the Biſhop only may do it.

The Fourth Title is of Baptiſm. It imports, that Baptiſm remits Sins; but according to Pope Innocent, it does not waſh away the Stain of Bigamy, [or ſecond Marriages]; That beſides Baptiſm, Confirmation is neceſſary to Perfection; That he does not deny, but that Confirmation belongs to the Biſhop; but yet that the Chriſm was eſtabliſhed in the Nicene Council (which is a falſe Suppoſition.) That the ſame Linen Clothes in which the Baptized are anointed, may be uſed many times; That the ſame Perſon who was Godfather at Baptiſm, may be Godfather at the Confirmation, but that it is not the Cuſtom; That a Man un-baptized cannot be a Godfather; That a Man may ſtand Surety for a Girl, and a Woman for a Boy; That the Baptized may not eat with the Catechumens, much leſs with the Gentiles.

The fifth is of the Maſs for the Dead. It imports, that among the Latins, the Monks uſe to carry the Corpſe to Church, to anoint their Breaſt with the holy Chriſm, to ſay Maſs upon them, and then carry them out to the Grave, and to ſay a Prayer over them after they are interr'd, to ſay Maſſes for them the 1ſt. the 3d. and the 30th. day, and at the year's end, if they will; That for the Laity, they ſay Maſſes the 3d. the 9th. and the 30th. day; That they ought to faſt 7 days for them; That Maſſes are not to be ſaid for Children, unleſs they be 7 years old; That tho' St. Denys ſays, 'Tis a Blaſphemy to pray for a wicked Man, yet St. Auſtine ſays, The Sacrifice is to be offered for all thoſe that are dead in the Communion of the Church; That Presbyters and Deacons that will not, or ought not to communicate, are not to celebrate.

The Sixth Chapter is of Abbots, Monks and Monaſteries. It is to this effect: The Abbot may withdraw himſelf with the Biſhop's leave; the Abbot's Election belongs to the Monks; the Abbot cannot change his place, without the Biſhop's conſent, and without leaving a Prieſt in the Church, where he was, for the Eccleſiaſtical Miniſtry. Monks ought to have no Women with them, and Nuns to have no Men among them. A Monk cannot make a Vow without his Abbot's conſent; if he make any, it is null. A Monk, choſen by his Society to be a Presbyter, ought not to leave his Rule; if he grows Proud, he ſhall be depoſed, and become the laſt. It is at the liberty of Monaſteries to receive infirm and weak Perſons. It is alſo free for Monks to waſh Laymens Feet, unleſs it be on Holy Thurſday. It does not belong to Monks, to impoſe Penances on the Laity.

The ſeventh Chapter is of Womens Functions in the Church or Monaſtery. They are forbidden covering the Altar with the Corporal, laying the Oblations or the Chalice upon the Altar, ſtanding among the Clerks in the Church, ſitting at Meat with Presbyters, impoſing Penance: But they are permitted to receive the Euchariſt upon a black Veil, according to the uſe of the Greeks; they may make the Oblations (that is, the Loaves offered upon the Altar) but not according to the practice of the Romans.

The Eighth Chapter is of the Cuſtoms of the Greeks and Latins. Theſe are obſerved there: On Sunday the Greeks and the Romans do not ride on Horſe-back nor in a Coach, unleſs it be to go to Church; they bake no Bread, and do not go to the Bath; the Greeks write no publick Acts; they both ſet their Slaves to work on Sunday. The Greek Monks have Servants waiting on them; the Latin have none. The Latins eat on Chriſtmas-Eve, after having ſaid Maſs at the 9th. Hour. The Greeks do all ſup the Evening after the Maſs. Both the Greeks and the Latins ſay, they ought to aſſiſt the Sick of the Plague. The Greeks do not give to Swine the Meat of ſtrangled Beaſts; the Skin, the Wool and the Horns of them may be taken. One may waſh his Head and Feet on Sunday; but the Romans do not follow that Practice.

Theodorus of Canterbury.

The Ninth Chapter is of the Iriſh and Britains, who differ from the Church about the keeping of Eaſter and their Tonſure. It is ſaid there, that their Biſhops ſhall be confirmed by the laying on of the hands of a Catholick Biſhop; that the Chriſm or the Euchariſt cannot be given them, except they make Profeſſion to re-unite themſelves to the Church; and that thoſe are to be baptized who doubt of their Baptiſm.

The Tenth is of thoſe who are poſſeſſed with the Devil, or kill themſelves. If they were godly Men, before they came to be poſſeſſed, they may be pray'd for; but if this Poſſeſſion happened to them, after a Deſpair or ſome other Paſſion, they are not to be prayed for; Maſſes cannot be ſaid for Self-murderers, but they may pray and give Alms for them: Nevertheleſs ſome ſay Maſs for them that kill'd themſelves, being out of their Wits, and having no uſe of their Reaſon.

The Eleventh contains many Queſtions about married Perſons. It is ſaid there, they ought to abſtain from the uſe of Matrimony 3 days before the Communion, 40 days before Eaſter, 40 days before and after Child-bearing; That a Man may leave his Wife guilty of Adultery, and marry another; and that ſhe may marry again after two Years Penance: But the Wife cannot leave her Husband, tho' an Adulteter; That a lawful (*) Marriage cannot be diſſolved, but with the conſent of both Parties; but either of them may give his conſent, that the other withdraw into a Monaſtery, and then the other may marry again, if he had not been married again before. If a Husband is made a Slave, the Wife may marry at the year's end; That a Deacon's Wife, forſaken by him, is not permitted to marry; That a Man may marry within one Month after his Wife's death, and a Woman within one year after her Husband's Deceaſe; that a Woman, that hath vowed Widowhood, cannot marry again; notwithſtanding if ſhe ſhould marry again, it ſhall be free for the Husband to let her fulfil her Vow or not; That the Biſhop may diſpenſe with Vows; That it is free for one baptized to keep or put away his Wife, being a Pagan. If a Woman forſake her Husband, within five years after he may take another Wife. If ſhe be carried away Captive, he may marry another, one year after; but if ſhe cometh again, he ſhall leave this laſt; That it is lawful among the Greeks to marry in the Third Degree, and among the Romans in the Fifth only; but Marriages contracted by Perſons within the Third or the Fourth degree of Conſanguinity, are not diſannulled. Parents are bound to beſtow their Daughter on him, to whom they have betrthed her, except ſhe be unwilling. Children are in the Power of their Father, till they be 16 years old; but that time being paſt, they may enter into a Religious Order, and the Father cannot marry them againſt their Will. I leave out ſome other Conſtitutions leſs important; as alſo the 12th. Chapter of Slaves, as being now out of date.

[(*) Marriage diſſolved by the conſent of both Parties, or of one to withdraw into a Monaſtery.] The great Veneration and Honour which the Fathers of theſe Ages had for a ſingle and a Monaſtick Life, made them not only to have a mean Opinion of that ſacred Inſtitution of God, Marriage, but alſo approve of very ſlight Reaſons of diſſolving it. So apt are Men to make void the Law of God to maintain their own Traditions, whereas neither Celebacy it ſelf is abſolutely neceſſary for a Monaſtick Life, many of the Monks in the more pure Ages being married; nor, if it were, could the conſent of one or both Parties diſſolve the Bonds of it upon that account, For what God hath ſo joined together, no Man can put aſunder, unleſs it be for the only Cauſe allowed by God for Divorce, Adultery.]

Athan.Ep. ad Drat.

Mat.19.6.

The 13th. Chapter is upon different Cuſtoms. It is obſerved therein, that there are Three Solemn Faſts in the Year, that is, beſides the ordinary Lent, Forty Days before Chriſtmas, and Forty Days after Whitſunday. It is ſaid there, that the Laity are bound to perform their Vows; That Friars may not bear Arms; That one Child may be given in exchange for another to a Monaſtery; That the Church ought to pay Tribute, if it be the cuſtom; That Tythes are to be given only to the Poor, and Strangers; That he that faſts for the Dead, does good to himſelf; but that God alone knows, how it goes with the Dead; That infirm Folks may eat and drink at any Hour.

Theodorus of Canterbury.

The 14th. Chapter is about the Reconciliation of Penitents. It imports, that the Romans do reconcile them, intra abſidem, (that is to ſay, near the Altar, in the Place which is rail'd in,) but that the Greeks do not do ſo; that the Biſhop only maketh the Reconciliation on Holy-Thurſday; but if the Biſhop cannot well do it, he may empower a Presbyter to do it. He adds, that in his Province there is no Reconciliation, becauſe there is no publick Penance.

M. Petit hath joined to this Work ſome other Collections of Canons, bearing Theodorus's Name. The firſt might be intituled a Penitential, rather than that before mentioned. It is diſcourſed there firſt of all, what they ought to do who are enjoyn'd a Penance of one, two, or three Years Faſting. 2. What they may do to redeem thoſe Penances, whether by reciting Pſalms, or giving Money to the Poor; what Number of Pſalms they ought to ſay, or what Sums they ought to beſtow. 3. After what manner Penitents are to come before the Biſhop to receive Penance. 4. Of the different Penances to be impoſed for different Crimes. There one may ſee ſome Remainders of the ancient Penance. Penitents did come in the Beginning of Lent to the Door of the Metropolitan Church bare-footed, covered with Sackcloth, and did caſt themſelves on the Ground. The Arch-Prieſts, or the Miniſters of Pariſhes, did receive them there, and enjoyned them Penances; then they brought them into the Church, they ſung the ſeven Pſalms, the Biſhop laid Hands on them, threw Aſhes and (cc) Holy Water on them, covered them with Hair-Cloth, and turned them out of the Church. On Holy Thurſday they came again, and having confeſſed their Sins again, the Biſhop pray'd to God to forgive them their Sins, and ſaid ſome Prayers over them. It was not lawful to receive a Penitent of another Dioceſs, or Pariſh, without the Leave of the Biſhop, or the Miniſters. Men were yet put to Penance for eating things ſtrangled, or Blood of Beaſts. Penances were ſhorter than in former times, but then they were enjoyned for very light Faults. All others, but Biſhops, and Presbyters, were forbidden hearing Confeſſions, or impoſing Penances. The Author of this Collection is different from the former, the Conſtitutions themſelves are different from thoſe in the former Collection. There be ſome of them which ſeem to be made ſince Theodorus's time.

[(cc) Holy Water.] This Heathen Rite of ſprinkling conſecrated Water for the purging and purifying of Men, which may ſeem to have had its Original from the Jewiſh Law, which preſcribes a Water made with the Aſhes of an Heifer to purifie the Unclean, by ſprinkling them therewith, was ſo far from being uſed or approved by the Chriſtians for many Ages, that they abhorred the Uſe of it as a diabolical Superſtition. Theodoret commends a Fact of Valentinian, then Tribune, after Emperor, as moſt ſuitable to the Chriſtian Practice; that going before the Emperor Julian the Apoſtate into the Temple of Fortune, the Prieſts ſprinkled him as the reſt of the Company with Holy Water, which when he eſpyed upon his Garment, he immediately not only cut off that part where it was, but alſo ſmote the Prieſt with his Fiſt in Anger, ſaying, He was a Chriſtian, and therefore was defiled, not cleanſed by their Holy Water, which ſhews, that it was not then uſed among the Chriſtians; but in this ſuperſtitious Age it crept into the Church among other Ceremonies, and is ſtill in Uſe in the Roman Church, as a Purgative from Sin.]

The ten Capitules propoſed to the Council of Hereford by Theodorus, related by Beda, do certainly belong to this Archbiſhop of Canterbury, tho' they be not taken out of his Penitential, but out of a Collection of Canons. It is decreed in the firſt, that Eaſter ſhall be kept the Sunday after the 14th. Moon in March. In the 2d. Biſhops are forbidden to encroach upon the Biſhopricks of their Brethren. In the 3d. They are forbidden to moleſt Monaſteries, or to take their Goods from them. The 4th. is againſt thoſe Friars who go from one Monaſtery to another, without their Abbot's Leave. The 5th. againſt the Clerks, who leave their Biſhop. Other Biſhops are forbidden to entertain them. The 6th. imports, that foreign Biſhops and Clerks ſhall content themſelves with the Hoſpitality uſed towards them, and ſhall not perform any Function of their Miniſtry, without Permiſſion from the Biſhop of the Place. The 7th. appoints Councils to be kept twice a Year. The 8th. forbids Biſhops to prefer themſelves before others out of Ambition, and enjoins them to follow the Time and Order of their Ordination. The 9th. declares, that it is fit to encreaſe the Number of Biſhops, according as Believers encreaſe in Number. The laſt prohibits unlawful Marriages. It forbids Husbands leaving their Wives, except for the Cauſe of Adultery; and orders thoſe that ſhall leave them to remain unmarried. By this Deciſion it appears, that the former Collection is not wholly Theodorus's, becauſe the 10th. Chapter contains Deciſions contrary to this.

Theodorus of Canterbury.

The Capitules publiſhed by M. Dacherius, in the 9th. Vol. of his Spicilegium, are the greateſt part of them in M. Petit's firſt Collection: But this Collection is more faithful and genuine; for tho' ſome places thereof may be corrected by the Manuſcripts of the firſt Collection, it muſt be confeſſed, that in this Theodorus's Canons are ſet down in the Order obſerved by Theodorus, and that they are not mixed with ſo many ſtrange Canons. Theſe are the moſt remarkable things contained in them. In the 12th. it is ſaid, that among the Greeks, the Clergy and the Laity communicate every Sunday: But that among the Latins, it is left to Mens Liberty, to communicate or not; and that thoſe that do not communicate, are not excommunicated for that. The 35th. is that famous Article of the Confeſſion. It imports, That it is lawful, in caſe of neceſſity, to confeſs to God alone. Gratian, Burchard, and Ivo Carnutenſis, do quote this Paſſage otherwiſe. Theodorus ſays in his Penitential, That ſome ſay, with the Greeks, Men ought to confeſs their Sins to God alone: Others believe, they ought to confeſs them to the Prieſts; and almoſt the whole Church is of that Mind: That Confeſſion which is made to God blots out Sins, and that which is made to Men teaches us, how they are blotted out. God oftentimes does inviſibly heal our Evils, and ſometimes he uſes the help of Phyſicians. This differs much from the very Words of Theodorus's Penitential, if they be faithfully related in F. Dacherius's Collection.

M. Petit hath alſo carefully gathered the Canons cited under Theodorus's Name, in a Collection of the Councils of Spain, in the Penitentials of Egbert of York, and of Beda in the Roman Penitential, and in that of Rabanus, by Regino, Burchard, Ivo Carnutenſis, Gratian, and ſeveral other Collectors of Canons: But all thoſe Authors have many falſe Quotations, and ſo their Authority is not much to be relied upon.

All this ſhews, that we have not the true Penitential of Theodorus in its Integrity and Purity; that what Mr. Petit publiſhed under the Title of a Penitential, is nothing leſs than that; that the Capitules, which he publiſhed alſo from a Manuſcript, which M. Faber communicated to him, are not Theodorus's neither; and all the reſt of his Collections are taken out of ſuſpicious Monuments. Nevertheleſs, he is to be commended for his Diligence and Labour, and we are beholden to him, for having gathered together all that bore Theodorus's Name. Spelman found in Cambridge Library a great Penitential aſcribed to Theodorus, of which he gives us the Titles. It is to be wiſhed it were publiſhed, that we might ſee whether it be Theodorus's own Original, or another Collection of Canons.

M. Petit joined to Theodorus's Penitential, an old Compilement of Canons, a Collection of divers Monuments about Church Rites, and chiefly about Penance, taken out of ſeveral Manuſcripts, and a Collection of ſeveral Papers, Conſtitutions, Bulls, Edicts, Declarations, Privileges, Letters, Confeſſions, and other Pieces, which he hath publiſhed. Theſe Monuments are accompanied with two Diſſertations, the one upon Theodorus's Paſtoral Vigilancy, to ſhew, that all Biſhops are bound not only to take care of their own Church, but moreover to watch over all the other, to help them in their Need; the other upon Penance in which he pretends to defend Theodorus's Opinion, and to prove againſt F. Morinus, that in the ancient Church, there was no Penance for ſecret Sins, tho' never ſo grievous. Yea, and he brings in Proofs, tending to ſhew, that there lay no Obligation to confeſs them to Men, nor to ſubmit them to the Miniſtry of the Church Keys, and that inward Repentance was ſufficient to obtain the Remiſſion of them. Laſtly, he adds ſome Notes upon his pretended Penitential, wherein he ſhews a great deal of Learning and Reading. Theſe are the Contents of the two Volumes in Quarto printed at Paris by Dezallier 1679, under the Title of Theodori Pœnitentiale.

CEOLFRIDE.

Ceolfride.

CEolfride, Abbot of Jarrow in England, Beda's Tutor, wrote a Letter upon Easter to Naito King of the Picts, which his Disciple preserved us. He flourished toward the End of the 7th. Century, and died in 720. In that Letter he treats of the several Sorts of the Clerks Tonsure, and of the Celebration of Easter, and confesseth those Differences are of small Consequence, and that they should not trouble the Peace.

ADELMUS.

Adelmus.

ADelmus, Abbot of Malmesbury in England, wrote also a Book concerning Easter, against the Custom of the Britains, and a Book of Virginity in Prose and Verse. We have yet this last Work. That in Prose was printed by Sonnius in 1576, and inserted in the Bibl. Patrum, that in Verse was published by Canisius in 1608. In this Tract he gives an Encomium of many Holy Persons, whose Life he describeth.

This Saint is believed to be he, who was Bishop of Sherborn, who had made a Book of Problems in Verse, in Imitation of Symposius, of about a thousand Verses. But Sigebert, who speaks of these two Authors, in two different Chapters, seems to distinguish them. One must not look for Politeness in the Works of this English Man.

APONIUS.

Aponius.

ALtho' it be not precisely known in what time this Author lived, it is probable, he lived about the end of this 7th. Century. He made a Commentary upon the Song of Songs, in which what is said of the Bride and Bridegroom, he applied to Christ and his Church. We have six Books of that Work in the Biblioth. Patr. It is pretty well written, full of Wit and Learning, and one of the best that was made upon that Subject. We have an Abridgment of the rest of that Commentary, made by a Benedictine Abbot: And Angelomus, who lived above 700 Years ago, copied out several Places of it in his Commentary upon the Song of Songs, [printed by it self at Fribourg, 1538.]

CRESCONIUS.

Cresconius.

CResconius, an African Bishop, flourished towards the end of the 7th. Century. He made a Collection of Canons in two Parts. The first intituled, An Abridgment of the Canon-Law, contains the Titles pointing to the Matters, together with the Citation of the Canons where they are found. The second contains the Canons themselves, set down in their full Length, in the same Order that they are cited in the Abridgment. This is intituled, An Harmony of the Canons, or, A Book of Canons. The Abridgment was published [at Paris] in 1588, by M. Pithœus, from a Manuscript of the Church of Troyes, and since that by M. Altaserranus [at Poicton] in 1630, and by F. Chifflet in 1649. M. Justel and Voellus inserted it also with the whole Harmony, in their Bibliotheca Juris Canonici, [or, A compleat Body of the Canon-Law.]

JOANNES MONACHUS.

J. Monach.

NO Authors did ever carry the Virgin Mary's Praises farther, than the Greeks of these latter Ages. We have already spoken of eight Sermons of George Pisidas upon that Subject. Here is a Monk, who is probably of the same time, not at all inferior to him in the Declamation, which he made upon the Birth of the Mother of God. He mingles with the Virgin's Commendations some Speeches, which he applies sometimes to St. Anne, sometimes to the Virgin. He brings in the Patriarchs, the Prophets, and the Righteous. Yea, and Adam himself acts his Part there. If any Body liketh these kind of Discourses, he may consult the Originals; for we are not willing to make Extracts of them. Allatius thinks, this John was Archbishop of Bulgaria. It is not known when he lived.

DEMETRIUS CYZICENUS.

Demetrius Cyzicenus.

WE have, under this Bishop's Name, a little Writing of the Original and Errors of the Jacobites, in which he says, that the Author of that Sect was a Monk of Syria, named James, surnamed Tzantzale, who had embraced Eutyches's Error, and Dioscorus's Party; that since the Council of Chalcedon, those among the Syrians, who sided with the Emperor, had been called Melchites, that is to say, Royalists, because * Melchi in Syriack signifieth a King; and those who followed Eutyches's Opinions, took the Name of Jacobites. That these acknowledge, there were two Natures in Christ before the Union, but they hold there is but one after the Union; and so they suppose either the Confusion, or the Mixture of the two Natures, and are condemned as Theopaschitæ, because they believe the Godhead did suffer; that they own the 3 first Synods only; that when they cross their Foreheads, they do it with one Finger only, to signifie the Unity of Nature; that because of that they do not cross themselves from the right Hand to the left, as others do, but from the left to the right; that they mingle the Oblation with Oyl, and matter not much Communicating; that they put no Water into the Cup; that they care very little, whether they do worship Images, or not, and look upon that as an indifferent thing; that they eat Flesh in Lent; that they have their peculiar Offices, and have added these Words to the Trisagion, Thou that art crucified for us. There be some among them, who call themselves Chatzizarys. They worship Crosses, and put Nails into them, to signifie that the Godhead suffered: But they differ from the true Jacobites, in that they own two Natures in Christ, and seem to fall into Nestorius's Error, by saying, that during the Passion there were two Persons in Christ, the one suffering, and the other beholding the Sufferings. They fast some Days before the time that they leave Eating Flesh. In Lent they eat Eggs, Milk, and Butter; they offered unleavened Bread; they put no Water into the Cup; they baptized their Crosses. I have made an exact Extract or Abridgment of that small Writing, because it contains some Particulars pretty remarkable.

Demetrius Cyzicenus. It is not known when the Author of it lived. Yet in all Probability he is of the 7th. or 8th. Century.

Upon what he ſays, that the Jacobites had their peculiar Offices, it may be obſerved, that in the Biblioth. Patrum there is an Order of the Prayers and Ceremonies of the Baptiſm, and Maſs, with ſome other Prayers for the Uſe of the Syrian Jacobites, which are ſaid to have been preſcribed by Severus the Patriarch; that Work is probably of the ſame time. Demetrius Cyzicenus.

JOHANNES NICÆNUS's Memoirs upon Chriſt's Birth, directed to Zachary, a Chriſtian of Armenia.

J. Nicænus. THIS Author handles this Queſtion; Why the Feſtival of Chriſt's Birth is kept on the 25th. Day of December; tho' the Conſtitutions of St. James and the Apoſtles, appointed that Feaſt-day on January the 6th. upon which Day Chriſt's Baptiſm is celebrated. He pretends, that the Cuſtom of keeping that Feſtival on the 6th. of January, came from this, that John Baptiſt's Diſciples, ſeeing Chriſt baptized on that Day, and having heard, he was then 30 Years old, they imagined it was alſo his Birth-day; that St. Cyril, Biſhop of Jeruſalem, did write of it to Pope Julius, who grounded it upon ſome of Joſeph's Memoirs, in which it was obſerved, that in the ſeventh Month of the Jews, in the Feaſt of Tabernacles, the Angel had appeared to the High-prieſt, and ſtricken him dumb, until that Elizabeth had brought forth a Son; having caſt up the Days and Months, he found that Chriſt's Birth-day fell on the 25th. of December, and eſtabliſhed that Cuſtom in Rome; that St. Baſil was of the ſame Mind, and wrote to St. Gregory Nazianzen, to procure the Approbation of that Practice in the Council of Conſtantinople, but that many would not receive it; that Honorius the Emperor perſuaded his Brother to follow the Uſe of Rome in that; that St. Chryſoſtome had approved it, and with St. Epiphanius had appointed Chriſtmas to be kept on the 25th. of December; that afterwards, this was confirmed in a Synod held in Conſtantinople, which writ of it to all the Patriarchs, who did all embrace this Practice. Much might be ſaid againſt this Hiſtorian's Obſervations, which are almoſt all falſe. But we muſt not ſeek for Exactneſs nor Truth in the Memoirs of theſe modern Greeks. J. Nicænus.

BEDE.

BEDE, Sirnamed the Venerable (a) was born in England in the Year * 672 [in the County Palatine of Durham, within the Precincts of the Monaſtery of Girwy] not far from [the place where now ſtands a little Village called] Jarrow, [which lies near the Mouth of the River Tine.] At ſeven Years of Age his Relations preſented him to St. Benedict of Biſcop, then Abbot of the Monaſtery [of St. Peter] at Weremouth, and Founder [of that of St. Paul's] at Jarrow, [to be Educated and Inſtructed.] In theſe Monaſteries, which were not above five Miles diſtant from each other, did he ſpend his whole Life under the Government [of St. Benedict, and after] of Ceolfride, who was the firſt Abbot of this latter. Being nineteen Years of Age he was ordain'd Deacon, and Eleven Years after Prieſt, by John [of Beverly] Biſhop of † Hagueſtade. He applyed himſelf cloſely to the ſtudy of Eccleſiaſtical and Profane Learning, and [by means of his exact skill in both the Greek and Latin Tongues] having read much, and made very large Collections (b) he compoſed a Great Number of Books upon all manner of Subjects, [which filled the World with ſo much wonder, that * William of Malmesbury ſays of him, 'That it was impoſſible for any Man to write ſo many, 'and ſo large Volumes in the narrow compaſs of Humane 'Life, had not God afforded him an extraordinary portion 'of his Divine Spirit and Wiſdom.'] He was the moſt Eminent Perſon of his time [Celebrated ſo highly by all the Eminent Men of that Age for his Univerſal Knowledge and Learning, that many ſaid of him, Hominem in extremo Orbis angulo Natum Univerſum Orbem ſuo ingenio perſtrinxiſſe, That he was born in the furtheſt part of the World, but comprehended the whole World in his Underſtanding.] He had many Scholars, and [by his Example and Inſtruction] made all ſort of Sciences to flouriſh in England. He died of an Inflammation of the Lungs, [on the 26th. of May] in the year 735, [which was his Climacterick, and was buried in the Monaſtery of Girwy. His Death is remarked by the Author of the Annals, Ultonienſes, with this Encomium; † Beda Sapiens Saxonum quievit: This Year died Bede the Wiſe Saxon. From hence his Bones were removed to Durham, and put in the ſame Cheſt or Coffin with St. Cuthbert's.] Some affirm, that he made a Voyage to Rome; [And indeed it cannot be denied, but that Sergius, who was then Pope, having ſome weighty Affairs of the Church then before him, did by his Letter ſent to his Abbot Ceolfride, ſo earneſtly requeſt him to come to Rome, to determine ſome difficult Controverſies and Queſtions then under debate, which he thought could not be determined without him, as if at this time Bede, not the Pope himſelf, had been the only Infallible Oracle upon Earth.] Yet it is certain, that he never went out of England, [or left his Monaſtery;] and it evidently appears by his Writings, that he was never at Rome (c). Bede's Works have been collected, and divided into eight Tomes, which were Printed at Baſil by Hervagius in 1563, and at Cologne in 1612. [They had been Printed in three Tomes at Paris, in 1545, but not ſo Correct.] The two firſt Tomes contain ſuch Works only, as concern Humane Arts and Sciences, viz. of Grammar, Arithmetick, Aſtronomy, Phyſick, Chronology, and Morality. Thoſe which have neareſt Relation to Eccleſiaſtical Matters are two Treatiſes about the Tropes and Figures of Holy Scripture, his Writings about the Lunar Cycles to find Eaſter-day every Year, and a Treatiſe of Times, in which he defends the Computation of the Years of the World according to the Hebrew Text againſt the Calculation of the Se- Bede. † *Annal. (a) Sirnamed the Venerable.] Upon what account he had this Name given him, is not known. Several Reaſons are alledged, but the moſt probable is this, That thoſe that read his Books while he was alive not daring to give him the Title of Saint, contented themſelves to call him Venerable; Nevertheleſs we do not find, that he was called ſo by any Cotemporary with him. He is alſo called Saint, Bleſſed, Engliſh Doctor, the Moſt Illuſtrious Maſter and Reader by way of Excellence.

(b) Having Read and Collected much.] As long as he lived he never gave over Reading, Writing, and Teaching.

(c) It appears by his Writings, that he never was at Rome.] He never ſpeaks of this pretended Voyage to Italy, but when he mentions the Pope's Letters, which he hath inſerted in his Hiſtory. He ſays, he had them from Nothelmus a London Miniſter, who brought him them from London. In his Letter to Egbert, ſpeaking of the Cuſtoms uſed at Rome, he doth not alledge his own practice for Confirmation of them, but refers us to the teſtimony of Egbert. He tells us, that he underſtood by ſome Monks that had been at Rome, that they put the date of the Year from the Paſſion of Jeſus Chriſt upon their Chriſtmas Tapers.

Bede. venty and divides the duration of the World into Six Ages, of which he gives us the History and Chronology in a small Treatise by it self, [which hath also been Printed alone at Paris in 1507, 4*to.* and with the Scholiast of J. Bronchorstius at Cologne in 1537.]

The third Tome contains his Historical Books. The first, and most considerable is his Ecclesiastical History of England, divided into five Books. The first contains the most remarkable things that happened in Great Britain, from Cæsar to the Death of St. Gregory, [Anno 604.] The other four relate at large what passed in the Church of England from that time [to the the Year 731.] At the end he hath annexed an Abridgment of this History in the form of a Chronicle, to which are joyned the Lives of St. Cuthbert, Arch-Bishop of York; St. Felix, Bishop of Nola; the Bishop of Arras, St. Columbanus; the Abbot St. Vedastus; St. Aztalas, the Abbot; St. Patrick, the Apostle of Great Britain; St. Eustatius, Scholar of St. Columbanus; St. Bertolfus, Abbot of Bobio; St. Arnolphus, Bishop of Metz; and St. Burgundofora, an Abbess; with a Relation of the Travels and Martyrdom of St. Justin a Youth, in Verse, who was beheaded at the Louvre in the time of Diocletian's Persecution.

The Life of St. Patrick is not Bede's, but Probus's, of St. Columbanus, Jonas's, and of St. Arnoldus, Paul the Deacon's

The Martyrology of Bede, as we now have it, is not in the same Purity, in which he composed it, but several things have been added since, as is usual in Works of that Nature. Bollandus and his Followers do likewise assert, That it is not of Bede's Writing, but Florus's a Deacon of Lyons, under whose Name 'tis found in several Manuscripts.

The Treatise of Holy Places is made up of several large Relations, and particularly from those of Arculphus, a Bishop of France, written in three Books by Adamanus.

To this small Tract is annexed a large Collection of Hebrew Names both Proper, and Apellative, and others, put in an Alphabetical Order, and explained.

This Tome ends with a Book, intituled, Collections taken out of the Fathers, containing Sentences, Questions, and Parables. This Treatise is a Miscellaneous Rhapsody, without either Order or Method, and unworthy of the Name of Bede.

The fourth Tome of Bede's Works, contains his Commentaries upon some part of the Books of the Old Testament, of which the Catalogue followeth.

An Explication of the three first Chapters of Genesis, taken out of St. Basil, St. Ambrose, and St. Austine.

A Literal and Allegorical Commentary upon all the Pentateuch.

Four Books containing an Allegorical Explication of the Books of Samuel, i. e. of the First and Second Books of the Kings.

Thirty Questions upon the Books of Kings.

Three Books of Allegorical Explications of the two Books of Esdras.

A short Allegorical Exposition of the History of Tobit.

An Allegorical Exposition of the Book of Job, divided into three Books. This Work is not Bede's, but some other Author's; and he himself cites it in his Book of * Ounces under the Name of Philip of Syda.

[* De ratione Unciarum.]

A Commentary upon the Proverbs of Solomon, in three Books.

Seven Books upon the Canticles. The first contains an Extract of St. Austine's Books against Julian, a Summary of all the Chapters applying them to the Church, and the Text of the Canticles. The five following Books contain a Commentary upon the Text taken out of the Ancient Commentaries. The last is made up of Collections of passages out of St. Gregory upon the Canticles.

This Tome concludes with three Books, wherein he explains Allegorically the Relation, which Moses gives in Exodus of the Building of the Ark, the Tabernacle, and Priests Garments. Trithemius makes mention of a Commentary of Bede upon the Proverbs, and he himself speaks of another upon Ecclesiastes; but these Works are not published, no more than his Explication of all the Prophets.

The fifth Tome contains his Commentaries upon the New Testament, viz.

Four Books upon the Gospel of St. Matthew.

Four Books upon St. Mark.

Six Books upon St. Luke.

A long Comment upon the Acts of the Apostles, at the end of which is a small Treatise of the Names, Places, and Cities, spoken of in that History.

A Commentary upon the Catholick Epistles. [Bede made a Preface to this Commentary, giving an Account of the Order and Inscription of those Epistles; but it never was Printed with his other Works; but being lately found in a MS. belonging to Caius College in Cambridge, it hath been printed in Dr. Cave's Historia Literaria among Bede's Works.] Bede.

A Commentary upon the Revelation.

The Commentaries upon all Saint Paul's Epistles, which are taken out of Saint Austine's Works, are reserved for the Sixth Tome. There are several Opinions about the Author of this Commentary. Some attribute it to Peter, an Abbot of the Province of Tripolis, others to Florus, a Deacon of Lyons, and others continue it to Bede. It is certain, that all these three did make Comments upon these Epistles, taken out of St. Austine. Cassiodorus assures us of the first, Wandelbert of the second, and Bede says it of himself in the Catalogue of his Works at the end of his Church-History of England; and after him Hincmarus, and Lupus Ferrariensis testifie the same to us. But to which of these they ought to be attributed, it would be hard to know, unless it were discovered by the Ancient MSS. (a), in which this Commentary, printed under the name of Bede is attributed to Florus; and where we find the true Commentary of Bede, bearing his own Name, as F. Mabillon hath observed in the first Tome of his Analecta.

This Tome contains also some Retractations and Additions, to some places of his Commentary upon the Acts; Six new Questions, and the Translation of St. Chrysostome's Sermons in praise of St. Paul, made by Anianus.

The Seventh Tome contains 33 Homilies fitted for the Summer. 32 for the Summer-Festivals of the Saints. 15 for the Winter. 22 for Lent. 16 for the Winter-Festivals of the Saints, and several Sermons attributed to Bede.

Common places upon several Moral Points taken out of the Holy Scripture and Fathers.

An Allegorical Treatise of the Valiant Woman, by which he understands the Church.

A small Tract of the Offices of the Church, and some Fragments of an Allegorical Exposition upon the Proverbs.

The Eighth Tome contains divers Treatises omitted in the former Tomes.

An Allegorical Explication of the Temple of Solomon, with reference to the Church, of which it was a Figure.

Another Exposition upon the three first Chapters of Genesis.

Several Questions upon Genesis with Answers to them, taken out of St. Ambrose, St. Austine, St. Isidore, but more especially out of St. Jerome.

The same sort of Questions upon Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy, the Books of Joshua, Judges, and Kings.

Divers Questions upon the Scripture.

A Commentary upon all the Psalms.

A small Treatise upon these words of Psalm the 52. The Lord looked down from Heaven to see, if there were any upon Earth that would understand, and seek after God.

Some Notes upon Boethius's Treatise about the Trinity.

Meditations [upon the Passion of Christ] for the seven hours of the day.

Bede's Penitential, intituled, Remedies against Sin.

Dacherius hath printed in the Tenth Tome of his Spicilegium, a Martyrology, which sets down in Heroick Verses the chief Festivals of the Saints through the Year. It bears Bede's Name, and the Author was certainly an Englishman, a Monk of the Monastery of Jarrow, and Cotemporary with Bede, and indeed is much like the Style and Genius of this Author.

There were also published in England in the year 1664, some Letters of Bede; Together with the Lives of the Abbots of Weremouth and Jarrow: F. Mabillon in his first Tome of his Analecta hath published a short Letter of Bede to Albinus, but it contains nothing remarkable in it.

Besides the Works afore-mentioned, there hath been lately published out of the Ancient MSS. by the Reverend and Learned Mr. Henry Wharton, Arch-Deacon of Canterbury, a Commentary of Bede upon the first One and Twenty Chapters of Genesis; His Exposition of the Song of the Prophet Habakkuk; as also two Epistles, the one containing an Apology for himself against such as accused him of some Erroneous Opinions, the other to Egbert, Arch-Bishop of York, together with a more correct Edition of his History of the Lives of the Abbots of Weremouth and Girwy. Printed at London, in 1693.

Bede's Style is clear and easie, but is neither Pure, Elegant, Lofty, nor Polite. He wrote with wonderful readiness, but without Art or Consideration. He had much Reading and Learning, but wanted Judgment and Critical Exactness.

(a) By the Ancient MSS.] F. Mabillon quotes two MSS. of 800 years old, wherein he finds under the Name of Bede a clear different Commentary from that which is printed under his Name. This bears the Name of Florus in the Ancient MS. of Corbey. It carries the same name in the MS. used by Trithemius, and in another quoted by F. Mabillon. In an Ancient MS. Collection of Canons this Collection is cited also under the name of Florus. In some MSS. it carries the name of Bede and Florus. Lastly, Florus made another Commentary upon St. Paul taken out of the Works of 12 other Fathers, without any mention of St. Austine, which proves that he had already collected the Testimonies of this Father in another Work.

Bede.

Exactness. He collected indifferently all he found, without Picking and Chooting. His Commentaries upon Holy Scripture, as we have observed, are nothing but Extracts of the Commentaries of the Fathers, collected and put together by him. He had set down the Authors out of which he took every passage, by putting into the Margin the first Letter of their Names; but by the Negligence of such as copied them, they are lost. His History is exact enough as to the things that passed in his time, or a little time before him, but as to the other parts of it we cannot safely credit it, because he often made use of false Memoirs. His Compositures upon the Prophane Sciences, are neither very deep, nor exact, but they are well enough done for his Age.

Bede.

JOHN, Patriarch of Constantinople; and AGATHO, Deacon of the same Church.

John and Agatho.

AFTER the Death of the Emperor Constantine [commonly called Pogonatus] his Son Justinian [the Second of that Name] a Cruel Man obtained the Empire in 685, and was deprived of it in the tenth year of his Reign by Leontius Patricius, who cut off his Nose, and banished him; but he was soon after deposed by Apsimarus Tiberius: And at length Justinian was again restored in 705, but was at last slain in Bithynia, Anno 712. by the Command of Bardanes, Sirnamed Philippicus, who invaded the Empire. This Man who had been the Scholar of the Abbot Stephen, the Scholar of Macarius, caused the Picture of the Sixth Council to be pulled down, the Names of Sergius, and Honorius to be put in the Dyptichs, and the Acts of the Council, which were in his Palace to be burnt. He persecuted the Orthodox Bishops, banished Cyrus Patriarch of Constantinople, put John in his place, and endeavoured to reverse the Definitions of the Sixth Council, and revive the Doctrine of the Monothelites. But he did not live long enough to perfect his design, for he was taken, and had his Eyes put out by certain Persons that conspired against him in 713, on the Saturday before Whitsuntide, and the next Day Fl. Anthemius was declared Emperor, Sirnamed Anastasius, and crowned by John. He published the Sixth Council anew, put up the Picture of it, and caused the Acts to be written out again by the Deacon Agatho, who relates this whole matter in a Memoir, which he hath put at the end of the Acts of the Council.

John and Agatho.

John, Patriarch of Constantinople, declared that he was of the same Opinion, and to reconcile himself to the Western Church, he wrote a Letter to Pope Constantine, in which he excuses himself for not sending a Synodical Letter of Communion, because he was hindred by the violence of Philippicus. He then gives him an Account how he was raised to the Patriarchate; He says, that Philippicus had a design to put into it a Person, who was not of the Clergy, and who was of his own Sentiments, but he was forced by the earnest Petitions of the Clergy of Constantinople to choose him; That he never had declared himself to be of the Erroneous Opinions of the Emperor, nor did write to the Pope in defence of them; but he owns, That he was forced to dissemble the Truth by using ambiguous terms; He endeavours to excuse his behaviour, plainly acknowledges two Natural Wills in Jesus Christ, and approves of the Council held under Martin I. and the Sixth Council. Lastly, He earnestly desired the Pope to receive him into his Communion, and to write his Synodical Letters to him, without regard to what had passed. Nevertheless Constantine gave him no Answer, and he was likewise deposed a little after, and Germanus put in his place.

GERMANUS, Patriarch of Constantinople.

Germanus, &c.

Germanus Bishop of Cyzicum was translated to the Patriarchal See of Constantinople, Anno. 713. and enjoyed it till 730, when he was deposed by the Emperor Leo Isaurus, and sent into Banishment in which he died. We have three of his Letters in the Acts of the Seventh Council. Some attribute also to him a Mystical Work about the Ceremonies of the Liturgy, intituled Theoria, printed in the Bibliotheca Patrum, which contains also an Explication upon the Lord's Prayer, which is printed by it self. Four Sermons upon the Virgin printed by F. Combefis in Greek and Latin in his Addition to the Biblioth. Patrum. The first is upon her Presentation in the Temple. The second, which is upon her Annunciation, is a Dialogue between the Angel, Mary, and Joseph; and the two last are upon the Death of the Virgin, in one of which he insinuates, that she was taken up into Heaven in her Body. Schottus hath published another Sermon upon the Nativity of the Virgin, under the Name of Germanus; but F. Combefis hath restored it to Andreas Cretensis. Some also believe, and not without Reason, that the Book, intituled Theoria, and his Homilies, of which we have spoken already, belong to another Germanus Patriarch of Constantinople, who lived in the twelfth Age under Alexius Comnenus, and in the time of Pope Gregory the IX, to whom he wrote a Letter. Gretzer hath also published two Sermons upon the Cross, which are this latter's rather than the former's; as also the Sermon upon the Virgin's Girdle put out by Surius. Lastly, F. Combefis hath published in Greek and Latin, a long Discourse about the Burial of Our Lord, which Gretzer attributes to the Author of the two Homilies upon the Cross; but it seems to be better written, and to belong to a more ancient Author. We find also a Fragment taken out of a Treatise of Synods, and Heresies, directed to Antimus the Deacon, which seems also to be a good Piece. But the Work that doth most certainly belong to the elder German Patriarch of Constantinople, is that which Photius gives us some Extracts of, [in his Biblioth. cod. 233.] intituled, * Of a lawful Retaliation, in which he defends St. Gregory Nyssen from the Errors of Origen, which some imputed to him. He shews, that they, who were of Origen's Opinion concerning the ending of Hell-Torments, have imputed this Error to St. Gregory Nyssen by altering some of his Expressions, putting an ill Construction upon others, and not rightly understanding his other Writings. Photius observes, that his Style in this Work is clear, and easie; that he makes a fit use of Figures; that his Phrases are elegant, and polite; that he is not flat, and troublesome; that he keeps close to his Subject, and doth not fly from it by impertinent Expressions, forgetting nothing necessary for his Subject, and solidly proves the Propositions asserted; that he chiefly confutes the Error of those who imagine, That the Devils and Damned Souls shall one day be estated among the Blessed, having constantly suffered [for their Sins.] He confutes, I say, this Opinion by the Authority of Jesus Christ, his Apostles, the Prophets, and Testimonies of the Fathers, particularly by some Passages taken out of the Works of St. Gregory Nyssen. He answers to the Testimonies of this Father, which the Origenists alledged, and shews their Cheats, discovers the Places that they have added, and vindicates him against all the Accusations of his Enemies.

Germanus, &c.

* Ἀντιῤῥητικὸς ἢ Ἀπολυτικός.

BONIFACE of Mentz.

Boniface of Mentz.

Boniface was an English man by Nation, and was called properly Winfrid, or Winfred; he professed a Religious Life in England, and at the same time applied himself close to his Study, that he might make himself serviceable to the Church. With this intention he went out of England in the year 715, to preach the Gospel in Friseland, but the War forced him to return into England. Not long after he went to Rome, from whence he was sent by Gregory the Second to preach the Gospel in Germany, Anno 719. He preached first in Turingia, and then in Hassia, East-Friseland, and Saxony. Having planted the Faith of Jesus Christ in those Provinces, and converted several thousand Souls, he made a second Journey to Rome, and was there consecrated Bishop in 723 by Gregory the Second, who sent him back again with Instructions, and Letters of Recommendation. Being returned, he continued to preach the Gospel in Turingia, Hassia, and Bavaria. He received the Pall from Gregory the Third, with an allowance to constitute Bishopricks in the Countries newly converted. The Respect which he had for the Holy See, made him undertake a third Voyage to Rome, but he stayed not long, but returned soon into Germany. It was then his main business to establish a firm Custom in the Churches which he had planted, to reform Discipline and Manners, to abolish Superstitions, to erect Episcopal Sees where it was necessary, and to hold Councils, of which he summoned several in Germany and France. Hitherto Boniface had only the Quality and Dignity of a Bishop and Vicar of the Holy See, without out any particular Title. Wherefore Pepin, and the great Lords of France, thought it convenient to give him one, designing to make him Bishop of Cologne; but the See of Mentz becoming vacant by the Deposition of Gervoldus, Boniface was put into his Place, and that Church made a Metropolis, which was confirmed by Pope Zachary, who made five Bishops Sees subject to it, viz. Tongres, Cologne, Wormes, Spire, and Utrecht; and the Bishopricks newly erected, or those that depended upon Worms, viz. Strasburg, Ausburg, Wirtemberg, Buraburg, Erford, Eichstat, Constance, and Coira. But he soon after laid down that Dignity upon the account of Lullus his Scholar, whom he put in his Place with the Consent of Pepin, the Bishops, Clergy, and Lords of the Province, having first obtained Leave of the Pope to do it. He went to Utrecht to preach the Gospel in Frisland, where he was barbarously murder'd by the Heathens, June 5. An. 754. in the Place, whither he was come to confirm a great multitude of Persons newly baptized, and was buried in the Abby of Fulda. Serarius hath published a Collection of Boniface's Letters, together with Lullus's, Adulmus's, and several other of his Scholars, Friends, Princes, and Popes, that wrote to him. [At Mentz in 1605, Reprinted 1629.]

The first is to one of his Friends, called Nithardus; in it he takes the Name of Winfrid, which shews, that it was written when he was young. He exhorts this Friend to contemn Temporal Things, and apply himself to the Study of Holy Scripture, that he may acquire (saith he) that Divine Wisdom, which is more glittering than Gold, finer than Silver, more sparkling than Diamonds, more rare than Precious Stones; and he adds, That there is nothing that he can search after in his Youth with greater Honour, or possess with greater Comfort and Pleasure in his Age, than the Knowledge of Holy Scripture.

The second is directed to an Abbess, to comfort her in her Afflictions.

The third is superscribed to the Bishop Daniel. In it he complains of the Behaviour of certain Clergymen, who taught Errors, and permitted Persons guilty of Murder and Adultery to be admitted into the Priesthood. And that which troubled him most, was this; That he could not wholly separate from them, because they were in great Reputation in Pepin's Court, of whom he stood in need: But he says, That he did avoid all Communion with them in the Holy Mysteries. He observes, That the Opposition which he met with from Heathens and Infidels was the more tolerable, because it was without; but when a Priest, Deacon, or Clergy-man, departs from the Faith, this causes a Disorder in the inward parts of the Church. He asks Advice of this Bishop, how he should carry himself; he says, that on the one hand he is obliged to hold a fair Correspondence with the French King's Court, because he cannot, without his Authority and Command, defend the German Churches, and subdue the Idolatry of those Provinces. That going to desire Orders for that end, he cannot but communicate with those disorderly Clergy-men; ye he is afraid that he offends God by it, having promised by an Oath to Pope Gregory to avoid those Persons; but on the other side, he is afraid of bringing a greater Damage upon the Church, if he should forbear going to the French King's Court. He adds, that he seems to satisfie his Oath by separating from those irregular Clergymen in their Ministry, and not agreeing with them in their Errors, or sinful Conversation. We have Daniel's Answer to this Letter, wherein he approves of Boniface's Carriage.

The fourth Letter was written by St. Boniface when he was but a Deacon. It was to desire Adelmus's Books of Alumns.

The fifth is a Letter written by two of St. Boniface's Scholars to an Abbess.

The sixth is a Circular Letter of St. Boniface to all Christians, in which he exhorts them to pray to God for a Blessing upon his Travels for the Conversion of the Gentiles.

In the seventh, he desires an Abbess to help him by her Prayers.

In the eighth, he gives Egbert Bishop of York notice, that he hath sent a Writing to Ethelwald King of the Mercians against some Errors, and exhorts him to oppose them. He tells him, that he had sent him some of St. Gregory's Letters, which he hath taken out of the Library of the Church of Rome, and which he thought not common in England. He desires of him some of Bede's Works.

He requests the same thing in the following Letter to the Abbot Huetbert, and recommends himself to his Prayers.

In the 10*th*. he exhorts in his own Name, and in the Name of the eight Bishops that were with him, the Priest Herefrede to shew the Memoir which they sent him to the King of the Mercians, and exhorts him to follow their Advice. 'Twas to hinder the Debaucheries and Disorders of his Kingdom.

In the 11*th*. Letter, he consults the Bishop Pethelmus about the Customs of France and Italy, by which it was forbidden to marry her to whose Child he had been Godfather: Whereupon he says, that till then he thought there was no harm in it, having never found, that it was forbidden by the Canons or Decrees of the Holy Bishops. He desires him to let him know, whether he hath met with any thing about it in any Ecclesiastical Writings. Boniface of Mentz.

The 12*th*. to King Ethelbald contains nothing remarkable.

The 13*th*, 14*th*. and 16*th*. are directed to the Abbess Eatburg; in them he recommends himself to her Prayers.

In the 15*th*. to Nothelmus Bishop of Canterbury, he prays him to hold the same Friendship and Correspondence with him, which he had with his Predecessor Berthwald. He earnestly requests him to send him a Copy of St. Austine's Questions to St. Gregory, and this Pope's Answers, in which he allows Kindred in the third Degree to marry. He desires him to examine carefully, whether these Answers be St. Gregory's, because they are not in the Library of the Roman Church. He asks his Opinion about a Person who had married a Widow, to whose Daughter he had been Godfather, and prays him to tell him, if he had met with any Decree about it in the Canons, or Holy Fathers. Lastly, he desires him to tell him, in what Year of Jesus Christ the Persons, whom St. Gregory sent to preach the Gospel in England, arrived there.

The 17*th*. is sent to certain Monks, who had lost their Abbot. In it he names another to them, and gives them several Directions about a Monastick Life. He also nominates a Priest, and a Deacon, who should have the Care of Divine Service, and preach the Word of God to the Brotherhood.

The 18*th*. contains some special Tokens of Christian Friendship and Love to the Archdeacon, to whom it is written.

The 19*th*. is a Letter sent in the Name of Boniface, and five other Bishops, to Ethelbald, or Ethelwald, King of the Mercians. Having commended this Prince for his Virtues, particularly for his Liberality to the Poor, and his Justice; they tell him with a great deal of Freedom, that they have heard, that he lives in Incontinence, and shew him the enormous Nature of that Crime. They reprove him also for depriving certain Monasteries of their Privileges and Revenues, and account it worthy of the Name of the great Sin of Sacrilege. They complain also, that his Magistrates and Justices imposed Taxes upon the Monks and Clergy; they say, that the Churches of England had enjoyed their Privileges from the Coming of Austine, to the Reign of Ethelred King of the Mercians, and Osred King of * the Bernicians; that these two Kings had committed very great Sins in abusing and wronging the Monks, and destroying their Monasteries, but had been punished for their Impiety, and died most miserably. They exhort him not to follow their Example, and in the Conclusion, lay before his Eyes the Shortness of this Life, and the Torments which attend Sinners in another.

[* Of Northumberland rather, for Bernicia and Deira, which had been two Kingdoms, were united by Oswy, and so made the Kingdom of Northumberland a little before Osred reigned.]

The 20*th*. Letter is to an Abbess, who had laid down the Government of her Nunnery, that she might live a more peaceable and quiet Life. She had desired his Advice, whether she should undertake a Journey to Rome. He doth not dissuade her from it, but advises her to stay, till the Disturbances in Italy were over.

In the 21*st*. he writes to the Abbess Eatburg the Visions which a certain Person had seen, who thought, that his Soul was separated from his Body for a time. He imagined himself to be taken up into Heaven, and from thence to behold evidently all that passed in this World, and in the other; to hear the Angels and Devils disputing about the State of the Souls, which were come out of the World; that the Sins which they had committed, stood up to accuse them, but the few Virtues, which they had practised, appeared in their Defence; that he had seen Pits of Fire, in the Bottom of which were the Souls condemned to eternal Flames, and at the Mouths were those, who should one Day be delivered from their Punishments; that he had seen Paradise, and the way that the Souls of just Men go thither, when they depart out of the World; that some fall into a River of Fire, as they pass, which throughly purges them, who have smaller Sins to expiate: Lastly, that he saw the Storms which the Devils raised upon Earth, and the Sins into which they plunged Men.

The following Letters of Boniface are Letters of Compliment, Thanks, or private Matters.

The 32*d*. is a Letter of Recommendation written by Charles Martel, [Comptroller of the Houshold to Chilperick King of France, and Father of Pepin the next King.] in Favour of Boniface.

The next are several Letters written to Boniface, or Adelm.

The 44*th*. is a Letter of Adelm to * King Geruntius, against some particular Customs in Ireland, concerning the Shaving of Clergymen, and the Celebration of Easter.

[* Britannorum Corpubiensium Rex, Uff.]

Boniface of Mentz.

After this come several Letters written by Lullus, the Scholar of St. Boniface, who succeeded him, and by other Englishmen.

In the 62*d*. Lullus ordains a Week of Abstinence, and two Days of Fasting, to obtain fair Weather.

The 70*th*. is a Letter of Cuthbert Archbishop of Canterbury, and his Synod, written to Lullus, and to the Christians of Germany, after the Death of Boniface. In it he shews the respect they had for the Memory of Boniface, and assures him, that they determine to celebrate his Festival, and take him for their Patron with St. Gregory and St. Austine, the Apostle of England. They exhort the Bishops of Germany to discharge their Ministry with Vigilance and Sanctity, and pray them to offer the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass for them, promising to do the same on their part.

In the 87*th*. Megingod Bishop of Wirtemberg, consults Lullus about the inseparable Conjunction made by Marriage, and observes the different Opinions of the Fathers about it.

The 91*st*. is Boniface's, and is directed to Pope Stephen. He desires him to continue the same Friendship and Protection to him, which his Predecessors had granted him; he promises for his part to continue his Labours, and always bear the same respect for the Holy See. He submits to his Judgment and Correction all that he hath said or done; he excuses himself, that he had not written to him so long, because he had been busie in repairing the Churches, which the barbarous People had pillaged and burnt.

The 92*d*. is also Boniface's, it is directed to Fulredus a Priest, to be presented to King Pepin, as a Petition from Boniface, that after his Death he would yield his Protection to his Scholars, and the Churches erected by him, and settle Lullus in his place to preach the Gospel to the Infidels, and govern the Churches.

The three next are but short Notes written to Lullus.

The 96*th*. is King Pepin's Letter to him, wherein he tells him, that every Bishop should often and devoutly repeat the Litanies without Fasting, to give God Thanks for the Plenty he hath given them.

The 97*th*. is a Letter written by Boniface to Pope Stephen, in which he consults him about the Contest between the Bishop of Utrecht and the Bishop of Cologne. St. * Wilbrod was ordained Bishop by Pope Sergius, and appointed to preach the Gospel in Frisia, where having converted many, he erected his See at Utrecht by the Order of Carloman; but the Bishop of Cologne contended, that that City belonged to his Bishoprick, because from the time of Dagobert, that Castle had been annexed to the Bishoprick of Cologne, upon the account of preaching the Gospel to the Frisians. He adds, that this Bishop having not performed the Condition, he had forfeited his Right, and that this City ought to be a Bishop's Seat dependant upon the Holy See. He prays him to tell him what he ought to do, and send him a Copy of Sergius's Letter, that he might convince the Bishop of Cologne.

[* Or Wilbrord.]

The 100*th*. Letter is Lullus's, who wrote to the Pope against the Priest Euredus, who would not be subject to his Jurisdiction.

The 105*th*. is Boniface's, wherein he imparts to Cuthbert Archbishop of Canterbury the Canons made in his Synod. He tells him, that they made a Confession of the Faith of the Church, owned an Union, and Subjection to the Roman Church, would yield Obedience to St. Peter and his Vicar, and that they have ordained, that Synods should be called every Year; that they should require the Palls for Metropolitans of the Holy See; that they would follow the Commands of St. Peter; that Metropolitans, who have received the Pall, should observe the Behaviour of the Bishops; that Bishops should neither keep hunting-Dogs, nor Hawks; that the Priests should visit all their Charge in Lent, and give the Bishop an Account of their Conversation; that Bishops should visit their Dioces every Year; that Clergymen should not wear Laymens Habit, nor bear Arms; that Metropolitans should judge their Suffragan Bishops in their Synod; and the Bishops shall bring to this Synod all Persons, which they cannot reform, who shall be subject to their Metropolitans, and they to the Bishop of Rome. The remaining part of it is an Exhortation to Metropolitans to discharge the Functions of their Ministry with Vigilance, and die rather than do any thing contrary to the sacred Laws of the Church. About the End, he tells Cuthbert, that it were convenient to restrain the Women, and Virgins of England from going in such Numbers to Rome, because the greatest part of them were debauched, and caused great Scandal in the whole Church; for there is scarce a City, saith he, in Lombardy or France, where there are not some English Women of a wicked Life.

Boniface of Mentz.

The 108*th*. Letter is a Copy of those Letters, which a Bishop used to send to the Religious Persons of his Dioces to recommend the Dead to their Prayers.

The 107*th*, 115*th*, and 117*th*. Letters are Petitions to the Emperors to oppose Swearing, and to desire some Favour.

The last is in the Name of the Church of Mentz, which desired her Bishop.

The following Letters are no part of this Collection, being Letters of the Popes to Boniface, and the Acts of the Council of Rome against Adelbert, held under Pope Zachary, of which we shall speak in another Place.

The Style of Boniface's Letters is harsh, and barbarous, but they are good Sense. He was very well acquainted with the Rules of Church-Discipline, he was wholly devoted to the Holy See, he had much Sincerity, and an ardent Zeal for the Reformation of Manners, especially of the Clergy, and for the Conversion of Infidels. Some attribute to him the Life of St. Livinus, which F. Mabillon thinks to belong to a more ancient Author. His Treatise of the Unity of of the Faith is not come to us. F. Dacherius hath published in the 10*th* Volume of his Spicilegium, a Piece, intituled, The Statutes of Boniface of Mentz, which contains several Rules for managing the Functions and Life of Priests, with a Catalogue of the Festivals; but this Book cannot be the Treatise of the Unity of Faith, as some have affirmed: And there is some Ground to doubt whether it really belongs to Boniface of Mentz; and so much the more, because he there addresseth himself to the Emperor, whereas in Boniface's time there was no Emperor in Germany.

GREGORY II.

Gregory II.

[* 28 Of April, in 715. Dr. Cave.]

Gregory the second of that Name was raised to the See of Rome * the 24*th*. Day of May, in the Year 714. and governed that Church 16 Years, eight Months, and some Days. We have several of this Pope's Letters.

The 1*st*. dated in 718, is directed to Boniface the Priest, to whom he gave permission to preach the Faith among the Infidels of Germany. To this is annexed the Form of the Oath, which Boniface swore to the Pope at his Ordination in the Year 722. or 723.

The 2*d*. Letter is addressed to Charles Martel, Comptroller of the King's Houshould, to recommend Boniface to him. Upon which this Prince granted him Letters of Protection, which are among Gregory's.

The 3*d*. is also a Letter of Recommendation for Boniface, directed to all Bishops, Priests, Deacons, Lords, Earls, and in general to all Christians.

The 4*th*. is to the People, over whom he was constituted Bishop. 'Tis in the ordinary Form which is in the Diurnus.

The 5*th*. is directed to the great Lords of that Country.

The 6*th*. is to all People.

The 7*th*. is to the whole Nation of the East-Saxons inhabiting Germany.

The 8*th*. which bears Date 725. is directed to Boniface, to congratulate the Progress he had made in converting the Infidels.

The 9*th*, 11*th*, and 12*th*. respect the Controversie about Images, and are set down in the Acts of the 7*th*. Council, where we shall have a fit Opportunity to speak of them.

The 10*th*. is addressed to Ursus Duke of Venice, whom he exhorts to joyn himself with the Exarch in recovering the City of Ravenna from the Lombards, and putting it under the Government of the Emperors Leo and Constantine again.

Gregory II.

The 13*th*. is a Decretal Epistle, in which he answers several Questions put to him by Boniface.

In the 1*st*. Article about the Degrees of Consanguinity, within which it is forbidden to marry, he says, that it were to be hoped that no Persons nearly related would contract Marriage, but to yield a little to the Barbarity of that Nation, they must content themselves to prohibit Marriages between Persons related in the fourth Degree.

In the 2*d*. he permits an Husband, whose Wife is unable to perform conjugal Duties, to marry another.

In the 3*d*. he orders, that a Priest accused of any great Crime, shall clear himself by Oath, if there be no Witnesses for him.

In the 4*th*. he forbids, that Confirmation performed by a Bishop shall be repeated.

The 5*th*. commands, that there shall be only one Chalice set upon the Altar at the Celebration of Mass.

In the 6*th*. he uses St. Paul's Words to resolve the Question, Whether it be lawful to eat Meats offered unto Idols?

In the 7*th*. he declares, that it is not lawful for Children, whose Kindred have put them into the Monasteries before the Age of 14 Years, to go out of them to lead a secular Life.

In the 8*th*. he forbids to re-baptize those, who have been once baptized in the Name of the Trinity, altho' it were by wicked Priests.

In the 9*th*. he will have those Children baptized, of whom there is no clear Proof, that they have ever been so already.

In the 10*th*. he orders, that Lepers shall not be deprived of Communion.

In

Gregory II.

In the 11*th.* he forbids flying, when the Plague, or any other contagious Diſeaſe is in a Monaſtery, or in the Church.

In the laſt, he commands Boniface to reprove diſorderly Prieſts and Biſhops, but would not have him to refuſe to talk, or eat with them.

This Letter is quoted by Gratian under the Name of Gregory, but it is Gregory II, and 'twas dated the 10*th.* Year of the Emperor Leo, the 10*th.* Indiction, which is Anno 726 of the Vulgar Æra, or common Account.

The 14*th.* Letter of this Pope is directed to Serenus Biſhop of Aquileia, and in it he exhorts him not to invade the Rights of the Patriarch of Grado.

In the laſt to this Patriarch he tells him, what a ſtrict Prohibition he had laid upon the Biſhop of Aquileia.

Beſides theſe Letters we have a Memoir, which this Pope gave to the Biſhop Martinian, the Prieſt George, and the Sub-Deacon Dorotheus, whom he ſent into Bavaria, in which he gives them Inſtructions, what they ſhould do in that Country for the Eſtabliſhment of the Churches, for the Ordinations of Biſhops, and Regulation of Diſcipline. He adviſes them to allow of thoſe Biſhops who hold the Faith of the Church, and have been canonically ordained; to permit them to celebrate Divine Service according to the Roman Way; but to put out thoſe, whoſe Faith is ſuſpected, or Ordination faulty; to model the Divine Service according to the Uſage of the Church of Rome; to conſtitute in the Provinces a ſufficient Number of Biſhops, with an Archbiſhop; to ſet Bounds to Provinces and Dioceſes; to enjoyn the Biſhops not to ordain ſuch as have been twice married, nor ignorant, nor lame Men, nor ſuch as have done publick Penance, nor Slaves, nor Servants, nor Africans; to have a ſpecial Care of the Church's Revenues, and divide them into four Parts, one for himſelf, another for the Clergy, a third for the Poor and Strangers, and a fourth for the Building; to ordain only in the Ember-weeks; to adminiſter Baptiſm at Eaſter and Whitſuntide only, unleſs in caſe of Neceſſity; to obſerve the Conſtitutions of the Church of Rome; not to ſuffer any Man to have more Wives than one, nor to marry his Niece; to eſteem Virginity more highly than Marriage; to account no Meats unclean, but ſuch as are offered to Idols; to avoid all ſorts of Superſtition; to teach, that it is not lawful to faſt upon Sunday, nor upon Chriſtmas, Epiphany, nor Aſcenſion-Days; not to receive the Offerings of ſuch as are at Enmity, till they are reconciled; to do Penance for daily Faults; to inſtruct the People concerning a Reſurrection and a Judgment. This Memoir is dated Anno 715. [This Pope's Epiſtles are extant in the Councils, Tom. 6. P. 1437.]

Gregory II.

GREGORY III.

Gregory III.

Gregory the third of that Name, was choſen in the Year 731. and ſate 10 Years and ſome Months in the See of Rome. His firſt Letter is directed to Boniface, who was ordained Biſhop of the Germans by his Predeceſſor. He granted him the Right of bearing the Pall, promiſes him to erect new Biſhopricks in Germany, according as the Number of Chriſtians ſhall multiply. He aſſures him, that he had not abſolved a certain Prieſt who bragged, that he had received Abſolution from him; and anſwers ſome Queſtions, which Boniface had propounded to him.

In the 1*ſt.* Article he orders, that they ſhall be baptized again in the Name of the Trinity, who have been baptized by the Heathens.

In the 2*d.* he forbids to eat the Fleſh of a wild Horſe.

In the 3*d.* he commands to offer the Sacrifice for all that died in the Orthodox Faith.

The 4*th.* ordains, that thoſe who have been baptized by a Prieſt that hath ſacrificed to Jupiter, or eaten Meats offered to Idols, ſhall be re-baptized.

The 5*th.* forbids Marriage to the ſeventh Generation.

The 6*th.* bids him to hinder a Widower to marry above twice.

The 7*th.* impoſeth Penance for their whole Life upon ſuch as murder their Father, their Mother, their Brother, or their Siſter, and preſcribes them for Penance to abſtain from Wine, and Fleſh-meats, and to faſt three Days in the Week.

The 8*th.* forbids to ſell Slaves to the Heathens.

The 9*th.* enjoyns him, when he ordains a Biſhop to ſummon two or three Biſhops to be preſent at the Ordination.

The 2*d.* is a Letter of Recommendation directed to all Biſhops, Prieſts and Abbots, given to Boniface when he returned into Germany.

Gregory III.

The 3*d.* is a Letter compoſed on purpoſe for the ſame Perſon, directed to the Germans, whom he commands to obey Boniface, and leave their heatheniſh Ceremonies.

The 4*th.* is directed to the Biſhops of Bavaria and Germany, whom he enjoyns to come to thoſe Councils, which Boniface ſhall call.

The 5*th.* is directed to Charles Martel, of whom he deſires Aſſiſtance againſt the Lombards. 'Tis very urgent, and yet withal very ſubmiſſive.

The 6*th.* is to the ſame Perſon about the ſame Buſineſs.

The 7*th.* is to Boniface, he approves of the Diviſion which he had made of Bavaria into four Biſhopricks. He tells him that he ought to ordain thoſe Prieſts, who have exerciſed their Miniſtry in that Country, Biſhops, altho' he can't find out by whom they were ordained, if they be orthodox, and of good Converſation. He will not have ſuch Perſons to be re-baptized, who have been baptized already in the Name of the Trinity, altho' thro' Error the Words were not well pronounced, but orders them to be contented to confirm them by Impoſition of Hands, and by anointing with the Chriſm. He allows him to reprove and correct Wilo, if he act contrary to the Diſcipline of the Church. He orders him to call a Council, and not to continue long in one Place, but to travel for the Converſion of all the Country. This Letter is dated Octob. 27. Indiction 8. which is the year 739 of the Vulgar Æra.

To theſe Letters is joyned a Collection of Canons, taken out of the Penitentials, which ſeems to be a later Compoſure, than of Gregory III. and which I do not believe to be the Works of this Pope; [yet both are printed together under his Name in the Councils, Tom. 6. Pag. 1468.]

ZACHARY Biſhop of Rome.

Zachary.

POpe Zachary was raiſed to the Holy See in the Year 741. He was a Greek, if we may believe the Authors of the Popes Lives, and had the Reputation of being moſt mild and courteous, and yet at the ſame time very valiant and courageous. At the beginning of his Popedom, Italy was in great Troubles, Luitprandus, King of the Lombards, being at War with Thraſimond Duke of Spoletum, and the Romans, who aſſiſted the latter. Zachary made Peace between the Romans, and the King of the Lombards, upon condition that he ſhould reſtore four Cities, which he had taken from them; and ſo poor Thraſimond being forſaken, was forced to give over his Oppoſition. But the Lombard having obtained his Deſign, was not careful to perform his Promiſe, but Zachary went to him, obliged him to reſtore the Cities to the Romans, and make a Peace with him. This very Pope being conſulted by the French, whether they ſhould acknowledge Pepin for their King, who had all the Authority already, and was enſtated in the Government of the Realm, or Chilperic, who indeed had the Name of King, but was not capable of a Buſineſs of that Weight; anſwered in favour of Pepin, of whoſe Protection the Romans and Popes had then great need, having ſo potent an Enemy near at hand, as the King of the Lombards was.

Altho' theſe Matters were of very great Conſequence, yet thoſe, which are ſpoken of moſt in Zachary's Letters, concern the Churches newly founded in Germany by Boniface, who conſulted him with much Reſpect.

Zachary.

The firſt is an Anſwer to this Biſhop's Queſtions, contained in the foregoing Letter. They both begin with Compliments. Boniface tells the Pope, how great Veneration he had for the Holy See; and the Pope aſſures him, that he was extremely glad at the Receipt of his Letters, by which he was informed, that the Church of Jeſus Chriſt was every day increaſed by his Preaching. Boniface tells him, that he had ordained three Biſhops in Germany, and divided the Province into three Dioceſes; that he had placed one Biſhop in the Caſtle of Wirtemberg, another in the City of Buraburg, and the third at Erford. He prays him to confirm what he had done, and to make theſe three Places into Biſhops Sees.

Zachary returns an Anſwer to this Article, that he approved what Boniface had done, and did accordingly make thoſe three Places Biſhopricks. Nevertheleſs he deſires him to ſee, whether theſe Places are conſiderable enough to place Biſhops in, becauſe the Canons forbid to place them in Villages or ſmall Towns, leſt the Dignity of Biſhops be thereby rendred vile and contemptible.

Boniface, in the ſecond Article of his Letter, informs Zachary, that Carloman, a French Duke, had deſired him to hold a Council in his Kingdom, to reſtore the Diſcipline, which was almoſt loſt becauſe there had not been a Synod held in France for above fourſcore years; and the Biſhopricks and Archbiſhopricks by that means were fallen into the hands of Laymen, whoſe Lives were very ſcandalous, and diſorderly. He deſires leave of Zachary to hold a Council, and this Pope grants him his Requeſt in his Anſwer.

Zachary. In the third Article he deſires to know what he ſhould do with thoſe Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons, who lived in many Diſorders and Debaucheries. Zachary anſwers him, that he ought not to ſuffer them to perform the Functions and Offices that belong to their Orders and Degrees.

In the 4th. Article, Boniface deſires the Pope to appoint him a Succeſſor, or give him leave to chuſe one. The Pope denieth him this Requeſt, it being contrary to the Canons to appoint a Succeſſor to a Biſhop while he is alive: Yet he grants him power to nominate one at the point of Death.

In the 5th. he enquireth, whether it be true, that one of his Country had obtained a Diſpenſation from [Gregory III.] Zachary's Predeceſſor, to marry his Uncle's Widow, which had been his Cozen-German's Wife, and had received the Veil. The Pope anſwers him, that his Predeceſſor did not grant ſuch a Licence, becauſe the Holy See allows nothing contrary to the Conſtitutions of the Councils, and the Holy Fathers.

In the 6th. he asks him, whether it be true, That on New-Years Day Heatheniſh Dances and Ceremonies are practiſed in Rome. The Pope anſwers, That there is no more any ſuch practice there, and that that deteſtable cuſtom was aboliſhed by St. Gregory.

In the 7th. he ſays, that ſome French Biſhops, who had been Adulterers or Fornicators, after they had made a Journey to Rome, pretended, that the Pope had given them Power to perform their Offices; but he maintained the contrary, becauſe the Holy See would do nothing againſt the Canons. The Pope confirms him in this Opinion, and commands him not to believe them, but to puniſh them according to the Severity of the Canons. He adds, that he hath ſent three Letters of Confirmation to the three Biſhops conſtituted by Boniface; and alſo that he hath written to Carloman, to exhort him to a ſpeedy Execution of his deſign. This Letter is dated on the 11th. Indiction, that is, in the Year 742.

The ſecond Letter of Zachary is a Copy of the Letter written to the three Biſhops inſtituted by Boniface. By the Authority of the Holy See he confirms the Inſtitution of their Sees. He declares, that no body but the Apoſtolick Vicar, ſhall ordain Biſhops for thoſe Sees; and prohibits encroaching upon their Juriſdiction or Territory.

The third Letter of Zachary is that which he ſent to the French Biſhops, to congratulate them for endeavouring the re-eſtabliſhment of Church-Diſcipline, and the Reformation of the Manners of the Clergy and to exhort them to do it effectually, and as becomes Holy Biſhops.

By the 4th. Letter directed to Boniface, Zachary gives the Pall to the three Metropolitans inſtituted by Boniface; Then he approves the Sentence which Boniface had paſſed againſt two French Men who had lived a Profane and Diſorderly Life. This Letter is dated in June, in the 12th. Indiction, that is, in the Year 743.

In the next Letter, directed to the ſame Perſon, he wonders, that Boniface having at firſt deſired of him the Pall for the three Metropolitans, he begg'd it then but for one. He complains, that he ſuſpected him guilty of Simony. He commends him for giving no credit to a Biſhop of Bavaria, who did falſly affirm himſelf to have been ordained by the Pope. He exhorts him to hinder all them that do not live according to the Canons, from performing the Prieſtly Functions. He confirms him in the Right, granted him by his Predeceſſor, to preach in Bavaria. This Letter is dated in the year 745.

In the 6th. Letter, directed alſo to Boniface, Zachary anſwers a Queſtion propounded to him by * two Perſons of Piety of Bavaria, about the Validity of Baptiſm, Adminiſtred by a Prieſt, who not underſtanding Latin, inſtead of ſaying, In Nomine Patris, Filii, & Spiritus Sancti, had ſaid, In Nomina Patria, & Filia, & Spiritu Sancta. Zachary anſwers, that if that Prieſt did not deſign to introduce an Error or Hereſie, but committed this fault meerly out of Ignorance of the Latin Tongue, they ought not re-baptize thoſe whom he hath baptized, but only conſecrate them by the Impoſition of Hands.

[Virgilius & Sidonius. ut Uſſ. in Ep. Hib. Syll.*]

The 7th. Letter to Pepin Conſtable of France, and to the French Biſhops or Lords, is only a Collection of ſeveral Ancient Canons, touching divers Articles of Diſcipline, about which he had been conſulted by Ardobanius a Presbyter ſent from Pepin.

In the 8th. Letter he acquaints Boniface, that he hath ſent thoſe Canons, and enjoyns him to examine anew the Matter of the three French Biſhops, and to ſend them to Rome, in caſe they maintain their own Innocency. This is dated in January in the Year 747.

The 9th. Letter, according to the date, was ſent the Year before. Zachary commends Boniface's Zeal, exhorts him to continue in it, comforts him concerning the Irruption of the Barbarians into the Countries converted by him. He approves what he had done in the Synod held in France, and was mightily pleaſed that they had pitched upon a City to be made a Metropolis, that Boniface might be ſettled there. He blames them that oppoſed this deſign, and commends the French Princes for having countenanced it. He confirms his Sentence againſt diſorderly Biſhops. He aſſures him, that he ought not to believe thoſe that boaſt of being eſtabliſhed by the Holy See. He acquaints him, that the Condemnation of Adalbert and Clement was approved in a Synod held at Rome. He ſaith, he will deal with another Seducer, named Geolebius who was in his Journey to Rome, as he deſerves. He will have him to hold yearly a Council in France. He confirms him in the Right of a Metropolitan, which he annexeth to the City of Cologne.

Zachary.

The 10th. Letter is directed to Boniface. He ſays that they ought to re-baptize thoſe who have not been baptized in the Name of the three Perſons of the Trinity; That Sacrilegious, Impure, or Heretical Prieſts or Deacons are to be baniſhed into Monaſteries, and put to Penance. He rejects the Error of one * Sampſon a Presbyter of Scotland; affirming, that a Man might be made a Chriſtian, without being baptized in the Name of the Trinity, only by the Biſhops Impoſition of Hands. He approves a Writing of Boniface, about the Unity of the Faith, and the Apoſtolick Doctrine, directed to all Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons; He refuſes to ſend another Perſon to hold Councils in France; He approves alſo the Profeſſion of Faith, ſent to him by the French Biſhops. He writes againſt Virgilius, who moleſted Boniface, aſſuring him, That he will write to the Duke of Bavaria, to ſend him to him, that he may judge him. Laſtly, He anſwers Boniface's laſt Letter, that ſeeing the French did not keep their Promiſe, to make Cologne a Metropolis in reſpect to him, he may dwell at Mentz, and gives him leave to chuſe a fit Perſon to ſucceed him. This Letter is dated May, 748.

[So much of this Letter as concerns* Sampſon and Virgilius is printed in Uſſ. Ep. Syll. p. 34.]

The 11th. Letter of Zachary is directed to ſome French and German Biſhops; He congratulates their Union among themſelves and with the Holy See, and exhorts them to continue their labour for the Church, joyning with Boniface, Vicar of the Holy See.

The 12th Letter is to Boniface. He commends his Zeal and Piety. He likes well his Separation from the Erring and Diſorderly Biſhops. He ſays, that if the French Biſhops will receive the Pall, and perform their Promiſes, they will deſerve Praiſe; That what he received freely, he gives freely. He grants a Privilege to the Monaſtery of the Benedictines founded by Boniface in a Solitude of Germany. Then he anſwers ſeveral Queſtions propoſed to him in a Memoir, which Lullus, ſent by Boniface, preſented to him. This is the Sum of theſe Anſwers. 1. That it is Unlawful to eat Wild Beaſts, yea Hares. 2. That on the Thurſday before Eaſter, when the Holy Chriſm is conſecrated, they ought to kindle three great Lamps full of Oyl, which may laſt till Holy Saturday, and to kindle at thoſe Lamps the Paſchal Tapers, uſed at the Baptiſmal Fonts. 3. That thoſe that have the Falling-Sickneſs, if they have it from their Birth, or from their Parents, ſhould be baniſhed from the Towns; but if it happens to them accidentally, they ought to endeavour to cure them; That in the mean while they are not to communicate, but after all the reſt of the Congregation. 4. He approves the uſage of Waſhing one anothers Feet on Holy Thurſday before Eaſter. 5. He reproves ſome certain Forms of Bleſſings uſed among the French. 6. He ſays, it were to be wiſhed, that Presbyters were 30 Years old [before their Ordination,] yet, if need be, they may be ordained at 25. 7. He informs him, that Milo, who had been put in Rigobert's place at Rheims, ſhould do well to quit that Biſhoprick. 8. He ſays, That he hath found no Decree about the time in which they ought to eat Beacon; yet he does not think, that they ought to eat it before it be dryed in the Smoke, or dreſſed at the Fire, and if they will eat of it without Dreſſing, they muſt ſtay ſtill after Eaſter. 9. He approves the Condemnation of a Biſhop who bore Arms, and committed Fornications. 10. He ſays, That Ordinations ought to be celebrated at lawful times: Yet he excuſes Boniface for performing them at other times out of Zeal. 11. He informs him, That he ought not to make any Scruple of taking a Penny a Houſe for the Church Revenues. 12. He enjoyns him to put to Penance, and to depoſe thoſe Presbyters, who have been ordained, being only Laicks, and involved in Criminal Matters, if their Crime comes afterward to be diſcovered. 13. He thinks one may fly to avoid Perſecution, when it is fierce. 14. He forbids Communicating with an Excommunicated Perſon who deſires not Abſolution. 15. He thinks that a Tribute may be taken of the Sclavonians who come to live in Chriſtian Countries. 16. Laſtly, He tells him, that he hath marked in Isidor's Volume, in what places they are to make the ſign of the Croſs in the Canon of the Maſs. This Letter is dated November 751.

In the 13th Letter, written a few days after, he praiſeth the unwearied labour of Boniface, who had for 25 years together, preached the Goſpel in Germany, and holden Councils in France. He ſays, it is juſt he ſhould have a Cathedral Church, and for that purpoſe, he confirms the Right of Metropolitan to him and his Succeſſors in the Church of Mentz, and gives him for Suffragans the Biſhops of Tongres, Cologne, Worms, Spire, Utrecht, and all the Countries of Germany.

The

Zachary.

The 14*th*. Letter of Zachary is the Privilege granted * to the Monaſtery of Fulda, founded by Boniface, which imports, that this Monaſtery ſhall be ſubject to the Holy See only; and that no Perſon ſhall ſay Maſs, or exerciſe any Juriſdiction there, unleſs invited by the Abbot.

[* The Name was, The Monaſtery of Our Saviour; but hath been in after Ages called, The Monaſtery of Fulda, becauſe it was built in the City and near the River of the ſame Name, Anno. 742. by the care of Boniface, but charge of Charles the Great and Pepin, Kings of France.]

There is alſo a Letter of Boniface to Griphon, Pepin's Brother, wherein he recommends to him ſome Monks of Turingia, to protect them againſt the Pagans.

The 15*th*. Letter of Zachary is directed to the Biſhops of France. He ſent it by ſome Monks, or Clerks, who were ſent by Optatus Abbot of Mount Caſſin, and from Carloman, to procure Peace between Griphon and Pepin, and to demand a ſecond time St. Benedict's Body, which they pretended had been ſtolen away from Mount Caſſin. He exhorts the French Biſhops to maintain the Juſtice of their Demand.

Zachary.

In the 16*th*. he exhorts the French to ſuffer no Eccleſiaſtical Perſon guilty of Murder or Fornication; and adviſes them to aſſemble Councils every Year, to reſtore the Diſcipline.

The 17*th*. Letter is ſuppoſititious, at leaſt the Title and Date of it are falſe; for it is directed to Auſtrebert Biſhop of Vienna, and there was no Archbiſhop of that Name in that Church under Zachary's Pontificate; and it is dated the 7*th*. of March, of the firſt Year of Conſtantine, which is the Year 741, of the Vulgar Æra; at which time Zachary was not Pope.

The 18*th*. is not more certain: 'Tis a Prohibition ſomewhat ill written, that a certain Perſon ſhould not marry his Father's God-Daughter, becauſe of the Spiritual Conſanguinity.

[Theſe Epiſtles are all of them extant in Tom. 8. of the Councils, p. 1498.]

ANDREAS CRETENSIS.

Andreas Cretenſis.

ANDREW, born at Damaſcus having finiſhed his firſt Courſe of Studies in his own Country, came to * Jeruſalem towards the year 730, where he embraced a Monaſtick Life, and was at the 6*th*. Council in his Patriarch Theodorus's ſtead, and there encountred the Monothelites. He was detained at Conſtantinople, and put among the Clergy of that Church; he was ordained Deacon, and had the care of the Education of Orphans committed to him. A little after, he was ordained Archbiſhop of Creet; he governed this Church many years, and died at Mitilene, in the beginning of the eighth Century of the Church.

[* In this Story of Andreas Cretenſis, there is certainly a great Miſtake; for how could he come to Jeruſalem in 730, and become a Monk, and in that Quality repreſent his Patriarch Theodorus at the ſixth General Council, which was 50 Years before, viz. in 680. His coming to Jeruſalem ought to be placed doubtleſs towards the year 630, and then his Death will fall towards the beginning of the 7*th*. Century, according to the Calculation of Dr. Cave, Caſ. Oudin, and the beſt Chronologers.]

He compoſed a great number of Sermons, and particularly Panegyricks. Father Combefis collected all that he could meet with in the Libraries, and printed them in Greek and Latin [at Paris] in 1644. [With Notes, and an Index to explain the Words.] This Collection contains 17 of them.

The firſt is upon the Virgin's Nativity: He extols this Feſtival, which he looks upon as the Original and Principal of all the Feaſts of the New-Law. He there ſpeaks of Joachim and Anne, of the Preſentation of the Virgin in the Temple.

The 2*d*. is upon the Annunciation. In it he maketh ſeveral Divine Reflections upon the Angel's words.

The 3*d*. is on the Circumciſion, and upon St. Baſil. He follows Africanus's Opinion about Joſeph's Anceſtors; and ſays, he was Jacob's Natural Son, and Heli's according to the Law. He ſpeaks of the Names of Immanuel and Jeſus, and makes ſome Myſtical and Moral Obſervations upon the 8*th*. Day. Then he paſſes to the Praiſes of St. Baſil, in the end whereof, he maketh an excellent Prayer to him.

The 4*th*. is upon our Lord's Transfiguration. It contains ſeveral Allegorical Reflections upon the Circumſtances of this Miracle.

The 5*th*. is an Homily, in which he explains Lazarus's Reſurrection. He there confounds Mary, Lazarus's Siſter, with the Woman that was a Sinner.

The 6*th*. is upon Palm-Sunday.

The two next upon the Exaltation of the Croſs.

The three following are upon the Virgin's Death. In it he deſcribes ſeveral miraculous Circumſtances of her Death, and particularly her triumphant Aſcenſion into Heaven in Body and Soul.

Andreas Cretenſis.

The 12*th*. is a Panegyrick upon Titus, firſt Biſhop of Crete.

The 13*th*. is upon St. George, whoſe Martyrdom he relates.

The 14*th*. is a Panegyrick upon St. Nicholas Biſhop of Myra: He ſays nothing of his Life in particular, but only that he encountred the Arians; that he preſerved Lycia from Famine, and converted an Heretick Biſhop.

The 15*th*. contains the Praiſe, the Life and Miracles of a certain Monk, named Patapius.

The 16*th*. which is another Panegyrick upon Patapius, is not Andrew's of Crete, but ſome of his Scholars; who relates, how that holy Hermit appeared to Andrew of Crete, and what he had told him of his Life.

The 17*th*. contains excellent Inſtructions about the Miſeries and uncertainty of human Life.

F. Combefis, in his Addition to the Bibliotheca Patrum, attributes alſo to Andrew of Crete two Homilies; the one upon the Virgin's Nativity, which had been publiſhed by Schottus, under the Name of German Biſhop of Conſtantinople. Allatius hath attributed it to Gregory Biſhop of Nicomedia; and it is found in ſome Manuſcripts under St. John Damaſcene's Name. But F. Combefis having ſeen it in a Manuſcript, under Andrew of Crete's Name, believes it rather to be his than the other's, becauſe of a great number of compound Words commonly uſed by Andrew of Crete. The ſecond is a Sermon upon the Beheading of St. John Baptiſt, already publiſhed by Lipomannus.

They attribute to this Archbiſhop Andrew a great number of Odes, Pieces in Proſe, upon the Feſtivals of the Year, which F. Combefis hath joyned to his Homilies. He does alſo aſcribe to him ſome Iambick Verſes, directed to Agatho the Deacon, which are at the end of the Letter of this latter, in the ſecond Volume of the Addition to the Bibliotheca Patrum. Some believe, that this Archbiſhop of Creet is alſo the Author of the Commentary on the Revelation, bearing the Name of Andrew of Cæſarea: Which maketh others think, that he was tranſlated from the Archbiſhoprick of Crete, to that of Cæſarea in Cappadocia. But there is no need to ſuppoſe this groundleſs Tranſlation: For, though we ſhould ſuppoſe this Work to be Andrew's of Crete, which is uncertain, Cæſarea might perhaps have been put for Crete. This Author's Sermons are not ſo contemptible, as the moſt part of thoſe of the modern Greeks; they are full of Wit, Learning and Morality, and want not Eloquence nor Greatneſs: His Diſcourſe abounds with compound and hard Words; his Narrations are plain, his Reflections juſt, his Praiſes vehement, his Figures natural, and his Inſtructions ſolid.

ANASTASIUS.

Anaſtaſius

ANaſtaſius, Abbot of the Monaſtery of St. Euthemius in Paleſtine, flouriſhed about the year 740. St. John Damaſcene commends him in the beginning of his Treatiſe of the Triſagion, which he compoſed, to draw this Abbot out of the Error, which he thought him engaged in about this Point. They attribute to him a Treatiſe againſt the Jews, publiſhed in Latin in Canſius's Antiquities, and in the Bibliotheca Patrum, [Tom. 13.] but it might be ſuppoſed to be made by a more modern Author; for the Author of it ſays, that 800 years ago Chriſt's Oracles were fulfilled, that the Jews were diſperſed, and Jeruſalem deſtroyed by Veſpaſian: Which makes me think, that he lived to the ninth Century. This Author does not only bring Proofs for the Chriſtian Religion, but he anſwers the Queſtions and Objections of the Jews. The Work is imperfect: It is found in Greek in the Vatican Library, and in the Jeſuits at Rome. It is written well, and the Reaſons he alledges are pretty ſolid. He obſerves, that when Chriſtians honour Images, they do not adore the Wood, but their Reſpect refers to Chriſt and his Saints; and that they are ſo far from adoring Images, that, when they are grown old and ſpoiled, they burn them to make new ones.

EGBERT of York.

Egbert. [* Aliàs Eadbert.]

EGbert, an Englishman, Brother to * Ethbert King of Northumberland, was Archbishop of York, from 731, till about 767. The chief Work of Egbert was a Penitential, published in four Books, which are found in Manuscript in the Libraries of England. We have different Extracts of it: There is one, containing divers Canons concerning Clerks. Another composed of 35 Constitutions against divers Sins of Clerks, and other Christians. These Collections are ill contrived, and of little Authority.

There was printed in 1664 at Dublin, together with Bonifface's Letters, a Treatise about the Life of Clergymen, bearing Egbert's Name. It is made up of Questions and Answers; and the Questions are not directed to one Archbishop, but to many Bishops: 'Tis therefore a Consultation directed to a Council; but it seems to me to be much later than Egbert. The small Tract of the Remedies of Sins, ascribed to Bede, is one of the ancientest Extracts of Egbert's Penitential: All those Pieces are of no great Use. They are found in the end of the fifth Volume of the Councils of F. Labbe's Edition. Egbert.

St. JOHN DAMASCENE.

St. J. Damascene.

JOhn, firnamed Mansur [by the Arabians,] or Chrysorrhoas [from his Eloquence,] was born at Damascus, of rich and godly Parents. He was taught and brought up by Cosmas, a Monk of Jerusalem, who had been taken by the Saracens. After his Father's Decease, he succeeded him in the Place of Counsellor of State to the Prince of the Saracens. Being in that Office, he began to write in the Defence of Images; which did so highly provoke the Emperor Leo, firnamed Εἰσαυρικός, that he formed a design to destroy him by an unparallell'd piece of Treachery: He caused one to counterfeit the Hand of John Damascene, and to contrive a Letter in his Name, whereby he betrayed his Master, advising Leo to come speedily to Damascus, to take that City. This Letter he sent to the Prince of the Saracens, who, if we believe the Author of St. John Damascene's Life, caused John's Hand to be immediately cut off, and to be for many hours exposed to the sight of the People in the middle of the Town. In the evening John demanding it, joyned it to his mangled Arm; afterward having prayed to the Virgin, and thereupon going to sleep, it was found re-united to his Arm when he awoke out of his Sleep. This Miracle struck the Prince of the Saracens with Amazement, and forced him to acknowledge John's Innocency; he prayed him to continue in his Court, but John chose rather to withdraw himself from the World, and therefore betook himself into St. Sabas's Monastery at Jerusalem, where he was committed to the Care of a very severe old Monk, who imposed on him a perpetual Silence; for the breaking of which, he was turned out of his Cell by that old Man, who commanded him, for his Penance, to carry away the Filth of the Cells of the Monastery. When he had made himself ready to obey his Order, the good old man embraced him, and caused him to return. About the end of his Life, he was ordained Priest by the Patriarch of Jerusalem; but he returned immediately again into his Monastery, from whence he did valiantly oppose the Opinion of the Iconoclasts. He died towards the year 750. This Author wrote a great number of Works of all kinds: They may be divided into doctrinal, historical and moral, * heortastical, ecclesiastical and prophane. Among the doctrinal Works, we may place in the first Rank the four Books of the orthodox Faith, in which he hath comprehended the whole Substance of Divinity in a scholastical and methodical Manner.

[* Such as treat of the Festivals of the Year.]

The first Book is of the Nature, Existence, and Attributes of God, and of the three Persons of the Trinity. In all Points he agreeth with our Divines, except in the Article of the Procession of the Holy Ghost, which he believes to proceed from the Father only.

The second Book treats of the Creatures, the World, the Angels and Damons, of Heaven and Earth, and all things contained therein, of Paradise, and of Man. He teaches, that Man is composed of a Body and a Soul, that his Soul is spiritual and immortal; he distinguisheth the Faculties of it; he speaks of its Passions, Actions, Thoughts, Will, and Liberty, which he places in the Power of doing what we please. He treats also of Providence, Prescience, and Predestination, or Predetermination. He affirms, that this taketh no place in free Actions; that God permits them, but ordains them not. He concludes with Man's Fall, of which Adam's Sin was the Cause.

This leads him to the Incarnation of the Son of God, which is the Subject of his third Book. He explains this Mystery with great Exactness; he establisheth the Distinction of the Existence of the two Natures; he speaks of their Proprieties, of the Wills of Christ, and of his Free-will, which he believes to be different from ours, in that the Determination of it is without any Doubt or Deliberation preceding. He enlargeth upon the two Wills of Christ; he explains in what Sense these Expressions are to be understood. There is in Christ an incarnate Nature, a Theandrick Will, and an human Nature deified. He shews, that Jesus Christ was subject neither to Ignorance, nor to Temptation; that the Quality of Slave does not belong to him; that he increased in Knowledge and Wisdom so far forth only, as it did more appear outwardly, according as he grew into years. He proves, the human Nature did really suffer, whilst the Divinity remained impassible. He maintains, that the Divinity never ceased to be united to Christ's Soul and Body, no, not in the time of his Death. St. J. Damascene.

In the 4*th*. having discoursed of Christ's Resurrection, and examined some Questions about the Incarnation, he treats of Baptism, of the Faith, the Cross, and the Worship due to it; of the Custom of praying towards the East; of the Holy Mysteries, in which we ought not to doubt, but Christ gives us his Body and Blood * to feed us, the Bread and Wine being † changed into Christ's Body and Blood, and being but one and the same thing. He tells us, with what Purity we ought to receive such a holy Sacrament. He establisheth Mary's perpetual Virginity, both in and after the Birth, and reconciles the two Genealogies of Christ, after the same manner with Africanus. Then he proves, that Saints ought to be honoured, and their Relicks reverenced. He would also have the Images of Saints, and of Christ to be honoured, and believeth them to be very useful to remember us of them. He confesses, they do not worship the Matter whereof the Cross or the Images are made, but only that which is represented thereby. He says, that this Custom is established by an ancient Tradition, and thereupon he quotes the fabulous Story of the Image sent by Christ to King Agbarus. He takes notice, that no Image of God ought to be made. He maketh a Catalogue of the Sacred Books of the Old Testament, agreeable to the Canon of the Hebrews. To the Books of the New, he adds the Canons of the Apostles, which he thinks to have been collected by St. Clemens. Having treated of all these things, he comes again to some Questions he had forgotten. He explains, how many ways they speak of Christ. He proves, God is not the Author of Sins, and that there is but one Principle of all things. He renders a Reason, why God created some Men, who would sin, and not repent. He shews what's the Law of Sin, and the Law of Grace. He gives some Reasons of the Observation of the Sabbath, and Circumcision. He extols the State of Virginity. He concludes with some Reflections upon Antichrist, the Resurrection, and the last Judgment: Whereupon he says, 'That Hell Fire shall not be material as that 'among us, but such as God knows; Non materiâ hujusce 'nostri constantem, sed qualem Deus novit. This Work is in Greek and Latin in the Basil Edition, [in 1548, and 1575.] St. John Damascene wrote many Tracts more upon some particular Doctrines. St. J. Damascene.

[* Spiritually.] [† In their Use, not Nature.]

A Dialogue between a Christian and a Saracen about Religion.

Another Dialogue under the Name of an Orthodox Christian and a Manichee, in which he disputes against the Errors of those Hereticks.

A Treatise of the two Natures against the * Monothelites, who did admit but one Nature in Christ, made up of two.

A Treatise of the Trisagion against the Addition of Peter the Fuller, wherein he explains several Forms of Speech about the Trinity, and the Incarnation.

[* The Acephali, or Monophysites, a Sort of Hereticks, Dr. Cave.]

A Treatise of the two Wills in Christ against the Monothelites.

Another upon the Trinity, and the Incarnation.

To these Tracts may be added, the last Article of his Logick, wherein he explains what is the Hypostatick Union, and his Institutes, containing an Explication of the Terms used by him in speaking of the Mysteries, as Essence, Substance, Person, Hypostasis, &c.

The three Orations upon Images belong to the doctrinal Tracts. He distinguisheth two sorts of Worship and Adoration; the one supream, belonging to God only; the other a Worship of Honour and Respect only. He says, the Matter of Images is not worshipped, but what is represented by them; that they are instead of Books to the Ignorant, rant, and, that in worshipping of them, they worship the Saints, of whom they are the Images. He cites St. Basil to authorize this Use of them. He objects to himself St. Epiphanius's Letter, and answers, either that that Letter is suppositious, or that he caused the Picture he speaks of to be buried, only for some particular Reasons; like as St. Athanasius caused the Relicks of Saints to be buried, to condemn the prophane Practice of the Egyptians. He cites several Passages of the Fathers, to prove, that the Images of Saints are to be honoured; but there is hardly one Word proving directly what he maintains, tho' he relates a great many Passages in those three Orations. He owns, the Worship of Images cannot be established from Holy Scripture, and that it is authorized by the Tradition of the Church only. Lastly, he confesses, no Image ought to be made of the Trinity, nor of things purely spiritual.

St. J. Damascene.

The Prayer for the Dead is another Point, which is also not proved but by the Tradition of the Church. St. John Damascene defends it in an Oration made for that purpose. In it he affirms, that the Prayer for the Dead is from the Tradition of the Apostles. He adds, that the Church does nothing but what is useful and pleasing to God; from whence he concludes, that by those Prayers they obtain the Remission of those Sins which remain to be expiated by the Dead. He relates the Fable of Trajan's Deliverance, and a Story that happened to St. John the Almsgiver.

We may moreover add to these Tracts, two very short Treatises; the one, in what consists the Image and Similitude of God, in which we were created; and the other, of the Last Judgment. Besides, we may add to these, two Letters about the Mass, and the Consecration; but I do not believe them to be St. John Damascene's.

The historical Works of St. John Damascene are fewer in number.

We have a Treatise of Heresies, which bears his Name; but the twenty four first are nothing but the Abridgment of St. Epiphanius.

The rest, beginning at the Nestorians, were added by St. John Damascene. He joyns to the Hereticks already known, viz. the Nestorians, Eutychians, Monophysites, Aphthartodocites, Theodosians, Jacobites, Agnoetes, Donatistes, Monothelites, Saracens and Iconoclasts. He joyns, I say, to these, other unknown Sects of Persons that had extraordinary Opinions and Practices, namely, the Semidalites, who taste of the Paste brought to them by Dioscorus's Scholars, and believe this is to them instead of Sacrifice; the Orchistæ, which are Monks dancing, when they sing God's Praises; the Gnosimachi, who will not have Men to write or study, a good Life being sufficient; the Heliotropites, who believe there is a certain Vertue in the Herb, called Turnsol or Heliotrope; the Thnetopsychites, who believe Mens Souls to be like to the Beasts, and that they die with them; the Theocatochestes, who find fault with some Expressions in the Scripture; the Christolites, who believe that Christ hath left his Soul and Body in Hell, and that the Godhead only ascended up to Heaven; the Ethnophrones, who retain some Pagan Superstitions; the Ethiproscoptes, who find fault with ancient Usages, and introduce new ones; the Parermenentes, who interpret several Places of the Old and New Testament according to their own Fancy; and the Lampetians, living after their own Fashion. It is plain, that St. John Damascene gave what Names he pleased to those he thought to be of these Opinions and Practices, tho' they made not a Body nor a Sect. Part of the Greek of this small Tract was published by Billius, at the End of his Edition [at Paris in 1619.] but M. Cotelier published it not long ago whole in his Monuments of the Greek Church, Vol. 1. p. 278.

The History of Barlaam contains a long Narrative of the Conversion of the Son of the King of the Indies, called Josaphat by the Monk Barlaam; 'tis more like a Romance than an History. Some think it is not St. John Damascene's; nevertheless, it is like enough to his Style, and all of it is agreeable to his Doctrine, except in the Procession of the Holy Ghost from the Son, which may have been added by the Interpreter in the Translation, as also in the Original by some Transcriber.

We have but one of his moral Works; but it is as considerable in its kind, as the Book of the Orthodox Faith is: For St. John Damascenus hath comprehended in three Books, intituled Parallels, an infinite number of Precepts and Maxims of Morality, reduced to different Heads, under which he first citeth some Sentences of the Scripture, and then some Passages of several Fathers.

The heortastick Works of St. John are very numerous, but few of them are printed. These are printed.

A Sermon on Christ's Transfiguration, in Greek and Latin.

St. J. Damascene.

Three Discourses upon the Virgin's Nativity, also in Greek and Latin.

Two upon her Assumption, in Latin only.

A Sermon upon Holy Saturday, published in Greek and Latin by Billius [and in Greek and Latin by Pantinus, at Antw. in 1601.]

His ecclesiastical Works, or Books of the Divine Service, are,

Some Hymns on the great Festivals; Odes and Proses for the Service of the whole Year, distinguished into two Parts. They are not all St. John Damascene's, but some are Metrophanes's and other Authors.

Lastly, we have a Book of Logick and another of Physick, of St John Damascene.

These are the Works contained in the most perfect Editions of St. John Damascene. The first Editions contained but few Works.

His three Discourses of Image-worship were printed in Greek at Rome, in 1553. in Latin at Paris, in 1555. and at Antw. in 1556.

The History of Barlaam and Josaphat, at Paris, in 1568. at Cologne in 1593. at Antw. 1602.

His four Books of the Orthodox Faith were printed in Latin at Paris, in 1507. in Greek at Verona, in 1531.

The Dialogue against the Manichæans, at Basil, in 1578. [at Passaw in 1572. 8*vo.*]

The Hymns, at Paris, in 1575.

They printed in 1539. 1548. and 1575. at Basil, a Collection of the chief Works of this Father, wherein are found the Books of the Orthodox Faith in Greek. Since that, Billius made a much larger Collection of them, containing all the Works above-mentioned. It was printed at Paris, in 1577. 1603. and 1619. but it hath few Works in Greek.

M. Aubert having published St. Cyril, designed to undertake a new Edition of St. John Damascene's Works, and having communicated his Design to the Learned, had collected several Pieces; among the rest, M. Allatius sent him a great number of his Works, never published before, which he had taken the Pains to get copied out from some MSS. and to translate them himself. M. Aubert dying before he could execute this Design, F. Labbe promised, in 1652. an Edition of St. John Damascene's Works, and printed a Specimen of it, wherein he set down the Names of the Works which Allatius had communicated to M. Aubert, without mentioning what this learned Man had contributed to it; yea, and intimating, that he received no help by his MSS. Allatius having heard of it by F. Goar, complain'd, that F. Labbe would set himself forth by his Labours, without expressing the least Acknowledgment of them; and he published a Catalogue of the Manuscripts of St. John Damascene, which he had sent to M. Aubert, and of them he had by him yet, and which he had to send. These are mentioned there.

A Panegyrick of St. John Chrysostome, and the following Sermons, on the Virgin's Nativity; on Christ's Presentation in the Temple; on the Virgin's Death, and the Fig-tree dried up; a Confession of the Catholick Faith; a Treatise of Malice and Virtue; an historical Tract of Christ's Birth; the Greek Treatise of the Dialogue between a Christian and a Saracen; Definitions; other Definitions; a Treatise of the Divinity and the Incarnation of Christ; a Treatise of Christ's Body; another against the Jacobites; two Treatises against the Nestorians; a Writing containing the Passages of the Fathers, proving, that Christ is composed of two Natures, and that there be two Natures in him; a Treatise of the two Wills and the two Operations in Christ; a Writing upon Easter; a Prayer; a Sermon on the Annunciation of the Virgin; a Treatise to those that believe two Natures, two Wills and two Operations in Christ. Those are the Works of St. John Damascene, which Allatius had sent to M. Aubert, together with several other Pieces of the Greeks upon St. John Damascene's Works, of the Life of this Saint, and a critical Censure upon his Works, made by Allatius himself. He was moreover to send him his Lexicon, which he says is a large Work, rare, and contains in it many things, with several other Greek Pieces, the Titles whereof may be seen in the Catalogue it self, in the End of the Collection of the Greek Works published by Allatius, and printed at Antwerp in 1653.

St. John Damascene writes clearly and methodically; he was a subtle Divine, an able Compiler, but a mean Preacher.

† St. CHRODEGAND Bishop of Metz.

[† Alias Chrodedandus or Rodegangus.]

St. Chrodegand.

CHrodegand Son of Landrada, having spent his Youth in the Court of Charles Martel, was advanced, under Pepin's Reign, to the Bishoprick of Metz, and ordained by Pope Stephen (An. 743.) He was the Founder and Restorer of the common Life of Clerks; for, having taken Possession of his Bishoprick, he caused his Clergy to dwell in a Cloyster, gave them a Rule, and supplyed them with all the Necessaries of Life, that they might take no more Care for earthly things, but might apply themselves wholly to God's Service only.

St. Chrodegand.

St. Chrodegand.

This Rule of Chrodegand was publiſhed, in its native Purity, by F. Labbe, out of a Copy tranſcribed from an ancient Manuſcript of the Vatican Library. F. Dacherius had printed one under his Name in his Spicilegium; but this is a Rhapſody patched up out of the true Rule of Chrodegand, Decrees of the Council of Aix-la-Chapelle and ſome other Monaſtick Rules. The true one hath but 34 Articles, with a Preface to them, wherein Chrodegand tells his Clergy, that, if the Canons of the Nicene Councils were yet in force, and the Biſhop and his Clerks lived according to their Rules, there would be no need for him to make a new Rule; but having found the Clergy and the People of his Dioceſs remiſs and looſe, he thought himſelf obliged to preſcribe theſe Rules: That he enjoins all the People of his Dioceſs, to live in Unity and Love, to frequent the Divine Service conſtantly, to be obedient to their Biſhop, to avoid Lawſuits and Diviſions, to give no Offence; and the Paſtors to look to their Flocks, as knowing they muſt one day give an account of them to the Paſtor of Paſtors.

Then he preſcribes ſome particular Rules to his Clerks.

In the 1*ſt*. Article he recommends Humility to them.

In the 2*d*. he binds them, to take place of one another according to their Seniority in Orders. He will not have them to call themſelves by their proper Names, without adding the Name of their Dignity; that the younger Clerks, when they meet their Seniors, ſhall bow to them, and ask their Bleſſing; that being ſet down, they ſhall riſe up and give them their place. He enjoyns young Men to obſerve this Rule, and preſerve Modeſty in all things.

The 3*d*. Article imports, that they ſhall all lye in the ſame Cloyſter, in different Cells; that Women ſhall not come into the Cloyſter, no, nor any Layman, without an Order from the Biſhop, the Archdeacon or the Chancellor; that they ſhall eat all together in the ſame Hall; that no Laick ſhall be admitted into the Cloyſter.

The 4*th* Article imports, that all the Clerks ſhall repair to the Church of St. Stephen at Compline; after which laſt part of the Office they ſhall eat no more, and they ſhall keep Silence 'till the firſt Hour of Prayer; and if any Body did not return home at Compline, he is forbidden to knock at the Door, or to come into the Cloyſter before the Hour of the Nocturnal Office. Clerks are forbidden to ſtay in Town after the Hour of Compline, without coming to it.

The 5*th*, 6*th*, and 7*th*. Articles, order the time and manner of ſinging the Divine Service in the Day and Night time.

In the 8*th*. he orders them to come every Day into the Chapter-houſe after the Office of the firſt Hour, to read there ſome of the Inſtructions made by him, or of the Homilies on Sundays, Wedneſdays and Fridays, and there to receive Orders and Reproofs of the Biſhop or Archdeacon.

In the 9*th*. Article he enjoyns them to perform the bodily Labours, as well in common as in private.

In the 10*th*. he will have the Clerks, when they are upon a Journey, to keep their Rule whilſt they are travelling, and to recite their Office.

In the 11*th*. he charges them to be zealous.

In the 12*th*. he forbids private Perſons to ſtrike or to excommunicate their Brethren.

In the 13*th*. he forbids them to make Parties one againſt the other.

In the 14*th*. having repreſented the Uſefulneſs of Confeſſion, he chargeth the Clerks to confeſs their Sins twice every year to their Biſhop, or to the Presbyters appointed by the Biſhop, once in the beginning of Lent, and the other time between the 15*th*. of Auguſt and beginning of November. And all thoſe who are guilty of no Crime, to receive the Body and Blood of Chriſt every Sunday, and on the great Feſtivals. He declares, that, if any Body hath concealed his Sins from his Biſhop, and goes to confeſs to other Prieſts, fearing, leſt the Biſhop ſhould degrade him or hinder his Admiſſion, and if the Biſhop comes to know it, he that hath done ſo, ſhall be ſcourged ſeverely or be impriſoned. For he is a very wicked Man, ſaith he, who ſins before God, and will not confeſs his Sins to him, of whom he ought to receive Advice for the Recovery of his Health.

The 15*th*. ordains, that Clerks guilty of heinous Crimes, ſuch as Murthers, Fornication, Adultery, Robbery and ſuch like; ſhall be chaſtiſed on their Body, and then ſent into Exile or caſt into Priſon, where they ſhall ſtay as long as the Biſhop pleaſes; that when they come out, they ſhall moreover do publick Penance; that is, they ſhall ſtay at the Church-door proſtrate, whilſt others go in and come out, and they ſhall not enter in during the Service, but they ſhall ſay it ſtanding at the Door; that they ſhall uſe ſuch Abſtinence as the Biſhop ſhall impoſe upon them; and that they ſhall receive a Bleſſing from no Body, before they be reconciled; that they ſhall ſue for this Reconciliation publickly, being proſtrate on the Ground, and the Biſhop ſhall reconcile them according to the Order of the Canons. St. Chrodegand.

The 16*th*. excommunicates him who ſhall keep Company with an excommunicated Perſon.

The 17*th*. ordains, that for leſſer Faults, ſuch as Pride, Diſobedience, Arrogancy, Detraction and the Faults againſt the Rule, thoſe who are faulty ſhall firſt of all be admoniſhed before one or two Witneſſes; if they do not amend, they ſhall be reproved publickly; and if they perſiſt, they ſhall be excommunicated; and, laſtly, if they prove incorrigible, they ſhall have a corporal Puniſhment inflicted upon them.

The 18*th*. is concerning much lighter Faults, ſuch as coming late to Meat, he chargeth the Clerks to come preſently to diſcover them to the Biſhop, who ſhall impoſe a light Puniſhment upon them; but if they do not ſubmit to it, and their Fault come to be known, they ſhall be more ſeverely puniſhed.

The 19*th*. declares, that Penance to be impoſed, ought to bear proportion with the Faults.

In the 20*th*. he ordains, that Clerks ſhall not eat till after the Veſpers; That they ſhall abſtain from things preſcribed by the Biſhop; That they ſhall not eat out of the Monaſtery during this time, except in caſe of great neceſſity; That they ſhall not go out neither, without neceſſity; That they ſhall give themſelves to Reading; That from Eaſter to Whitſuntide they ſhall eat twice aday, and they ſhall eat Fleſh, except on Fridays; That from Whitſunday till St. John's day, they ſhall eat twice alſo, but ſhall abſtain from Fleſh-meat at the firſt Meal; That from Midſummer to St. Martin's day, they ſhall eat twice a Day, but ſhall eat no Fleſh on Wedneſdays and Fridays; That from St. Martin's day 'till Chriſtmas, they ſhall not eat 'till after the 9*th*. Hour, and ſhall abſtain from Fleſh; That from Chriſtmas to Lent, they ſhall faſt 'till the ninth Hour, on Mondays, Wedneſdays and Fridays, and on the other Days they ſhall be be allowed two Meals; That they ſhall abſtain from Fleſh only on Wedneſdays and Fridays, unleſs they happen to be Holy-days, and the Superior permits them to eat of it; That the Biſhop may diſpenſe with the Infirm as to their Abſtinence; Laſtly, That his Clergy may eat Fleſh during the Octave of Whitſunday.

In the 21*ſt*. he preſcribes the order of the Tables in the Hall, and ordains that there ſhall be Reading when they are at Meat, and preſcribes ſome other Particulars about the order of the Hall.

In the 22*d*, and 23*d*. he comes to Particulars about the quality and quantity of the Meat and Drink.

The 24*th*. obliges all the Clerks to wait in the Kitchin, except the Archdeacon and the Chancellor.

The following Articles are concerning the Duties of Officers, of the Archdeacon, the Chancellor, the Butler, and the Porter.

The 28*th*. is concerning the care to be had of the Infirm and Sick.

In the 29*th*. he provides for the clothing and warming of them.

In the 30*th*. he ſets down the Feſtivals when the Biſhop is to feaſt them.

In the 31*ſt*. he enjoyns the Clerks of his Society to have a Propriety in nothing, and to give what they have to the Church of St. Paul: Yet he gives them leave to reſerve the uſe of it to themſelves for Almſgiving, and to diſpoſe of their Moveables, as they pleaſe, by their Wills.

The 32*d*. imports, That the Alms beſtowed upon private Perſons, as upon Prieſts for ſaying Maſs or hearing Confeſſions, or upon other Clerks for praying, ſhall be their own; but thoſe beſtowed upon the Community ſhall be common. He will not have Eccleſiaſtical Perſons to take a great quantity of Alms, for fear of over-burdening themſelves with the Sins of others.

The 33*d*. Article is concerning the time and manner in which thoſe Clerks ought to come to Maſs on Holy-days.

The laſt Canon reſpects Clerks inducted into other Churches; he charges them to come twice in a Month, once a fortnight to the Church of St. Stephen, to receive neceſſary Inſtructions and Advices from the Biſhop, or him who taketh care of that Church.

STEPHEN II.

Stephen II.

AFter ZACHARY's deceaſe, the Romans elected a Presbyter, named, Stephen, in his room; but this dying 3 days after his Election, they preferred to the Pontificate, the 27*th*. of March, 752. Pope Conſtantine's Son, named Stephen II. In the beginning of his Pontificate, he repaired and built Hoſpitals. Aſtulphus, who was then King of Lombardy, threatned the City of Rome. Stephen, to appeaſe his Fury, ſent Deputies with Preſents to him, and concluded a Peace with him for 40 Years; but Aſtulphus, intending to make himſelf Maſter of Rome, did ſoon break it. The Pope ſent ſome Religious Perſons to him to pacifie him; but he did not at all regard their Entreaties Stephen II.

Stephen II. treaties or Arguments. In this Conjuncture, John, the chief Silentiary of the Emperor of Greece, came to Rome with ſome Letters from the Emperor to the Pope, and to King Aſtulphus, whom he did exhort to reſtore the Places he had uſurped. He brought theſe Orders to Aſtulphus, who ſlighted them, and ſent him back again, without any favourable Anſwer. The Pope ſeeing the danger he was in, ſent ſome Deputies to the Emperor, to let him know, That it was high time for him to come with an Army to defend the Provinces he had yet in Italy, if he had a mind to preſerve them; and for his part, he imployed publick Prayers, to obtain from God the Peace of Italy, and endeavoured, with Entreaties, to ſtill the Anger of the King of Lombardy. But ſeeing, at laſt, there was no hope left of any aſſiſtance from the Greek Emperor, he applied himſelf to Pepin King of France, who did voluntarily offer himſelf to help the Pope and the Romans. He judged it fit to bring the Pope into France, where he received him favourably, and promiſed him, that he would force the Lombard to reſtore him the Exarchy of Ravenna, and all the Territories belonging to the Romans. Aſtulphus, to avert this Storm, ſent Carloman, Pepin's Brother, who was a Monk in Mount-Caſſin, to oppoſe this deſign; but he could not diſſuade Pepin from his Enterprize, wherefore he retreated into a Monaſtery in France. Pepin did immediately ſend Ambaſſadors to the King of the Lombards, to oblige him to make Peace, and to reſtore to the Romans the Towns and Lands he had taken from them. The Pope likewiſe urged him by Letters, but all in vain; ſo Pepin came with an Army to attack him. The Lombard, having eſſay'd to force Pepin's Troops which were in a Paſſage of the Alpes, was routed, put to flight, and forced to fly into Pavia, which was preſently beſieg'd by Pepin's Army. Aſtulphus was forced to ſue for Peace, which was granted him, upon condition, he ſhould reſtore the Exarchy of Ravenna, and what he had taken. But inſtead of performing this Treaty, as ſoon as he was delivered, he marched towards Rome, with an intent to take it. Pepin having notice of it, returned again with his Army, beſieg'd Aſtulphus, and forced him to perform the Articles of the Treaty. The Greek Emperor's Envoy re-demanded the Exarchy of Ravenna; but Pepin looking upon that Country as an Eſtate which he had acquired by the right of Arms, gave it to the Church of Rome, and ſent Fulradus, Abbot of St. Denys, to receive the Towns of the Pentapolis and Æmilia, which the Lombard was bound to reſtore. After Aſtulphus's death, Deſiderius, who had poſſeſſed himſelf of the Kingdom of the Lombards, confirmed this Treaty, and rendred to the Pope all the places agreed on. All this was done under Stephen II's Pontificate, which laſted 5 Years. He died Apr. 24. 757. Stephen II.

This Pope's Letters are concerning all thoſe Affairs. In the 1ſt. he thanks Pepin for the aſſiſtance he had promiſed by Chrodegand. In the 2d. he deſires the great French Lords to help forward his requeſt to their King. In the 3d. directed to King Pepin, whom he calls his Godfather, and to his Sons Charles and Carloman, whom he ſtiles Kings and Nobles of Rome, he entreats them to cauſe Aſtulphus to perform the Treaty he had made. In the 4th. he begs Pepin's help againſt Aſtulphus, who was come to beſiege the City of Rome. The 5th. is a Letter in St. Peter and Stephen's Name, to implore Aid againſt the Lombards. It ſeems to be Suppoſititious, and of a quite different Style from the reſt. The 6th. is a Letter of Thanks to Pepin, for ſetting at liberty the City and Church of Rome. He informs him, withal, of the death of Aſtulphus, and that Deſiderius ſucceeded him, and entreats him to cauſe him to reſtore the reſt of the Towns of the Exarchate and the Pentapolis, which were to be reſtored to him by the agreement. There is a 7th. Letter, wherein he requeſts Pepin and his Sons to force Aſtulphus, to reſtore him the Towns and Lands which they had beſtowed upon the Holy See.

To theſe Letters are joined 4 Privileges granted by Stephen to Fulradus, Abbot of St. Denys, and a Relation of a Revelation which they pretend this Pope had, being extreme ſick in the Abby of St. Denys; but theſe laſt Monuments are of ſmall Authority and good for little. This Pope's Letters are eloquent and powerful: We have moreover, under his Name, a Collection of ſome Canonical Conſtitutions which he made at Creſſy, to anſwer the Queſtions propounded to him by the Monks of the Monaſtery of Bretigny. It contains 19 Conſtitutions, for the moſt part, drawn out of Popes Decrees, and the preceding Councils; but there be ſome upon Baptiſm ſomewhat ſingular: For in the 11th. he excuſes a Prieſt, who in caſe of neceſſity had baptized with Wine for want of Water, and he intimates that Baptiſm, to be valid, in theſe words: Infantes ſic permaneant in ipſo Baptiſmo. I know very well that ſome have believed, that this Parentheſis is a Gloſs impertinently crept into the Text, and that ſome others have pretended, that of theſe 19 Articles 10 are Suppoſititious, whereof this one; but all this is ſaid without any Ground againſt the Faith of the ancient Manuſcript, from which they were taken. Walafrid reports, that this Pope brought the Roman way of ſinging in to France, which appears plainly by Charlemagne's Capitularies. Stephen II.

WILLIBALD.

Willibald. WILLIBALD, Born of an * illuſtrious Family, [in Devonſhire] in England, [Scholar and Nephew to St. Boniface, was by his Parents put into the Abby of Waldheim to be inſtructed by the Abbot Egwinald, when he he was but five Years old,] being grown up he travelled to Rome, and Jeruſalem, and at length retreated about the Year 728 into the Monaſtery of Mount Caſſin. In the Year 739 [going to Rome again] he was ſent into Germany by St. Gregory III, [to aſſiſt Boniface in the Converſion of that Nation,] and [by him] in the Year 741, was ordained Biſhop of Eiſtad, and was preſent at a Synod held in Germany in 742, he * died about the Year 786. He left us the Life of St. Boniface, Archbiſhop of Mentz, written at the requeſt of Lullus his Succeſſor, which is extant in Canifius's Antiquities, and in the Third Century of the Saints of the Benedictine Order, ſet forth by F. Mabillon. Willibald.

JOHN, Patriarch of Jeruſalem.

John &c. THIS Patriarch, who ſat in the See of Jeruſalem (* Anno 759,) is thought to be the Author of St. John Damaſcene's Life, which we have in Latin only, at the beginning of that Father's Works. It is written in the form of a Panegyrick. John &c.

GODESCHALCUS.

Godeſchalcus. GODESCHALCUS, a Deacon and Canon of Liege, wrote about the Year 770, at the requeſt of his Biſhop Agilfridus, the Life of St. Lambert, Biſhop of Liege, and Martyr. It hath been printed in the Collection of the Memoirs of Liege, by Joan. Chapeavillus, [Tom. I. at Liege in 1612, Quarto,] and in the Third Century of the Saints of the Benedictine Order. Godeſchalcus.

AMBROSIUS AUTPERTUS.

Ambroſius Autpertus. AMBROSIUS AUTPERTUS, a French Benedictine Monk, and Abbot of St. Vincent, [a Monaſtery ſituate near the head of the River Volternus,] died about the Year 778. His Writings are honourably cited by Paulus Diaconus, in his Hiſtory of the Lombards, and the Author of the Chronology of this Abby wrote his Life, and made a Catalogue of his Writings. We have a great Commentary of his upon the Revelation, in which he puts a Moral Senſe upon all that is ſaid in that Book. F. Labbe ſays, That there are alſo ſome Commentaries of Ambroſe on the Pſalms and the Song of Songs, printed, at Cologne in 1536. But F. Oudin, who did both ſeek himſelf, and got others carefully to ſeek for thoſe Works, declareth, he could not find them. The Book of the Conflict of Virtues and Vices, which was among St. Auſtine's Works, and which bears Ambroſe's Name in ſome Manuſcripts, is this Author's; he wrote a Tract of Concupiſcence, which is found in Manuſcript, in Bennet's College Library of Cambridge. Ambroſius Autpertus.

bridge. He made the Lives of the Saints Paldon, Tuton, and Vaſon, the firſt Abbots of St. Benedict of Volternus which are ſo much the better, becauſe he hath only repreſented their Virtues, without relating any Miracles. He hath compoſed ſeveral Works, and ſome are found in Manuſcripts under his Name, and others are printed under other Authors Names. There is one upon our Saviour's Transfiguration, which is at the end of his Commentary upon the Revelation, in a Manuſcript of the Abby of St. German-des-Prez. He hath made one on the Virgin's Aſſumption, which was the 18*th*. among St. Auſtine's Sermons upon the Saints. There is one upon the Purification, printed among the Sermons, attributed to St. Ambroſe, which is found inſerted in an Homily upon the ſame Feſtival, made by Alcuin.

PAUL I.

Paul. I.

STEPHEN the ſecond being near Death, one Party of the People appointed his Brother Paul to be his Succeſſor. Another Party was for Theophylactus the Archdeacon; but after Stephen's Death, Paul's Party being the ſtronger, he was preferr'd to the Holy See. He was pious and charitable to the Poor, repaired ſeveral Churches, and built Monaſteries. He wrote to the Emperors Conſtantine and Leo for Image-Worſhip, and to Pepin, to implore his Aid againſt the Lombards, and the Greeks. He died in June 767.

This is the Catalogue and the Abridgment of this Pope's Letters, written to Pepin, as they are found in a Manuſcript of the Vatican, and as they have been ſet out by Gretſer. The Roman Figures mark the order of the Vatican Manuſcript, and the Arabick that of Gretſer's Collection. Neither of them are exact.

I. 13. He acquaints King Pepin with his Brother Stephen's Death, and his own Ordination. He prays him to continue his protection and friendſhip to him, aſſuring him of his Fidelity. It was ſent by Simon, Pepin's Ambaſſador.

II. 12. He gives to Pepin the Monaſtery of St. Sylveſter, built on the top of Mount Soracte, together with three circumjacent Monaſteries, which Carloman had given to Zachary.

III. 43. He thanks Pepin for defending of him againſt his Enemies, he promiſes him, he will take care to teach his Brother's Pſalmody to the Monks he had ſent him.

IV. 39. He prays him to cauſe Marinus the Presbyter to be ordained Biſhop in France, and diſſuades him from deſigns contrary to the Holy See.

V. 38. He congratulates Pepin's Proſperity, and happy Journey, and tells him, that his Legates are not yet come back from Conſtantinople.

VI. 37. He returns him thanks, for protecting the Church of Rome; he tells him, that next after God he puts his confidence in Pepin's aſſiſtance; he deſires him to ſend him an Ambaſſador, by whoſe means he may diſcover to him the deſigns and ſnares of the Greeks.

VII. 35. He ſends him a Copy of the Letters wrote to a Monk by Coſmus Patriarch of Alexandria.

VIII. 33. He ſends him word that the Greek Emperor is in Arms to aſſault Ravenna, and begs his help againſt the Greeks.

IX. 30. He ſays, that he ſhall ſpeak with Deſiderius King of Lombardy at Ravenna, and would cauſe him to make preparations to defend him againſt the Greeks.

X. 30. He clears himſelf from the Accuſation brought againſt him, of ſaying, that Pepin would not help the Romans; he tells him, that they heard nothing of thoſe who had been ſent over to Conſtantinople from him and Pepin. He leaves it to his choice to deal with Marinus, as he ſhall think fit; he ſends him ſome Letters that he had received from Ravenna.

XI. 31. He enquires of Pepin's Health, and the Succeſs of his Journey; becauſe his Enemies ſpread a report, that it was not proſperous.

XII. He complains of the Injury done him by the People of Beneventum; he deſires Pepin to write ſharply to them, and in caſe they did not obey, to conſent that they may be dealt with as they had deſigned.

XIII. 29. He lets him know, that he hath made peace with Deſiderius. He deſires him to give him his Hoſtages back again, that he may receive the Town of Imola.

XIV. 28. He ſends a Copy of the Letters he had received from Sergius Archbiſhop of Ravenna; he deſires him to write to Deſiderius to help him to defend Ravenna, and the Pentapolis.

XV. 27. He tells him that the Lombards will reſtore nothing which they had taken, and that he endeavours the Reſtoration of Sergius in the Archbiſhopriek of Ravenna. He recommends Biſhop Vulchorius to Pepin.

XVI. 26. He commends Pepin for his conſtant protection of the Church of Rome, of which the Letters brought by Wilfridus were a freſh Teſtimony. He approves of his detaining the Legates, return'd from Conſtantinople, till the Synod. He leaves it to him to order things as he ſhall think beſt, about the matter of Biſhop George, and Peter the Presbyter. He tells him, that Deſiderius came to Rome the laſt Autumn, and that they had agreed, that he ſhould deliver what belong'd to the Church into the hands of Pepin's Ambaſſadors. He returns him thanks for writing to Deſiderius, to warn him to oblige the Neapolitans, and thoſe of Cajeta, to reſtore the Church Patrimony to the Church, and to let their Biſhops be conſecrated by the Holy See.

Paul. I.

XVII. 24, He lets him know that Six Noblemen will come from Conſtantinople to Rome, and that they will go into France to ſee him. He complains, that Deſiderius hath not kept his Promiſe which he made before Pepin's Envoys. He deſires him to ſend Three Ambaſſadors, one to Deſiderius at Pavia, and the other two to Rome to help him.

XVIII. 25. He ſends to Pepin the Reſcript which he demanded, to grant the title of St. Chryſogonus to Marinus the Presbyter. He ſends ſome Books to Pepin, and among the reſt St. Denys the Areopagite's Books, written in Greek.

XIX. 23. He thanks him for protecting the Church.

XX. 21. He writes to him about the Treaty made by Remedius a Biſhop, and Autcarius, Pepin's Envoys with Deſiderius, and gives him notice, that they are agreed to reſtore the Church to all her Rights before April; that he had received part of them already, and that he gave him aſſurance of the reſt.

XXI. 19. He gives him notice, that the Ambaſſadors he had ſent have diſcovered the Fraud of the Lombards about the Reſtitution promiſed.

XXII. 20. He thanks him for imparting to him, what had paſſed between him and the Ambaſſadors of the Emperor of Conſtantinople, and the Anſwers he gave them, with the Letters he had written to that Prince. He intercedes with him for Taſſilon, Duke of Bavaria. He tells him, the Greek Emperor is vexed at him upon the account of Image-Worſhip.

XXIII. 18. He thanks him for his conſtant affection to the Holy See, comparing him to David.

XXIV. 17. He anſwers two Letters of Pepin. He tells him, they have agreed that his Envoys, together with the Deputies of the Cities, ſhould go to Deſiderius, becauſe he had not only not reſtored all that he had taken, but went about to take again what he had reſtored.

XXV. 16. He commends Pepin for his protecting the Church, comparing him to Moſes; he thanks him for the Monaſtery he had given him upon Mount Soracte.

XXVI. 15. He complains of the Cruelty and Malice of the Lombards. He ſays, that he hath given ſome other Letters to his Legates, whereby he required Deſiderius's Hoſtages to be ſent back again. He tells him the reaſon that forced him to write thus to him, and deſires him to do nothing till Deſiderius had reſtored the Church's Patrimony.

XXVII. 14. He complains of the Lombard's Invaſions, tho' Deſiderius had falſly affirmed the contrary. He thanks him for the Table he had offered to St. Peter's Tomb. He leaves it to him, to detain two Biſhops, if he thinks fit.

XXVIII, XXIX, XXX. 42, 41, 40. Theſe three Letters are directed to Charles and Carloman, Pepin's Sons, whom he exhorts to protect and defend the Church of Rome, following their Father's ſteps.

The XXXI. 22. is to all the French Army, which he thanks for their Service to the Church of Rome. There are ten of his Letters whole in the 6th. Vol. of the Councils, with a Privilege granted to Paul, for the Monaſtery of St. Hilary, in the Dioceſs of Ravenna, and the Foundation of the Monaſtery of St. Stephen, and St. Sylveſter, erected by this Pope.

STEPHEN III.

Stephen III.

PAul I. being at the point to die, Toton, Duke of Nepi, who dwelt at Rome, brought many armed Men thither, who took Conſtantine, his Brother, who was but a Layman as yet, put him in poſſeſſion of the Pope's Palace, the next Day cauſed him to be ordain'd Subdeacon and Deacon, and the Sunday after to be conſecrated Biſhop of Rome by three Biſhops. Two of the chief Officers of the Roman Church, viz. Chriſtopher, Secretary, and Sergius,

Stephen III.

Stephen III.

Sergius, Chaplain, being not able to bear with this Violence, fled to the King of the Lombards, and having received his Orders, returned to Rome with a Band of armed Men. Being got into the Town, they were set on by Toton and his Creatures; but Toton being slain in the Conflict, Constantine was turned out, and one named Philip, a Priest and Monk, was chosen to sit in the Holy See. But Christopher the Secretary, who had been Head of this Enterprize, forced him to withdraw into his Monastery, and in August in the Year 768, procured the unanimous Election of Stephen, who came from Sicily to Rome, under the Pontificate of Gregory the third, and from that time had been much esteemed in the Church of Rome. After his Election, Constantine was shamefully deposed, those of his Party were very cruelly used; they carried their Fury so far, as to go and fetch him out of the Monastery, where he was shut up, to pull out his Eyes. After these Cruelties Waldipert, a Presbyter, who had brought the Lombards to Rome to expel Constantine, would also have apprehended Christopher the Secretary, and the chief Citizens of Rome, to deliver them up to the Lombards; but they sent a Viscount against him, who heading the People, took him Prisoner, and put out his Eyes. During all those Troubles, Stephen sent into France to request the King to send some Bishops to Rome, there to set things in order in a Council. Sergius, sent by the Pope, found Pepin dead, and delivered the Letter to his Sons Charles and Carloman, who sent twelve French Bishops to Rome, who held a Council there, with the Bishops of Italy, to which they brought Constantine blind, as he was. The first Day he beg'd the Council's Forgiveness, and to excuse himself, told them, that the People had forced him; but the next Day he vindicated himself, affirming, that it was no new thing, for Laicks to be raised to the Episcopal Dignity, that Sergius was made Bishop of Ravenna, from a Layman, and Stephen Bishop of Naples. The Bishops, being provoked by this Defence, caused him to be beaten, and turned out of the Church. Afterward the whole Matter was examined, and the Acts of the Council, that had confirmed Constantine, were burnt. After this, Pope Stephen fell down prostrate, with the Bishops, and those of the People, who had communicated with Constantine, and having confessed their Fault, and ask'd Forgiveness with Tears, they imposed a Penance on them. The Council caused the Canons, forbidding to elect Laymen, to be read, and made several Constitutions. Concerning the Bishops, Priests, and Deacons ordained by Constantine, it was declared, that their Ordination was null, and that they should remain in the same Degree of the Clergy in which they were before, unless they should afterwards think it fit to ordain them anew; and, as to the Laymen which had been ordained Deacons and Priests by Constantine, that they should wear the Religious Habit during the rest of their Life. Lastly, all that Constantine had done was declared null, except Baptism and Confirmation. Consequent to this Decree, the Bishops ordained by Constantine, having got themselves to be chosen by the Clergy, and the People, were re-ordained by Stephen. The Council treated also of Images, and maintain'd the Worshipping of them against the Council holden in Greece. Things being thus ordered, Stephen remained in the quiet Possession of the Holy See. But he had some Difference with the King of the Lombards, about the Archbishoprick of Ravenna, which became vacant by the Death of Sergius. The King of the Lombards had put one named Michael in his room. Stephen would have deprived him as an Intruder, and he was at last deposed and sent to Rome by the Order of Charles King of France. But Desiderius caused Christopher and Sergius to have their Eyes put out, for summoning of him in the Pope's Name, to restore to the Church what belong'd to her, yea, and put Christopher to Death.

Stephen III.

This Pope wrote three Letters. The 1st. is directed to the Queen, or to King Charles; he thanks the King there for the good Turns Itherius, his Envoy, had done him, and desires him to give him a Reward.

The 2d. is to Charles and Carloman; he congratulates their Reconciliation, and desires them to force the Lombards to restore what they had taken from the Church's Patrimony.

The 3d. directed to the same, is to dissuade them from marrying Desiderius's Daughter, or from bestowing their Sister upon his Son. This Letter is very earnest and vehement. There be two Letters more of this Pope in the Caroline Code; the 1st. which is the 46th. of this Collection, is directed to Bertrade, and is written against Sergius, Christopher, and those others, who would have assassinated Stephen. The other is a Letter of Thanks to Carloman.

There are also found there two Letters of Constantine, directed to Pepin: In the 1st. of which he acquaints him with Paul's Death, and promises to be obedient to him. In the 2d. he assures him, he was chosen against his Will; and tells him, that he hath received a Letter from the East about Images, of which he sends him a Copy. Stephen died the last Day of January. 772.

ADRIAN I.

Adrian I.

Adrian was elected and consecrated Bishop of Rome by the unanimous Consent of the whole Clergy and People of Rome (An. 772. Feb. 9.) In the beginning of his Pontificate Desiderius King of the Lombards sought his Friendship: But seeing that King had been perjur'd all-a-long, he would not at first give Ear to his Ambassadors; yet he was prevail'd with at last by their Oaths, and sent Deputies to him; but they were hardly got out of Rome, when News was brought that Desiderius had invaded the Dukedom of Ferraria, and the Exarchate of Ravenna, and that he was ready to besiege that City. The Pope having sent to demand those Countries back again, he promised to restore them, if he would come to him: But Adrian would not put himself into his Hands, and therefore declared, that he would not go to him, before he had restored what he had taken from the Church. Desiderius seeing he could do nothing by Fraud and Cunning, attack'd him openly, and prepared himself to besiege the City of Rome. In this Extremity the Pope applied himself to Charles King of France, and sent to intreat him to help the Romans, after the Example of his Father Pepin. He would have done it immediately, had not Desiderius born him in hand by his Envoys, that he had restored all to the Church of Rome, at that very time when he was drawing near to Rome, to besiege it. Charles hearing of it, came into Italy with an Army, summon'd the King of Lombardy several times, to give the Church of Rome her Right. The King always denied it; but at last, his Men being taken with a panick Fear, he was forced to withdraw into Pavia, and his Son Adalgisius to Verona. During this time the Pope recovered the Dukedom of Spoleto, and great part of the Country which the Lombards had taken. On the other side, Charles besieged the Cities of Verona and Pavia; the first yielded presently, he left his Army before the other and went to Rome, where he was received by the Pope and the Romans, in a manner suitable to so signal a Service as that he did them. He confirmed the Donation his Father had made to the Holy See, of the Towns and Territories taken by Conquest from the Lombards, and promised to preserve them to it. From Rome he returned to the Siege of Pavia, which he took soon after: He took Desiderius Prisoner, and conquered the whole Kingdom of the Lombards. From this time Adrian continued in the peaceable possession of the Roman Church, and of the Countries the Kings of France had bestowed on him. He laid out his Wealth in building, adorning and beautifying the Churches of Rome. He was Pope 23 Years, 10 Months and a few Days. This is the Sum of this Pope's Letters to Charles the Great, which are found in a Manuscript of the Vatican, and have been put out by Gretser, but without observing any Order of the times. The first Numbers note the Order of the Vatican Manuscript, and the second the Number of the Caroline Book.

Adrian I.

I. 88. He congratulates Charles's Conquest of Bavaria, and gives him notice, that Arichisius, Duke of Beneventum, hath sent to Constantinople, to demand Aid, with the Dukedom of Naples and the Patrician Dignity, upon Promise to obey the Greek Emperor, to be clad after the Grecian Way, and to follow their Usages. But the Ambassadors sent by the Emperor found Arichisius dead: But the People of Beneventum had promised the Greeks to perform these Conditions, since Charles has granted them Grimoaldus for their Duke, and they had led their Ambassadors to Naples. He desires Charles to take his Measures accordingly, and discovers to him the Snares laid by the Neapolitans and the People of Benevent, for those whom he had sent.

II. 87. He grants the Pall to Ermembert, Archbishop of Bourges, at Charles's Request.

III. 86. He gives him notice of the Snares the Greeks had laid for him; he prays him to keep his Armies always in Readiness. He complains, that his Envoys have not fully executed his Orders concerning the Towns he was to deliver again to the Roman Church: He says, that Grimoaldus and the Greeks take from thence an Occasion of insulting over him.

IV. 85. He writes an Answer to Charles, about the Bishops of Lombardy, who did incroach upon the Dioceses of other Bishops; about Ermanald's Daughter, which married after having taken the Religious Habit; and about Simony, very rife in Italy and Tuscany. He complains of the Disobedience of the People of Ravenna and the Pentapolis. He desires Charles not to countenance them, and not to receive those that are come to him without his Orders, as he receives none of the King's Subjects, that bring no Orders from their Master.

V. 84. He acquaints him, that according to his Orders, he commanded the Venetian Merchants to be banished out of Ravenna and the Pentapolis. He desires him to apprehend Adrian I. the Duke of Gareuns, who had possessed himself of some Lands belonging to the Church of Ravenna.

VI. 83. He recommends the Duke Paul, who went to him, to clear himself from the Accusations charged upon him and the Duke Constantine.

VII. 82. He saith, he hath sent him St. Gregory's Sacramentary.

VIII. 81. He tells him, he hath set up in the Church the Cross he sent him. He prays him to send Commissioners to restore some Towns of the Dukedom of Beneventum to him, with the Territories of Popolo and Roselle.

IX. 80. He speaks of the Penance to be imposed upon the Saxons, who being baptized, had lapsed again into Idolatry.

X. 79. He intercedes for the Abbot of St. Vincent, falsly accused to Charles.

XI. 78. He forbids Bishops and Presbyters to bear Arms, and gives him notice, that upon his Recommendation he hath set at Liberty John the Monk, accused of bearing false Witness.

XII. 77. He says, that Charles's Envoy could not procure the entire Restitution of the Territory of Sabina.

XIII. 67. He speaks to him of the Presents he sent him.

XIV. 66. He prays him to send a new Commissioner, to cause the whole Territory of Sabina to be restored to him.

XV. 69. He requests him again to cause that whole Country to be restored to him.

XVI. 68. He begs of him some Beams and Pewter, and gives him notice of the War of Arichisius against the Amalfitans, and of the Defeat of his Troops by the Neapolitans.

XVII. 65. He assures him of the Continuation of their Prayers for him. He tells him, that the Slaves sold to the Saracens were sold by the Lombards and the Greeks. He says, the Roman Priests are not guilty of the Crimes they are charged with.

XVIII. 64. He says, that the Neapolitans and the Greeks had made themselves Masters of Terracine, by the Advice of Duke Arichisius. He desires Charles to send Wolfini to retake that Town, and the other Church Lands in the Neapolitan Territory.

XX. 62. He tells him, he prays to God Night and Day for him.

XXI. 61. He begs some Beams and Lead to repair the Church of St. Peter. He says, he durst not meddle with the Holy Corpse, which Adon had begged of him, and gives him a hint of one, which was at the Archbishop Vulcharius's; viz. the Body of St. Candidus the Martyr.

XXII. 60. He gives him notice of the Emperor Constantine's Death. He charges the Duke Clusus with seizing of Church Lands, and intreats Charles to remove him out of Tuscany.

XXIII. 59. He acquaints him with a Plot made to besiege the City of Rome.

XXIV. 92. He tells him, that his Envoys fared worse for not following his Advice; and that the Greeks were forming a Design to deprive Charles of his Dukedom of Beneventum.

XXV. 58. He complains that King Charles's Commissioners had slighted him, and that instead of coming to Rome, they were gone to Spoleto and Beneventum. He desires Charles to put him in possession of the Dukedom of Spoleto, as he had promised him.

XXVI. He says, no body did question but that the whole Country of Sabina should belong to him.

XXVII. He congratulates the Victory he had lately obtained, and recommends an Abbot and two Bishops to him.

XXVIII. 54. He tells him, that in Italy and Tuscany there were some Lombard Bishops, who invaded the Dioceses of others; that there are some Monks, who laid aside their Habit, to lead a Secular Life and to marry. He speaks again of Ermenald's Daughter, and desires Charles to stop these Disorders.

XXIX. He complains of the Bishop of Ravenna's Impudence, who detained the Towns of Æmilia and the Pentapolis, after Charles's Departure.

XXX. 51. He sends him a Letter of the Patriarch of Grado, and complains that the Bishop of Ravenna had opened it and read it.

XXXI. 51. He intreats Charles to remember his Promises to him, and demands all the Countries which the Lombards did once possess.

XXXII. 50. He complains, that he hath waited in vain for the Commissioners that were to come with Andrew. He complains, that Leo Bishop of Ravenna did boast of having obtain'd of him the Towns of the Pentapolis and Æmilia.

XXXIII. 93. He speaks of his Loyalty and Amity to him. He rejoyces because he wrote to him that he would come into Italy. He complains of his detaining his Legate Anastasius in France. He accuses two Persons about him of being his Enemies.

XXXIV. 49. He speaks of some Advantage gotten by the Persians upon the Greeks. Adrian I.

XXXV. 76. He prays him to cause all the Lands, which he pretends the Lombards had taken from the Roman Church, to be restored to him.

XXXVI. 77. He prays again, that the Territory of Sabina be wholly put into his Hands again. He rejects an Abridgment of the Council of Chalcedon, which was brought to him.

XXXVII. 75. He intreats him to continue his constant Affection to the Roman Church. He accuses two private Persons who had fled to Charles, and desires him to send them to him.

XXXVIII. 74. He recommends the Deputies of the Monastery of St. Hilary to him, and prays him not to suffer that the Hospitals built in the Road of the Alpes be seized to entertain Travellers.

XXXIX. 71. He answers him about the Elections of the Bishops of Ravenna, that they ought to be performed by the Clergy and the People of the Town, in the Presence of the Emperor's Commissioners, and with the Bishop of Rome's Consent.

XL. 72. He acquaints him, how he hath composed the Differences of the Monks of St. Vincent; and how that the Abbot Potho was resolved to go to him with some Monks, to purge himself from the things laid to his Charge.

XLI. 71. He thanks Charles for all his Pains that he had been at to serve the Church of Rome.

XLII. 70. He gives him notice, that Adalgisius, Desiderius's Son, was come to Calabria, and he desires Charles to make War on him, and to constrain those of the Country of Benevent to obey him. He cautions him not to make Grimoald Duke of Beneventum, and demands of him the Restitution of Ravenna, Roselle and Popolo.

XLIII. He tells him, that he hath received the Ambassadors of Offa *, the English King, together with Charles's Commissioners; and he intimates to him, that he does not believe that Offa hath suggested any thing against Charles. [* Offa the King of the Mercians.]

XLIV. He appoints Litanies to be said for 3 Days together, in all the West, for the happy Conversion of the Saxons, wrought by Charles.

57. He tells him, that the Greeks have put out the Eyes of Maurice, Bishop of Istria, because of his Faithfulness to the Church of Rome. He prays Charles to order the Duke of Aquileia to get him restored.

75. He acquaints him, that he, with all his Clergy and Monks, prays to God to grant him the Victory against the Agarenians.

The 95*th*. is directed to Egila, who had been ordained Bishop, and sent into Spain by Vulcharius, for accepting a Mission without having any particular See: He commends his Zeal, and exhorts him to follow the Usage of the Roman Church in the Saturday-Fast.

In the 96*th*. directed to the same Bishop, and to John a Presbyter, he exhorts them to a Conformity to the Usages of the Roman Church. He confutes the Practice of the Spanish Churches, which put off Easter to the 8*th*. Day, when the 14*th*. Moon fell on Saturday. He reports a long Passage of St. Fulgentius about Predestination. He condemns some Errors about Free-will, and the Relicks of Priscillianism, and reproves some Abuses. Afterwards he was displeased with Egila, for teaching some Errors, and neglecting his Ministry.

The 77*th*. Letter is directed to all the Bishops of Spain: In it he treats of Felix and Elipandus's Error. 2. Of the keeping of Easter. 3. Of Predestination. 4. Of the Obligation to abstain from Blood. 5. Of the Commerce and Marriage with Pagans and Jews, and of the Women that marry again during the Life of their first Husbands.

Flodoard mentions a Letter of this Pope to Tilpin, Archbishop of Rheims; in which having described the Disorders that had happened in that Church, he confirms to him the Right of Metropolitan or Primate, and grants him the Privilege of not being judged but by a Canonical Judgment, and by the Pope, if in the very Judgment he did appeal to the Holy See. This Letter seems doubtful to me.

Adrian gave to Charlemagne the Code of Dionysius Exiguus, of whose Canons there was a Summary made, bearing unjustly the Name of this Pope. Some attribute to him a Collection of 72 or 80 Capitula's, which they suppose him to have given to Ingilram, Bishop of Metz, or Ingilram to have presented them to him, for both these are found in the Manuscripts: It contains 72 or 80 Articles of Ecclesiastical Judgments, for the most part taken out of the ancient Canons, Popes Letters, and the Theodosian Code; but some Additions are made to them, favourable to the Pretensions of the Court of Rome. This Piece was forged when the false Decretals were made, and perhaps by the same Authors. They talk also of a Privilege granted by this Pope to the Monastery of St. Denys, wherein it is permitted them to have a Bishop; But this also is visibly suppositious.

PAUL Deacon of Aquileia.

Paul.

PAUL Deacon of Aquileia, called Winfrid after the Name of his Family, Son of Warnifred and Theodolinda, was Secretary to Desiderius, the last King of the Lombards. This Prince being taken (Anno. 774.) by Charlemagne, and his Kingdom utterly destroyed, Paul the Deacon fell into the Conqueror's Hands, who used him very civilly. But his Ties to his Prince having brought him into a Suspicion of some Conspiracy, he was banished into an Island of the Adriatick Sea, [called Diomedea] from whence he escaped to [Anchis] the Duke of Beneventum, Desiderius's Son-in-Law, and a little after made himself a Monk in Mount-Cassin, where he died in the Beginning of the 9*th*. Century.

This Author wrote * the History of the Lombards, divided into 6 Books. They do moreover falsly attribute to him an Abridgment of the Roman History drawn out of several Authors: For, tho' he made an Addition to Eutropius's Epitome, he is not the Author of that Collection, which is rather Anastasius's the Library-keeper. He abridged the History of the first Bishops of Metz, which Abridgment is found among the Historiographers of France, and in the last Edition of the Bibliotheca Patrum [Tom. 13.] The first times of this History, which he brings up to the Apostles, are altogether fabulous. He made this Writing, as he tells us himself (Ch. 16 B. 6. of his History of the Lombards) at the Request of Ingiram, Bishop of Metz. He composed also, in particular, the Life of St. Arnulphus, Bishop of Metz, which is found among Bede's Works. There is a Relation of St. Cyprian's Martyrdom, under his Name, which is found at the Beginning of this Father's Works, of Pamelius's Edition. They published, moreover, under his Name, the Lives of St. Benedict, St. Maurus, and St. Scholastica. Sigebert assures us, he wrote the Life of St. Gregory the Great, which was printed in the last Edition of that Saint's Works. Besides, they ascribe to him a Commentary upon St. Benedict's Rule, which is not printed. There be some Hymns and Homilies, both manuscript and printed, bearing his Name. It is thought, that St. John's Hymn, Ut queant laxis, &c. is his. Lastly, he composed, by Charlemagne's Order, a Book of Homilies or Lessons, gathered out of the Holy Fathers for all the [Festival] Days of the Year. This Book was printed at Spire, [An. * 1472.] by Peter Drach, with a Letter of Charlemagne, at the Beginning of it, declaring that this Work was composed by Paul the Deacon, by his Order. F. Mabillon hath printed this Letter and some Extracts of the Commentaries of the first Homilies, because the Edition of Spire is grown very scarce.

CHARLEMAGNE.

Charlemagne.

THE Emperor Charlemagne may be rank'd among the Latin Ecclesiastical Authors, as well as Constantine among the Greeks: For he did not only labour in the re-establishing the Church Discipline, but moreover he made several Laws, wrote Letters, and caused some Treatises of Ecclesiastical Matters to be composed.

Charlemagne's Laws, about Ecclesiastical Matters, are called Capitularia, Capitularies. They contain'd some Constitutions made by Councils and confirmed by this Prince, or some Laws made by the sole Authority of this Prince.

The first Capitulary of Charlemagne is of the Year 769. it contains 18 Articles about the Manners of the Clergy. It forbids Ecclesiastical Persons bearing of Arms and hunting. It enjoyns Priests to be subject to their Bishops, to give them an Account of their Conduct every Year in Lent; to take no Church without the Consent of the Bishop upon whom it depends; to take care to administer the Sacraments to the Penitents and to the Sick, and let no body die without the Unction, Reconciliation and the Viaticum; not to say Mass but in Churches dedicated to our Lord, and upon Stone Altars consecrated by the Bishop. It charges Bishops to look carefully after their Dioceses, to obviate Superstitions, to visit every Year. It forbids Judges to punish or condemn the Clergy without the Bishop's Consent.

The 2*d*. Capitulary is dated in the Year 779. it was made in an Assembly of Bishops, Abbots and Lords. About Ecclesiastical Matters it ordains, that the Suffragan Bishops shall be subject to their Metropolitans; that Bishops shall be ordained in those Towns where there were none before; that in Monasteries the Rule shall be observed; that the Bishops shall have a full Power over the Presbyters and other Clerks; that they shall be impowered to punish incestuous Persons, and to order the Life of Widows; that they shall neither entertain nor ordain the Clerks of other Bishops; that every one shall pay Tythes, which shall be distributed by the Bishop's Order; that the Church shall not protect Murderers, tho' they have fled into Churches, and that they shall give them no Meat there.

They ordered also, in this Assembly, the manner of praying for the Prince, as follows: That every Bishop shall sing three Masses and three Psalters; the 1*st*. for the King, the 2*d*. for the Army, and the 3*d*. for the present Calamity: That Presbyters shall say three Masses, and the Monks, Nuns and Canons three Psalters. Besides, that the Bishops, the Abbots and Abbesses, that are rich, shall bestow upon the Poor one Pound of Silver, or the Worth of it; that those, who are not rich enough, shall feed some poor Folks; that the Earls shall also give a Pound of Silver, and the rest proportionably.

In the Capitulary of the Year 788. there is but one Article concerning Ecclesiastical Matters, whereby Bishops are forbidden entertaining the Clerks of another Bishop, without his Consent.

The 1*st*. Capitulary of Aix-la-Chapelle of the Year 789. is prefaced with a Letter directed to all Ecclesiastick and Secular Persons, exhorting them to watch over their Flocks, to instruct them in the Definitions of the Holy Councils; and declaring to them, that he sends them some Capitularies drawn out of the Canonical Constitutions. The 58 first Chapters are taken out of the ancient Councils and Decrees of Popes, and the 22 next, are new Constitutions, wherein he forbids Perjuries, Witchcrafts, Murders, false Witnesses; and recommends Peace, Patience, Submission to lawful Powers, Reverence in Churches, Order in the Divine Service, Rule in Monasteries, Vigilance and Learning in the Pastors, and particularly the use of the Roman way of Singing, which Pepin had with much ado brought into the Churches of France.

Charlemagne.

The 2*d*. Capitulary is of the same Year, containing 16 Rules for Monks.

The 3*d*. comprehends some Rules of Policy, and, among the rest, that in the Administration of Baptism they all follow the Roman Usage; That Bells shall not be baptized; That Monks shall not meddle with Secular Affairs, &c.

There is a particular Capitulary for the Saxon Converts, containing 34 Chapters.

The 8*th*. condemns to death those Saxons that will not get themselves baptized. The 6*th*. and 7*th*. grant the Tythes of all to the Churches. The 18*th*. forbids keeping Courts on Sundays and Holy-days. The 19*th*. ordains, That Children shall be brought to Baptism within the Year. There are several against Superstitions, and some for Ecclesiastical and Civil Policy.

The Capitulary of the Year, 793. is for Italy, it contains 17 Chapters. The 1*st*. permits the Laity to govern the Hospitals founded by them; But it forbids them to govern the Churches, wherein Baptism is administred. The other Chapters concern Civil Matters.

The Capitulary of Francfort of the year 794. was drawn in the Synod; it contains 51 Chapters. By the 1*st*. Charles grants Tassilon, Duke of Bavaria, his Pardon. By the 4*th*. it is ordain'd, that the Bishops shall do Justice to the Clergy, and their Judgments shall be obey'd. By the 5*th*. it is ordain'd, That the Bishop shall not run from Town to Town; but shall settle in his own Church, and take care of it. By the 6*th*. they compose the Difference between the Bishops of Vienna and of Arles, according to the Pope's Letters; and they grant five Suffragan Sees to that of Vienna and nine to that of Arles. As for Tarentaise, Ambrun and Aix, they ordain, That they shall send to the Pope about them, and shall follow his Judgment thereupon. In the 7*th*. they ordain, That a Bishop, suspected of Infidelity, shall clear himself by taking God to witness of his Innocency. By the 8*th*. they depose Gerbodius, who called himself Bishop, without any Proofs or Witnesses of his Ordination, and had been ordained Deacon and Priest, contrary to the Canons. The eight following Canons are concerning Monks and Abbots. The 17*th*. forbids Clerks to go to a Tavern. The 18*th*. enjoins Bishops to know the Canons. The 19*th*. is for the observation of Sunday. The 20*th*. prohibits ordaining Bishops in Burroughs. The 21*st*. prohibits ordaining a Slave without his Master's consent. The 22*d*. enjoins Clerks and Monks to continue in their Profession. The 23*d*. renews the order for the paying of Tythes. The 24*th*. ordains, that Churches shall be repair'd by those that enjoy the Benefices. The 25*th*. That no strange Clerks shall be received without Letters from their Bishop. The 26*th*. That no Body shall be ordained without a Title to a Benefice. The 27*th*. That the Bishop shall instruct his People. The 28*th*. That he shall

That no Body ſhall be ordained Prieſt, before he be 30 years old. The 48*th*. That after Maſs, they ſhall give one another the kiſs of Peace mutually. The 49*th*. That the Names ſhall not be recited before the Oblation. The 50*th*. That we muſt not believe that Man cannot pray to God, but in 3 Languages only, becauſe God may be worſhipped in all ſorts of Languages, and he underſtands all our Petitions. The 51*ſt*. That the Biſhops and Presbyters ſhall not be ignorant of the Canons. The 52*d*. That Churches cannot be ſold to prophane uſes. In the 53*d*. The Synod aſſents, That the Emperor may keep the Biſhop Hildebold in his Court, as he did Ingilram already. In the 54*th*. he recommends Alcuin to the Prayers of the Synod, as a Man very well ſeen in Eccleſiaſtical Matters.

The Capitulary for the Saxons of the year 797 given in an Aſſembly of Biſhops and Lords, contains nothing but Articles meerly civil.

An. 799. Charlemagne ſent two Perſons to Rome, to Pope Leo III. to conſult him about the Chorepiſcopi and the Puniſhment of wicked Prieſts; he wrote to his Biſhops alſo about it; and we have a Fragment of that Letter with Chapters brought over from Rome, for the aboliſhing of the Chorepiſcopi.

An. 800. or thereabouts, he ſet out an Edict, wherein he charges the Counts and other Judges to afford the Biſhops their helping Hand for the Execution of the Conſtitutions made about Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline.

Some time after he made a Capitulary to recommend the reverencing of the Holy Apoſtolick See in Honour of St. Peter's Memory.

There is another Capitulary yet of the year 801. containing 22 Chapters drawn by the Biſhops, and confirmed by the King's Authority. The 1*ſt*. and the 2*d*. import, That the Prieſts ſhall pray for the Health and Proſperity of the King and the Royal Family, and for their Biſhop. The 3*d*. That they ſhall take care of the Church and the Relicks. The 4*th*. That they ſhall preach every Sunday and Holy-day. The 5*th*. That they ſhall learn the People the Creed and the Lord's Prayer. The 6*th*. and 7*th*. That Tythes ſhall be paid, and one part ſhall be beſtowed upon Church-ornaments, another upon the Poor, and the third upon Eccleſiaſticks. The 8*th*. That Divine Service ſhall be perform'd at convenient hours. The 9*th*. That they ſhall not celebrate Maſs but in conſecrated Churches. The 10*th*. and 11*th*. That Baptiſm ſhall not be adminiſtred but at the appointed times, excepting Children, which may be baptized at any time. The 12*th*. That they ſhall exact nothing for the adminiſtration of Sacraments. The 13*th*. That Presbyters dwell in the Church where they were ordained. The 14*th*, and 15*th*. That Clerks ſhall be free. The 16*th*. That they ſhall have no ſtrange Woman in the Houſe with them. The 17*th*. That he that had the poſſeſſion of a Church during the ſpace of 30 years, ſhall continue in the peaceable poſſeſſion of it. The 18*th*. and the next, That Clerks ſhall carry no Weapons with them, that they ſhall not meddle with Law-ſuits; that they ſhall not go to the Tavern, that they ſhall forbear Swearing. The 21*ſt*. That they ſhall impoſe Penance upon thoſe that ſhall confeſs to them, and ſhall grant the Viaticum and the Communion to the Sick. The 22*d*. That they ſhall give the Unction to the Sick.

The 1*ſt*. Capitulary of the Year 802. given by the King to his Commiſſaries, contains ſome Articles of the Life and Manners of the Clergy, of Abbots and Religious Perſons.

The other Chapters, and the 2*d*. Capitulary of the ſame year, are upon civil Matters.

The Capitulary of the Year 803. was made in the Synod held by Paul of Aquileia at Aix-la-Chapelle; it contains 7 Articles. The 1*ſt*. provides for the preſervation of Church-lands. The 2*d*. is for the reſtoring the Election of Biſhops by the People and Clergy. The 3*d*. prohibits incroaching upon Churches Lands and Privileges. The 4*th*, 5*th*, and 6*th*. declare the Ordinations, Impoſition of Hands and Conſecrations made by the Chorepiſcopi, to be void. The laſt is concerning the Judgments of Presbyters. There be alſo two Capitularies more made a little after upon this Article.

Charle-magne.

The 3*d*. Capitulary of the ſame year, contains only two Articles upon Eccleſiaſtical Matters. The 1. imports, that Churches ſhall be repaired, and that in thoſe places which have more Churches than needs, ſome of them ſhall be pulled down to build up others, where they ſhall be needful. The 2*d*. That none ſhall be ordained Prieſt before he be examined, and no Excommunication ſhall be pronounced without cauſe.

The 5*th*. of the ſame year contains one whereby it is forbidden to give or take any thing for the Holy Chriſm.

The 8*th*. given at Worms in the ſame year, is an Edict for the exemption of Biſhops and Prieſts.

An. 804. He made at Salz eight Articles for the Biſhops. By the 1*ſt*. they are charged to take care of the Churches of their Dioceſs. By the 2*d*. and 3*d*. he preſerves the Tythes to the Parochial Churches. The 4*th*. imports, that the Biſhops ſhall take care to ordain Prieſts. The 5*th*. forbids ſecular Perſons to go into Nunneries, and Clerks alſo, except in caſe of neceſſity, and by the Biſhops order. The 6*th*. forbids Nuns to have, in their Monaſteries, any other Girls but ſuch as deſign to ſtay there. The 7*th*. and 8*th*. forbid admitting Male-children thereinto, or carrying Arms thither. Theſe Articles are back'd with the following Advertiſements to Presbyters, to preach and teach the Scripture and the Creed; to be able to ſay the Pſalter without Book, as alſo the words for adminiſtring Baptiſm; to be skilful in the Canons and the Penitential; and in Singing; not to dwell with Women, except their Mother, Siſter or Aunt; not to go to the Tavern; not to be Covetous, Drunkards or Idle; not to break the Faſt of Holy Thurſday; not to adminiſter the Holy Chriſm and to come to the Synod.

An. 805. He made a Capitulary of 16 Articles at Thionville, containing ſeveral Rules of Eccleſiaſtical Policy: Some Articles of it are alſo found in the ſecond and third Capitularies.

In the Articles given the ſame year to Jeſſe, Biſhop of Amiens, the 2*d*. imports, that no Layman ſhall be Superior of Monks nor Archdeacon.

There's an Edict of the ſame year, and in the ſame place, about the Reverence due to Biſhops and Prieſts.

The 5*th*. Capitulary of the year 806. contains ſeveral Conſtitutions of Eccleſiaſtical Policy.

The 6*th*. renews ſome ancient Canons about Diſcipline.

The 2*d*. Article of the 1*ſt*. Capitulary of 809. diſcharges the Prieſt from adminiſtring the Holy Chriſm.

The 5*th*. of the 1*ſt*. Capitulary of 810. enjoins them to preach and inſtruct the People.

The 1*ſt*. and 2*d*. Capitularies of 811. contain excellent Inſtructions of the duty of Abbots, Monks, Clerks and Biſhops.

The Capitulary of 813. contains 28 Articles, made in the Councils of Arles and Mentz, and confirmed by the Authority of Charlemagne, about Church Diſcipline and the Manners of the Clergy.

Laſtly, beſides theſe Capitularies of Charlemagne, of which we know the time, there are alſo 5 Capitularies more, of which the Time is unknown; they contain ſeveral Conſtitutions, which are almoſt contain'd in the Capitularies above-mention'd.

Moſt of the Capitularies of Charlemagne concerning Eccleſiaſtical Matters, have been collected in the firſt of the four Books of Capitularies compoſed by Anſegiſus, (according to ſome Abbot of Lobbes, and according to M. Baluzius, Abbot of Fontenelles) whoſe Collection was approved by Lewis the Meek, and by Charles the Bald. This Abbot undertook to ſet in order, and to collect the Conſtitutions contain'd in the Capitularies of Charlemagne, and Lewis the Meek, made before 828. The firſt of the four Books of his Collection contains Charlemagne's Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitutions; The 2*d*. the Civil Laws of the ſame Emperor; The 3*d*. the Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitutions of Lewis the Meek; and the laſt the Civil Laws of the ſame. After him, Benedict, Deacon of Mentz, gathered about the Year 845. ſome Capitularies of thoſe two Emperors, omitted by Anſegiſus, and added thereto the Capitularies of Carloman and Pepin; but his Collection publiſhed in three Books, is very much confuſed. Theſe two Collections are the ſeven Books of the Capitularies of our Kings. The ſix firſt Books were ſet out in 1548. by Tilius, Biſhop of Meaux; and the ſeven Books altogether have been publiſhed by M. Pithœus, in the end of the laſt Century, and in the beginning of this. Since 1545. they had printed in Germany ſome Capitularies, and in 1557. ſeveral had been printed at Baſil, but all thoſe Editions were imperfect and defective, and we are obliged to M. Baluzius for having procured us ſuch a fair Edition of the Charlemagne.

Capitularies, very large and full, and reviſed by ſeveral Manuſcripts, with all the Care and Application imaginable. It came forth in 1677. from Muguet's Preſs, in two Volumes Fol. The firſt of which comprehends the Capitularies of the Kings Childebert, Clotharius, Dagobert, Carloman, Pepin, Charlemagne, of Pepin King of Italy and Lewis the Meek, together with the ſeven Books of Capitularies, collected by Anſegiſus and Benedict, four Additions to theſe Collections, the Canons of Iſaac Biſhop of Langres, taken out of the three laſt Books of Capitularies, and the Chapters of Herard Archbiſhop of Tours, taken alſo out of our King's Capitularies. The ſecond Volume contains the Capitularies of Charles the Bald, and the poſterior Emperors, with divers Forms.

Theſe Capitularies renew the ancient Church Diſcipline in many Points, and in the other eſtabliſh one ſuitable to the Neceſſity and the Manners of the Age, and againſt the moſt common Diſorders of the Time. They ſet up again the Biſhops Elections, and reſtored the Church to her former Poſſeſſions. They forbad the Laity to encroach upon them, and the Clergy to alienate them. They revived the ancient Laws concerning Eccleſiaſtical Judgments, the Authority of Metropolitans, and of Provincial Synods, and the Prohibitions of the Canons againſt encroaching upon other Biſhops Dioceſes, and receiving their Clerks or Perſons excommunicated by them. They did not forget the famous Prohibition ſo often repeated, for all ſorts of Perſons in Holy Orders to have no ſtrange Woman in the Houſe with them. They put in force again the Canon of the Council of Chalcedon, whereby it is forbidden to make Ordinations abſolute and without Title. They prohibited Tranſlations and Non-reſidence; the Perſeverance of Clerks and Monks was ordained. Clerks were commanded to be ſubject to their Biſhops by ſeveral Laws. They ordain'd, that he ſhould have the diſpoſing of all the Benefices in his Dioceſs, and that no Prieſt might be put in or out of any Pariſh or Chappel but by his Authority. They bind the Parſons to go or ſend to the Epiſcopal City for the Holy Oyl. The Choriepiſcopi were forbidden Epiſcopal Functions, and they endeavoured the total aboliſhing of them. They charged the Biſhops to examine the Doctrine and the Manners of Presbyters before they ordained them; to ordain no body Presbyter, unleſs he was 30 Years old; they enjoyn'd Presbyters and other Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, to live regularly, to addict themſelves to the Offices of their Miniſtry, and chiefly to Preaching. Prieſts are forbidden ſaying Maſs without communicating: They were enjoyned to have the Euchariſt always ready at hand, to be adminiſtred to the Sick, together with the Unction, which was common at this time. Clerks had no other Judges but the Biſhops, and they required a great number of credible Witneſſes to condemn them. They ſet up Schools in Biſhopricks and Abbies, to learn the Pſalms, Singing and Grammar. They endeavoured to deſtroy the Remains of Pagan Superſtitions. The Invocation of Saints (bb) was much uſed; Relicks and the Croſs were reverenced (ii): But in France no Veneration of Images was allowed. The Prohibition of contracting Marriages, was extended to the fourth Degree of Conſanguinity; ſpiritual Affinity (kk) began then to take place.

[(bb) Invocation of Saints.] In the Days of this Emperor, Charles the Great, who flouriſhed towards the latter end of this Century, idolatrous Superſtitions and Corruptions were arriv'd at their fullgrowth. Image-Worſhip was eſtabliſhed by Law in the Eaſtern and Weſtern Churches, and Saint-Worſhip as our Author ſays truly, much uſed: But from the Beginning it was not ſo. Neither the Scriptures of the Old and New Teſtament, nor yet the pureſt Antiquity do at all authorize this Practice. Among thoſe excellent Prayers which we meet with in Holy Scripture, compoſed by Men divinely inſpired, we cannot find one directed to any Saint or Angel, nor any other Being whatſoever, but the only living and true God; but we may read in ſeveral Places, that both the Angels, and Saints while they were alive, have diſclaimed all Worſhip, when tendered to them, as not due to them; and after their Death we are aſſured that they cannot hear us. Conſonant to theſe Truths did the Church of Chriſt for above 200 Years believe and act, and not only make no Prayers to any Angel or Saint, as Irenæus teſtifies, but ſhewed a great Abhorrence of all ſuch Hereticks, as uſed ſuch a ſort of Worſhip. The firſt ſtep towards it was made by Origen, who advanced this Doctrine in the Church, that the Saints departed out of this Life, do carry along with them a Remembrance of the State and Condition of their Brethren, and out of their Love to them do carefully recommend them to God and pray for them. From this Perſuaſion, (which many learned from him) did the Chriſtians take occaſion to intreat their living Friends, who were eminent for Piety, that if they died before them, and ſo came firſt into Chriſt's joyful and happy Preſence, they would not forget to recommend them to God, who were left behind in a ſinful World: But yet no Saint was invoked or prayed to after Death many Years after this; for St. Jerome, Ambroſe, and Theodoret, unanimouſly acknowledge, that God alone is to be worſhipped and prayed to; and St. Auſtine expreſly ſays, Non ſit nobis Religio cultus hominum mortuorum; Let not the Worſhip of dead Men be any part of our Religion. But altho' there was no Invocation of Saints, yet many Doctrines and Practices were allowed and believed, which laid the Foundation of Saint-Worſhip, which was introduced ſoon after: As 1. it was held, that the Souls of the Martyrs were every where preſent, but eſpecially at their Tombs, where ſeveral Miracles were wrought. 2. Many of the eminent Fathers both for Learning and Devotion, made rhetorical Panegyricks of the Chriſtians deceaſed, wherein by Apoſtrophe's and Proſopopeia's they ſeemed to invoke Souls departed. Thus St. Jerome, in his Epitaph of Paula, ſaith, Farewel, O Paula, and by thy Prayers help the decrepit Age of him that honours thee. And ſo Nazianzen, in his Invectives againſt Julian, ſaith, Hear, O thou Soul of great Conſtantine, &c. 3. The Chriſtians in their Prayers, at the Commemoration of the Memories of the Martyrs, not only uſed many unwary Expreſſions, implying a ſort of Invocation of them, but did formally pray to God to grant them ſuch Bleſſings as they ſtood in need of, thro' their Intereceſſion; for ſo St. Auſtine ſays, We mention not them as though we prayed for them, but that they may pray for us. Theſe Doctrines and Practices, ſo prepared Mens Minds for the Invocation of Saints, that about the Year 600. St. Gregory inſerted Petitions to them in the publick Litanies among the Latins, as Petrus Gnapheus had ſome time before among the Greeks, and it was quietly received and allowed, and ſo continued to the times of Charles the Great, and downward till the Reformation, without any conſiderable Oppoſition: So apt are Men to cheriſh Will-worſhip.]

[(ii) Relicks——reverenced.] Although the Reverence of Bones and other Relicks of Saints ſeems as abſurd a Piece of Idolatrous Worſhip as the Heathens themſelves were guilty of, yet it was the firſt that crept into the Church through the Policy of Satan, which was effected by this Means: It pleaſed God, for the Teſtimony of his Doctrine and Truth, to work great Miracles by the dead Bodies of his Saints, in witneſs that they had been his Meſſengers, and Inſtruments of his Will: But that which was intended by God for the Good of Men and Converſion of Souls, became a Snare to lead them into Error; for their Admiration of the Vertue which God ſeemed to put into them, ſtirred them up not only to ſeek for them, and uſe them as Amulets and Remedies againſt all Evils and Diſtempers, but alſo made them give them a ſingular Reſpect and Veneration, as we may gather from St. Auſtine's Words, I know many that worſhip Graves, Images, &c. Indeed there was a Reſpect always paid to the Martyrs deceaſed, by the Chriſtians, by celebrating their Memories at their Tombs, upon the Anniverſary of their Martyrdom, and by beſtowing a neat and convenient Burial upon them; but it was never allowed by the Orthodox Fathers to give them a Divine Honour: Yea, St. Gregory ſays, That it is not lawful to bring the Bodies of the Saints into a publick View, or handle them with the Hands. 'Twas Satan's Subtlety to inſinuate Idolatry by an intemperate Devotion.]

[(kk) Prohibition of Marriage——to the fourth Degree of Conſanguinity; ſpiritual Affinity.] To avoid all inceſtuous Marriages, ſuch Canons as theſe, prohibiting Marriage within certain Degrees are very convenient to be impoſed, and ought to be obſerved: And tho' indeed this may ſeem too ſtrict, reſtraining ſuch Kindred from Marriage, as the Word of God it ſelf doth ſeem to permit, Lev. 18. being extended to the fourth Degree of Conſanguinity; yet 'tis better to prohibit ſomething in it ſelf lawful, where there is little or no Inconvenience conſequent upon it, than to permit a thing, which in Strictneſs, perhaps, is lawful, but is in appearance evil and ſcandalous, as a Marriage Conjunction of Perſons near a-kin, is commonly accounted. But as to ſpiritual Conſanguinity or Affinity, as it is no real Relation, ſo to hinder ſuch as are thus allied from Marriage is an Inſtance of Papal Tyranny and Uſurpation, no Perſons being really better qualified for Marriage together, than ſuch as are Brethren and Siſters in the Lord: So that though the Conſtitution for not marrying to the fourth Degree, is tolerable enough, yet the latter, ſince it may produce many Inconveniences among Men, deſerves no Regard nor Obſervation; and it is to be believed, that it had long ſince expired, had it not been much for the Advantage of the Papal Hierarchy, by creating an Abundance of Diſpenſations.]

The Celebration of Sundays was then very ſolemn. On this Day they did forbear all manner of ſervile Work, and Chriſtians were obliged to be preſent at Divine Service, which was ſolemnly perform'd: The keeping of publick Markets was prohibited on this Day. This is the Number of the Holy Days then kept, ſet down in the 158*th*. Chapter of the firſt Book of the Capitularies: The Feſtivals of Chriſtmas, St. Stephen, St. John the Evangeliſt, the Innocents, the Octave of the Lord, the Epiphany, the Octave of the Epiphany, the Purification of the Bleſſed Virgin, eight Days at Eaſter, the great Litany, the Aſcenſion, Whitſunday, St John Baptiſt, St. Peter and St. Paul, St. Martin and St. Andrew. As to the Virgin's Aſſumption, it is ſaid, We leave it out to enquire into it. Churches were built with as much Splendor and Magnificence as the Age would permit; they were deck'd and adorn'd, the Altars conſecrated and covered with Linen Cloath; the Service was performed with great Pomp. The Roman Way of ſinging was brought into the Churches of France, but they kept ſtill their own peculiar Way of ſinging. They took great care of the Church-Books and ſinging. Women were forbidden to come near the Altars; and Abbeſſes to give the Bleſſing, to make the Sign of the Croſs upon Mens Heads, and to give the Veil with the ſacerdotal Benediction. Simony was ſeverely forbidden. They made Laws againſt Uſury then, not only in Eccleſiaſtical, but Laymen. There were many Hoſpitals for the Poor and Sick. The paying of Tythes was become obligatory, and all ſorts of Perſons were conſtrained to pay them to Church-men. They were forbidden exacting any thing for the Sacraments, or for Eccleſiaſtical Offices. Church-Revenues were divided into three Parts; one Part was for the repairing of Churches, the other for the Poor, and the laſt for Churchmen. They began to oblige the Clergy of Cathedrals to live together canonically. They made divers Conſtitutions to keep Monks in order. They forbad to receive Children without the Parent's Conſent, and to veil Virgins before 30 Years of Age, and Widow-Women before the 30*th.* Day after their Husband's Deceaſe. They prohibited a ſort of Clerks, which wore the Religious Habit, and would live neither as Monks nor Clergymen. The Rectors of Country Pariſhes came from time to time to give the Biſhop an Account of their Conduct; and the Biſhop did alſo viſit his Dioceſs. Publick Penance was in uſe yet, but not with the ſame Rigor as in the former Ages. They granted Abſolution ſeveral times. They never denyed the Communion to dying People. Secret Confeſſions were frequent. They recommended frequent Communion. They adminiſtred yet Baptiſm by Immerſion, and only at Eaſter and Whitſuntide, unleſs in caſe of Neceſſity. Prayer for the Dead was very much practiſed. This is part of the Diſcipline contained in Charlemagne's Capitularies.

Charlemagne.

This is the Catalogue of this Emperor's Letters. A Letter to Offa King of the Mercians, in the Year 774. A Declaration for the Deſignation of Biſhopricks. A Letter to Faſtrade his Wife. Some Inſtructions given to Angilbert, going to Rome, anno 796. A Letter to Leo, ſent by Angilbert. Two Letters to Offa. A Fragment of a Letter againſt vicious Prieſts, directed to the Biſhops of France. A Letter to the Monks of St. Martin of Tours; wherein he enjoyns them to ſend back again to Theodulphus Biſhop of Orleans, ſome Clerks of Orleans, who had harboured among them. A Letter for the Reſtoration of Schools in Churches and Monaſteries. A Letter to Pepin, for the Peace of the Churches, and of thoſe who ſerve them. A Letter to the Biſhops of the Kingdom, written in 811. commanding them to inſtruct the Prieſts and the People in the Signification of the Ceremonies of Baptiſm: The Copy we have of it is directed to Odelbert; it was ſet forth by F. Mabillon, and is found, as well as the preceding, in the Collection of Capitularies of M. Baluzius. This Letter ſtirred up Amalarius, Jeſſe, and ſome other Biſhops to make ſome Treatiſes to explain the Right of Baptiſm. A Letter to Alcuin, about the number of the Works in the Year, among Alcuin's Works. A Letter which he made for a Preface to the Book of Homilies, made by Paul the Deacon, [and collected into one Volume by his Order] ſet out by F. Mabillon in the firſt Volume of his Analecta, pag. 25. Sigebert ranks Charlemagne among Eccleſiaſtical Writers, upon the account of this Work, which yet was none of his, but of Paul the Deacon of Aquileia. F. Mabillon hath moreover ſet forth, in the fourth Volume of his Analecta, an Epiſtle of Charlemagne, touching the Grace of the * Holy Ghoſt. Laſtly, we meet with ſeveral Letters more of Charlemagne, as Foundations, Donations, Privileges, &c. in the Collection of ſuch kind of Pieces.

[* Of the ſevenfold Spirit.]

But the two moſt conſiderable Eccleſiaſtical Works that have appeared under this Prince's Name, are the Letter written in his Name to Elipandus, Biſhop of Toledo, and the other Biſhops of Spain, againſt the Error of Felix, Biſhop of Urgel, which is at the end of the Council of Francfort; and the four Books called Caroline, againſt Image-Worſhip, and the Decree of the Nicene Council; Some attribute them to Ingilram, Biſhop of Metz, others to Alcuin, others would have us think them to be ſuppoſititious: But this laſt Pretenſion is unwarrantable, for, not to ſpeak of the Authority of Hincmarus, who cites them, and of ſeveral ancient Authors, which are found in Libraries, Pope Adrian's Anſwer to this Work ſhews it had been publiſhed in his time by Charlemagne's Order, and the Councils of Francfort and Paris are authentick Teſtimonies of the Truth of theſe Books; So that there can be no doubt but this Work is a kind of Manifeſto, containing the Sentiments of the French Church, publiſhed under the Name and by the Order of Charlemagne. We ſhall ſpeak more fully of theſe Works of Charlemagne, when we make the Hiſtory of the ſeventh Council, and of this of Francfort, where we will examine the Affair of Felix of Urgel, and the Sentiments of the Author of the Caroline Books touching Images.

ALCUIN.

Alcuin.

FLaccus, Albin, or Alcuin, born in England, Deacon of the Church of York, and the Scholar of Bede and of Egbert, was invited into France (anno 790.) by Charlemagne, who looked upon him as his Maſter, and ſhewed a great Eſteem for him. He had the Reputation of one of the moſt learned Men of his Age, in Eccleſiaſtical Matters. He inſtructed the French not only by his Writings, but moreover by the publick Lectures he read in the King's Palace and other Places. Charles gave him [the Government of] many Abbies, and at laſt charged him with the Care of the Canons of St. Martin of Tours: He died in this Society, anno 804.

This Author's Works were collected by Andreas [Quercetanus, or] du Cheſne, and printed at Paris by Cramoiſy in 1617.

They are divided into three Parts. The 1*ſt.* comprehends his Tracts upon the Scripture; the 2*d.* his Books of Doctrine, Diſcipline, and Morality; and the 3*d.* the Verſes, Letters, and Poems he made.

The firſt part comprehends the following Works. Queſtions and Anſwers about ſeveral difficult Paſſages of Geneſis, with an Explication of theſe Words, Let us make Man in our Image. An Expoſition of the penitential and gradual Pſalms, and of the 118*th. Pſalm*. A Treatiſe of the Uſe of Pſalms, with Prayers taken out of the Pſalms. An Office of the Church for the Year. A Letter upon what is ſaid in the Song of Songs, that there be ſixty Queens, and eighty Concubines. A Commentary upon Eccleſiaſtes, and ſeven Books of Commentaries upon the Goſpel of St. John. It is obſerved in the end of this part, that Alcuinus had laboured to correct the whole Text of the Vulgar Bible, by Charlemagne's Order, and that this Manuſcript Work is found in the Library of Vauxcelles, with ſome Verſes of Alcuinus upon this Work.

The ſecond part comprehends the following Treatiſes. A Tract of the Trinity, dedicated to Charlemagne, divided into three Books, wherein he handles with great Accuracy and Clearneſs ſome ſpeculative and ſcholaſtick Queſtions, concerning thoſe Myſteries, with twenty eight Queſtions and Anſwers about the Trinity. A Letter explaining what is Time, Eternity and an Age, &c. * A Tract of the Soul, directed to his Siſter Eulalia a Virgin. Seven Books againſt the Opinion of Felix, Biſhop of Urgel, who believed Jeſus Chriſt might be called the Adoptive Son of God, as to his humane Nature. A Letter upon the ſame Subject written to Elipandus, Biſhop of Toledo. Elipandus's Anſwer, in which he treats Alcuin very rudely, and having loaded him him with Calumny, cites ſome Paſſages of the Fathers, and the Church-Office, to juſtifie that Jeſus Chriſt may be called God's Adoptive Son, as to his humane Nature. Alcuin's Reply to Elipandus's Letter, divided into four Books. In the two firſt he anſwers the Authorities alledged by Elipandus; and in the two laſt he proves his own Opinion by Teſtimonies of the Fathers, and the Scripture. He forbears reviling Words, and deals with him with as much Moderation as his Adverſary hath expreſſed himſelf with Heat and Paſſion. At the end of theſe four Books, there is an Advertiſement of Alcuinus about the Original of Felix's Error, and the Retractation made of it; Elipandus's Letter to Felix; The Confeſſion of Faith he made after his Retractation; and a Letter of Alcuinus about the Queſtions that may be raiſed touching the Son of God. Theſe are the dogmatical Works contain'd in this ſecond part.

Alcuin.

[* In the Biblioth. Patrum it is attributed to Paulinus Biſhop of Aquileia but falſly.]

The firſt of the Works of Diſcipline is the Book of [the Divine] Offices, bearing Alcuinus's Name, but it belongs to a later Author, there being mention made there of Hilperick, who lived in the tenth Century; beſides, it contains ſeveral Obſervations of a lower Age than that Alcuin lived in.

The 2*d.* Work about Diſcipline, is Alcuin's Letter to Charlemagne, upon the Septuageſima, Sexageſima and Quinquageſima; and upon the Differences of the number of the Weeks of Lent, with Charlemagne's Anſwer upon the ſame Subject.

The 3*d.* is a Tract of Alcuin, directed to Adrian, upon the Ceremonies of Baptiſm, which are the ſame that are practiſed now, of which he renders moral Reaſons.

[*Ad Pueros S. Martini, i.e. To the Boys of S. Martin. D. Cave.]

The 4*th.* is a Letter * to the Clerks of St. Martin, to exhort them to confeſs their Sins.

The

Alcuin.

The 5th. is a Sacramentary, containing Maſſes for many Feſtivals of the Year.

Theſe Works are followed with three Homilies upon the Incarnation, the Virgin's Nativity, and the Feſtival of All-Saints. Theſe three Homilies are taken out of the Book of Homilies of Paul the Deacon, and it is not certain that they are Alcuin's.

The Life of Antichriſt follows, which is full of groundleſs Fancies. There is but one Work of Morality, which is of Virtues and Vices: The reſt are Works upon prophane Arts and Sciences. The Book of the 7 Arts is Caſſiodorus's Preface upon that Subject.

The laſt part of Alcuin's Works comprehends the following Books.

The Life of St. Martin of Tours, and a Sermon on his Death.

The Life of St. Vedaſtus of Arras.

The Life of St. Richarius, a Presbyter.

The Life of St. Wilbrord, Biſhop of Utrecht, in Proſe and Verſe, with an Homily for his Feſtival.

One hundred and fifteen Epiſtles, with the Fragments of ſome more, taken out of Engliſh Authors.

Poems upon ſeveral Saints.

A Poem upon the meeting of Pope Leo, and Charlemagne.

Divers Poems.

The Letters upon Eccleſiaſtical Matters are theſe.

The 2d. of which we have already ſpoken, about the difference of the number of the Weeks of Lent.

The 6th. upon theſe words of the Goſpel, Here are two Swords.

The 7th. of the manner of inſtructing the People in the Faith.

The 8th. in which he ſpeaks againſt a Letter written to him by Felix of Urgel, whom he calls Jocoſely, Felix infelix. But this was retorted upon him by Elipandus, who called him ſeveral times Albinus niger, Antiphraſius.

In the 13th. he ſpeaks of a Writing he had made againſt Felix of Urgel, and of a Dialogue of that Author between a Chriſtian and a Saracen.

The 29th. directed to Ofred, King of Northumberland, is full of Inſtructions very uſeful for Princes.

The 30th. contains ſome for a Queen that had retired from the World.

The 31ſt. is full of Advices to the Canons of Tours.

The 32d. to the Biſhop Adelbert and his Society, contains a commendation of the Life of the Canons Regular, and an Exhortation to follow it.

The 49th. contains the ſame ſort of Exhortations to the Friars of Wiremouth and Jarrow.

The 50th. to thoſe of York.

The 62d. to the Canons of St. Leger.

The 63d. is directed to Pope Adrian, to whom he writes very ſubmiſſively.

In the 69th. he exhorts the Canons of Lyons, to reject the Errors which are come from Spain, to follow the Tradition and Uſage of the Univerſal Church, to avoid the Additions made to the Creed, and the new Cuſtoms brought into the Service of the Church. He ſpeaks particularly of their Error, about the Adoption of the Son of God, and the Practice of ſome, who threw Salt upon Chriſt's Sacrifice. He maintains, that they ought to offer nothing but Bread, Water, and Wine; that the Bread ought to be very pure, without any mixture, made of Flour and Water. The laſt thing, he finds fault with, in the Uſages introduced in Spain, is, that they made but one Immerſion, calling upon the Three Perſons of the Trinity. He maintains againſt them the Uſe of the Triple Immerſion, and here he explains the Ceremonies of Baptiſm; he ſpeaks of the ſame thing in the 81ſt. Letter, where he does intimate, that there were ſome who dipped three times, repeating the Invocation of the Trinity at each time. He reprehends in this Letter, thoſe who doubted, whether the Souls of the Holy Apoſtles and Martyrs were received up into Heaven before the Day of Judgment. In the 71ſt. Letter he proves the neceſſity of Confeſſion.

The 72d. is to Pope Leo, whom he calls Vicar of the Apoſtles, Prince of the Church.

In the 78th. he commends the Monaſtick Life, and exhorts Monks to diſcharge the Duties of it.

The 97th. contains excellent Inſtructions about the Duties of a Biſhop.

He treats of Baptiſm in the 104th.

In the 106th. he anſwers the Queſtion put to him by Charlemagne, which is the Hymn that Jeſus Chriſt ſaid after his laſt Supper. He pretends, it was the words related by the Evangeliſts.

Since this Edition there have been printed ſome more of Alcuin's Works; as, a Commentary upon the Song of Solomon, at London in 1638, [by the care of Patrick Young.] An Abridgment of the Faith againſt the Arians, ſet forth [at Paris in 1630,] by F. Sirmondus, without the Author's Name, and attributed to Alcuin by F. Chiffletius, upon the Authority of ſome MSS. A long Confeſſion of Faith, divided into four parts, drawn out of the Fathers, publiſhed by F. Chiffletius, and printed at Dijon in * 1656, [but it is dubious whether it belongs to Alcuinus, or no.] A Diſcourſe of the Purification, which was without Name among St. Ambroſe's Works, and was reſtored to Alcuin by M. Baluzius, in the 2d. Vol. of Miſcellanea, p. 382. Two Letters ſet forth by M. Baluzius in the ſame place, [Tom. 1. p. 365.] the one directed to Charlemagne, upon the Price of Jeſus Chriſt's Death; the other to the Abbots and Monks of the Goths, upon the Unity of the two Natures in the Perſon of Jeſus Chriſt. There's in the ſame place a Capitulary, containing ſundry Moral Maxims directed to Charlemagne; but that Work ſeems to me unworthy of Alcuin. Twenty ſix Letters publiſhed by F. Mabillon in the 4th. Vol. of his Analecta, and a Poem, in which he laments the diſorders and looſeneſs of one of his Friends, under the Name of a Cuckow.

Alcuin.

[* 1654. Dr. Cave.]

The Learned are not all agreed, that the Confeſſion of Faith, ſet out by F. Chiffletius, is Alcuin's. The Author of the Office for the Holy Sacrament, in the Hiſtorical and Chronological Table of the Authors, hath propounded ſome difficulties about this Confeſſion of Faith, which might make one doubt, whether it be truly Alcuin's. He ſays, the two firſt parts of it are very excellent and precious; but there are many things taken out of the other Works of Alcuin, eſpecially the different Orations. That the third part does not ſeem to be coherent to the two firſt, there being ſeveral places in it copied out of them word for word; which probably an Author, whatever he might be, would not have done in the ſame Work. Beſides, that it is almoſt all of it taken from Pelagius's Confeſſion of Faith, and from the Book of the Eccleſiaſtical Doctrines, yet ſo, that the Pelagian and Semi-pelagian Expreſſions of thoſe Books are commonly left out in it; that there are alſo ſome places of it without any rational coherency: And above all, what he ſet in the end, to join it to the 4th. ſeems to have been added. That the 4th. part, in what it contains about the Euchariſt, is perfectly fine, but doubtleſs it ends in the firſt Chapter; all the reſt being but a Rhapſody of divers Orations. He confeſſes the Style of this laſt part, as well as of the firſt, does pretty well reſemble that of Alcuin, which is not always very pure and correct, but very quick and lively. He intimates, that altho' theſe four Words (Caro, Cibus, Sanguis, Potus,) which are found in St. Thomas's Proſe, are read there, the Thread of his Diſcourſe did ſo naturally lead him, to uſe them in that order, that one ought not to conclude, that this Work was made ſince St. Thomas's time. That the Style hath nothing Scholaſtical, yea, and that it hath ſome Expreſſions, which were not uſed ſince Berengarius, as that the Euchariſt is Chriſt's Body and Blood only for the Juſt. Laſtly, that in this 4th. part there are ſome places found in the †Book of Divine Offices attributed to Alcuin.

[† In a poſthumous Treatiſe, printed at Rouan, an. 1675.]

Daillæus hath taken affirmatively, what was ſaid but doubtfully by the Author Of the Office of the Holy Sacrament, and he adds new Conjectures, to ſhew that this Confeſſion was not Alcuin's.

The 1ſt. is grounded upon this, that in this Confeſſion of Faith ſome things are met with, which are taken word for word out of the Books of the Meditations and the Mirrour, falſly aſcribed to St. Auſtine, and compoſed ſince Alcuin's time, ſeeing, that of the Meditations, which is the ancienter, was written ſince St. Anſelm's time. The 2d. is grounded upon this Work's not being ſet down in the Index's of Alcuin's Works. The 3d. upon this Author's often copying himſelf, which an Author does not uſually do. Moreover he inſiſts upon this, that there is a place in this Book, which is found in the Book of Offices, attributed to Alcuin. Daillæus pretends, that this Author's Sentiments differ from Alcuin's. He ſays, that explaining the Creation of the World, he relateth the two Opinions related by Alcuin alſo in his Queſtions upon Geneſis, but prefers that which was diſapproved by Alcuin. He adds, that this Author believes the Real Preſence, which Sentiment he does not think to be Alcuin's; and that he looks upon the contrary Opinion as Heretical. Laſtly, He pretends that there be ſome things in this Work which do not agree with the Ninth Century; as when he complains of the infelicity of his Age, and ſpeaks of the Miracles whereby the Euchariſt had been repreſented under the ſhape of a Man. * F. Mabillon contrary-wiſe aſſerts the truth of this Work, chiefly upon the Antiquity of the Manuſcript, from which it is taken. He maintains the Characters to be of Charlemagne's time, or very near it; and tho' the ſole Teſtimony of a Man, as much converſant in theſe matters as he was, might be ſufficient, he joined to it the Atteſtation of many Learned Men. The Antiquity of this Manuſcript ſhews, that this Book is of Alcuin's time, ſeeing the Manuſcript it ſelf is of that time. 2dly. He notes, that the Ancient Title of this Manuſcript was written in Red, and that they only put Ink upon the Ancient Red Characters, which are to this effect; Albini Confeſſio Fidei.

Alcuin.

3dly. He proves that this Author is older than the School-Men, becauſe he does not ſpeak as exactly as they do of the Myſteries, that he always tranſlates ὁμοούσιος of the Greeks, by the word Co-eſſential, whereas the School-Men always ſaid Con-ſubſtantial. He taketh notice of the place, in which he varies from our way of ſpeaking of the Euchariſt. He adds, that this Author hath ſome Opinions which were not common, but in the eighth and ninth Centuries; as when he pretends, that Catechumens cannot be ſaved without either Baptiſm, or Martyrdom; that the Queſtion of the two Predeſtinations, which he treats of, was agitated in this Age; that all, that this Author ſays of himſelf, agreeth to Alcuin. Laſtly, To bring in a Witneſs, he ſays, that John Abbot of Feſcamp, who lived in the twelfth Century, hath cited ſeveral paſſages of this Treatiſe in a Book he made againſt Berengarius.

Having alledged theſe proofs of the Antiquity of this Book, he clears the difficulties; he ſays, it's no wonder, this Author ſhould have made Extracts of Pelagius's Confeſſion of Faith, ſeeing it was commonly cited in this time, and was look'd upon as a Work of St. Hierome. That it's leſs to be wondred at, that he ſhould be cited in the Book of Gennadius's Eccleſiaſtical Doctrines, ſeeing Adrian made no difficulty to alledge one Authority out of it. That the paſſages, which are found in this Confeſſion, are not taken out of the Book of the Meditations, and the Mirrour; but it is the Compilers of thoſe two Works, that have inſerted them in two places of Alcuin's Treatiſe, ſeeing the Manuſcript of this Work is doubtleſs older than the Author of thoſe other Treatiſes. And if this Confeſſion be not found in the Catalogues of Alcuin's Works, that's not to be wondred at, ſeeing all thoſe Liſts of Catalogues are imperfect; that it is an ordinary thing with the Authors of this Age, and with Alcuin, not only to tranſcribe other Mens, but their own Works alſo; that the Author of the Book of Offices did tranſcribe Alcuin's Confeſſion of Faith; that it's not true, that Alcuin's Opinions about the Euchariſt are different from this Author's; that he had Inſtances to prove, that Jeſus Chriſt hath appeared in the Euchariſt in the ſhape of a Man; that ſome Authors of the ninth Century, before the Birth and the Condemnation of Berengarius's Error, have condemn'd his Opinion as Heretical; that it's no Extraordinary thing for an Author, alledging in two places two different Explications of the ſame paſſage, to approve now the one, and then the other; that it were a more extraordinary thing, that two different Authors ſhould bring two like Explications of the ſame paſſage; that altho' Charlemagne's Age was more Learned than the tenth, yet Alcuin Expoſtulates the infelicity of that time, and the diſorders then in the Church, in the Works not doubted of, as in the 6*th*. Letter, and in his 271*ſt*. Poem. And therefore, that there's nothing in the Confeſſion of Faith, bearing his Name, that proves it not to be his. [Theſe Reaſons and Solutions, ſaith F. Mabellonius, make it probable, tho' not certain, that this Confeſſion of Faith is Alcuin's.] Alcuin's Style is neat and lively, he writes wittily, his Expreſſions are pure enough for his time, he handles things pleaſantly; one may ſay, he did not want Eloquence, no, nor Elegance neither.

ETHERIUS.

Etherius.

Etherius, Biſhop of Axume in Spain, and Beatus, Abbot and Prieſt, were ſome of the firſt that oppoſed Felix and Elipandus's Error: Theſe charged them with Eutychianiſm. It was to vindicate themſelves, and to convince their Adverſaries of the oppoſite Error, that they made 2 Books, in which they profeſs to hold the Doctrine of the Council of Epheſus, and reſiſt the Sentiment of their Adverſaries, contrary to their Doctrine. Theſe 2 Books are very much confuſed, and full of ſeveral idle uſeleſs Reflections, and divers Repetitions. They were printed in Caniſius's Antiquities, and in the laſt Bibliotheca Patrum.

Etherius.

PAULINUS of Aquileia.

Paulinus, &c.

Paulin, Biſhop of Aquileia, was preſent at the Council of Francfort, held in 794. There he encountred Felix and Elipandus's Error, about the Title of adoptive Son, which they attributed to Jeſus Chriſt; he made a ſmall Writing and three Books upon this Subject. Theſe Works are found among Alcuin's: They did formerly attribute to him the 7 Books of Alcuin againſt that Error. There is a Fragment yet extant of a Letter, directed to Heiſtulphus, who had killed his Wife, whom he ſuſpected of Adultery; he does moſt ſharply reprove that Lord, and lays a heavy Penance upon him. We may find alſo ſome Fragments of Paulinus of Aquileia, in the firſt Tract of the Miſcellanea of M. Baluzius [Tom. 1. p. 362.]

Paulinus, &c.

Laſtly, the Book of wholſome Inſtructions, which went a long while under St. Auſtine's name, was reſtored to Paulinus of Aquileia, in the laſt Edition of this Father's Works, upon the Credit of an old Manuſcript of M. Colbert's Library. It contains ſeveral uſeful Advices to lead a Chriſtian Life, and is of the ſame Style with the Advertiſement to Heiſtulphus. This Biſhop died about the Year 803. His Style is very ſimple, and no way elevated.

THEODULPHUS Biſhop of Orleans.

Theodulphus, &c.

Theodulphus, Abbot of St. Benedict upon the Loire, and afterward preferred to the Biſhoprick of Orleans, before 794. flouriſhed towards the end of this Century, and died towards 821. F. Sirmondus publiſhed this Biſhop's Opuſcula in 1646. [at Paris, with his own Notes.] The firſt and chief is his Capitulary, containing 46 Articles for the Inſtruction of the Prieſts of his Dioceſs. He diſcourſes with them of the Dignity of their State, and recommends to them the Care of their Flock, Diligence in Reading, Praying and Working; he enjoyns them, when they come to the Synod, after the Cuſtom, to bring along with them the Habits, Books and Veſſels, wherewith they perform their Functions, and 2 or 3 Clerks; to have a care, that the Bread, the Water and the Wine, wherewith they celebrate the Maſs, be very decent and proper; to make the Bread themſelves which is to be conſecrated, or cauſe it to be made in their preſence. He forbids Women to approach the Altar, whilſt the Prieſt is celebrating; and orders, that their Oblations ſhall be received in their Seats. He forbids Prieſts to celebrate Maſs by themſelves, without other Communicants. He prohibits putting any thing in Churches beſides the Sacred Veſtments, Veſſels and Books. He will not have any body to be buried within the Church, but Clergymen only, or Perſons of ſingular Piety. He prohibits Aſſemblies in the Church, for any other thing than Praying, and alſo Celebrating Maſs without the Church. He extends the Prohibition of Churchmen keeping Women at home with them, to the neareſt Relations. He forbids Clerks to go to the Tavern, and recommends to them Sobriety in the Feaſts they are invited to. He forbids Presbyters to take the Tythes belonging to their Brethren, or to ſollicit and entice their Clerks. He charges all Presbyters to baptize Children in caſe of neceſſity, whether they be of their own Pariſh or not. He forbids Presbyters and Laymen to convert Sacred Veſſels to prophane uſes. He would have Schools ſet up in Pariſhes, to teach Youth to lead a Chriſtian Life, of which he maketh an Abridgment; and all the Faithful to know the Lord's Prayer and the Creed. He exhorts them all to pray to God, at leaſt, twice in the Day. He enjoyns them to ſpend Sundays in Praying, and being preſent at the Divine Service, and prohibits all manner of Work but what is of neceſſity to dreſs Meat. He permits Travelling, provided they be preſent present at the Office. He charges the Laymen to be present at the first Vespers of Festivals, at Mattins, and at Mass; and would have them to be exhorted to the practice of Hospitality, to be deterred from false Oaths, Perjuries, false Witness; to be instructed in the Holy Scripture, to be reproved, to be admonished to be constant in Prayer. He exhorts Laymen to confess all their Sins, even those of Thought, and instructs the Presbyters how they ought to examine Sinners. He exhorts Men to the Works of Mercy towards others. He will have the People to be put in Mind of the Obligation laid upon Children to honour their Parents, and upon Parents to use their Children gently, and of the mutual Love they owe one another; that Merchants and Men of Business are to be remembred, that they should not mind their temporal Gain so much as Life Eternal; that the People must confess their Sins the Week before Lent, and then receive Penance, in order to their doing of it, during Lent. He marks out several ways of obtaining forgiveness of Sins, he recommends the exact keeping of the Lent-Fast, and the joyning of Almsgiving to Fasting. He will not have Men to break their Fast at the ninth Hour of Prayer, but to stay till the Hour of Vespers. He thinks it would be a great perfection to abstain from Eggs, Cheese, Fish and Wine; yet he allows infirm Persons and Labourers to use them. He will have all the Faithful to communicate on Sundays in Lent, except those which are suspended the Communion; and that all take the Sacrament on Holy-Thursday, on Easter-Eve and Easter-Day; that they abstain from the Use of Matrimony on Fast-days, and also some Days before the Communion; that they prepare themselves for this Holy Action by Almsgiving and good Works. That the Priests who say private Masses on Sunday, shall not say them publickly, lest they should take off the People from being present at the Mass in their Parishes. Lastly, he will have the People put in mind, that they should not eat, till they have been at the solemn Mass and the Sermon. Theodulphus.

There was published since an Addition to this Capitulary, containing a general Advertisement about such things as the Parsons ought to instruct the People in.

This Bishop wrote one Book more upon Baptism, directed to Magnus Archbishop of Sens, wherein he explains the Ceremonies of that Sacrament; and a Tract of the Holy Ghost directed to Charlemagne, which is nothing else but a Collection of several Passages of the Fathers, to shew that the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Father and the Son. He cites the Books of the Trinity, and the Creed under Athanasius's Name.

Authors.

Lastly, there are six Books of Theodulphus's Poems extant: The 1st. is a Piece directed to the Judges, to exhort them to do Justice. The 2d. begins with a Catalogue, in Verse, of all the Books of the Old and New Testament; both of those which were in the Old Canon, and those that have been received since: It contains also Poems for Palm-Sunday, and several other Poems. The 3d. contains an Elogy of Charlemagne, Pope Adrian's Epitaph, and Verses to several Persons. The 4th. Book contains Verses on the Fables, the Liberal Arts, Verses to Bishop Aiulphus and to Modoin, with some Verses of Modoin to Theodulphus. The 5th. contains Verses of Consolation upon his Brother's Death, a Description of the seven Mortal Sins, and an Exhortation to the Bishops; and the last, Verses upon different Points of Morality. F. Mabillon hath published [in his Analecta, Tom. 1. p. 376.] * some more of them, which were not in F. Sirmondus's Edition. Theodulphus was a good Man, very zealous for the publick Good, and none of the least Writers, nor of the unlearnedest of his Time. His Poems are very fine, and surpass his Prose.

LEO III. Bishop of Rome.

Leo III.

LEO III. was elected in the room of Adrian, January 28. 795. Presently after his Election, he sent Ambassadors to Charlemagne, to give him notice of it, and to carry him St. Peter's Keys and the City's Banner, and some other honourable Presents, praying him to send some of his Princes, to take the Oath of Allegiance of the Roman People. The King sent Angilbert, Abbot of the Monastery of St. Riquier, with some considerable Presents.

For all Leo had such a powerful Protector, yet he was assaulted (anno 799.) by a Faction of seditious People [headed by his Predecessor Adrian's Nephew] who fell upon him as he was going a solemn Procession, endeavoured to put out his Eyes and to cut out his Tongue, and dragged him into Prison in a Hall. It was found that he had not been maimed, as they thought. He fled into the French Ambassador's Lodgings, from whence he was conveyed to Spoleto, and thence he came to France, to King Charlemagne, who was then in Saxony. The King having heard his Complaints, sent him back again to Rome with the same Marks of Honour with which he had received him, and promised him, that he would soon come to do him Justice upon the Place: And, indeed, the next Year, having held his Parliament at Mentz, he went into Italy, both to take Cognizance of the Outrages done to the Pope, and to oppose the Designs of Grimaldus Duke of Beneventum. Being at Rome, he admitted Pope Leo to justifie and clear himself by Oath, there appearing no body to accuse him: After this, he brought those that were guilty of the Assault made upon him to Trial; they were condemned to Death, but the Pope obtained their Pardon. Leo, to acknowledge and requite so many Favours, as the Holy See had received from Charlemagne and his Progenitors, moved it to the People, to desire him for their Emperor, and crowned him on Christmas-day, in St. Peter's Church (anno 800) taking the beginning of the Year from January, and (anno 801) taking it from Christmas, according to the Authors of this Time. After the Ceremony ended, the Pope did adore the new Emperor; that is, he kneeled before him, and took the Oaths of Allegiance to him, and set up his Picture in publick, to the end that all the Romans might pay him this Duty.

Anno 804. Leo came into France to visit Charlemagne, and was made welcome by that Prince, who sent his Son to meet him, and came himself to receive him at Rheims, from whence he led him to his Palace at Cressy, and thence to Aix-la-Chapelle. After his Return to Rome, he enjoyed the Pontificate quietly till Charlemagne's Death: But (anno 815) there was another Conspiracy made against Leo, which he avenged so severely, that he put some of the Criminals to death with his own Hands. Lewis the Meek found fault with his Proceeding, as being disagreeable to his natural Lenity, and contrary to the Right of Sovereignty he had in Rome: He ordered Bernard King of Italy to go thither, and to enquire into the Truth; which he did. The Pope, on his part, sent Legates into France, to justifie himself. But the Romans were incensed against his Cruelty, that this Pope being sick, they seized on his Lands and plundered his Castles. He died May 23*d.* 816. Leo III.

There be 13 Letters of this Pope's extant among the Councils. [Tom. VII. p. 1111.]

The first is his Answer to Kenwolfe King of the Mercians, who had desired him to abolish the Archbishoprick of Lichfield, and to restore the Bishop of Canterbury to the Rights taken away from him by Offa and Adrian I. The Pope granted him his Request, and having commended the King and Athelard Archbishop of Canterbury, he subjected to his Jurisdiction all the Churches that had been taken from him. We have this Letter only upon the Faith of William of Malmsbury. The 2d. Letter of Leo is a Privilege of Exemption granted for a Chappel, built by Charlemagne, in Saxony, upon the Hill of Eresburgh. The 3d. is directed to Charlemagne: He complains that this Emperor had been informed, that he could send him no Commissioners which he would admit to inform of his Affair; he tells him, that it is a Calumny, and prays him not to believe it. In the 4th. he informs Charlemagne of the Treaty concluded between the Saracens and the Inhabitants of Sicily. In the 5th. he tells him what had passed in a Meeting of some Moors and Greeks. In the 6th. he acquaints him with the Death of the Emperor Constantine, killed by Leo's Order. The 7th. and the 8th. are Letters of Thanks, directed to the same Charlemagne. In the 9th. he solves some Questions upon the Scripture, propounded by Charlemagne. The 10th. is a supplicatory Letter, to pacify Charlemagne, who was incensed against him, and to persuade him of his Innocency. By the 11th. he asks him leave, to let a Bishop of the Isle of Grade, banish'd, stay in a Town of Italy. In the 12th. he complains, that Charles's Commissioners, who should have done him Justice, had done him Wrong. The 13th. is a Letter of Thanks to Riculphus, Bishop of Mentz. Leo's Letters are written with great Art, but with little Reference to Eccleſiastical Matters.

[* Lichfield was the first Bishop's See among the Mercians, founded by Oswy King of the Northumbers, An. 646. and made an Archbishoprick in 793. but by this Pope was despoiled of its Dignity. So Adulphus was the first and last Archbishop of it.]

Some Greek Authors against the Iconoclasts.

Authors.

HEre are some Authors, of whose Works we will speak more at large, when we treat of the Acts of the 7th. Council.

Tarasius, Photius's great Uncle, who from the Emperor's Secretary was made Patriarch of Constantinople (anno 785.) and died in 806. wrote a Circular Letter about Images; two Letters directed to Pope Adrian, and an Apologetick Oration upon his Election.

Epiphanius, Deacon of Catana in Sicily, recited a Panegyrick in the 7th. Council. Authors.

Basil of Ancyra offered a Confession of Faith to the same Synod.

Theodosius, Bishop [of Ammoriam] made a Writing upon the same Subject.

ELIAS Cretensis.

Elias.

THis Author made some Commentaries upon St. Gregory Nazianzen's Works, which are printed, in the second Volume of that Father's Works. He hath done the same also upon the Works of some other Greek Fathers, which are found Manuscript in Libraries. He wrote Answers to Dionysius the Monk's [8] Questions, which are extant in Greek and Latin, in the fifth Book of the Greek and Roman Law [1. 5. P. 194.] Elias.

George Syncellus and Theophanes.

George, &c.

GEorge Syncellus from the Patriarch Tarasius, made a Chronicon [from the Creation of the World to the Reign of Maximinus and Maximinianus, anno 300.] which hath been continued by Theophanes a Monk [to the Reign of Leo Armenicus, anno 813. They are printed the one at Paris, 1652. and the other 1655.] George, &c.

A Conference held in 601. in England, in Worceſterſhire, between Auguſtine the Monk, and the Britiſh Biſhops.

A Conference held in 601.

AUGUSTINE the Monk, had inſtructed the Engliſh, and converted their King Ethelbert; and having a mind to unite the Britains to the Roman Church, he invited their Biſhops and Doctors to a Conference. When they were come to it, he exhorted them to endeavour unanimouſly the eſtabliſhment of Religion. Theſe Britains did not keep Eaſter at the ſame day with other Churches, and had ſeveral practices differing from them. They ſtood in the defence of them ſtoutly; and Auguſtine, ſeeing he could not prevail with them to leave them, they ſay, he propoſed to them, to bring a ſick Man in, and on either ſide to pray for his Health, and to follow the Uſages and Doctrines of thoſe that ſhould heal him. They brought in a blind Man, and the Britains having tryed in vain to reſtore him to his Sight, they affirm, that Auguſtine reſtored him by his Prayers. This Miracle did ſhake the Britains: But they ſaid, they could regulate nothing, without being acquainted with their Brethrens mind, and they required a Synod might be kept, which was granted to them. Seven Britiſh Biſhops met there, and the ableſt Monks of their Monaſtery of Bangor. Auguſtine propounded three things to them: 1. To keep Eaſter the ſame day with the Roman Church. 2. To baptize according to the practice of the ſame Church. 3. To preach the Goſpel to the Engliſh, promiſing them the toleration of their other Practices, if they would yield theſe three Points. They would not, and went away very much offended, for that he did not come to meet them, when they came to him. Upon that refuſal, Auguſtine told them, that ſince they would not have Peace, they ſhould have War; and that they ſhould be ſlain by thoſe to whom they would not preach Life. That was executed accordingly. The King of the Engliſh declared War againſt them, and defeated them in a bloody Fight, in which he put to the Sword above 1200 Monks of the Monaſtery of Bangor, who were come to the Army of the Britains, to pray for God's aſſiſtance upon them. This relation is taken out of the ſecond Book of Beda's Church-Hiſtory, Chap. 2. Sigebert marks the ſame Facts in his Chronicle; and ſome Hiſtorians do accuſe Auguſtine the Monk of having had a hand in the Maſſacre of thoſe poor Britains, who did not deſerve ſuch hard uſage, by reaſon they maintained their ancient Cuſtoms, and the Liberties of their Churches, without deviating from the Catholick Faith.

The Council of Toledo held under King Gondemare, in 610.

Of Toledo.

THIS Council was made up of Fifteen Biſhops of the Carthaginian Province, who owned the Archbiſhop of Toledo for their Metropolitan, and promiſed ſubjection to him. King Gondemare cauſed this Conſtitution to be put in execution, and gave out a Declaration, which was ſubſcribed by the Biſhops of the other Provinces of Spain, wherein he decreed, that the Biſhop of Toledo ſhall be acknowledged Primate or Metropolitan of the whole Carthaginian Province, and enjoyns all the Biſhops of this Province to obey him. He obſerveth there, that the Country of Carpetonia is not a Province but part of the Carthaginian Province; and that as the other Provinces of his Kingdom, viz. Luſitania, Bætica and Tarraconenſis, have each of them but one Primate, the Carthaginian likewiſe muſt have but one; according to the Canons and the ancient Uſage.

The Council of Egara, under King Siſebut, held in the year 614.

Of Egara.

THE Biſhops of the Province of Tarraco, confirmed in this Council the Decree made in that of Hueſca, concerning the Celebacy of the Clergy. The Town, where it was kept, was in the Province of Tarraco, but it is unknown, at preſent, under the name of Egara. M. Baluzius hath made a ſhort Diſſertation, in which he aſſerts, that Egara was in the place, where is now a little Town, named, Terraſſe in Catalonia, within four or five Leagues of Barcelona, in the Biſhoprick whereof it is found. He proves it, 1. By the Situation of that Caſtle, which agreeth to that of Egara, which ſtood between Barcelona and Girona. 2. Becauſe in the ancient Terriers or Maps, Egara and Terracia are ſpoken of, as ſtanding in the ſame place. 3. Becauſe in a Letter of Raimondus of Barcelona, of the year 1112. it is obſerved, that the Pariſh of Terraſſe ſtands in the place, where the Church of Egara formerly ſtood.

Of Egara.

The fifth Council of Paris.

Of Paris.

THIS Council met in 615. called by Clotharius the ſecond, then in Poſſeſſion of the Kingdoms, which did belong to Theodebert and Theodorick; therefore it was made up of a great number of Biſhops. It is obſerved in the end of the Canons of this Council, that they had been ſubſcribed by 79 Biſhops; but we have not their Names, neither is it certain, whether they were preſent in it. If this number of Biſhops met there, it was the moſt numerous Council that ever was held in France. It made 15 Canons of great importance.

By the 1ſt. it is ordered, that the ancient Canons ſhall be kept; that for the future, a Biſhop being dead, he that ſhall be choſen by the Metropolitan, who is to ordain him, by the Biſhops of the Province, and by the Clergy and the People of the City, ſhall ſucceed him; and that Ordinations made either by Force, Faction or Bribery, or without the approbation of the Metropolitan, and the conſent of the Clergy and the People, ſhall be declared null.

The 2d. Canon forbids Biſhops to chuſe their Succeſſors. It forbids alſo providing them Succeſſors, unleſs they be altogether unable to govern their Church and Clergy.

The 3d. imports, that if a Clerk, of what Quality ſoever he be, deſpiſing his Biſhop, have Recourſe unto Princes, great Lords, or to ſome other Protectors, no Body ſhall receive him before he obtains his Biſhop's Pardon: and that if any Body keeps him, after Warning given him from the Biſhop, he ſhall be puniſhed according to the Eccleſiaſtical Laws.

The 4th. declares that no (a) Secular Judge ſhall judge or condemn any Presbyter, Deacon or Clerk, nor any of thoſe that belong to the Church, without acquainting the Biſhop with it; and that if any Body attempts to do it, he ſhall be ſeparated from the Church, till he amends and acknowledges his Fault.

[(a) No Secular Judge ſhall judge, &c.] The Devotion of the Emperors, in the more ſerene Times of the Church, when Kings became nurſing Fathers to Chriſtianity, granted ſeveral Immunities and Privileges to the Clergy. Conſtantine the Great freed the Church of Carthage from paying Taxes, leſt it being impoveriſh'd thereby, God's Worſhip ſhould be interrupted or hindred. And afterward, about the Year 536. Juſtinian ordained, that in cauſes merely Civil, the Biſhops ſhould hear and determine of the Caſes of the Monks and Nuns, as alſo of all their Clergy, unleſs the Matters under deciſion were too difficult for the Biſhop in which caſe they were commanded to go to the Civil Judges. Theſe Imperial Grants did the Biſhops (as Patrons of the Eccleſiaſtical Franchiſes) confirm and eſtabliſh by ſeveral Canons in this and ſeveral other Councils; and that the Secular Judges might not dare to break in upon theſe Privileges, they back'd them with Anathema's and Excommunications, and ſo might warrantably enough do, ſo long as the Laws of the Empire ſtood in Force: But for the Clergy to ſtand upon ſuch Exemptions as theſe, and claim them upon the Account of their Order, as the Clergy of the Romiſh Communion now do, is both contrary to Scripture and the Practice of the purer Times of Chriſtianity: For before Juſtinian's Time the Biſhop's ordinary Juriſdiction was but a Power of Enquiry and Reſtraint for violating and corrupting the Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline.]

By the 5th. all ſorts of Perſons are forbidden to ſeize, either by an Order from the Prince, or by Authority from a Judge, or in any other manner whatſoever, on the Eſtate left by the Biſhops, or other Clerks, whether they belong to the Church, or be their own. It is ordered, they ſhall be kept and preſerved by the Arch-deacon and the Clergy: they are excommunicated that ſhall ſeize on them; and it is ſaid, they are to be looked upon as Murderers of the Poor.

The 6th. forbids Arch-deacons, yea, and the Biſhops themſelves, to appropriate to themſelves, after the Death of Abbots, Presbyters, and other Clerks, miniſtring in the Churches, the Moveables belonging to them, under pretence of taking them for the Biſhop or the Church.

The 7th. orders, that the Revenues given to maintain the Church Fabricks, ſhall be managed by the Biſhops, Presbyters and other Clerks, ſerving thoſe Churches according to the Intention of the Donor; and that, whoſoever ſhall take away any part of them, he ſhall be cut off from the Church, till he hath made Reſtitution.

The 8th. forbids Biſhops to challenge to themſelves the Goods, Churches, or Clerks of other Biſhops, although the Kingdom or Province had been divided; and thoſe that ſhall do ſo, it deprives them of thoſe charitable Duties which their Brethren uſe to pay them, till they have reſtored what they have taken, and made Reſtitution of the Fruits.

The 9th. renews the Conſtitution made in the ſecond Council of Lyons, held in 570. whereby it was ordered, that the laſt Wills of Biſhops, Presbyters and other Clerks, who bequeath Legacies to Churches, ſhall be executed, tho' their Teſtaments were not in due Form.

The 10th. Canon renews the Conſtitution, whereby a Biſhop, being at Variance with another Biſhop, is bound to apply himſelf to the Metropolitan; and he that applieth himſelf to a Secular Judge, is deprived of Communion with the Metropolitan, until he gives an account of his proceeding in the next Synod.

The 11th. ſeparateth from the Communion, until the Point of Death, ſuch Monks and Nuns as go out of the Monaſtery, which they had choſen for their Abode, if being warned of it, they refuſe to return: but if they return to it, and make an humble Satisfaction, the Euchariſt may be given them.

The 12th. Canon excommunicates the Virgins or Widows, who do marry, after having put off the Secular Habit, to lead a Religious Life at home.

The 13th. prohibits Marriage with the Brother's Widow, the Wife's Siſter, the Daughters of two Siſters, the Uncle's Widow by the Father's and Mother's Side, and with a Maiden that hath taken a Religious Habit. It excommunicates thoſe that contract ſuch Marriages, till they ſeparate themſelves.

The 14th. imports, that the Jews are not to ſue for the Coſts of Recovery of Money from Chriſtians; and if any of them ſhould obtain them, he ought to be baptized, with all his Family.

To this Council is annexed Clotharius's Edict, containing the Confirmation of the foregoing Canons. Nevertheleſs, there be ſome of them, to which he hath ſubjoyned Modifications and particular Conditions. To the Canon concerning Biſhops Ordinations, it adds that if the Perſon elected be found worthy of it, he ſhall be confirmed by Order from the Prince; and that a Court-Officer may be choſen, if he be a deſerving and learned Man. To the Canon forbidding Biſhops to go to Court, it adds, they may go thither, to obtain ſome Favour, and upon what account ſoever they ſhall go thither, if they return with the Prince's Letters, they are to be excuſed. As for the Inhibition of Clerks applying themſelves to Secular Judges, it excepts from it Criminal Matters, into which Secular Judges are appointed to enquire, calling the Biſhops to them. It excepts likewiſe Matters concerning the Publick, which the Biſhop and the Secular Magiſtrate are appointed Judges of. It adds ſome other Ordinances about Civil Matters.

[(b) Not conſtrain any Churchmen to ſerve the Publick.] It hath been the Wiſdom of all Ages and Nations, but principally of the Chriſtian Church, to exempt their Clergy from Publick and Civil Employments and Offices, that they might with the greater Care and Diligence attend the Service of God, which this Council endeavours to preſerve.]

Diod. Sic. Euſeb. hiſt. Eccl. l. 10. c. 7.

The

A Council held in France, about the ſame Time as the former, of which the Place is unknown.

Of France.

THE ſame Manuſcript, where this Council of Paris is found, contained the Canons of another Council, of which we know neither the Place nor the Year.

The 1*ſt*. orders the Execution of the Canons of the Council of Paris.

The 2*d*. prohibits conſecrating Altars in the Places where Corpſe are buried.

The 3*d*. orders, that Monks ſhall obſerve their Rule, and live in common, under the Government of an Abbot or a Superior.

The 4*th*. prohibits baptizing in Monaſteries, celebrating Maſſes for Secular Perſons deceaſed, and burying the Dead, without the Biſhop's Leave.

The following Canons to the 8*th*. are wanting, the Manuſcript being defective in that place.

The 8*th*. forbids Clerks to have Women in their Houſes, excepting their Siſter or Aunt.

The 9*th*. confirms the Right of Sanctuaries for Churches, and prohibits taking away by force thoſe that fly into Churches.

The 10*th*. Canon is wanting.

The 11*th*. prohibits depriving Abbots or Archprieſts of their Eccleſiaſtical Function, unleſs they be guilty of ſome Fault, that deſerveth it, as alſo advancing them to thoſe Dignities, with the Proſpect of ſome Reward: It prohibits, moreover, making a Layman Archprieſt. Of France.

The 12*th*. forbids Presbyters and Deacons to marry, upon pain of being turned out of the Church.

The 13*th*. prohibits entertaining thoſe that are excommunicated by their Biſhop; and that they may be known, it orders the Biſhops, that excommunicated them, to acquaint the neighbouring Towns and and Churches with it.

The 14*th*. decrees, That Freemen, having ſold or engaged themſelves, out of neceſſity, ſhall be reſtored again to their former ſtate, giving back the Price they had taken for their Engagement.

The 15*th*. Canon is imperfect: The next are loſt; nay, it is not known how many there were of them.

The ſecond Council of Sevil.

Of Sevil.

[* Al. Siſebulus a King of Spain, of the Gothiſh Race.]

THIS Council was held under King * Siſebut, in November 619. and made up of ſeven Biſhops, of the Province of Bætica, the Preſident whereof was Iſidore Biſhop of Sevil. Several Eccleſiaſtical Affairs were treated of there, which are related in the Acts of this Council.

In the 1*ſt*. Action was received the Petition preſented by Theodulphus, Biſhop of Malaga; wherein he complain'd, that his Dioceſs, having been ſpoiled by the Wars, was become a Prey to the neighbouring Biſhops, who had invaded it. It is ordered, that all the Churches, formerly belonging to him, ſhall be reſtored to him, all Right of Preſcription notwithſtanding, becauſe none ſuch is to be alledged when Hoſtilities are the Ground of the Poſſeſſion.

In the 2*d*. Action they named Deputies to compoſe the Difference between the Biſhop of Aſtigi and that of Corduba, about a Church which they both claimed to belong to their Juriſdiction, and to be within the Limits of their Dioceſs. The Council orders, that Deputies ſhall firſt of all examine the Limits of the Dioceſs, and then the Poſſeſſion; and that if it be of thirty Years ſtanding, the Preſcription ſhall take place in the behalf of the Poſſeſſor.

The 3*d*. Buſineſs debated in this Council, is concerning a Clerk of Italica, who having left his own Church, went to that of Corduba. They took from thence the Opportunity to renew the Canons, forbidding Clerks to leave their own Churches to go to others.

The 4*th*. Conſtitution is againſt the unlawful Ordinations, made at Aſtigi, where ſome Perſons that had married Widows had been ordained Clerks, their Ordinations are declared null, and they are forbidden to be raiſed to the Order of Deacons.

In the 5*th*. place they depoſe a Presbyter and two Clerks, of the Church of Egabro, who had been irregularly ordained, the Biſhop having ſore Eyes, had only laid his Hands on them, whilſt that a Presbyter did bleſs them. They declare they would have puniſhed that Presbyter for his boldneſs, if he had been alive ſtill.

The 6*th*. Deliberation is concerning a Presbyter of Corduba, unjuſtly condemned by his Biſhop: He is reſtored again, and Biſhops are generally forbidden to depoſe a Prieſt or a Deacon, unleſs their Cauſe was examined in a Council. They are excommunicated, That condemn them without Examination, by a Tyrannical Power, and not by Canonical Authority; or that advance ſome out of Favour, and debaſe others out of Hatred or Envy, and condemn them upon light Suſpicions. They add, That a Biſhop alone may indeed confer the Dignity of a Presbyter or a Deacon, but he alone cannot take it away from them to whom he hath given it. This is an excellent Inſtruction for Biſhops. Of Sevil.

The 7*th*. Conſtitution is made about the Permiſſion which Agapius, Biſhop of Corduba, had given to ſome Presbyters, to ſet up Altars and conſecrate Churches, in the Biſhop's Abſence. The Biſhops ſay, they do not wonder that ſuch a Biſhop had granted ſuch Licences, becauſe he was ignorant of the Church-Diſcipline, having been raiſed all on a ſudden to the Sacerdotal Dignity: But they prohibit that Practice for the future, declaring, that altho' Presbyters have ſeveral Functions common with the Biſhops, there be ſome forbidden them by the Eccleſiaſtical Laws, ſuch as the Conſecration of Prieſts, Deacons and Virgins, the Erection of an Altar, the Bleſſing of the Unction: That they cannot conſecrate an Altar or a Church, nor confer the Holy Ghoſt by the Impoſition of Hands on the baptiz'd, nor on Heretick Converts, nor conſecrate the Holy Chriſm, nor anoint the Fore-head of the baptiz'd therewith, nor ſo much as reconcile a Penitent in a publick Maſs, nor ſend Circular Letters: That all theſe things are forbidden to Presbyters, becauſe they have not the ſupreme Degree of the Sacerdotal Dignity, which by the Authority of the Canons is appropriated to Biſhops only. They add, that Presbyters are not permitted to enter into the Baptiſtry, nor to baptize before the Biſhop, nor to reconcile Penitents without his Order, nor to conſecrate the Body and Blood of Chriſt, to preach, to bleſs or ſalute the People, in the preſence of the Biſhop.

The 8*th*. Deciſion is againſt ſuch a Man of a Church, as having been ſet at Liberty by his Biſhop, became diſobedient. It is ordered, he ſhall be deprived of his Liberty, by reaſon of his Diſobedience.

The 9*th*. Conſtitution imports, that the Stewards of Churches ought not to be choſen out of the Laity, but the Clergy; and that the Biſhops ſhall not manage Church Revenues without the aſſiſtance of the Steward.

The 10*th*. Conſtitution confirms the Monaſteries founded in the Province of Bætica, and forbids Biſhops, upon pain of Excommunication, to ſeize on their Poſſeſſions, and to ſpoil them.

The 11*th*. grants to the Monks the Management of the Eſtate, belonging to Monaſteries of Religious Women, upon condition that they ſhall dwell severally; and shall have no familiarity with them, they shall not see them, they shall speak with the Superior only, and that in the Presence of Witnesses. Of Sevil.

The 12*th*. Business was, the Conversion of a Bishop of Syria, of the Sect of the Acephali, who coming into the Council, and denying there were two Natures in Christ, and maintaining the Godhead was passible in him, was convinc'd of the Truth, and converted by the Arguments of the Bishops of this Assembly.

In the last definition of this Council, it is proved, that there are two Natures in Christ, united in one only Person. Of Sevil.

These Constitutions are subscribed by Isidore Bishop of Sevil, and by the Bishops of Elvira, Asidonia, Astigi, Italica, Tuca, Malaga and Corduba. This last, who was charged with Ignorance in the Council, was not Agapius but Honorius, who probably did succeed him.

The Council of Rheims, under Sonnatius.

Of Rheims. FLodoard relates, that Sonnatius, Bishop of Rheims, held a Council of about forty Bishops, which made several Constitutions, whereof he inserted the Extract in his History.

By the 1*st*. it is order'd, that no Body shall appropriate to himself what the Church hath invested him in as Tenant or Trustee, how long soever his Possession be.

The 2*d*. forbids the Cabals of Presbyters and Clerks against their Bishops.

The 3*d*. confirms the Canons of the Council of Paris, held under Clotharius.

The 4*th*. orders, that the Pastors of Churches shall carefully seek out Hereticks, to convert them.

The 5*th*. prohibits rash Excommunications, and gives to the Provincial Council Authority to judge of the Validity of the Excommunication.

The 6*th*. forbids Secular Judges to impose upon Clerks publick Taxes, or to lay any Penalty upon them, without the Bishop's Consent. Bishops are enjoyned to correct Clerks, and forbidden to admit into the Clergy, without the Prince's or the Judge's Leave, those that are entrusted with the Care of the Revenue of the King's Lands.

The 7*th*. threatens to excommunicate those that shall violently take from the Church the Criminals fled into it (a). It orders, that before they be delivered, they shall take an Oath from them, into whose Hands they are delivered; that they shall not put them to Death, nor maim them, nor rack them; and that none shall be suffered to go out, before he hath promised to do Penance for his Crime.

[(a) The 7th. threatens to excommunicate those that shall violently take from the Church the Criminals fled into it.] The Original of this Privilege, allowed by the Heathens, and afterward by the Christians, to their Temples or Churches, was certainly taken from the Divine Constitution, given to Moses, to erect six Cities of Refuge in the Jewish Nation, though not altogether conformable to it; nor of so beneficial an use; for Moses made the Cities only a Refuge, and that for such Man-slayers alone as had killed their Neighbours unawares; but the Heathens made their Temples, and that for all manner of Wickednesses, for so Livy says of the Asylum erected by Romulus at Rome: Asylum aperuit, quo quisquis perfugerit ab omni noxa liberatus esset: And so Herodotus speaks of Hercules's Asylum at Athens. These Refuge-Temples were afterward much increased among the Heathen, and at length, about the Year 300. came to be in use among the Christians; for they thought it a shame that the Temples of the Heathen Gods should enjoy so great a Privilege, as to be Refuges for the Oppressed, and the Christian Temples should be destitute of it: Whereupon they were made such by the Edict of Theodosius and Valentinian, and also by the Canons of the Councils. But although such Grants might be of very good Advantage among Christians, being kept within the Bounds of the first Institution, to be a Protection for the Innocent and Oppressed; yet as they have been, and still are, abused in the Roman and other Churches, being made a Refuge for Murderers, Rebels, and other enormous Criminals, they are grievous both to the Church and all Civil Societies, and have been complain'd of, as such, by many eminent Lights of the Church, in the several Ages of it.]

The 8*th*. is against them that contract incestuous Marriages: It does excommunicate them, if they do not separate themselves, and declareth that they are to be deprived of their Places and Estates, till they have separated themselves. Of Rheims.

The 9*th*. declareth, that Men ought to have no Converse with one guilty of wilful Murder, unless he committed it in his own Defence, and does not grant him the Viaticum, that is to say, the Absolution, but only at the Point of Death.

The 10*th*. condemns those that keep to themselves the Goods given by their Parents to Churches or Monasteries.

The 11*th*. forbids Christians to sell Christian Slaves to the Jews or Pagans.

The 12*th*. forbids Clerks to go out of their own Dioceses, without Letters from their Bishop.

The 13*th*. forbids Bishops to sell or alienate Church-Lands.

The 14*th*. puts to Penance those that imitate the Superstitions of Pagans.

The 15*th*. forbids to receive the Accusations of Slaves, and does not permit an Accuser, who could not prove the first charge, to alledge any other.

The 16*th*. excommunicates those that shall seize on Church-Goods, after the Bishop's Death.

The 17*th*. is against those that would enslave free-born Persons.

The 18*th*. forbids Clerks to go to Law without their Bishop's Consent.

The 19*th*. forbids to put in Lay-men for Archpriests in Parishes. It permits only to ordain him a Clerk, who is an Elder among the Laity.

The 20*th*. orders, that what shall be bestowed upon the Bishops by Strangers, shall belong to the Church, except those things given by a Feoffment of Trust.

The 21*st*. excommunicates those that seize on Church-Lands.

The 22*d*. deprives ab Officio, the Bishops who shall break the Holy Vessels, unless it be in extreme Necessity, and to redeem Captives.

The 23*d*. prohibits ravishing of Widows or Virgins consecrated to God.

The 24*th*. excommunicates Judges, that shall despise the Canons, or violate the Prince's Edict, given at Paris.

The 25*th*. imports, that he that is ordain'd Bishop ought to be a Native, and chosen by the Votes of the People and the Bishops of the Province, and approved by the whole Council; that those that shall not be thus ordain'd, shall be turned out of their See; and the Bishops that have ordained them, shall be suspended ab Officio, for three years.

These are all the Canons of this Council, which was held about 630. There are 21. more attributed to this Council; but it is evident they are much posterior to it: They are not related by Flodoard.

The fourth Council of Toledo.

Of Toledo. THis Council was assembled in 633. by King * Sisenand. The Archbishops of Sevil, Narbon, Merida, Braga, Toledo and Tarragona were present in it, together with 53. of their Suffragan Bishops, and 7. Presbyters, Bishop's Deputies. The Assembly was held in the Church of Leocadia.

[Siseranda* the 22*d*. King of the Gothish Race.]

The Council begins with a larger Confession of Faith than the ordinary Creeds, chiefly about the Incarnation. The Procession of the Holy Ghost from the Father and the Son is establish'd there. Of Toledo

Then the Bishops declare, that as they have but one Faith, so they judge it fit, that they should have but but one Diſcipline, and obſerve the ſame things in the Celebration of Divine Service.

Council V. of Toledo.

The 3*d*. Conſtitution is concerning Provincial Councils: It decrees, that ſeeing they cannot eaſily be aſſembled twice in the year, they ſhall hold one every year, the 16*th*. of May, in what Town the Metropolitan ſhall pleaſe to appoint; that all thoſe that have any Matters againſt the Biſhops or the Magiſtrates, and great Lords, ſhall bring them to that Tribunal, and what ſhall be adjudged by the Synod ſhall be executed by the King's Officer: that in caſe there be any Matter of Faith, or any Affair concerning the Good of the whole Church, they ſhall call a General Synod of the Provinces of Spain and France.

In the 4*th*. Canon they ſettle the Form or Order of keeping the Council. In the Morning, the Porters having turned the People out of the Church, muſt ſtand at the Door they are to come in at; that the Biſhops are to enter in firſt, and then the Presbyters, and at laſt the Deacons they ſhall ſtand in need of: that the Biſhops ſhall ſit down in the Form of a Circle, and the Presbyters behind them: that the Deacons ought to ſtand up before the Biſhops: that they ſhall alſo bring in ſome Notaries to read or to write. Then the Doors being ſhut, the Archdeacon ſhall ſay aloud, Pray ye: that one of the eldeſt Biſhops ſhall pray aloud, the reſt being proſtrate: this Prayer being ended, the Archdeacon ſhall ſay, Riſe up: then he ſhall read the Canons, ordering the holding of Provincial Councils, and the Metropolitan ſhall invite all them that have any Matter, to propound it: that they ſhall end that which is propounded before they begin another: that if any of them that are without hath any thing to propound, he ſhall acquaint the Metropolitan with it, who ſhall relate it to the Council; that he ſhall be brought in, freely to propoſe what he hath to ſay: that the Council ſhall not end till all Matters be diſpatch'd, and that none of the Biſhops ſhall go away, before it be finiſhed.

The 5*th*. decrees, that the Metropolitans ſhall write to one another three Months before the Epiphany, to agree together about the Day on which Eaſter is to be kept; and then they ſhall acquaint the Biſhops of of their Provinces with it, to avoid the Differences which happen'd in Spain about Eaſter-day, becauſe of the ſeveral Tables.

The 6*th*. Canon contains a large Paſſage of St. Gregory, touching the Liberty of baptizing with one or three Immerſions, according to the Uſe of the Place.

The 7*th*. Canon determines, that the Paſſion ſhall be preached on Good-Friday, and the People ſhall beg aloud the Pardon of their Sins, that the Faithful being purified by the Compunction of Repentance, may celebrate the Reſurrection-Sunday, and receive the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Chriſt with a clean and pure Heart.

The 8*th*. prohibits breaking the Faſt of Good-Friday before Sun-ſet, excepting only Children, Aged, and Sick Folks.

The 9*th*. orders, that on Eaſter-eve they ſhall bleſs the Lamp and the Taper. Some Churches of France did not obſerve this Practice, wherefore they are enjoyn'd to obſerve it for the future.

In the 10*th*. they are reproved, who never ſaid the Lord's Prayer but on Sunday. They prove, by the Teſtimonies of St. Cyprian, St. Hilary, and St. Auguſtine, that this Prayer is to be ſaid every Day; and judged this Practice ſo neceſſary, that they threaten to depoſe the Clerks, that ſhall omit ſaying that Prayer every Day in their publick or private Office. This ſhews, that Clerks did even then recite their Office in private.

The 11*th*. Canon prohibits ſinging Hallelujah during the whole Lent, becauſe it is a time of Mourning, as well as the Kalends of January, in which they abſtain from Fleſh, as in Lent, to feed only on Fiſh and Herbs. It is obſerv'd, that ſome did likewiſe abſtain from drinking Wine: In former time, Abſtinence from Wine was as ſtrictly commanded as Abſtinence from Fleſh.

Council IV. of Toledo.

The 12*th*. Conſtitution decrees, that the Laudes ſhall not be ſaid after the Epiſtle, but after the Goſpel. Theſe Laudes are ſome Verſes which they recited before the Offertory.

The 13*th*. rejects the Opinion of thoſe, who believed, that the Hymns of Humane Compoſition, made in the Praiſe of the Apoſtles and Martyrs, were not to be recited, as not being drawn out of the Canonical Scriptures, nor authorized by Tradition. They obſerve, that if it were not lawful to recite any thing in the Divine Service, but what is from the Scripture, they ſhould retrench the moſt part of the Maſſes, Prayers, Collects, Recommendations, and moſt of the Prayers ſaid in the Confirmation.

The 14*th*. orders, that the Song of the three Children in the Furnace ſhall be ſung in the Pulpit, at the Maſs, on Sundays and Holy Days.

The 15*th*. orders, that, in the End of the Pſalms, they ſhall not only ſay, Glory be to the Father, but Glory and Honour be to the Father.

In the 16*th*. it is obſerved, that ſome do not ſay the Gloria after the Reſponſes, becauſe it agrees not with what was ſaid. Gloria is to be ſaid when the Subject is joyful and cheerful, and the beginning of the Reſponſe to be repeated when it is ſad and mournful.

The 17*th*. Canon pronounces Excommunication againſt them that will not receive the Revelation of St. John, as a Divine Book, or that will not read it in their Churches, from Eaſter till Whitſunday, in the time of Divine Service.

The 18*th*. orders, that after the reciting of the Lord's Prayer, and the mingling of the Bread with the Wine in the Cup, they ſhall bleſs the People before the Diſtribution of the Sacrament of Chriſt's Body and Blood. It ſays alſo, that Prieſts and Deacons ought to receive the Communion at the Altar, the reſt of the Clergy in the Choir, and the People without the Choir.

The 19*th*. forbids advancing to the Prieſthood the following Perſons; them that have been convicted of any Crimes, or that having confeſſed them, have done Penance publickly.

Them that have been Hereticks, or baptiz'd in an Herely, or rebaptiz'd.

Them that have made themſelves Eunuchs, or have loſt ſome of their Limbs.

Them that have had many Wives, or have married Widows, as alſo thoſe that have had Concubines.

Thoſe of a ſervile Condition.

Neophytes, Laymen, or thoſe that are entangled in Buſineſſes.

The Ignorant and Unlearned; thoſe that are not yet 30 years old, and have not paſſed through the Eccleſiaſtical Degrees.

Them that ſeek to be ordained by Bribery, or to buy that Dignity.

Thoſe that are choſen by their Predeceſſors.

Thoſe that have not been choſen by the People and the Clergy, nor approved by the Metropolitan and the Provincial Synod.

That he that hath all theſe Qualifications, is to be conſecrated on a Sunday, by all the Biſhops of the Province, or at leaſt by three Biſhops, with the Conſent of the others, in the preſence and by the Authority of the Metropolitan, and in the place which he ſhall chuſe.

The 20*th*. forbids making any Perſons Deacons before 25. years of Age, and Presbyters before 30.

The 21*ſt*. recommends to Biſhops a chaſte and innocent Life, that they may offer the Sacrifice with Purity, and pray to God for others.

The 22*d*. exhorts them, not only to keep a pure Conſcience, but moreover, to have a care of their Reputation, and to have always in their Chambers ſome Perſons of probity with them, which may bear Witneſs of it.

Council IV. of Toledo.

The 23*d*. enjoyns the ſame thing to the Presbyters and Deacons, that do not live with the Biſhop.

The 24*th*. commands, that young Clerks ſhall dwell all together in the ſame Hall, under the Conduct of an Elder.

The 25*th*. recommends to Biſhops the Knowledge of the Holy Scripture and the Canons.

The 26*th*. ſhews, that the Presbyters, put into Pariſhes, ought to receive from the Biſhop a Book, containing the Service of the Church, and inſtructing them in the manner of adminiſtring the Sacraments, and when they come to the Council or in his Viſitation, they ought to give an account to the Biſhop, how they celebrate Service and adminiſter Baptiſm.

The 27*th*. that the Presbyters and Deacons put into Pariſhes, are to promiſe to their Biſhop, that they will live regularly and orderly.

The 28*th*. that, if a Biſhop, a Presbyter, or a Deacon, have been unjuſtly condemned, and their Innocency be acknowledged in a ſecond Synod, they cannot be what they were before, till they have received before the Altar, and from the Biſhop's hands, the Degrees which they were fallen from. If it be a Biſhop, he ſhall receive the Stole, the Ring, and the Staff; If a Prieſt, the Stole, and the Chaſuble; If a Deacon, the Stole, and the Albe; If a Subdeacon, the Chalice, and the Patine, or Cover of it; and ſo of the other Degrees, which ſhall receive again what was given them at their Ordination.

The 29*th*. is againſt the Clerks, who conſult Diviners, or uſe Sorcery. It is ordered they ſhall be depoſed, and ſhut up in Monaſteries, to do Penance the reſt of their Life.

The 30*th*. forbids Biſhops bordering upon the Enemies of the State, to receive any order from Strangers.

The 31*ſt*. forbids Biſhops to be Judges between Princes and their Subjects, who are accuſed of High-Treaſon, till they have promiſed to pardon the guilty.

The 32*d*. warns the Biſhops not to ſuffer the Magiſtrates and Men of Power to do unjuſtly, and oppreſs the Poor, to reprove them, if they perceive them to do ſo; and when they will not amend, to complain to the King.

The 33*d*. forbids Biſhops to take to themſelves above the third part of the Revenues of Churches founded in their Dioceſs, tho' it leaves them the whole Adminiſtration thereof.

The 34*th*. appoints, that between the Biſhops of the ſame Province, thirty years poſſeſſion ſhall be a valid Title to keep the Churches, which they poſſeſs in the Dioceſs of another, but not between Biſhops of different Provinces.

The 35*th*. puts in an Exception as to Churches newly built, and orders, that, altho' the old Church belongs to him who enjoy'd it, thirty years ſince, notwithſtanding the Church newly built ſhall belong to the natural Biſhop of the place where 'tis built.

The 36*th*. appoints the Biſhop to viſit every year the Churches of his Dioceſs; and if he cannot do it, to commit the doing of it to ſome Prieſts and Deacons of known probity.

The 37*th*. declares, that Men are bound to pay what they promiſed to give, for the performing ſome Eccleſiaſtical Service.

The 38*th*. imports, that ſeeing Presbyters are bound to aſſiſt the Poor, if it fall out, that they who have bequeathed ſomething to ſome Church, be brought to Miſery, they or their Children, that Church is bound to help them.

The 39*th*. forbids Deacons to take place of the Prieſts, and to place themſelves in the higheſt place of the Choir, whilſt the Presbyters ſtand below.

The 40*th*. forbids Deacons having two Stoles; yea, and having one of divers Colours, or embroidered with Gold.

The 41*ſt*. enjoins all Clerks to ſhave the whole Crown of their Heads, leaving but a ſmall Tuft of their Hair in the form of a round Circle, or a Crown.

Council IV. of Toledo.

The 42*d*. and 43*d*. forbid Clerks to dwell with Women, not related to them, and only permits them to live with their Mother, Siſter, Daughter, and Aunt.

The 44*th*. appoints, that Clerks marrying Widows, divorced or debauched Women, ſhall be ſeparated from them by their Biſhop.

The 45*th*. that Clerks taking up Arms ſhall be put to Penance in a Monaſtery.

The 46*th*. that a Clerk found robbing Sepulchres, ſhall be expelled out of the Clergy, and put to Penance for three years.

The 47*th* declares, that agreeably to King Siſenand's Order, the Council decrees, that Clerks ſhall be free from all publick Offices.

The 48*th*. orders, that all Biſhops ſhall have Stewards to manage their Churches Revenue.

The 49*th*. imports, that a Monk may be made ſo by the Devotion of Parents, or his own Profeſſion; that all they that are made Monks by either of theſe two ways, ſhall be obliged to continue Monks, and that they are not permitted to return to the World.

The 50*th*. gives Clerks leave to become Monks.

The 51*ſt*. forbids Biſhops abuſing Monks, but it preſerveth them the Right which the Canons give them, to exhort Monks to a good Life, to inſtruct Abbots, and other Officers; and to correct what is done amiſs, contrary to the Rule.

The 52*d*. orders, that Monks leaving their Monaſtery, to return into the World, ſhall be reproved, and put to Penance.

The 53*d*. prohibits that ſort of religious Perſons, which are neither Clerks, nor Monks; and enjoyns Biſhops to put them to the choice of either of thoſe profeſſions.

The 54*th*. declares, that they, who being in danger of Death, undergo Penance without confeſſing any particular Sin, but ſaying only in general, That they are Sinners, may be prefer'd to the Eccleſiaſtical State; but it is not ſo with them who have confeſſed ſome grievous Crime.

The 55*th*. commands, that thoſe that yielded to undergo Penance, and prepared themſelves to do it, ſhall be obliged to finiſh it, and ſhall be conſtrained by the Biſhop to it. But if they leave it, and refuſe to take it again, they ſhall be condemned as Apoſtates, as alſo the Virgins or Widows which have put on the Religious Habit, if they return to the World and marry.

The 56*th*. diſtinguiſheth two ſorts of Widows, ſome Secular, who do not leave the Secular Habit, and others Religious which take a Religious Habit, and declares, it is not lawful for theſe to marry.

The 57*th*. forbids to conſtrain the Jews to turn, becauſe Converſion ought to be wholly free; yet as for thoſe who were forced to turn under King Siſebut, they will have them bound to continue Chriſtians, becauſe they have received Baptiſm, the Holy Chriſm, and Chriſt's Body and Blood.

The 58*th*. pronounces Excommunication againſt thoſe that ſhall favour, or uphold the Jews againſt Chriſtians.

The 59*th*. orders, according to King Siſenand's advice, that thoſe Chriſtians that turned Jews, ſhall be conſtrained to return to the Church; and if they have circumciſed their Children, they ſhall be ſeparated from them.

The 60*th*. decrees, that the Children of the Jews ſhall be taken away from them by force, to be Chriſtianly brought up in Monaſteries.

The 61*ſt*. that the Children of the Jews, who are become Chriſtians, ſhall not be deprived of their Fathers Eſtate, who are condemned for Apoſtaſie.

The 62*d*. enjoyns Chriſtians to avoid Commerce with the Jews.

The 63*d*. orders, that Chriſtian Women married with Jews, ſhall be ſeparated from their Husbands, if they will not be converted.

The

Council IV. of Toledo.

The 64*th*. that the Testimonies of Christians, that turned Jews, shall not be received.

The 65*th*. forbids the Jews bearing publick Offices.

The 66*th*. forbids them having Christian Slaves.

The 67*th*. forbids the Bishops, who give nothing to the Church, to set at liberty the Slaves of their Churches.

The following Canons to the 75*th*. contain some other Constitutions concerning the Slaves and the Free-Men, which are now out of date.

The 75*th*. and last Canon, is concerning the Fealty due to Kings, and the security of their Persons. The Bishops detest there the Crime of those that violate the Faith they owe to their Prince, and make a long discourse to create an abhorrence of it: And to prevent any such thing in Spain, they pronounce a solemn Anathema against all those that shall conspire against Kings, that shall attempt against their Life, or usurp their Authority; after having repeated that Anathema thrice, with terrible Execrations, they promise Loyalty and Fidelity to King Sisenand, and his Successors, and at the same time they beseech him to govern his People with Justice and Piety, not to judge alone in Criminal Causes, but to cause them to be examined and judged by the ordinary Judges, reserving to him the Right of Pardoning. They pronounce Anathema against the Kings that should abuse their Authority to do Evil, and exercise a Tyrannical Power. And they do particularly declare, that by the consent of the whole Nation, King Suintilan, who deprived himself of the Kingdom, and laid down his Authority, by confessing his Crimes, is fallen from his Dignity, his Honour, and his Lands, as well as his Wife, his Children, and his Brother.

[*Suintilla the 2d.]

The fifth Council of Toledo, held in 636.

Of Toledo.

THIS Council was held in the same place with the former, but it was composed but of twenty two, or twenty three Bishops of several Provinces of Spain.

The first Canon decrees, that Litanies, that is to say, Publick Prayers, shall be made Yearly during the space of three Days, which shall begin the next Day after the 13*th*. of December, yet so, that in case one of the three Days should happen to be a Sunday, they shall be put off to the next Week.

The 2*d*. Canon confirms all that was done in the Council held under Sisenand, and decrees, that they shall be subject to King Cinthila, his Successor.

[*Suintilla the 2d.]

The 3*d*. pronounceth Anathema against those that shall endeavour to usurp the Crown against the consent of the whole Nation, and without being chosen by the Nobility.

The 4*th*. forbids consulting Diviners about the Death of the Prince.

Of Toledo.

The 5*th*. prohibits speaking ill of him.

The 6*th*. decrees, that the favours of Princes shall continue and be enjoyed after their Death.

The 7*th*. That in all Councils shall be read the Constitution made in the 4*th*. Council for the safety of Kings.

The 8*th*. confirms the Princes power to grant Favours.

The 9*th*. contains a Thanksgiving to King Cinthila, and some Prayers and Vows in his behalf.

This Council is backed with King Cinthila's Declaration, confirming the Decree of the Council about the publick Prayers of December, accompanied with Fastings, and ordering, that, during that time, there shall be a cessation from Work and Business.

The sixth Council of Toledo, held in 638.

Of Toledo.

THIS is a National Council composed of above Sixty Prelates of Cinthila's Kingdom. They begin with a Confession of Faith pretty long, which is contained in the first Canon.

The 2*d*. confirms the use of the Litanies, or Publick Prayers, appointed in the preceding Council.

In the 3*d*. they give the King thanks for driving the Jews out of his Kingdom, and for suffering none but Catholicks in it. They order, that the succeeding Kings shall hereafter be bound to take Oath, That they shall Tolerate no Infidels, and pronounceth Anathema against those that shall break that Oath.

The 4*th*. declareth, that Persons guilty of Simony are unworthy of being advanced to Holy Orders, and those that shall be found in Orders, to be fallen from their Degree, as well as those that have ordained them.

The 5*th*. decrees that those that shall receive any thing of the Church Revenue, shall hold it but by a precarious Title, and shall subscribe an Instrument testifying the same, that they may not plead Prescription.

The 6*th*. is against Men, Maidens, and Widows, leaving the Religious Habit, to lead a Secular Life; they are ordered to be shut up in Monasteries.

In the 7*th*. the same thing is ordered against those who submitted themselves to publick Penance.

The 8*th*. explains a Constitution of St. Gregory, whereby they suppose he gave leave to a Young Man, who underwent Penance upon fear of Death, to cohabit with his Wife, till he was come to an Age in which it were easy to live Chastly. They say, that if he, or she, who hath not received Penance, dieth before he, or she, which submitted to Penance, have practised Continence, it shall not be lawful for the survivor to marry; but if he, or she, that was not put to Penance survive, he may marry again.

Of Toledo.

The 9*th*. ordains, that such as are made Free by the Church, shall at the Death of every Bishop renew the Declaration, that they depend on the Church.

The 10*th*. that these Free-Men shall do Service to the Church.

The 11*th*. forbids receiving Accusations, before Examination had, whether the Accusers be Persons to be allowed of as such.

The 12*th*, 13*th*, and 14*th*. are against Rebellious Subjects, and in the behalf of the good Loyal Servants of the Prince.

The 15*th*. maintains the Donations of Princes to Churches.

The 16*th*. provides for the Security of the Life and Estate of Kings Children.

The 17*th*. provides for the Safety of the Prince himself, and forbids all attempts against his Person and Crown, as long as he lives; and orders, that after his Death none shall invade the Kingdom by Tyranny, and none but a Noble Goth, and worthy of that Dignity, shall be advanced to the Sovereignty.

The 18*th*. Canon does yet renew the Inhibition of attempting against the Person of the Prince.

The 19*th*. is but a Conclusion of the Council.

The seventh Council of Toledo.

Of Toledo.

[*Vidisuindus.]

THIS Council was held in 646, under King Chisdavind, and composed of twenty five Bishops.

The 1*st*. Constitution is against Perfidious and Disloyal Clerks.

Of Toledo.

By the 2*d*. A Bishop, or a Presbyter, is permitted to finish the Celebration of a Mass begun, if he that is Officiating falls ill, and is not able to hold out to the end; but it forbids Presbyters, upon pain of Excommunication, to leave the Holy Myſteries imperfect, or to celebrate after having taken the leaſt Food.

The 3*d*. renews the Canon of the Council of Valentia, about the Biſhops Funerals.

The 4*th*. is againſt the greedineſs of ſome Biſhops of Gallicia, oppreſſing the Parſons of their Dioceſs. They are forbidden by that Canon to take above two Pence per Annum of each Church in their Dioceſs; to bring along with them in their Viſitations more than five Perſons, and to ſtay above a Day in any Church.

The 5*th*. Canon appoints, that Hermits, or Recluſes, that are ignorant, or whoſe Life is not Virtuous enough, ſhall be ſhut up in Monaſteries; that thoſe only ſhall be let alone, who are commendable for their Holineſs, and that for the future, none ſhall be admitted to that Profeſſion, but ſuch as have learned the Religious Life in Monaſteries.

Council VII. of Toledo.

The laſt Canon imports, that the next Neighbouring Suffragans of the Arch-Biſhop of Toledo ſhall come every Month into that Town, except in Vacation, and Vintage-times.

The Council of Lateran againſt the Monothelites under Martin I.

Of Lateran.

THE Myſtery of Chriſt's Incarnation, which ſince Neſtorius's Quarrel, had always afforded matter of diſpute between the Biſhops, produced a new one in this 7*th*. Century, which for a time divided the Eaſtern and Weſtern Churches. The buſineſs was no more about the Queſtion of the two Natures and one Perſon in Chriſt, the Authority of the Councils of Epheſus and Chalcedon, which had decided thoſe two Points, was received by all the Patriarchs; and they that would not agree upon thoſe Truths, were look'd upon as Hereticks, both in the Eaſt and the Weſt. But about the Year 620, they ſtirred up another Queſtion, whether they ſhould ſay, that there were two Operations, and two Wills in Chriſt, as two Natures are ſaid to be in him. Theodorus Biſhop of * Pharan was the firſt, who expreſſing himſelf upon that Queſtion, maintained, that the Manhood in Chriſt was ſo united to the Word, that, tho' it had its Faculties, it did not act by it ſelf, but the whole Act was to be aſcribed to the Word, which gave it the motion. Cyrus Biſhop of Phaſis, embraced that Opinion, and expreſſed himſelf about it in the ſame manner, denying there were two Operations in Chriſt, and affirming, that they were reduced to one principal Operation. Not that they denied, that Humane Actions and Paſſions were in Chriſt; but they affirmed, that they were to be attributed to the Word, as to the principal Mover, whoſe Inſtrument only the Man was. As for inſtance, they confeſſed, it was the Manhood of Chriſt that ſuffered Hunger, and Thirſt, and Pain; but they aſſerted, that Hunger, Thirſt, and Pain, were to be aſcribed to the Perſon of the Word. In a word, that the Word was the Author and Mover of all the Operations and Wills of Chriſt. Sergius, Patriarch of Conſtantinople, was of the ſame mind; and the Emperor Heraclius embraced that Party ſo much the more willingly, becauſe he believed it to be a means to bring the Jacobites, Severians, and Acephali, back again to the Unity of the Church, by yielding to them part of what they contended for, and to oppoſe them more eaſily, by overthrowing the Foundation of one of their ſtrongeſt Objections. And indeed, having had a Conference in the Year 622 with a Severian Biſhop of Armenia, named Paul, he maintained againſt him, that there were two Natures in Chriſt: but he confeſſed, that they ſhould acknowledge but one Operation only in him; and the better to confirm that Queſtion, he made a Declaration, directed to Arcadius Arch-Biſhop of Cyprus, againſt this Paul, and the reſt of the Acephali, whereby he did forbid them to ſay, that there were two Operations, or two Wills in Chriſt.

[* A City of Arabia, Petræa.]

In another Conference, which Heraclius had with Athanaſius, the Univerſal Patriarch of the Jacobites in 629. He promiſed him to make him Patriarch of Antioch, if he would receive the Synod of Chalcedon, and own two Natures in Chriſt. But he asked the Emperor, whether they ſhould ſay, that the Operations of Chriſt were double, or ſimple. Hereupon Heraclius conſulted Sergius of Conſtantinople, and Cyrus, who did both agree, that they ſhould own in Chriſt but one only Deivirile Operation.

Cyrus having thus declared himſelf Head of a Party, was ſoon transferred from his ſmall Biſhoprick to the Patriarchate of Alexandria. Being raiſed up to that See, he reunited the Theodoſians, or Jacobites, by Publiſhing ſome Articles, among which there was one that aſſerted one only Operation Theandrick or Deivirile, in Chriſt's Perſon; that Reunion being made in June 633. Cyrus acquainted Sergius with it. Sophronius, who was afterwards Patriarch of Jeruſalem, oppoſed it ſtoutly, and going away from Alexandria, came to Conſtantinople to expoſtulate the matter with Sergius, whom he found in the ſame Opinion with Cyrus. But this latter feigning himſelf to be a Peace-maker, writ to Cyrus to forbear ſaying, there was one or two Wills in Jeſus Chriſt, and enjoined the ſame thing to Sophronius, ſeeking thus to extinguiſh that diſpute. Sophronius requeſted a Writing from Sergius upon that Subject, and Sergius gave him a Letter, a copy whereof he ſent to Honorius Biſhop of Rome, together with the Letter he writ to him about that Queſtion, in which he related to him that diſpute, ſet him down the ſtate of the Queſtion, let him know how he did think fit to proceed in it, to ſtifle it in its Cradle, and deſired him to write to him what he thought of it.

Of Lateran.

Honorius anſwered him, that he did approve of the Caution he uſed in it, and the ſuppreſſing of the terms of one or of two Operations, declaring he did own two Natures in Chriſt, and yet that he confeſſed but one Will in him.

In the mean while, Sophronius, being advanced to the See of Jeruſalem, notwithſtanding the conſent of the other Patriarchs, wrote a long Synodical Letter to Sergius, to maintain the Doctrine of the two Wills, and before he died he ſent Stephen, Biſhop of Dora, to Rome, vigorouſly to defend this Opinion, and to get the contrary Opinion condemned.

After Honorius's Death, Heraclius the Emperor publiſhed a Declaration intituled, Ecthefis, or An Expoſition of the Faith, in which he enjoined ſilence about that Queſtion. Sergius, the true Author of that Expoſition, approved it, and died ſoon after in 639, leaving Pyrrhus for his Succeſſor, who was of the ſame Opinion.

It was not ſo with Honorius's Succeſſors. Severian, who ſate but a little while upon the Roman See, refuſed to approve the Ecthefis, and John IV. did plainly condemn it. At laſt Heraclius died in March 641. His Son Conſtantine lived but four Months, and Conſtans ſucceeded him the ſame year. Then Pyrrhus was expelled, as we have ſaid, out of Conſtantinople, and Paul put in his place, who was not leſs zealous for the Party of the Monothelites than Pyrrhus. Pope Theodorus endeavoured to re-eſtabliſh him, becauſe he had feigned that his Mind was altered, and demanded that the Ecthefis ſhould be aboliſhed: but Conſtans ſet out a Declaration [which he called The Type] like that of Heraclius, whereby he did command ſilence about the Queſtion of the two Operations and the two Wills in Chriſt. This was publiſhed at Conſtantinople in 648. and in the beginning of the next year Pope Theodorus died.

Martin

Council of Lateran.

Martin I. of that Name ſucceeded him, and was ordained in July: He called a Council at Rome preſently, about the Queſtion of the two Operations and the two Wills. It was held in Conſtantine's Church: 105 Biſhops of Italy were preſent at it, among whom were Maximus, Patriarch of Aquileia, Deuſdedit, Biſhop of Calaris, and a Biſhop and a Presbyter, Deputies of the Archbiſhop of Ravenna.

It was finiſhed in five Actions, Seſſions or Conferences.

Act. i. The 1*ſt*. was held October 5*th*. 649. Theophylact, the firſt of the Notaries, having deſired Pope Martin, to tell the Aſſembly the occaſion of his calling this Synod, and what the matter was, he ſaid, it was to oppoſe the Novelties and Errors publiſhed by Cyrus, Biſhop of Alexandria, and Sergius Biſhop of Conſtantinople, and defended by Pyrrhus and Paul, Succeſſors of Sergius: that eighteen Years ago, Cyrus had publiſhed nine Articles in Alexandria, pronouncing Anathema againſt thoſe that ſhould not hold them, wherein he aſſerted one Operation only in Chriſt, as well of his Godhead as of his Manhood; that Sergius had approved this Doctrine in a Letter to Cyrus, and had confirmed it ſince, by making, under the Emperor Heraclius's name, an Heretical Expoſition of Faith. He adds, that it follows from this Doctrine, that there is but one Will and one Nature in Jeſus Chriſt, becauſe the Holy Fathers have acknowledged, that when there was but one Operation, there was alſo but one Nature. Hereupon he cites the Teſtimonies of St. Baſil, St. Cyril and St. Leo, proving that the two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt have each of them their ſeveral Operations. He charges Sergius with having oppoſed this Doctrine, by ſetting out Heraclius's Expoſition of the Faith, and confirming it by his approbation, and that of other Biſhops. As for Pyrrhus and Paul, he ſays, they have made things worſe; the firſt, by obtruding that Expoſition of Faith upon many, whom he drew into his Opinion by Fear or Kindneſs; that he had indeed renounced that Error, and preſented a Retractation to the Holy See; but he ſoon relapſed into his Hereſie. In fine, that Paul had not only maintained this Error in a Letter written to the Holy See, but had alſo oppoſed the ſound Doctrine by writing; and that, after Sergius's Example, he had moved the Emperor to make a new Expoſition of Faith, called the Type, which did overthrow the Doctrine of all the Fathers, by forbidding to profeſs one or two Wills in Jeſus Chriſt; that he had even ventured to take away the Altar conſecrated in the Church of St. Placidia, and hindered the Apocriſiarii of the Roman Church to offer thereon, or to receive the Sacraments; that he had perſecuted them and ſeveral Biſhops, Defenders of the Orthodox Faith, cauſing ſome to be banished, others impriſoned, and ſome abuſed; that Complaints of theſe things having been made at ſeveral times to the Holy See, and to his Predeceſſors, they uſed Letters, Advertiſements, Threatnings, and Proteſtations, to repreſs thoſe Novelties, and re-eſtabliſh the ſound Doctrine; but all theſe means having proved in vain, he did think it neceſſary to call them together, to the end, that having produced and examined the Writings of thoſe Hereticks, and heard the Charges brought againſt them, they might paſs their Judgment for the confirmation of the Faith, and rejecting of Error. Maurus, Bishop of Ceſena, and Deuſdedit, Deacon of Ravenna, told them, in the Archbiſhop of Ravenna's name, that having heard the ſame things from his Apocriſiarii, he deſigned to come to the Council; but being hindered from coming, he had ſent them, as his Repreſentatives, and had given them a Letter, which they required to have read, and inſerted in the Acts. It is directed to Martin, to whom he gives the Title of (a) Univerſal Biſhop: After having excuſed himſelf for not coming in Perſon to the Council, he declareth that he rejects the Expoſition of Faith, defended by Pyrrhus, and all that was done in confirmation of it; and profeſſeth to believe two Operations and two Wills in Jeſus Chriſt.

[(a) Univerſal Biſhop.] This Title, which is here given to Martin, Biſhop of Rome, doth not import, as is pretended by the Church of Rome, the abſolute Supremacy of that Biſhop over the whole Church, but only the large extent of his Juriſdiction above all other Biſhops, as a great Patriarch. For we find the like Titles given to the other Patriarchs, not only by private Perſons and Councils, but even by the Biſhops of Rome themſelves. For thus the 5*th*. Council of Conſtantinople ſalutes Mennas, and John their Patriarchs; OEcumenico Patriarchæ, Joanni—— Mennæ. To the Univerſal Patriarch John—Mennas. So Nicephorus calls the Patriarch of Alexandria, Judex Univerſi Orbis; the Judge of the whole World. And the Emperor Juſtinian writing to Epiphanius, Patriarch of Conſtantinople, thus ſuperſcribes, Epiphanio OEcumenico Patriarchæ; to Epiphanius the Univerſal Patriarch. Nor doth the Biſhop of Rome himſelf look upon it ſo much his own peculiar Title, but that he thinks it due to Theraſius, Biſhop of Conſtantinople, writing thus to him: Theraſio Generali Patriarchæ Adrianus ſervus ſervorum Dei; to Theraſius the general Patriarch, Adrian the meaneſt of God's Servants. So evident is it, that this great Title of Univerſal Biſhop imports no ſuch Pre-eminence as is pretended, and tho' the Title was commonly uſed, yet it was thought an Antichriſtian Uſurpation in John Biſhop of Conſtantinople, to aſſume ſuch a Power and Prerogative to himſelf.]

Council of Lateran.

Conc. Conſtantinop. 5. Act 1. Niceph. l. 14. c. 34. Authen. Conſt. 3. Conc. Nican. Act. 2. Greg. Mag. l. 4. Ep. 34.

Maximus, Biſhop of Aquileia, ſaid, he was alſo of the ſame Mind, and believed two Operations in Chriſt. Deuſdedit, Biſhop of Calaris, requeſted that this Matter might be ſearched to the bottom, and all the Biſhops were of that Mind.

This Examination was begun in the ſecond Action, Act. ii. which is of the 8*th* of October. Stephen, Biſhop of Dora, of the Patriarchate of Jeruſalem, preſented a Petition, in which he ſets forth That Cyrus, Sergius, Pyrrhus and Paul, have publiſhed a new Hereſie, teaching, That there was but one Operation and one Will in Chriſt, both of the Godhead and Manhood; that Sophronius, of Bleſſed Memory, Patriarch of Jeruſalem, opoſed that Error vigorouſly, and had made a Writing, in which he alledged an infinite number of the Holy Fathers Teſtimonies, to convince them of impiety, and to eſtabliſh the Truth; That before he died he had made him to promiſe him upon the Calvary, that he would go to Rome, to ſollicit the Condemnation of this Error; that he had performed his Promiſe, notwithſtanding all their endeavours to hinder him from it; that he had already demanded it of Theodorus, and did renew his requeſt to the Council.

Some Greek Presbyters and Monks, who had been a while at Rome, preſented alſo a Petition againſt Cyrus, Sergius, Pyrrhus and Paul, againſt the Ecthesis, the Type and the Doctrine of one Operation only, and deſired the Council, carefully to examine that Queſtion, and to determine it according to the Doctrine of the Church. Then Sergius's Letter to Theodorus was read, written in 643. wherein this Patriarch, having extolled the Authority of the Holy See, declares, that he follows Pope St. Leo's Doctrine, who taught, that the two Natures do operate in Jeſus Chriſt, but in conjunction one with another; that he does anathematize and condemn all thoſe, that do not hold this Doctrine. The reſt of this Action was ſpent in reading 4 Synodical Letters ſent by the African Biſhops, againſt the Monothelites Expoſition of Faith, one whereof is directed to Pope Theodorus, the other to the Emperor, the 3*d*. to Paul of Conſtantinople. They alledge, in this laſt, the Teſtimonies of St. Auſtine and St. Ambroſe, to prove the two Wills. The laſt Letter is Victor's, Biſhop of Carthage, to Theodorus, upon the ſame Subject.

In the 3*d*. Action of the 16*th*. of October, they Act. iii. produced the Extracts of the Works of thoſe who were accuſed of Error. They begin with thoſe of Theodorus, Biſhop of Pharan, who owns many ſorts of Operations in Chriſt, but affirms, they all proceed from the Word, which gives motion to the Body, Soul, and the other Faculties of the humane Nature, as an Inſtrument which he maketh uſe of. Martin the Firſt confutes his Opinion, to which he oppoſes ſome Teſtimonies of St. Cyril, St. Gregory Nazianzen, St. Baſil, and the Council of Chalcedon. Cyrus ſucceeds Theodorus. They read his 7*th*. Article, where-in in he owns two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt, but united in one Chriſt, who doth that which is Divine, and that which is Humane by one Theandrick or Deivirile Action, according to * St. Denys. They join to this Article, Sergius his Letter to Cyrus, wherein he aproves this Doctrine, and congratulates with him, for the re-union of the Theodoſians with him. Upon occaſion of St. Denys's citation, they conſulted the original, and they found that Cyrus and Sergius had changed the Terms of * New Will Theandrick, into to that of One Will Theandrick. They compared their Expreſſion with Themiſtius's, and they proved, by ſome Paſſages of that Heretick, that Severus and he were the firſt that ſaid, there was but one Deivirile Operation in Jeſus Chriſt. They explain the meaning of the Deivirile Operation, and they ſay, 'tis nothing elſe but two ſorts of Operations of the ſame Perſon, which yet proceed from two different Natures (viz. God and Man.)

[*St. Dion. Ep. ad Caium.]

[* Novam Deivirilem Operationem, into Unam Deiv. Operationem.]

This being examined, they read the Emperor Heraclius's Expoſition of the Faith, known by the Name of Ecthеſis, in which he forbids this Expreſſion, that there is one or two Operations in Chriſt, and commands them to ſay, that 'tis the ſame Son that operates in Chriſt the Divine and Humane Operations; that altho' ſome of the Fathers have ſaid, there is but one Operation, it is better to forbear that Expreſſion, leſt it be thought, that they would deny the Exiſtence of the two Natures; and that it muſt not be ſaid neither, that there are two Operations in Chriſt, becauſe this Expreſſion, being not uſed by the Fathers, does offend many, who think, they admit two contrary Wills in Chriſt. To this Ecthеſis they add the Acts of Approbation given by Paul and Pyrrhus, and the Letter of Cyrus of Alexandria to Sergius, wherein he commends the Emperor for making that Expoſition of Faith.

Act. iv. In the 4th. Action, held the 19th. of October, Martin gave a ſhort Account of what Cyrus, Sergius and Paul, had done againſt the Doctrine of the Church; and that he might fully convince Paul, their Succeſſor, of the ſame Impiety, he cauſed his Letter to Pope Theodorus to be read, wherein, delivering his Opinion, he ſays, that he owns one Will in Jeſus Chriſt, only to take away the contrariety of Wills, but does not intend to confound the two Natures: That Chriſt's Soul, endowed with its Intellect and Faculties, is led and moved by the Will of the Word, which cauſes it to act and to will as he pleaſes. He adds, that St. Cyril did deliver this Doctrine, and that Sergius and Honorius did newly teach it; that he ſtands to their deciſion, and is wholly of their Mind. Then was read the Emperor's Type, forbidding to ſpeak or diſpute about the Queſtion of one or two Operations, or of two Wills, that he might ſecure the Peace of the Church. The Council commends the Emperor's intention, but diſproves part of his Edict.

After they had read over all the Monuments they intended to condemn, they cauſed the Creeds of the Councils of Nice and Conſtantinople, and the definitions of Faith of the Councils of Epheſus, Chalcedon, and of the 5th. Council, to be recited.

In the 5th. Action, held the laſt day of October, they read the Teſtimonies of the Greek and Latin Fathers, proving either directly or by conſequence, that there are in Chriſt two Wills and two Operations; and, on the other ſide, they produced ſome paſſages of ſeveral Hereticks, who had taught but one Will in Chriſt.

Council of Lateran. Act. v.

After that, Maximus of Aquileia, Deuſdedit of Calaris, and Martin deliver'd their Judgments, alledging many Reaſons againſt the Opinion of the Monothelites; the whole Council approved it, acknowledging two Operations and two Wills, and made 20 Articles againſt the Error of the Monothelites, in the 18th. whereof it does anathematize Theodorus, Cyrus, Sergius, Pyrrhus, Paul, and all them that are or ſhall be of their Opinion.

Pope Martin publiſhed theſe Decrees by a Circular Letter, directed to all the Biſhops, Presbyters, Deacons, Abbots, Monks, and to the whole Church; and wrote of it particularly to ſeveral Biſhops as it may be ſeen in the Extract of his Letters.

This Council of Rome provoked Conſtans againſt Pope Martin, becauſe this Emperor look'd upon this Attempt, and the condemnation of his Type, as a kind of Rebellion, and an encroachment upon his Authority. He cauſed this Pope to be violently carried away from Rome in 653. and after moſt cruel uſage, baniſhed him to Cherſona. After his departure, the Romans choſe Eugenius in his room, in September 653. who did not openly conſent to the Error of the Monothelites: But his Apocriſarii were forced to unite themſelves with the Monothelites, who altering their Carriage and Expreſſions, ſaid, that there was in Chriſt one and two Wills. At firſt they did ſay, that there was in Chriſt but one Operation and one Will; afterwards they would not have Men to ſpeak of one or two Operations, and approved one only Will. The Type impoſed ſilence about that Queſtion, both as to the Operations and to the Wills. At laſt to comply with all, they would have it free for Men to ſay, that there was in Chriſt one and two Wills. Peter, who was choſen Patriarch of Conſtantinople in Pyrrhus's room, who got up again to that See after Paul's death, was of this Judgment, and many followed that Opinion. But, altho' theſe were different Expreſſions, yet they came up to the ſame thing, and did all tend to the ſame end, which was to tolerate the Doctrine of one Operation and one Will, and to make it run equal with that of the two Operations and the two Wills, ſo that every one might follow that which he liked beſt.

Yet all this condeſcenſion did not procure the reunion of the Eaſtern and Weſtern Churches; for from Pope Theodoſius's time they continued divided, and the Popes ſent no more Letters of Communion to the Patriarchs of the Eaſt, nor the Patriarchs of the Eaſt to the Pope. It was to take away this kind of Schiſm that the Emperor Conſtantinus Pogonatus appointed the third Council of Conſtantinople, which is reckoned the 6th. General, of which we are going to write the Hiſtory.

The third Council of Conſtantinople, 6th. General.

Of Conſtantinople.

Conſtantinus Pogonatus appointed this Council, for the re-uniting of the Churches of the Eaſt and the Weſt, and the final determination of the Queſtion of the two Operations, and the two Wills in Chriſt. He wrote to the Pope a Letter, dated the 12th. of Auguſt 678. directed to Donus, whom he ſuppoſed ſtill living, and it was delivered to his Succeſſor Agatho. This Pope having received the Emperor's Letter, held a Council at Rome, of 125. Biſhops of the Weſt, which determined the Doctrine of the two Wills, and confirmed what was done under Martin. There were at this Council, beſides the Biſhops of Italy, ſome Deputies of the Churches of France and England. After the holding of this Council, the Deputies of the Holy See, and the Council departed, to go to Conſtantinople, to carry their Deciſion. After they were come, the Emperor gave order to the Patriarchs, to come to the Council, and alſo to bring the Biſhops of their Patriarchate thither. It begun the 13th. year of the Empire of Conſtantine, in the year 680. Indiction 9th. in November, and was ended after eighteen Meetings or Seſſions, the 16th. of September of the next year, Indiction 10th. The Emperor had the firſt Place there, and was preſent at the eleven firſt Seſſions, and at the laſt: He was accompanied by the Conſuls and Officers.

Of Conſtantinople.

Council III. of Constantinople.

Officers. The Patriarchs of Constantinople and Antioch were there in person; those of Rome, Alexandria, and Jerusalem by their Deputies, and all the Western Bishops by three Bishops sent by the Council of Rome, with several Bishops of the East, whereof the number increased by little and little, as they came to Constantinople; for in the beginning they were but between 30. and 40. and in the end there were found above 160. of them.

The Acts of the Council began with the Emperor's Letter to Pope Donus; in which he represents to him, his Sorrow to see the Eastern Church divided from the Western: that Theodorus, Patriarch of Constantinople, of blessed Memory, would not send a Synodical Letter to the Holy See, according to the Custom, for fear it should not be received; and that he contented himself to direct a Letter to him, in the Form of an Exhortation: that That Patriarch and Macarius Patriarch of Antioch, being consulted, why the Church was thus divided, seeing all the Bishops received the Definitions of the five General Councils, and the Doctrine of the Fathers, and rejected all Heresies: They answered, the Contest came from some new Expressions, brought in, either out of Ignorance, or out of a Desire of piercing too deep into the unsearchable Works of the Lord: that the Sees of Rome and Constantinople disagreeing about this, they remained divided. He exhorts the Pope not to suffer this Division, about inconsiderable Points, to continue for ever; and invites him to send some able Legates to the Synod, with necessary Instructions and Books, promising he would cause them to be received, and be equally favourable to both Parties. He tells them, he thinks three Men will be enough to hold his place, with twelve Archbishops or Bishops, in the Name of his Council. He adds, that he had been desired by the Patriarchs of Constantinople and Antioch, to give them Leave to take Vitalian's Name out of the Dyptichs, and to leave none but that of Honorius, because the Bishops of Rome, his Successors, had differed from the Eastern Churches; but that he would not suffer them to do it: and that he could assure him, that the Names of Honorius and Vitalian were left in the Dyptichs.

There is a second Letter of the Emperor, dated September 10*th*. 680. directed to George of Constantinople; wherein he orders him, immediately to bring the Bishops and Archbishops to Constantinople, and to send Word to Macarius, to bring likewise those of his Synod.

The third Piece is a Latin Letter of Mansuetus, Bishop of Milan, which he wrote to the Emperor, in the Name of the Synod held at Milan; in which he exhorts him to imitate the Zeal of Constantine the Great, for the Faith; and beginning with Arius's Heresy, and the Nicene Council, he maketh a compendious History of the other Errors, condemned in the five first Councils, held by the Authority of the Christian Emperors: He assures him, that they do hold and maintain the Definitions of those Councils, and the Doctrine of the Holy Orthodox Fathers. To this Letter is annexed their Confession of Faith; in which, having asserted two Natures in Christ, they add, that there be also two natural Wills and two Operations. With these Letters they sent some Deputies from the Pope and the Synod: the Pope sent two Presbyters, named Theodorus and George, and a Deacon named John; and the Bishops of the Council sent three Bishops in their Name to the Synod of Constantinople. When these Deputies were arrived at Constantinople, and had saluted the Emperor, September 10*th*. 680. he gave an order, directed to George of Constantinople, whom he styles O Ecumenical Patriarch, (as he had styl'd the Pope O Ecumenical Pope) wherein he commands him immediately to bring the Archbishops and Bishops to Constantinople, and to send word to Macarius of Antioch, to bring those of his Synod.

Act. i. The first Action of the Council began the 7*th*. of November, 680. in the Emperor's Palace. It is said, he presided in the Assembly, that his Counsellors or Officers were present at it, and that the Synod was called by the Emperor's Order. The three Legates of the Pope held the first Place among the Bishops of the Council, George Patriarch of Constantinople the second, the Deputy of the Church of Alexandria the third, Macarius of Antioch the fourth, the Deputy of the Patriarch of Jerusalem the fifth, the Bishops Deputies of the Synod of Rome the sixth; next after them were the Deputies of the Church of Ravenna, and about 32. Bishops, with some Abbots.

Council III. of Constantinople.

After they were set down, the Legates of the Pope, and of the Synod of the West said, that they were sent by the Pope and the Council of Rome, and that they brought two Letters with them, which they had delivered to the Emperor: that seeing the Difference came from this, that the Patriarchs of Constantinople had invented and maintained Novelties, by teaching, that there was but one Will and one Operation in Christ, those of their Party ought to shew the Grounds of this new Doctrine. Macarius answered, in the Name of the Churches of Constantinople and Antioch, that they had invented no Novelties, and did teach nothing but what they had learn'd from the Holy Fathers, as they are expounded by Sergius, Pyrrhus, Paul and Peter their Patriarchs, by Honorius Pope of Rome, and by Cyrus Patriarch of Alexandria; that they were ready to defend this Doctrine by the General Synods and the Fathers, whose Authority was owned. The Emperor commanded them to do so, and the Acts of the OEcumenical Councils to be brought. Those of the Council of Ephesus were read, and Macarius thinking to have found there a Place favouring his Opinion in St. Cyril's Letter to Theodosius, where Christ's Will is said to be Omnipotent; he would have inferred from thence, that there was but one Will in Christ. But the Western Deputies, some Bishops, and the Judges themselves took notice, that the Will of the Word only was spoken of there, and not the Divine and Humane Will in Christ; then they read over the Acts of the Council of Ephesus.

In the second Session, held the 10*th*. of November, Act. ii. the Acts of the Council of Chalcedon were read, and when they came to St. Leo's Letter, the Pope's Legates maintained, that there was a Place where that Pope established two Wills and two Operations. Macarius contrariwise affirmed, that the Passage of St. Leo proved only, that there was in Christ one Operation Theandrick.

In the third, of the 13*th*. of the same Month, they Act. iii. began to read the Acts of the fifth Council: At the Head of which there was a Discourse written under the Name of Mennas, to Vigilius. The Pope's Legates maintain'd it to be suppositious, and to have been added a little while ago to the Acts of the fifth Council; which they proved, because Mennas dyed the 21*st*. year of Justinian, and the fifth Council was not held till in the 27*th*. year of the same Emperor: And indeed the Judges and the Bishops examining the Sheets which they were reading, they found three prefixed to the beginning without Cyphers, and written by a different Hand. Whereupon they left out that Discourse of Mennas, and set themselves to the reading of the Acts of the fifth Council. In them they found a Letter of Vigilius, in which he asserted one only Operation in Christ; but the Legates denied it to be his, and when they went on in the reading of the Council, they found that in the Definition there was no mention of one Operation. The reading of the Acts of the Council being finished, the Bishops and the Judges declared, that they had not found it defined, that there was but one Operation and one Will in Christ.

The fourth Action was held the 15*th*. of the same Act. iv. Month: In it the Letters of Agatho, and of the Council of Rome, to the Emperors Constantine, Heraclius, and Tiberius, were read. The first contains very large Proofs of the Doctrine of the two Wills, taken out of the Holy Scripture and the Fathers: He does plainly condemn the Monothelites, and particularly Council III. of Conſtantinople.

Theodorus, Cyrus, Sergius, Pyrrhus, Paul and Peter: He ſpeaks very reſpectfully of the Emperors, and very advantagiouſly of his own See: He ſays, the Apoſtolick Church of Rome never fell into Error, that it never was depraved by Hereſy: that the Fathers and Synods have followed her Deciſions, and that his Predeceſſors have always confirmed their Brethren in the Faith. They might have oppoſed to him the late Inſtance of Honorius, who ſeemed to be as guilty as thoſe he did ſo ſeverely condemn, and who was not ſpared in the Council of Conſtantinople. The Letter of the Roman Council contains a Confeſſion of Faith, in which they acknowledge two Operations and two Wills in Chriſt: After that they condemn the Doctrine of the Monothelites, and the Biſhops condemn'd in Agatho's Letter; and they approve what was done in the Synod held under Martin I. This Letter is ſubſcribed by 25. Biſhops, moſt of them of Italy; there be ſome of France alſo, and Wilfride ſubſcribes in the Name of the Biſhops of England. They tell us, that they hoped that Theodorus of Canterbury and ſeveral other Biſhops, would have come thither, but could not; and that they might be aſſured that all the Biſhops of the Weſt and the North were in the ſame Opinion, and held the ſame Faith.

Act. v. The fifth Action was held the 7*th*. of December. Macarius preſented two Sheets of Quotations of the Fathers, which were read in the Council.

Act. vi. He preſented alſo a third in the next Action, which was held the 12*th*. of February. The Emperor ordered all the three Sheets to be ſealed with the Seals of the Judges of the Church of Rome, and the Church of Conſtantinople. The Pope's Deputies maintained, that none of thoſe Teſtimonies proved one Will or one Operation in Chriſt; that they had falſified moſt of them; and that ſome of them were only to be underſtood of the Will of the three Perſons in the Trinity. They required them to produce the Authentick Books out of which thoſe Paſſages were taken, that they might lay open the Cheat; and that they might be permitted to peruſe the Collection of the Paſſages they had made, to prove two Wills and two Operations in Chriſt.

Act. vii. In the ſeventh Action of the 13*th*. of February, of the year 681. Agatho's Deputies preſented a Sheet, containing the Teſtimonies of the Fathers, confirming the Doctrine of the two Wills. They asked Macarius if he received Agatho's Letter, and the Definition of the Council of Rome. Macarius and George required the Sheet, containing the Paſſages of the Fathers, might be communicated to them, to compare them with the Originals, which were in the Patriarch of Conſtantinople's Library.

Act. viii. In the eighth Action of the 7*th*. of March, the Biſhop of Conſtantinople having examined Agatho's Letter, and the Paſſages of the Fathers, declared that he was of the ſame Mind with the Pope, and the other Biſhops of the Weſt. All the Biſhops of his Patriarchate made the ſame Declarations, except Theodorus Biſhop of Melitina; who preſented a Memoir in the Name of himſelf and three Biſhops more, of ſome Officers of the Church of Conſtantinople, and of Stephen a Presbyter and Monk of Antioch; wherein he requeſted, that neither Party might be condemned, ſeeing the General Councils had pronounced nothing hitherto about the two Wills. This Memoir was diſowned by thoſe in whoſe Name it was preſented, excepting Stephen, the Monk of Antioch. Nevertheleſs, Conſtantine told them, that for the full Satisfaction of the Council, they ought to bring a Profeſſion of Faith in the next Action. Hereupon George came near the Emperor, and prayed him, to order Vitalian's Name to be put into the Dyptichs again, which had been croſſed out, only by reaſon of the Delay of the Apocriſiarii of Rome, ſent to Conſtantinople. The Emperor ordered it to be done forthwith, and his Order was approved by the Exclamations of the Biſhops, who wiſhed him a long Life, as alſo to Pope Agatho, and to George Patriarch of Conſtantinople. There remained none but Macarius and thoſe of his Patriarchate, who had not declared themſelves: the Council having obliged this Patriarch to deliver his Opinion, he declared, that he did not own two Wills nor two Operations in Chriſt, but one only Operation and one Will Deivirile. After that Declaration, he was ordered to riſe up out of his Place to make anſwer: Four Biſhops of his Patriarchate forſook him, and received Agatho's Letter and Doctrine. They produced two Profeſſions of Faith of Macarius. In the latter, which is the longer, after having explained himſelf very clearly, about the diſtinction of the two Natures, he ſays, it is the ſame Perſon that acts and ſuffers; that it is God that acts and ſuffers by the Manhood, and according to his Divine Will, which only acts in Jeſus Chriſt, it being impoſſible there ſhould be in him two contrary or like Wills. He adds, for a Proof of his Aſſertion, that in the celebration of the unbloody Myſteries, in our Churches, we are made Partakers of Chriſt's Body and Blood, which is not a Man's Fleſh, but the quickning Fleſh of the Word. He condemns all Hereticks till Honorius, Sergius, and Paul; which he commends as Teachers of the Truth. Macarius owns in the Council theſe Profeſſions of Faith, and proteſts he will ſuffer himſelf to be torn in pieces, or thrown into the Sea, rather than own two Wills and two natural Operations in Chriſt: then they examined all the Teſtimonies, which he had alledged, and it was found that he had falſified them; which provoked the Biſhops Indignation againſt him, inſomuch that they depoſed him.

Council III. of Conſtantinople.

Act. ix. In the next Action, held the eighth of March, they went on in the Examination of the Quotations alledged by Macarius, and received the Declaration of Theodorus of Melitina, and of the Biſhops and Clerks that had approved his Memoir; wherein they promiſed to give a Profeſſion of Faith in the next Action.

Act. x. The tenth Action was held the 18*th*. of March: they read the Fathers Teſtimonies, alledged by Pope Agatho, which were found right quoted. They received alſo the Profeſſion of Faith of the four Biſhops, ſuſpected of favouring Macarius's Party.

Act. xi. In the eleventh Action, which was more numerous than the former, the Deputy of the Church of Jeruſalem required, that the Synodical Letter of Sophronius, Biſhop of Jeruſalem, might be read; which was read: and after that the Writing which Macarius had directed to the Emperor, although, contrary to the Cuſtom, he had ſent it to Rome and to Sardinia, before it was read in the Senate. At the end of this Seſſion the Emperor declared, that being called out by State Affairs, he had ordered two Noblemen and two * Exconſuls to be preſent in his ſtead at the following Seſſions, at which he was not in Perſon, except the laſt.

[* Perſons who had formerly been Conſuls.

Act. xii. In the twelfth Action, held the 20*th*. of March, they read a long Memoir of Macarius's, containing the Letters of the Biſhops of his Party. The firſt is a Letter of Sergius to Cyrus, in which he conſults him about the Emperor's Prohibition of admitting two Wills in Chriſt. He anſwers him, that Queſtion was not decided by any Council; that St. Cyril and Vigilius own but one Will, yet that the two Wills ought not to be condemned, if it was found that ſome of the Fathers had ſpoken of them.

The ſecond is a Letter of Sergius to Pope Honorius, in which he maintains, that they ought to forbear ſpeaking of one or two Wills.

The third is Honorius's Anſwer to the former Letter, which approveth the Suppreſſing of thoſe Expreſſions, which he thinks to be new, nothing of them being found in the Scripture, in the Councils, nor in the Fathers. Theſe Letters were examined from the Originals kept at Conſtantinople, and being found true and genuine, it was ordered that they ſhould be examined in the following Actions. The Judges asked the Emperor, Whether Macarius might be reſtored, in caſe he ſhould repent and alter his Mind. The Council required, that by reaſon of the heady heady Zeal which he had shewed, he should remain deposed, without Hope of Restoration, and be banished; and the Clergy of Antioch desired another Bishop might be put in his room.

In the thirteenth Session, of the 28*th.* of March, Sergius and Honorius's Letters were read over again. They declared, that this last had wholly followed Sergius's impious Doctrine, and they anathematized him. The Judges asking, Why they did also condemn Cyrus, Pyrrhus, Peter, and Paul? The Council answered immediately, that their Heresy was manifest, and that Pope Agatho did sufficiently discover it. Nevertheless, it was agreed upon, that their Writings should be examined: therefore they immediately read two Letters of Cyrus to Sergius, the Capitula he had got the Theodosians to subscribe, some Extracts of his Sermons and of Theodorus's, a Writing of Pyrrhus's, some Letters of Peter and Paul of Constantinople, proving that those Bishops admitted but one Will and one Operation in Jesus Christ; hereupon the Council declared, that Agatho had justly condemned them, that they also did condemn them, and reject their Errors, and would have their Names blotted out of the Dyptichs. As for the Successors of Paul, Thomas, John, and Constantine, they read their synodical Letters, and nothing was found in them contrary to the Faith. George, Library-keeper of Constantinople, swore, that they had not put Men to subscribe, that there was but one Operation in Christ, therefore they were absolved. This Action ended with the reading of the second Letter, directed to Sergius and Cyrus; in which he does equally reject the Opinions of one or of two Wills in Jesus Christ; and intimateth, that Sophronius, Patriarch of Jerusalem, promised him to speak no more of two Wills, provided that Cyrus, Patriarch of Alexandria, would speak no more of one Will.

Act. xiv.

In the next place they read three Writings, the one, under the Name of Mennas, to Vigilius, and the other under the Name of Vigilius, to the Emperor Justinian and the Empress Theodora, which they maintained to be suppositious. George, the Keeper of the Rolls, or Library-keeper, brought out a Copy of the fifth Council, in which they were not found. It was made appear, that the Monothelites had added those Writings, which were not subscribed, as the rest of the Acts of the Council were, and George, a Monk of the Patriarchate of Antioch, who had written them, having owned his own Hand, declared that Stephen, Macarius's Disciple, had got him to transcribe those three Writings; telling him, that the Copies of the fifth Council, where they were not found, were defective. Paul of Constantinople had caused the same Addition to be made to the Latin Copy of the fifth Council; which was acknowledged by Constantine, a Presbyter, who transcribed it: these Writings were condemned and the Composers of them. Afterward they examined a long Passage of a Sermon of St. Athanasius upon these Words; Nunc anima mea turbata est valde; in which the Doctrine of the two Wills is strongly maintained.

Act. xv.

In the fifteenth Action, of the 26*th.* of April, Polychronius, a Presbyter and Monk, presented a Confession of Faith, signed by him; wherein he owned but one Will in Christ. He said, that he had been confirmed in this Opinion in a Vision, by a tall Man, clad in white, full of Brightness and Majesty, who told him, 'Twas an unchristian thing to think otherwise: He had seduced several Persons, and was so zealous in his Opinion, that he promised to raise a dead Man to Life again, to prove the Truth of his Doctrine; notwithstanding he attempted it in vain, and made himself to be laughed at and to be anathematized by the Council, which deposed him.

Act. xvi.

In the sixteenth Session, held the 9*th.* of August, Constantine, a Presbyter of Apamea, the Metropolis of the second Syria, being come to give an account of his Faith, said; that he did confess two Natures in Jesus Christ, and the Properties of both his Natures; that he did not question so much as the two Operations, but he could own but one Will of the Word. They asked him, whether he would not admit an humane Will also? He confessed, that Jesus Christ had a natural humane Will till he was crucified, but since his Resurrection he had it no more; and as he put off his Mortal Flesh, his Blood, and the Weakness of the Humane Nature, by the same Reason, he had no more a Humane Will, according to Flesh and Blood. He declared, that Macarius was of this Opinion, and persisting in it himself, he was condemned by the Council, as an Apollinarist. George, Patriarch of Constantinople, did then require, in his own Name, and in the Name of the Bishops of his Patriarchate, that they would spare, if it were possible, the Names of his Predecessors, and not comprehend them in the Anathema's: But the Council declared, that since they had been blotted out of the Dyptichs, they ought also to be anathematized every one by Name.

Council III. of Constantinople.

Act. xvii.

In the seventeenth Action they propounded the Definition of Faith, which was read over again, approved and signed in the eighteenth, held the 16*th.* of September, 681. Indict X. at which the Emperor was present in Person. They received the Definitions of the five first General Councils, and particularly that of the fifth Council against Origen, against Theodorus of Mopsuesta, and against Theodoret's Writings, and Ibas's Letter. They recite the Creeds of Nice and Constantinople, and the Council approving the Definition of the Council, held at Rome, and Agatho's Letter, adds, that there are two Natural Wills and two Operations in Jesus Christ, in one Person, without Division, without Mixture, and without Change. That these two Wills are not contrary, but the Humane Will follows the Divine Will, and is entirely subject to it. It prohibits teaching any other Doctrine, under Pain of Deposition to Bishops and Clerks, and of Excommunication to the Laity.

This Definition is signed by the three Legates of Pope Agatho, by George, Patriarch of Constantinople, by the Legate of Peter of Alexandria, by Theophanes, the new Patriarch of Antioch, by the Legate of the Patriarch of Jerusalem, by the Legates of the Archbishops of Thessalonica, Cyprus, and Ravenna, by the Deputies of the Council of Rome, and by 160. Bishops. The Emperor asked the Bishops, If this Definition was made and published by the Consent of all. They answered, they were all of this Judgment, that it was the Faith of the Apostles, the Fathers, and the Orthodox. Then they put up many Desires for the Preservation of their Prince, and pronounced Anathema against the ancient and modern Hereticks, and among the rest, against Honorius, who is always named with the Patriarch-Monothelites.

The Emperor protested, that he had no other Design, in calling this Council, than the Confirmation of the Orthodox Faith. He exhorted them, that if any of them had any thing to add to the Definition, which was newly published, they should alledge it. Then all the Bishops having approved it again, they read a Discourse, addressed to the Emperor, in the Name of the Council, signed by all the Bishops, containing many Praises of his Piety and Religion. Then they prayed him to subscribe the Definition of Faith; he promised to do it, desired the Council to receive a Bishop of Sardinia, called Citonatus, who had been accused of attempting something against his Prince and the State, but was found innocent: The Council did it willingly. This is the Abridgment of the Acts of the sixth Council, of which the Emperor caused five Copies to be made for the five Patriarchal Churches.

The Bishops of this Council, before their Departure, sent a Letter to Pope Agatho, in which they tell him; that being, as he was, the first Bishop of the Universal Church, they rely upon him for what remains to be done; that they have received and approved his Letter; that they made use of it to overthrow the Foundations of the new Heresy; that they have anathematized as Hereticks, Theodorus of Pharan, Sergius, Honorius, Cyrus, Paul, Pyrrhus and Peter; and have condemned and deposed Macarius, late Patriarch of Antioch, as also his Disciples Stephen, and Polychronius, who maintained the same Impieties. They all shew their grief, that they have been forced to come to this. Lastly, they say, that he will learn more at large by the Acts of the Council, and from his Legates, in what manner they have defended the Faith, which he had established in his Letter. This Letter is signed by four Patriarchs, or their Deputies, by the Bishop of Thessalonica, by the Deputy of the Metropolitan of Cyprus, by the Metropolitan of Cesarea in Cappadocia, Primate of Pontus, by Citonatus, Bishop of Cagliari, by the Deputy of the Council of Rome, by thirty one Metropolitans in their own Name, and in the Name of the Bishops of their Province, and by thirteen Bishops.

The Emperor, presently after the Council, set out an Edict against the Monothelites, wherein he maketh a Confession of Faith agreeable to that of the Council; he condemns Honorius, as having supported Cyrus and Sergius's Heresie in every thing, and he appoints divers punishments against those that shall be found maintaining this Error, Deposition, or rather Suspension, against Clerks and Monks; Proscription, and Deprivation of Employments, against Persons constituted in Charge and Dignity, and Banishment from all the Towns of the Empire, against private Persons.

Agatho being Dead in 682. Constantine writ to Leo the Second, his Successor. In this Letter he commends Agatho's; he tells him, that Macarius was the only Man that would not yield to the Decision of the Council, notwithstanding all his endeavours to recover him from his Error. He exhorts him to excommunicate all those that shall be found in the Error of the Monothelites, and prays him to send some Apocrisiaries to Constantinople, to be his Representatives there, and to act in his stead in all Ecclesiastical Affairs, both concerning the Discipline, and the Faith. He wrote also a Letter to the Bishops that had been present at the Council of Rome, where he speaks of the Union of the Bishops of the Council about the Faith, and the condemnation of Macarius. Leo confirmed by his Answer the Definition of the Council, and condemned Honorius by Name. Lastly, Justinian confirmed this sixth Council by a Letter written to Pope John in 687, and caused the Acts of it to be sealed in the presence of a great number of Clerks and Laymen, that there might be no alteration made in it.

I need not enlarge here on the defence of the Acts of the Council, from the injurious Aspersions of Piggius, and the groundless Suspicions of Baronius. These Writers, devoted to the Court of Rome, could not endure to see Pope Honorius's Name among the Hereticks condemned in this Council; and that was the cause, that moved the one openly to attack the Acts of the Council very rudely, and the other to charge them with Corruption. But the former says nothing against this Council, but what might be said against the first Nicene Council, and that of Chalcedon; all his Objections being grounded upon the Emperor's being present in this Council, with his Officers, and his appointing the order and manner of proceeding. It cannot be denied, but Constantine the First did the same in the Nicene Council; and in that of Chalcedon, the Emperor's Commissioners took more Authority upon themselves, and concern'd themselves more in the doings of that Council, than the Emperor himself had done in this. And so he cannot touch and blemish this Council, without aspersing the other Councils at the same time; and would utterly overthrow the most solid Grounds of our Faith, that he may support a pretended Infallibility in Honorius's Person.

As to Baronius's Fancy, it is founded upon such frivolous Conjectures, confuted by so Authentical Proofs, that it hath been abandoned by all those that have not blindly followed that Author. He supposes, that Theodorus, George's Predecessor in the Patriarchate of Constantinople, having been condemned and deposed by the Council, had razed his own Name out of all the Acts of that Council, to put in Honorius's. But there can be nothing worse contrived than this Hypothesis.

Council III. of Constantinople.

For first of all, 'tis a groundless supposition, that Theodorus was anathematized or deposed for Monotheliism in the Council. It is evident, that he was not Bishop of Constantinople, when the Council began; no Author says, he was deposed or expelled for that Heresie; neither is it probable, that it was the cause of his leaving his See, seeing George, who was put in his room, was also a Monothelite.

Secondly, put the case Theodorus had been condemned by the Council, how is it likely, that he durst have ventured to falsifie the Acts of the Council it self? And tho' he durst do it, it had been enough for him to cross out his own Name, without substituting that of Honorius; and put even the case, he could have taken that Resolution, can it be thought, that he could have brought it about? How could he falsifie all the Copies of the Acts of this Council, sent out to all the Patriarchal Sees? How could he bring the Emperor, the other Patriarchs, and all the Bishops, to consent to this Cheat? Why did not the Legates and the Popes complain of this Falsification? Why did they acknowledge after, that Honorius was condemned in the 6th. Council? Why did they not discover this Imposture by the Copy of the Acts of the Council, which the Deputy of the Holy See brought, and which the Popes, Agatho's Successors, communicated to the Western Bishops, and which he sent into Spain? If they were corrupted, when he brought them, why did he suffer that Corruption? And why did the Popes use them? If they were not corrupted, why did they not use them, to discover the Fraud of the Enemies of the Holy See?

Thirdly, Honorius is found condemned in some places, where they could not have spoken of Theodorus. In the 13th. Action, his Letter to Sergius is particularly censured, as contrary to the Apostolick Doctrine and the Definitions of the Councils. It cannot be said, this was spoken of Theodorus. In the 14th. Action, his Letter to Sergius is again condemned, as perfectly agreeable to the Doctrines of the Hereticks. In the 18th. Action, his Letter is condemned to be burnt, as containing the same Heresie, and Impieties, as the other Writings of the Monothelites. In the same Session, he is condemned together with Sergius; Anathema to Sergius and Honorius, and after, Anathema to Pyrrhus and Paul. If Theodorus's Name had been put in the room of Honorius's, they would not have placed him before Pyrrhus and Paul, but after them; Lastly, he is almost every where called Bishop of Rome. All this shews, there is nothing more unwarrantable than Baronius's conjecture.

Fourthly, 'tis a plain matter of Fact, that Honorius was condemned in the 6th Council. And of this we have proofs more than sufficient. The Council it self owns it in its Letter to the Pope; the Emperor in his Edict declares it. Agatho, who was one of the Notaries, testifieth it in a Relation which is in the end of a Manuscript of the 6th. Council. Leo the Second, Agatho's Successor, asserts it in three of his Letters; the whole Church of Rome acknowledges it in the Forms of the Oath, which the Popes newly elected are to take, and in her ancient Liturgy, the two General Councils following look upon this Condemnation as true. Lastly, no Body ever questioned it, and consequently, Baronius's Fancy must pass for a matchless piece of rashness. You will yet be more sensible of it, when you shall see the weakness of the Proofs, whereon he founds his bold Conjecture. The first is a place of Pope Agatho's Letter, which says, the Apostolick Church of Rome did never swerve from the way of the Truth, and that his Predecessors did always confirm the Faith of their Brethren. This Letter, says he, having been read and approved in the the Council, how is it likely, that after this they durſt have condemned one of Agatho's Predeceſſors as an Heretick, or Favourer of Hereſie? If this Pope's Letter had contained but that one Point, or it had been read in the Council to juſtifie Honorius, this Objection might have ſome ſtrength. But this being ſaid, but by the by in Agatho's Letter, containing a long Expoſition of the Faith of the Catholick Church, and a very great number of the Fathers Teſtimonies and Reaſons againſt the Error of the Monothelites; and the Council having cauſed it to be read, on purpoſe only, to know the Doctrine of the Holy See, and the Weſtern Churches: It is evident, their approbation does not fall upon this particular place of his Letter, but upon the Expoſition of Faith, and the Doctrine it contained. And tho' we ſhould ſuppoſe, that the Council had taken notice of the Commendation which Agatho maketh of his Church, and his Predeceſſors, and had perceived that it was not abſolutely and ſtrictly true, they ought not upon this account to have refuſed their approbation of his Letter, nor excepted againſt this place of it. It were a ſilly thing to imagine, that a Council, called to decide a Queſtion of Faith, ſhould buſie it ſelf to wrangle about a Commendation ſlipt in by the Pope in his Letter in behalf of his Predeceſſors. But Pope Agatho's praiſes of his Predeceſſors in general ought not to be taken in a ſtrict Senſe; for if we underſtand them ſo, all the World will ſee that they cannot be true; becauſe it cannot be denied, but Liberius and Honorius did but weakly defend the Faith, as well as tolerate Error; they muſt then be underſtood in general of almoſt all Agatho's Predeceſſors, and not of all in particular, ſo that no exception could be made to it.

Beſides, it were an eaſie thing to retort Baronius's Argument upon himſelf. For if the commendations of Agatho's Letter ought to be taken ſtrictly, as alſo the Council's approbation of it, ſo that it was not lawful for them to condemn thoſe whoſe Religion and Piety he commends: How durſt Baronius charge the Emperor Juſtinian with Hereſie, Perfidiouſneſs, and Impiety, ſince he is commended in Agatho's Letter, as a moſt Religious, Orthodox, and Godly Prince, whoſe Memory is had in Veneration among all Nations?

But I ſtand too long upon ſo weak an Objection. He makes one more, which is not harder to ſolve. How is it poſſible, ſaith he, that the Pope's Legates who were preſent in this Council, ſhould ſay nothing to vindicate Honorius? But, why would he have them, to engage in a bad cauſe? Honorius had approved Sergius's Letter, had conſented, that they ſhould ſpeak neither of One nor Two Operations, had aſſerted but One Will in Chriſt, had ſilenced Sophronius, who would have defended the Faith. Theſe Facts were evident by the very reading of his Letter; there is enough for his condemnation; and they could not ſtand up in his defence without furniſhing their Adverſaries with Arms. The ſame Reaſons which they ſhould have uſed to juſtifie him, might have been urged alſo to juſtifie Sergius and the reſt; therefore in forſaking Honorius, they took the right courſe; they did the ſame thing in the Roman Council under Martin the 1ſt, for when they read Paul's Synodical Letter who defends his own Error, by the Authority of Honorius, neither the Pope, nor any of the Biſhops, did think of vindicating him nor of maintaining him to have been of another mind. But if he thinks it ſtrange, that the Legates ſhould ſuffer Honorius's Memory to be condemned; how much more ſtrange muſt it ſeem to be, that they ſhould have ſuffered the Acts of the Council to be falſified, to inſert his condemnation in it? Tho' Honorius had been excuſable, they might have had reaſons not to oppoſe his condemnation; the advantage of Peace, and the fear to cauſe ſome trouble might have prevailed with them to acquieſce in the Judgment of the Council: But no reaſon can be found to excuſe their Treachery, if they had corrupted the Acts of the Council to inſert Honorius's condemnation there.

Council III. of Constantinople.

I do not trouble my ſelf to confute Baronius's other Reaſons, which are a meer begging of the Queſtion, having already ſaid over-much on that ſubject; becauſe now his Opinion of the corruption of the Acts of the 6th. Council is wholly forſaken, and it goes now for current, that Honorius was condemned in the 6th Council. This being ſuppoſed, there remain two Queſtions to be examined, whether he was juſtly condemned, or not; and for what reaſon he was condemned.

To decide theſe Queſtions, there needs no more than to read Sergius and Honorius's Letters, and to remember the circumſtances of the Fact. Cyrus Patriarch of Alexandria, that he might re-unite the Theodoſians, approved this Expreſſion, that there was but one Operation in Chriſt; Sophronius oppoſed this Doctrine; Sergius approved the Conduct and Doctrine of Cyrus; but for Peace ſake, he did think it better, not to debate this Queſtion, and neither to affirm one nor two Operations in Chriſt, and only to ſay, that the ſame Perſon performed Divine and Humane Actions; becauſe they that uſe the expreſſion of one Operation only, ſeem to confound the two Natures; and when they ſay two Operations, they ſeem to aſſert two contrary Wills in Chriſt; which cannot be maintained, by reaſon the Soul of Chriſt never had any motion of its own from it ſelf, or contrary to thoſe of the Word, but ſuch as the Word pleaſed, and when he pleaſed. In a word, that, as our Body is governed and moved by our Soul, ſo the Soul of Jeſus Chriſt was led and governed by his Divinity. Thus Sergius explains himſelf in his Letter to Honorius, and asks him what was his Opinion about it.

What does this Pope anſwer to this? He approves of Sergius's proceeding, he commends his Letter, he follows his Opinion, he forbids ſpeaking any more of one or two Operations of Chriſt, and orders that this Queſtion be left to the Grammarians to be diſcuſſed; yea, and he declares, that there is but one Will in Chriſt. Then he writes to Eulogius, that he ſhould maintain no longer two Operations in Chriſt. He writes moreover a ſecond Letter to Sergius, to command ſilence about that Queſtion. What did Sergius, Pyrrhus, Paul, and the other Monothelites, who were condemned in this Council, do more? They were in two Errors, 1. That we ought not to aſſert, that there was one or two Operations in Chriſt, and that we ſhould forbear debating that Queſtion. 2. That we ſhould ſay, that there is but one Will in Chriſt, by Reaſon the Soul of Chriſt was governed and led by his Divinity. Honorius does plainly eſtabliſh thoſe two Points; therefore he cannot be excuſed, without excuſing alſo the Patriarchs of Conſtantinople. You will ſay, that when he ſaid there was but one Will in Chriſt, he ſaid it to exclude the contrariety of Wills; and that the reaſon he gives of it, does evidently ſhew it. We own, ſaith, he, there is but one Will in Chriſt, becauſe he took upon him our Nature, not our Sin; and he had no other Law in his Members, nor any contrary Will. But if this reaſon may ſerve for the vindication of Honorius, Sergius ought to be vindicated likewiſe, as rendring the ſame reaſon, and confeſſing in his Letter, that the Soul of Chriſt had its proper motions, directed and led by the Divinity. Paul, his Succeſſor, may with much more reaſon be excuſed; for in his Letter to Theodorus, he ſays, that the only reaſon, why he acknowledges but one Will in Chriſt, is out of fear, leſt he ſhould admit a contrariety of Wills in Chriſt, or ſhould ſay, that there be two Perſons with two different Wills; that he did admit but one Will, not to annihilate the Humane Nature, or any part of his Soul, but to ſhew that Chriſt's Soul was filled with the gifts of the Deity, and had no Will contrary to that of the Word. By the ſame reaſon one may juſtifie the Ecthеſis, and the Type, and all the Monothelites: For they did not deny, that the Body and Soul of Chriſt had all their Properties, their Faculties, and Motions; but they affirmed, they were ſo governed and led by the Will of the Word, as to follow his direction and impreſſion in all things. And the only reaſon they gave, why they would not have Men to ſay, that there were two Wills in Chriſt, was for fear this expreſſion ſhould intimate two contrary Wills in him. Honorius therefore is no more excuſable than Sergius, Paul, and the other Monothelites, who did act and ſpeak as he did; and if they condemned theſe as Hereticks, they might condemn Honorius likewiſe. Wherefore not only the 6*th*. Council always joined him with the other Monothelites, and comprehended him in the ſame Anathema; which they would not have done, had they believed, there was any difference to be made between him and the reſt; for it is expreſly ſaid, 'They condemned him, 'for delivering in his Letter things contrary to the 'Doctrine of the Apoſtles, the Definitions of the 'Councils, and the Judgment of all the Fathers, and 'for following the falſe Doctrine of Hereticks, for 'approving in every thing the Impious Opinions of 'Sergius for writing a Letter tending to the ſame 'Impiety, for Preaching, Teaching, and Spreading 'the Hereſie of one Operation, and one Will.

In fine, the Council having pronounced Anathema's againſt Theodorus, Sergius, Honorius, Pyrrhus, Paul, Macarius, and Stephen, Polychronius adds, Anathema to all theſe Hereticks. They did then believe Honorius to be an Heretick, as well as the reſt, and condemned him as ſuch.

But, ſay they, in the Emperor's Edict, he is called only a Favourer, Helper, and Confirmer of Hereſie. Pope Leo the ſecond, in his three Letters, charges him only with favouring the Error of the Monothelites, and not ſuppreſſing it with a vigilancy becoming St. Peter's Succeſſor. But what maketh moſt for Honorius's vindication, is, that the Abbot John, who writ his Letter, St. Maximus, and John IV. do defend him, and ſay, that when he aſſerted but one Will in Chriſt, he meant it of the Humane Will; but he did not mean, that there was but one Will of the Manhood, and Godhead. That's the moſt plauſible thing can be ſaid in the behalf of Honorius; but all this doth not prove, that he was not condemned as an Heretick, and Favourer of Hereſie. Honorius was a Favourer of Hereſie, becauſe he forbad ſpeaking both of one, and two Operations in Jeſus Chriſt. He was an Heretick, becauſe he owned but one Will in Jeſus Chriſt.

Beſides, one is often a Favourer of Hereſie, by teaching it; and that name is given to thoſe who maintain an Hereſie invented by others. 'Tis in this Senſe, Conſtantine ſays, Honorius was a Favourer of Hereſie. Sergius was the Author of this Doctrine, but Honorius approved, confirmed and embraced it; wherefore he calls him (ὁδηγὸν συναιρετὸν σύνδρομον) the proper Terms not only for him who neglects to ſtifle a new ſpringing Hereſie, but for him alſo who does formally approve, embrace and teach it. Tho' Leo II. was concerned to be tender of his Predeceſſor's reputation, and for that reaſon he expreſſed, in more gentle Terms, the cauſe of Honorius's condemnation, yet he confeſſeth, that Honorius did not only favour the new Hereſie by his Silence and Negligence, but moreover, that he did ſuffer the Apoſtolick Tradition to be ſullied and defiled by a contrary Doctrine. Qui Apoſtolicam Eccleſiam non Apoſtolicæ Traditionis doctrina illuſtravit; ſed profana proditione immaculatam maculari permiſit: And in another Letter, Maculari conſenſit. And the Roman Church hath ſo plainly acknowledged, that Pope Honorius did advance the Error of the Monothelites, that in her ancient Breviary, ſhe declares, that he was condemned with the other Monothelites, for maintaining the Doctrine of one Will.

Laſtly, Adrian II. taketh notice, that he was condemned by the Synod, becauſe he was charged with Hereſie, which he affirms to be the only cauſe for which he believeth a Council may judge the Pope. It cannot be doubted then, but that Honorius was condemned by the 6*th*. Council, as an Heretick, yea, and that the Council had as much reaſon to cenſure him, as Sergius, Paul, Peter, and the other Patriarchs of Conſtantinople; and that his Letter was as fit to be condemned, as the Ecthеſis and the Type. It's true, John the Abbot, who wrote it, and John IV. defend Honorius's Letter, and endeavour to put a good Interpretation upon it; but this was before the Council had condemned it, and they were concerned then in the defence of it. The Greek Church did more than this in favour of Sergius; for notwithſtanding the condemnation of the 6*th*. Council, ſhe put into the Office of a Feſtival, kept in Lent, a Story, in which this Patriarch is mentioned as a Saint. But we ſee, it's more juſt and rational, to give credit to the judgment of a General Council, where Matters are examined to the bottom, than to the Sentiments of ſome private Men, who judge of this Fact, according to their own Intereſt or Prejudices. This will ſtand for certain then, that Honorius was condemned and juſtly too, as an Heretick, by the 6*th*. Council.

CLOVIS II. called a Council at Challon upon the River Saone, (a) the 6*th*. year of his Reign, which is the 650. of the vulgar Æra. It was made up of the (b) Archbiſhops of Lyons, Vienna, * Rouen, † Sens and Bourges, and of (c) 39 Biſhops of France. They made 20 Canons.

In the 1*ſt*. they decree, that they ſhall hold the Doctrine eſtabliſhed by the Councils of Nice and Chalcedon.

In the 2*d*. that the Canons ſhall be kept.

The 3*d*. renews the Prohibitions made to the Clergy againſt having ſtrange Women.

The 4*th*. forbids ordaining two Biſhops at the ſame time in the ſame City.

The 5*th*. decrees, that the Adminiſtration of Pariſhes, or of Church-lands, ſhall not be committed to the Laity.

The 6*th*. forbids ſeizing on, or taking Poſſeſſion of Church-lands, * before it be ſo ordered.

[* Before an hearing. Antè audientiam.]

The 7*th*. forbids Biſhops, Archdeacons and any other Perſon, to take away any of the Goods or Eſtate belonging to a Pariſh, Hoſpital or a Monaſtery, after the death of the Presbyter who governed it.

Of Challon.

The 8*th*. declares the neceſſity of Repentance, and orders Biſhops to impoſe Penance upon them that confeſs their Sins.

The 9*th*. forbids ſelling Chriſtian-ſlaves to Strangers or Jews.

The 10*th*. declares that a Biſhop ought to be choſen by the Biſhops of the Province, by the Clergy and the Citizens; and ſays, an Ordination, made otherwiſe, is null.

The 11*th*. decrees, that the Biſhops ſhall ſeparate from their Communion thoſe Judges, who would aſſume a Juriſdiction over the Pariſhes and Monaſteries, where the Biſhops make their viſit.

The 12*th*. forbids making two Abbots in one Monaſtery, to avoid diviſion and ſcandal among the Friars. Nevertheleſs, if an Abbot will chuſe himſelf a Succeſſor, he may do it; but he that is choſen, ſhall not diſpoſe of the Eſtate of the Monaſtery.

[(a) The 6th. Year of his Reign, which is the 650.] The Year is not certainly known; but it is ſure it was held before the Year 658.

[(b) Archbiſhops.] They have ſigned in the ſame Order in which we ſet them down.

(c) 39 Biſhops.] Of which ſix were Deputies.

The Council of Challon.

The 13*th*. renews the Inhibition made to Bishops to keep the Clerks of their Brethren, or to ordain any Body without his Bishop's leave.

The 14*th*. provides a remedy against an Abuse which was grown common. The Lords of the places, where there were Chappels, sought to hinder the Archdeacons and Bishops from the cognizance of what concerned the Clerks, that ministred in those Chappels. This Council decrees, that the Ordination of the Clerks, and the disposal of the Revenues of those Chappels shall belong to the Bishop, that Divine Service may be regularly performed there.

The 15*th*. prohibits Abbots and Friars making use of the Protection of the Seculars, and going to the Prince, without their Bishop's leave.

The 16*th*. declareth, that they who give Money to be made Bishops, Priests or Deacons, shall be deprived of the Dignity that they would have purchased.

The 17*th*. forbids raising Tumults or Quarrels in the Church, or at the Church-doors.

The 18*th*. prohibits Plowing, shearing Corn, Reaping or Tilling the Ground on Sundays.

The 19*th*. prohibits Dancing and Singing lewd Songs within the Church-yards or in the Church-porches, upon Saints Festivals. Council of Challon.

The 20*th*. degrades Agapius and Bobon, Bishops of Digne, for having done many things contrary to the Canons.

The Bishops of this Council wrote a Letter to Theodosius or Theodorick, Bishop of Arles, in which they acquainted him, that having met together by King Clovis's order, in the Town of Challon, they did stay for him, hearing he was got near the Town; that the only thing that hindred his appearing, was, that he heard himself to be accused of living dishonestly, and doing several things contrary to the Canons; that they had also seen a Writing signed with his own Hand, and by the Bishops of his Province, wherein it appeared, that he had submitted himself to Penance; that he knew, that those that were come so far, cannot keep nor govern a Bishoprick any longer. Wherefore, they declare to him, that he must abstain from doing any Episcopal Function in Arles, and from receiving the Church Revenues, till he receive his tryal before the Bishops.

The eighth Council of Toledo.

Of Toledo.

THIS Council of 52 Bishops of Spain, was called by an order from King * Receswinthe, in the year 653. Its Constitutions are in the form of Acts, very obscure, written in a barbarous Style, and full of false Notions. They begin with King Receswinthe's Letter to the Bishops of the Synod, wherein he exhorts them to follow the Faith of the first four General Councils; to provide against the Disorders that would happen, if they should execute the Oath they had taken, of putting all those to death that should be found to be concerned in any Conspiracy, against the Prince or State; to reestablish the discipline of the ancient Canons; and to regulate those Matters that shall be brought before them. The Bishops obeying the King's Order, professed themselves to hold the Decisions of the Councils and the Fathers; they read the Creed, which was then recited in the solemn Service of the Churches of Spain, which is that of the Council of Constantinople, to which they had superadded, that the Holy Ghost proceeded from the Father and the Son. Then they made a long Discourse upon Oaths, and cited many Places of the Scripture and the Fathers, to shew, that Men ought not to keep nor execute the Oaths, wherewith they have sworn to commit wicked Actions, and prejudicial to the State. The third Canon is against those that use Intreaties and Prayers, to obtain the Priesthood. They are declared Excommunicate, and those that do confer or receive Orders thus, are deprived of their Dignity; these last are likewise put to Penance in a Monastery. The three next Canons are made to keep the Clergy pure and chaste. The 7*th*. is against an Abuse by which some Persons ordained Bishops or Presbyters, did think themselves free to leave the Priesthood, under pretence, that in their receiving it, they had said that they would not receive it: the Council declares, that this cannot be done; and that, as Baptism conferred on Persons unwilling to receive it, and on Children who know nothing of it, is valid; so likewise Ordination ought to subsist, being as indelible as Baptism, the Holy Chrism and the Consecration of the Altars: So they decree, that they, who after their Ordination, shall return to the World and marry, shall be banished out of the Church, and shut up in a Monastery, to do Penance there all their Life. The 8*th*. Constitution prohibits ordaining, hereafter, any Clerk that knows not the Psalter, the Anthems, the Hymns in use, and the Ceremonies of Baptism; and that if any of them that are ordained, be ignorant of these things, they shall be constrained to learn them. The 9*th*. forbids eating Flesh in Lent, and orders, that those that have need of eating of it shall ask the Bishop's Leave. The 10*th*. Constitution is concerning the Election of Kings, and the Qualifications they ought to have. the 11*th*. confirms the ancient Canons of Councils. The 12*th*. confirms the Decree of the Council of Toledo, held under King Sisenand, about the Security of Kings. They conclude with pious Wishes for King Receswinthe, and with a general Confirmation of the preceding Constitutions. The Acts are subscribed not only by fifty two Bishops, but by nine Abbots besides, and ten Presbyters or Deacons, Deputies of Bishops, and sixteen Lords. Moreover, thereis another Decree of this Council, about the disposing of Kings Revenues, which is confirm'd by an Edict of King Receswinthe. The Jewish Converts presented a Petition to this Council, wherein they bound themselves, sincerely to renounce the Jewish Doctrine and Ceremonies.

[* Al. Recesuind.]

Of Toledo.

The ninth Council of Toledo.

Of Toledo.

TWO Years after, the same King Receswinthe called a Provincial Council, the Bishops whereof willing to renew the ancient Discipline, and to publish the Canons of the Councils, thought they ought to begin by making Laws to reform themselves: for, say they, in the Preface, it would not become Superiors to go about to judge their Inferiors, before they have judged themselves by the Laws of Justice it self. Judgments are more just by far, when the Life of the Judges is well ordered; and when their Virtue is known, their Judgment is better submitted to.

Therefore, they 1*st*. forbid the Bishops, and others of the Clergy, to appropriate to themselves the Lands given to Churches; and give leave to the Relations and Heirs of the Legatees, to apply themselves to the Bishop or Metropolitan, to hinder the Lands given by their Relations from being converted to private uses.

Of Toledo.

Secondly, to prevent the ruine of Parish-Churches and Monasteries, they give leave to those that built them, to take care of them, and to recommend to the Bishop some Persons to govern them, whom he shall be bound to ordain, if he finds them capable of that Office. This was one beginning of Lay-Patrons.

Thirdly, it is ordered, that if the Bishop, or any other of the Clergy (to pay the Churches Debts) alienates some part of his Church-Lands under the Titles of Patrimony, he shall be bound to set down in the Deed the cause of his doing so, to the end, that it may appear, whether it be done justly or fraudulently.

Fourthly, they decree, that if Bishops have but a small Patrimony, the Purchases they make ought to be for the Profit of the Church; but if the Revenue of their own Patrimony be found to be as great as that of their Bishoprick, their Heirs shall divide their Estate in half, or according to the proportion of their own and the Church Patrimony. Lastly, that they may, during their Life, dispose of what falls to them by Donation; but if they do not dispose of it, after their Decease, those Donations shall belong to the Church.

In the 5th. they declare, that the Bishop that will build a Monastery in his Dioceſs, shall endow it only with the fiftieth part of the Revenue of his Bishoprick, and with the hundredth if it be but a Church only.

In the 6th. that he may forgive Parochial Churches the third part of the Revenues which they owe him, and that such Release shall be perpetual and irrevocable.

For the more punctual execution of these Canons, by the 7th. Constitution, they forbid the Heirs of the Bishop to enter upon their Inheritance, without the Consent of the Metropolitan, or if he be a Metropolitan, before he hath a Successor, or there be a Council assembled. And likewise they forbid the Heirs of Presbyters and Deacons to take possession of their Inheritance, without the Cognizance of the Bishop.

The ninth Council of Toledo.

In the 8th. Canon they declare, that the Prescription of thirty years shall not be reckoned against the Church, as to the Lands alienated by any Bishop, but from the day of that Bishop's Death, and not from the day of the date of the Deed.

In the 9th. they forbid a Bishop who cometh to bury his Brother, to take above the value of a Pound of Gold, if the Church be rich, or of half a Pound if she be poor; and orders him to send the Inventory which he shall make, to the Metropolitan.

In the 10th. they declare the Sons of Clergymen, who were obliged to Celibacy, uncapable of Inheriting.

The six following Canons are concerning Ecclesiastical Persons or such as are made free by the Churches, and are not now in use.

The 17th. and last lays an Obligation upon the Jews, who are newly converted, to be present on their ancient Feast-days, in the Towns and Assemblies of Christians, kept by the Bishop.

They conclude with making pious Wishes for King Recesvinthe. They appoint the next Council on the first of November following. This Council is signed by Eugenius of Toledo and 15. Bishops, by 3 Abbots, by the Deputy of a Bishop and 4 Lords.

Therefore we ought not to wonder that these Councils should make Laws about Political Matters, because they are properly Assemblies of the States, authorized by the Prince in which the Civil Authority was joyned to the Ecclesiastical Power.

The tenth Council of Toledo in 656.

Of Toledo.

THIS Council was held a month later than it had been appointed: It made seven Canons.

In the 1st. the Festival of the Virgin was appointed to be kept eight Days before Christmas.

By the 2d. the Clerks or Monks, which shall be found to have violated the Oaths taken to the King and the State, are deprived of their Dignity, yet so as that it shall be free for the Prince to restore them to it, if he thinks fit.

By the 3d. Bishops are forbidden to give Parochial Churches or Monasteries to their Kindred or Friends, to enjoy the Revenues of them.

In the 4th. it is ordered, that Women who have embraced the state of Widowhood, ought to make Profession of it, in Writing, before the Bishop or the Presbyter, to take the Habit of it, to keep it on always, and to wear a Veil of a Black or Violet Colour.

The 5th. decrees, that those who leave the Habit of Widowhood, after they have worn it, shall be excommunicated, and shut up in Monasteries.

The 6th orders, that those Children, whom their Parents caused to take the Tonsure, or the Religious Habit, shall be obliged to lead a Religious Life: That, nevertheless, Parents cannot offer their Children, before they be ten years old, and after that Age the Childrens Consent is necessary.

The last Canon contains an Advertisement, to dissuade Christians from selling their Slaves to the Jews.

Of Toledo.

There was presented to this Council a Confession in Writing from Potamius Bishop of Braga, who was accused of many Crimes. They brought him before the Council; he owned that Writing, declared himself deeply guilty of those Faults, and said, that nine Months since he had relinquished the Government of his Church, and shut himself up in a Prison, to do Penance. The Council being informed that he had had the carnal Knowledge of a Woman, they declared, that although, according to the Ancient Rules, he was to be wholly degraded, and deprived of his Dignity, yet, out of compassion, they left him the Title and the Degree of a Bishop, but they would have him to do Penance all his Life-time, and they did chuse Fructuosus, Bishop of Dumes, to govern the Church of Braga in his room. This Decree is put after the Canons of the Council, and to it is annexed another Decree, disannulling the Bequests of a Will, made by Recimer Bishop of Dumes, to the Prejudice of his Church.

This Council is subscribed by 3 Metropolitans, Eugenius of Toledo, Fugitinus of Sevil, Fructuosus of Braga, by 17 Bishops and 5 Bishops Deputies.

A Conference held in Northumberland, in 664.

Of Northumberland.

THE chief occasion of this Conference, related by Beda, l. 3. c. 25. of his History, was the Dispute about Easter-day. Colman maintained the Practice of the Britains, and Wilfride that of the Romans. King Oswy was present at it. Wilfride founded his Practice upon the universal Custom of the Church, which kept Easter on the same Day, excepting the Picts and the Britains. Colman would have defended their Practice by the Authori- of St. John. But Wilfride shewed him, that he did not agree with this Apostle, who kept Easter without staying for the Sunday; which they did not follow, seeing they staid till the Sunday next after the fourteenth Moon. That they did not agree with St. Peter neither, for this Holy Apostle kept Easter between the 15th, and 21st, Moon, whereas they would keep it from the 14th, to the 20th, so that they did sometimes begin this Feast at the end of the thirteenth Moon. Colman alledged, for his Defence, the Authority of Anatolius, Columba and the Ancients of his Country. Wilfride answered, that they did not agree with Anatolius, who made use of the Cycle of of nineteen years, which they were ſtrangers to, becauſe that Author's Opinion was not that Eaſter was neceſſarily to be kept before the 21*ſt* Moon, but that he had miſtaken the fourteenth Moon for the fifteenth, and the twentieth for the twenty firſt. As to Columba and his Succeſſors, he would not condemn them; that he was perſuaded they might be excuſed for their Simplicity, in a Time when no body was able to inſtruct them: But, as for them, they could have no Excuſe, if they refuſed the Inſtructions given them. However, that Columba's Authority was not to be preferred before St. Peter's, to whom Chriſt gave the Keys of the Church, and ſaid, Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church.

The King ſtruck with theſe laſt words, ask'd Colman if it was true, that Chriſt ſaid ſo to St. Peter? Colman having confeſſed it was true, the King ſaid; that ſeeing St. Peter, was the Door-keeper of Heaven, he would not contradict him, but would obey his Statutes.

This Deciſion was approved by the Company: Colman and his Men withdrew, refuſing to yield to the Practice of the Romans, about the keeping of Eaſter and the Tonſure, about which there was alſo a Conteſt: Men take ſuch delight in Diſputes about ſmall Things.

The Council of Merida †.

[†Concilium Emeritenſe.]

Of Merida.

THIS Council, made up of the Biſhops of the Province of Portugal, was aſſembled by the Order of King Receſwinthe, in the Year 666. After having prayed for the King, they recited the Creed, with the addition, of the Holy Ghoſt, proceeding from the Father and the Son.

Then they decree, that on Holy Days they ſhall ſay Veſpers in their Churches, before they ſing what they call the Sound, that is, the Venite Exultemus, which is thus called, becauſe it was ſung with a loud ſounding Voice.

In the third Chapter they ordain, that whenever the King ſhall go to the Army, the Biſhops ſhall offer every Day the Sacrifice, and put up Prayers for him and his till his Return.

They decree in the fourth that Biſhops, after their Ordination, ſhall give a Writing, whereby they ſhall bind themſelves to a chaſte, ſober and honeſt Life. The Metropolitans were to ſend this Writing to the Biſhops of their Province, and the Biſhops to their Metropolitan.

By the 5th. Biſhops are enjoyned to come to the Synod, at the Time appointed by the Metropolitan's Letters, and the King's Order. If any of them be detained by Sickneſs, he is permitted to ſend a Presbyter for his Repreſentative, but they will not have him to depute a Deacon.

Moreover it is decreed by the 6th. that the Suffragan Biſhops, which ſhall be ſent for by the Metropolitan, to come and keep Chriſtmas and Eaſter with him, ſhall be bound to obey his Orders.

The 7th. renews the Law of holding every Year a Council, and the Penalties laid upon the Biſhops that do not come to it.

In the 8th. it is mentioned, that King Receſwinthe hath re-eſtabliſh'd the Rights of the Province of Portugal and its Metropolis: And then it ſays, that Selva Biſhop of Ingidane had made his Complaint, that Juſtus Biſhop of Salamanca had invaded his Dioceſs, and demanded Reſtitution of what belonged to him. It was ordained, that Surveyors ſhall be ſent to compoſe this Difference, becauſe there had not been thirty Years poſſeſſion. In the end Biſhops are warned to look well to the Preſervation of what belongs to to their Dioceſs; and it is decreed, that 30 Years Poſſeſſion ſhall go for a Title.

By the 9th. Canon, he to whom the Holy Chriſm is ſent, is forbidden to take any thing for his Diſtribution of it; and Presbyters are forbidden exacting any thing for Baptizing; but they are permitted to take what ſhall be freely given to them.

The 10th. enjoins every Biſhop to have an Archprieſt, an Archdeacon and a Secretary; and theſe Officers are enjoyn'd to be ſubject to their Biſhops, and to undertake nothing above their Power, under Pain of Excommunication.

Of Merida.

The 11th. orders the Prieſts, Abbots, Curates, and Deacons, to be ſubject to their Biſhops, to pay them their Dues, to entertain them in their Viſitations, and to undertake no Buſineſs without their Conſent.

By the 12th. a Biſhop is permitted to take Pariſh Prieſts and Clerks into his Cathedral Church, yet ſo that they ſhall not loſe their Title, nor the Revenue of their Livings, provided that another Prieſt or Clerk ſhall be put in their Room, with a competent Maintenance.

The 13th. impowers the Biſhop to prefer the Clerks, who diſcharge their Duty well, and to deprive them of this Advantage, if they abuſe it.

The 14th. decrees, that all the Money offered on Holy Days, in Churches, ſhall be gather'd together and put into the Biſhop's Hands, who ſhall divide it into three parts, the one for himſelf, the other for the Prieſts and Deacons, and the reſt for the other Clerks.

The 15th. orders the manner of puniſhing Church-Servants, that it be done agreeably to the Eccleſiaſtical Gentleneſs and Lenity.

By the 16th. the Biſhops of the Province of Portugal are forbidden to appropriate to themſelves the third part of the Church's Revenue, and are ordered to employ it in the Repairing of the Churches.

The 17th. appoints Penalties for thoſe who ſpeak ill of their Biſhops after their Death.

By the 18th. Parſons are enjoin'd to have Clerks.

The 19th. enjoyns Presbyters, charged with the Care of ſeveral Churches, to ſay Maſs in every one of them every Sunday, and to recite the Names of thoſe that built them, whether they be alive or dead.

The 20th. contains ſome Conſtitutions about the beſtowing Freedom on the Slaves of the Church.

The 21ſt. decrees, that the Donations, made by a Biſhop, ſhall ſtand, when the Church is found to have got more by his Eſtate, than he gave by his Will.

By the 22d. it is decreed, that thoſe that will not obſerve theſe Decrees, ſhall be excommunicated.

This Council ended, as all the preceding Councils of Spain, with Wiſhes and Prayers for King Receſwinthe. It is ſubſcribed by the Archbiſhop of Merida, and 11 Suffragan Biſhops; which are the Biſhops of Indane, of Pace, now Beca, of Avila, of Lisbon, of Lamega, of Salamanca, of Conimbra, of Cauria, of Oxanobe, now Iſtombar, of Elbora, now Talaverre, and of Celiabria, now Setuval; which we do now take notice of, becauſe there was ſome Difference ſince between the Metropolitan of Braga and that of Merida, about 3 of theſe Churches, viz. Conimbra, Lamega, and Indane.

A Council of Autun.

Of Autun.

ST. Leger, Biſhop of Autun, held a Council in this City, in which he made ſome Conſtitutions for Monks; wherein they are ordered, to appropriate nothing to themſelves, not to be ſeen in Towns, to obey their Abbots, to let no Woman come into their Monaſteries, to ſuffer no Vagabond

The eleventh Council of Toledo.

Of Toledo

THis Council, held in 675. begins with a long Expoſition of Faith, upon the Trinity and the Incarnation. The 1ſt. Canon is of the Modeſty and Order to be kept in the Council.

The 2d. enjoyns Metropolitans to be diligent in inſtructing of their Suffragans.

The 3d. enjoyns all the Biſhops of the ſame Province, to obſerve the ſame Rites and Ceremonies in the Publick Service, and to conform themſelves to the Metropolitan Church, from which they receive their Conſecration. Abbots likewiſe are enjoyn'd, in the Publick Service, to follow the Uſe of the Cathedral Church.

The 4th. forbids receiving the Oblations, or ſuffering the Biſhops that are at Variance to come near the Altar before they be reconcil'd.

The 5th. is to prevent the Attempts and Exceſſes the Biſhops might commit, by reaſon of their Authority.

By the 6th. Clerks are forbidden to be preſent in Capital Judgments, or to puniſh any Body with Loſs of Limbs.

The 7th. forbids Biſhops to put any Body to Penance, but according to the Publick Order of the Church, or in the preſence of Witneſſes.

The 8th. prohibits taking any thing, even of what is freely offered for Baptiſm, the Holy Chriſm, or Holy Orders.

The 9th. enjoyns him, who is ordained Biſhop, to give Oath before the Altar, that he neither did nor will give any thing to be choſen Biſhop.

The 10th. enjoins thoſe that take Orders to bind themſelves under their Hand, to keep inviolably to the Faith of the Church, to live a good Life, to do nothing contrary to the Eccleſiaſtical Laws, and to be obedient to their Superiors.

Of Toledo

The 11th. excuſes thoſe whom Illneſs cauſes to caſt up the Euchariſt, and condemns them that do it out of Impiety.

The 12th. ordains, that thoſe ſhall be reconciled who deſire Penance, being in Danger of Death, and that Commemoration be made of thoſe, and their Oblation be received, who die after they have been admitted to Penance, by the Impoſition of Hands, tho' they have not been reconciled.

The 13th. forbids thoſe who are poſſeſſed by the Devil, or ſtirred with violent Motions, to wait on the Altar, or to come near it, to receive the Sacraments: Yet thoſe are excepted who fall down out of Weakneſs or Illneſs, without any other Symptom.

The 14th. orders, that there ſhall always be ſome Body aſſiſting to the Prieſt, whilſt he is ſinging the Service or celebrating the Holy Sacrifice, to the end that, if he ſhould fall ill, another might take his Place.

The 15th. renews the Conſtitutions about the holding of Councils.

The Council concludes with wiſhes for the Proſperity of King * Wamba.

[*Al. Bamba.]

It is ſubſcribed by the Archbiſhop of Toledo, by 16. Biſhops, 2. Deacons, Biſhops Deputies, and 7. Abbots.

The fourth Council of Braga.

Of Braga.

THE ſame year, and under the ſame King, was held a Council in Braga. The Biſhops having recited the Nicene Creed, with the Addition of the Holy Ghoſt's proceeding from the Father and the Son, do condemn ſome Abuſes which had crept into the Celebration of the Holy Myſteries: Some offered Milk, others Grapes inſtead of Wine; ſome gave to the People the Euchariſt dipt in Wine: Some Prieſts would make uſe of the Sacred Veſſels to eat and drink in; others ſaid Maſs without a Stole on: Some hung about their Necks Relicks of Martyrs, and then made themſelves to be carried about by Deacons, with their Albes on. Several Biſhops accompanied with Women, and ſome miſuſed their Clerks; Simony was a common thing. They made Canons againſt all thoſe Diſorders.

By the 1ſt. they forbid offering Milk and Grapes, in lieu of Wine, and dipping the Euchariſt in the Wine.

The 2d. prohibits putting Sacred Veſſels and Ornaments to prophane and common Uſes.

By the 3d. it is ordered, that Prieſts ſhall celebrate the Holy Myſteries with a Stole only, which ſhall cover their Shoulders, and go down, croſs-wiſe, over the Stomach.

Of Braga.

By the 4th. Eccleſiaſtical Perſons are forbidden to dwell with a Woman, excepting their Mother only, but not their very Siſters, nor any other near Relations.

The 5th. declares, it belongs to the Deacons to carry the Relicks of Martyrs; and that if the Biſhop will carry them, he ſhall go afoot, and not be carried by the Deacons.

The 6th. forbids Biſhops to cauſe the Prieſts, Abbots or Deacons under him to be beaten.

The 7th. prohibits Simony, and for that purpoſe renews the Canon of the Council of Chalcedon.

The laſt forbids Biſhops to take more care of their own Patrimony than of the Church's; and if this happens to be embezell'd by their Negligence, whilſt the other is improved, they ſhall be bound to make up the Loſs out of their own.

This Council is ſign'd by 8. Biſhops.

The twelfth Council of Toledo.

Of Toledo

THis Council was held in 681. under King * Ervigius. The Metropolitans of Toledo, Seville, Braga, and Merida, were preſent in it, together with thirty Biſhops, four Abbots, three Biſhops Deputies, and ſeveral Lords. King Ervigius came to it at the beginning of it, and withdrew after having having made a ſhort Speech to the Council. He left them a Memoir, wherein he exhorted them to abſolve the Guilty, to reform Manners, to re-eſtabliſh Diſcipline, to renew the Laws made againſt the Jews, to procure the Reſtoration of thoſe who had been degraded, by vertue of a Law of his Predeceſſor, for not bearing Arms, or for laying them down. He directs his Speech to the Biſhops and the Lords, that theſe Laws being made by the unanimous conſent of both Spiritual and Temporal Authority, they may ſtand firm, and be put in execution.

The Council, having, according to the Cuſtom, made a proteſtation, that they did receive the Faith of the firſt four Councils, and recited the Creed, approves Ervigius's Elevation to the Throne, and Wamba's Depoſition, who had withdrawn himſelf by taking a Religious Habit, ſhaving his Head, and chuſing King Ervigius to reign in his ſtead, and cauſing him to be conſecrated by the Sacerdotal Unction. It is very remarkable, that the Fathers of this Council do not depoſe King Wamba, nor chuſe Ervigius of their own accord. But after having ſeen the Declaration, which that Prince had made in Writing, and ſigned in the preſence of the Lords, whereby he had made profeſſion of the Religious Life, and got his Hair cut; and that whereby he deſired, that Ervigius might be choſen King; and the order he had given to the Biſhop of Toledo, to conſecrate Ervigius with the uſual Ceremonies; and the Verbal Proceſs of that Conſecration, ſigned by Wamba, they join their conſent to Wamba's, and approve of what he hath done, and conſequently declare, that Ervigius ought to be owned for their lawful King, and in that Quality to be obeyed, upon pain of Anathema.

The 2*d*. Canon binds thoſe, who receive Penance in the extremity of Sickneſs, and when they are not ſenſible, to lead a Penitent Life, if they recover. Yet they will have the Prieſt to give Penance to thoſe only that deſire it; they give the inſtance of Childrens Baptiſm, to ſhew that Penance may be given to thoſe who are not ſenſible.

The 3*d*. ordains, that thoſe that have been excommunicated for ſome Crime againſt the State, ſhall be reſtored when the Prince taketh them into his favour again, or they have the Honour to eat at his Table.

In the 4*th*. the Biſhop of Merida having repreſented, that King Wamba had conſtrained him to ordain a Biſhop in a Country-Town, and eſſayed to do the ſame thing in other places: They recited the Canons forbidding to ordain Biſhops in Burroughs, or to put two in the ſame City; by vertue whereof they declared, that the Ordination of him, whom Wamba cauſed to be Ordained, was irregular: but ſeeing it was not out of Ambition that he had been Ordained, but by the Prince's expreſs Orders, they out of mere favour granted him the next vacant Biſhoprick; and they make a general Inhibition, to ordain Biſhops in places where there were none before.

Council of Toledo.

The 5*th*. forbids Prieſts to offer the Holy Sacrifice without Communicating, becauſe ſome of thoſe who offered it many times in one Day, would not communicate but at their laſt Maſs.

The 6*th*. to prevent the long vacancy of Churches, permits the Archbiſhop of Toledo to ordain him whom the King ſhall chuſe, yet without any prejudice to the Rights of Provinces; and upon condition, that within three Months after his Ordination he ſhall preſent himſelf before his Metropolitan.

The 7*th*. declares, that whereas King Ervigius intends to moderate the Law made by his Predeceſſor Wamba, againſt them that had not taken Arms; it was their Opinion, that ſuch Perſons had a Right to bear Witneſs, and were not to be rejected as infamous.

By the 8*th*. Husbands are forbidden to leave their Wives, except for Adultery.

The 9*th*. renews ſeveral Conſtitutions againſt the Jews.

The 10*th*. grants the Right of the Sanctuary to thoſe who eſcape into Churches, or within thirty Yards about, provided nevertheleſs, that they ſhall be delivered back into their Hands, who ſhall promiſe with an Oath not to hurt them.

The 11*th*. Canon does ſeverely puniſh Superſtitions and Idolatry.

The 12*th*. renews the Law for holding a Council every Year.

The 13*th*. contains Wiſhes and Prayers for the Prince.

Theſe Canons are confirmed by a Declaration of King Ervigius.

The thirteenth Council of Toledo.

Of Toledo.

THIS Council was alſo holden under King Ervigius, (An. 683.) The ſame Metropolitans aſſiſted at it, together with forty four Biſhops, twenty four Deputies of other Biſhops, eight Abbots, and twenty ſix Lords. They read the Memoir ſent to them by King Ervigius, containing the Heads of ſuch matters as he would have to be regulated by them. Then they made a Confeſſion of Faith, and recited the Creed, according to the cuſtom. The three firſt Canons reſpect Secular Affairs, and confirm what the Prince had done.

The 1*ſt*. is a Pardon in favour of thoſe who had formerly conſpired with Paul againſt the State.

The 2*d*. is a Determination of the manner how to proceed againſt the Lords of the Court, accuſed of Capital Matters, and how to judge them.

And the 3*d*. is about the remitting of the extraordinary Taxes granted to Ervigius. Theſe three Canons are all of the firſt Day.

The next day the Biſhops being deſirous to ſhew their Gratitude to their Prince for the favours he had beſtowed upon them, provided for the Security of his Children and Family.

By the 4*th*. Canon, and by the 5*th*. they forbid any Perſon Marrying his Widow.

The 6*th*. prohibits advancing to the Offices of the Court Slaves, or Free-Men, unleſs they belong to the Exchequer.

Of Toledo.

The 7*th*. forbids to uncloath the Altars, take away the Wax-Candles, adorn the Church in a Mournful manner, or to ceaſe to offer the Sacrifice, without great neceſſity.

Of Toledo.

The 8*th*. orders Biſhops to come, when ſent for by their Metropolitan, to be preſent at ſome Feſtival.

The 9*th*. confirms and repeats compendiouſly the Canons of the 12*th*. Council of Toledo.

The 10*th*. made in the 3*d*. Meeting of the Council, is concerning a difficult caſe propoſed by Gaudentius Biſhop of Valeria, or Villareo, who being fallen Sick had ſubjected himſelf to the Laws of Penance. He deſired to know, whether, in caſe he recovered, he might execute his Function, and celebrate the Holy Myſteries. The Council ordains, that he may, after he is reconciled; becauſe the Canons permit thoſe who being at the point of Death, have indeed received Penance, but yet have confeſſed no Crimes, to be admitted into the Clergy. Upon this Principle, they make a general Law, that the Biſhops, who have received Penance, without confeſſing any Mortal Sins, being reconciled by their Metropolitan, may return to their Functions. Notwithſtanding, if they had been convicted of any Crimes, before they were put to Penance, or if they have confeſſed ſome capital Sins upon their receiving of it, they ſhall abſtain from their Functions, as long as the Metropolitan ſhall think fit. But if in ſubmitting themſelves to Penance they confeſſed no Mortal Sin, tho' they have committed ſome, which they conceal in their own Conſcience, they have the liberty to examine themſelves in their own Conſcience, whether they ſhould offer the Sacrifice, or not: But this depends upon their own Will, and not upon Mens Judgment.

The thirteenth Council of Toledo.

The 11*th*. Canon prohibits keeping or entertaining another Biſhop's Clerk, or helping his eſcape, or affording him means of hiding himſelf. It is obſerved there, that thoſe ought not to be reckoned among Fugitives, who go to their Metropolitan about their own buſineſs

It is ordained contrary-wiſe by the 12*th*. Canon, that the Clerk, who having ſome buſineſs with his Biſhop, betakes himſelf to the Metropolitan, ought not to be excommunicated by his Biſhop, before the Metropolitan hath judged whether he deſerves Excommunication. Likewiſe, if a Clerk pretending himſelf to be wrong'd by his Metropolitan, betaketh himſelf to another Metropolitan; or if, both the Metropolitans refuſing to do him Juſtice, he hath recourſe to the Prince he ſhall not be excommunicated before his Cauſe be judged. Yet, if he who appeals to the Synod, to the next Metropolitan, or to the King, be found to have been excommunicated, before he brought his Matters before them, he ſhall remain excommunicate till he hath cleared himſelf.

The 13*th*. contains Thankſgiving to King Ervigius, and ſome Petitions to Heaven for him.

This Prince ſet out an Edict, whereby he confirmed theſe Canons, after the recitation of them.

The fourteenth Council of Toledo.

Of Toledo.

THIS Council was called by King Ervigius, (Anno. 684.) to approve what had been done againſt the Error of the Monothelites, which they call the Doctrine of Apollinaris. He intended to call a General Council of his whole Kingdom for this purpoſe; but time not permitting it, the Biſhop of Toledo aſſembled his Suffragans; and the Metropolitans of Tarragona, Narbone, Merida, Braga, and Sevil, ſent their Deputies thither. In this Council they approved the Acts of that of Conſtantinople, and and added an Expoſition of Faith, wherein they did acknowledge two Wills in Jeſus Chriſt.

The fifteenth Council of Toledo.

Of Toledo.

THIS Council was held under King * Egica, Ervigius's Succeſſor, and Son-in-law, (An. 688.) and compoſed of ſixty Biſhops. In this Council they juſtifie themſelves about ſome Articles of the Expoſition of Faith, which the Spaniſh Biſhops had ſent to Rome by Peter a Presbyter, which Articles Pope Benedict had found fault with.

[* Alias Egypca.]

The firſt is about their ſaying, that the Will had begotten a Will. They defend this Expreſſion, becauſe the Eternal Will of God is common to the three Perſons, as well as Wiſdom, and other Divine Attributes; ſo that as Wiſdom may be ſaid to have begotten Wiſdom, the Will likewiſe may be ſaid to have begotten a Will; they alſo defend this Expreſſion by ſome Teſtimonies of St. Athanaſius, and St. Auſtine.

The ſecond is about their ſaying, that there were three Subſtances in Jeſus Chriſt. They maintain, that Jeſus Chriſt being compoſed of a Body, a Soul, and the Godhead, he may be ſaid to be of three Subſtances in this Senſe, tho' the Body and Humane Soul being taken but for one Nature and one Subſtance, two Natures and two Subſtances only may be ſaid to be in him. They ſhew, that St. Cyril, and St. Auſtine, did ſpeak as they did. They do not enlarge upon the other two Articles, thinking it ſufficient to obſerve, that they are taken out of St. Ambroſe, and St. Fulgentius. Afterwards they treat of the Oaths taken by King Egica. He had made one to King Ervigius, to defend and protect his Children againſt all Perſons whatſoever; and another at his Conſecration, to adminiſter Juſtice to his People. It was demanded, that in caſe theſe two Oaths ſhould be found to interfere with one another, and that Ervigius's Children were to be protected againſt Right and Juſtice, and to be reſcued from the Puniſhment due to them for Wrongs done by them, whether the King be bound to keep the firſt, or the laſt Oath. The Council anſwers, He is more ſtrictly bound to keep the laſt, as being more juſt, more ſolemn and neceſſary. This Council is ſigned by the Metropolitans of Toledo, Narbone, Sevil, Braga, and Merida, by fifty ſix of their Suffragans in Perſon, by the Deputies of ſix, among whom was Iva the Arch-Biſhop of Tarragona, by eleven Abbots, by ſeventeen Lords, and confirmed by the King's Declaration.

The Council of Saragoſa.

Of Saragoſa.

THIS Council was aſſembled under King Egica, Anno. 691. It made five Canons.

By the 1*ſt*. Biſhops are forbidden to conſecrate Churches but on Sundays.

The 2*d*. orders the Biſhops to enquire of their Metropolitan, or Primate, about Eaſter-Day, and to keep it upon the Day he ſhall appoint.

The 3*d*. forbids Monks to admit Secular Perſons into their Cloyſters.

The 4*th*. ordains that the Church-Slaves, freed by their Biſhop, ſhall be bound to exhibit to his Succeſſor their Letters of Freedom within a Year after the Death of the Biſhop that ſet them at Liberty; provided they have been warned to do ſo.

The 5*th*. renews what had been decreed by the Council of Toledo, that the King's Widow ſhould not marry again; and ordains moreover, that ſhe ſhall withdraw into a Convent, and take the Religious Habit, immediately after the Prince's Death.

The Council ends with Thankſgivings to, and Prayers for the King.

The ſixteenth Council of Toledo.

Of Toledo.

THIS Council was kept in 693. under the ſame King Egica. After the reading of the Memoir, containing the Propoſal of what was to be treated in the Council, the Biſhops made a long Expoſition of Faith, which is followed with twelve Canons.

The 1*ſt*. is in the behalf of the Jewiſh Converts, to exempt them from the Tribute which they paid to the Exchequer.

The 2*d*. is againſt the remainders of Idolatry.

The 3*d*. appoints very ſevere Puniſhments againſt the Sodomites, and excludes them from the Communion until the time of Death, when they have not done Penance being in health.

The 4*th*. is againſt them that fall into ſome Fit of Deſpair.

The 5*th*. forbids Biſhops to take above the third part of the Churches Revenues, and orders them to lay lay it out in Repairs. It prohibits also giving the Government of many Churches to one Priest, and ordains, that small Churches shall be united to greater ones.

The 6th. forbids an Abuse crept in among some Spanish Priests, who at the Sacrifice upon the Altar did not offer clean and decent Loaves, nor prepare them carefully; but did only consecrate a Cruit of their own Bread cut round. The Council to stop this Abuse, ordains, that the Bread, to be consecrated upon the Altar, shall be whole, decent, made on purpose, that it shall not be a very great Loaf, but of a reasonable bigness, Modica oblata, the remainders of which may easily be preserved, and which may not load the Stomach.

The 7th. commands, that Bishops shall call their Clergy and the People together for the promulgation of the Canons of Councils within six months after the holding of the Councils.

The 8th. contains several Constitutions for the safety of the Kings Children, and ordains, that every Day, Sacrifices shall be offered up for the Health and Prosperity of the King, and the Royal Family, except the Day of the Passion, when Altars are uncovered, and no body is permitted to say Mass.

The 9th. is against Sisbert, Bishop of Toledo, who had broken his Oath to King Egica, by conspiring against his Person and Family: they depose and excommunicate him for his whole Life, they declare his Goods to be confiscated to the Prince, and condemn him to perpetual Imprisonment. They decree the same Punishment against all that are guilty of the same Crime.

The sixteenth Council of Toledo.

The 10th. pronounces three times Anathema against them that attempt against the Life of Kings, and plot against them and the State, and reduces them and their Posterity to the condition of Slaves.

The 11th. contains some Prayers for King Egica's Prosperity.

By the 12th. they put Felix, Bishop of Sevil, into the room of Sisbert newly deposed, and Faustin, Bishop of Braga, into Felix's room, and to Faustin they substitute another Bishop.

The 13th. ordains, that a Council shall be held at Narbone to approve the Canons of this; because the Bishops of this Province could not come to it by reason of a Sickness. This Council is confirmed by the Prince's Edict, and signed by Five Metropolitans, viz. those of Toledo, Sevil, Merida, Tarragona, and Braga, by fifty two Bishops, three Bishop's Deputies, five Abbots, and Sixteen Counts or Lords.

The seventeenth Council of Toledo, held in 694.

Of Toledo.

THIS Council hath the same Form with the preceding. King Egica presented a Memoir, which the Bishops of the Council having read, they recited the Creed, and made the following Canons.

1st. That they shall fast three Days, in Honour of the Holy Trinity, before they begin any Conference in Councils.

2dly. That in the beginning of Lent the Bishop shall shut the Font, and seal it with his Ring till Holy Thursday, to let People know, that no Body ought to be Baptized during that time, but in case of extreme necessity.

3dly. They ordain, that the Ceremony of washing of Feet shall be used on Holy Thursday.

4thly. They renew the prohibition of putting Sacred Vessels to Prophane Uses.

5thly. They condemn to Excommunication, and perpetual Imprisonment, those Priests that say the Masses of the Dead for the Living, out of a conceit that this Sacrifice will bring them to their Death.

Of Toledo.

6thly. They re-establish the ancient custom to make Litanies, or Publick Prayers, every month for the Church, the King's Health, the Good of the State, and the Remission of Sins.

7thly. They provide for the Security of the King's Children, that no Body may attempt against their Life, or Estate, after his decease.

Lastly, They return their thanks to King Egica, who confirms their Canons by his Edict.

A Council held at Constantinople, Anno 692, called Quini-Sextum, or, In Trullo.

Of Constantinople.

THE fifth and sixth General Councils having made no Canons about Discipline, Justinian the Second thought fit to call a Council, to renew the old Canons, and to make a kind of a Body of the Canon-Law, for the Clergy of all the East.

This Council was held in 692. at Constantinople in the Tower of the Emperor's Palace, called Trullus. The four Patriarchs of the East were present at it, together with 108. Bishops of their Patriarchates. This Council was called Quini-Sextum, because it was look'd upon as a Supplement to the fifth and sixth Councils. It took the Name of General Council, and the Greeks owned it for such, but the Latins rejected it. It made 102. Canons.

In the 1st. it approves all that was done in the first six General Councils, condemns the Errors and the Persons they had condemned, and pronounces Anathema to those that hold any other Doctrine, than that they have established.

In the 2d. the Bishops of this Council deliver the number of Canons which they received, which are the Constitutions attributed to Clement, the Canons of the Councils of Nice, Ancyra, Neo-Cæsarea, Gangra, Antioch, Laodicea, Constantinople, Ephesus, Chalcedon, Sardica, and Carthage. The Canons made in the time of Nectarius at Constantinople, and in the time of Theophilus at Alexandria; the Canons of Denys, and Peter of Alexandria, of Gregory Thaumaturgus, of St. Athanasius, St. Basil, St. Gregory Nyssen, St. Gregory Nazianzen, of Amphilochius, Timothy, and Theophilus of Alexandria, St. Cyril, Gennadius of Constantinople, and the Canon of St. Cyprian, and his Council, which is only observed in Africa, according to their Custom.

Of Constantinople.

The 3d. Canon is concerning those of the Clergy, Presbyters or Deacons, that had married two Wives. They declare, that those that would not leave that Custom shall be deposed; but as to those, whose second Wives are dead, or who have left them, they shall keep the honour and place of their Dignity, being forbidden only to perform the Functions of it; it being not fitting, say they, that he that ought to heal his own Wounds, should bless others; As for them who had married Widows, or had married, being Priests, Deacons, or Subdeacons, they ordain, they shall for a time be suspended from their Functions; but they grant them the Power of being restored, when they leave their Wives, upon condition, that they shall not be raised to a superior Order. And lastly, they ordain, that, for the future, all those that have been married twice after Baptiſm, or have had Concubines, ſhall not be made Biſhops, Prieſts, Deacons, or Clergymen; as alſo thoſe that have married, divorced or proſtituted Women, or Slaves, or Stage-players.

The 4th. Canon inflicts the puniſhment of Depoſition upon ſuch Eccleſiaſtical Perſons as ſhall company with a Virgin conſecrated to God, and of Excommunication upon Laymen.

The 5th. renews the Canon which forbids Clerks to have with them Women, not related to them, except thoſe which the Canons allow them to dwell withal. It extends this Prohibition to the Eunuchs.

The 6th. forbids thoſe that are in Orders, including the Subdeacons, to marry after their Ordination.

The 7th. forbids Deacons to ſit down before a Presbyter, unleſs they repreſent the Perſon of the Patriarch or Metropolitan.

The 8th. ordains, that a Synod ſhall be kept at leaſt once a year in each Province.

The 9th. forbids Clerks to keep a Tavern, or to reſort thither.

The 10th. forbids them to lend upon Uſury.

The 11th. forbids them having any Commerce or Familiarity with the Jews.

The 12th. tyes the Biſhops of Africa and Lybia to the Law of the Celibacy.

The 13th. prohibits the Separation of Presbyters, Deacons or Subdeacons from their Wives, or binding them to Continency, before they be ordained.

The 14th. renews the Canon, ordaining, that he who is made a Prieſt ſhall be 30. years old at leaſt, and a Deacon 25.

The 15th. decrees, that he who is ordained Subdeacon, be at leaſt 20. years old.

The 16th. declares, that the ſeven Deacons, ſpoken of in the Acts of the Apoſtles, were but Miniſters of common Tables, and not of Altars; and thereby rejects the Canon of the Council of Neo-cæſarea, which by the Authority of this Place had ordained, that there ſhould be but ſeven Deacons in every Church.

The 17th. forbids Clerks to go out of their Churches, without Dimiſſory Letters from their Biſhops.

The 18th. enjoins thoſe who were forced to withdraw becauſe of the Incurſions of the Barbarians, or for any other cauſe, to come back again, as ſoon as they can.

The 19th. enjoyns thoſe who govern Churches, to preach to thoſe committed to their care, the Doctrine of the Church, and to expound the Scripture agreeably to the Sentiments of the Fathers.

The 20th. forbids Biſhops to preach in a Church, which is out of their Dioceſs.

The 21ſt. gives permiſſion to Clerks depoſed, if they repent of their Fault, to wear ſhort Hair, like other Clerks: But if they lead a ſecular Life, it binds them to wear long Hair, like other Laymen.

The 22d. ordains, that they ſhall be depoſed that have been ordained for Money.

The 23d. prohibits exacting Money for the Diſtribution of the Holy Communion.

The 24th. forbids Clerks to be preſent at the Shows of Stage-players.

The 25th. ordains, that Country Pariſhes ſhall belong to the Biſhop who had them in Poſſeſſion 30. years ago; and if before 30. years Poſſeſſion any will prove them not to belong to them, the Matter ſhall be examined in the Provincial Council.

The 26th. renews the Prohibition made to a Prieſt, engaged in an unlawful Marriage, to execute his Function.

The 27th. forbids Clerks to wear any other Garb than ſuch as belongs to their Order, and ſeparateth for a Week thoſe that do.

The 28th. forbids diſtributing with the Oblation the Grapes offered at the Altar, by reaſon the Oblation ought to be given to the People for the Sanctification and Remiſſion of Sins, whereas Fruits are only bleſſed and diſtributed for Thankſgivings.

The 29th. ordains, that, according to the Council of Carthage, the Myſteries ſhall be celebrated faſting, not excepting Holy Thurſday itſelf. Council of Conſtantinople.

The 30th. ordains, that the Biſhops of Churches in barbarous Countries, if they will leave their Wives, ſhall dwell no longer with them.

The 31ſt. forbids Clerks to baptize, or to celebrate the Myſteries in Chappels of private Houſes, without the Biſhop's conſent.

The 32d. condemns the Practice of the Armenians, who put no Water into the Wine which they did conſecrate.

The 33d. rejects another Cuſtom of the ſame Armenians, who admitted none into the Clergy but thoſe of a Sacerdotal Race, and made them Clerks and Readers without cutting their Hair. The Council does not allow that regard ſhould be had to the Race of thoſe that are ordained, but only to their Merit; and forbids the Readers to read publickly in the Church, without their Hair cut, and without receiving the Bleſſing of the Paſtor of the Church.

The 34th. decrees the Penalty of Depoſition againſt caballing Clerks.

The 35th. forbids a Metropolitan to ſeize on the Eſtate of a Biſhop deceaſed, or on his Church; and appoints that they ſhall be in the Keeping of the Clerks, till there be another Biſhop, unleſs there be no Clerks, in which caſe the Metropolitan ſhall keep them for the Succeſſor.

The 36th. renews the Canons of the Councils of Conſtantinople and Chalcedon, concerning the Authority of the See of the Church of Conſtantinople, and grants to it the ſame Privileges as to the See of old Rome, the ſame Authority in Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, and the 2d. place, the 3d. to that of Alexandria, the 4th. to that of Antioch, and the 5th. to that of Jeruſalem.

The 37th. preſerveth to the Biſhops, ordained into Churches, which have been invaded by the Barbarians, the Dignity and Rank of Biſhops, and permits them to perform their Functions.

The 38th. renews the 12th. Canon of the Council of Chalcedon; whereby it is ordained, that the Diſpoſition of Churches ſhall follow that of the Empire.

The 39th. preſerveth to the Metropolitan of Cyprus, (who was forced to withdraw by reaſon of that Iſland's being taken by the Barbarians, and was come to ſettle in the new Juſtinianopolis) they preſerve him, I ſay, the Right of Supremacy, and the Government of the Churches of the Helleſpont, with the Right of being choſen by the Biſhops ſubject to it, according to the ancient Cuſtom. They do alſo ſubject to him the Biſhop of Cyzicum.

The 40th. declares, that they may receive a Monk in the 10th. year of his Age.

The 41ſt. ordains, that thoſe who will be Recluſes or Anchorets, ought to have been three years at leaſt in a Monaſtery.

The 42d. forbids to ſuffer Hermits to be in Towns.

The 43d. imports, that all kind of People may be admitted into Monaſteries, even the greateſt Sinners, by reaſon Monachiſm is a ſtate of Penance.

The 44th. is againſt Monks guilty of Fornication or married.

The 45th. forbids to dreſs with worldly Apparel and Ornaments the Virgins that conſecrate themſelves to God, when they go to take the Religious Habit.

The 46th. forbids Friars and Nuns to go out of their Monaſtery, without the Superior's Leave.

The 47th. forbids Friars to lie in the Monaſteries of Virgins, and Virgins to dwell in the Monaſteries of Friars.

The 48th. ordains, that the Wife of him who ſhall be made Biſhop ſhall be put away from him, and ſhall withdraw into a Monaſtery, at a diſtance from the Biſhop's Reſidence.

The 49th. prohibits converting Religious Houſes to profane uſes.

The 50th. forbids thoſe of the Clergy and the Laity

Council of Constantinople.

Laity to play at any Games of hazard, upon pain of Depoſition and Excommunication.

The 51*ſt*. forbids Jeſters, Dancers and Shows.

The 52*d*. ordains, that the * Maſs of the Preſanctified ſhall be celebrated every Day in Lent, except Saturday and Sunday, and Lady-day.

The 53*d*. forbids them that ſtood Sureties for Children, to marry the Mother of ſuch Infants.

The 54*th*. prohibits marrying the Uncle's Daughter: Forbids a Father and a Son to marry the Mother and the Daughter, or two Siſters; as alſo a Mother and a Daughter to marry the Father and Son, or two Brothers, upon Penalty of 7 years Penance.

The 55*th*. ordains, that the Canon forbidding to faſt on Saturday and Sunday, ſhall be obſerved in the Church of Rome, as well as in other Churches.

The 56*th*. forbids eating Eggs and Cheeſe in Lent.

The 57*th*. forbids offering Milk and Honey on the Altar.

The 58*th*. forbids Laymen to give to themſelves the Euchariſt, before a Biſhop, a Prieſt, or a Deacon.

The 59*th*. forbids baptizing in Domeſtick Chappels.

The 60*th*. is againſt them who feign themſelves to be poſſeſſed.

The 61*ſt*. is againſt Superſtitions.

The 62*d*. againſt the Fooleries which were acted on New-year's-day.

The 63*d*. condemns to the Fire the falſe Stories of Martyrs, made by the Enemies of the Church.

The 64*th*. imports, that the Laity ought not to undertake to teach Religious Matters.

The 65*th*. is againſt the Cuſtom of kindling Fires before Houſes on the New Moons.

The 66*th*. ordains, that Eaſter Week ſhall be ſpent in Prayer.

The 67*th*. forbids eating the Blood of Beaſts.

The 68*th*. forbids burning, tearing, or giving to Victuallers the Books of the Goſpels, if they be not quite ſpoiled.

The 69*th*. forbids the Laity to enter within the Rails of the Altar; yet the Emperor is excepted, who, according to an old Cuſtom, is permitted to enter in, when he is willing to make ſome Oblation to the Lord.

The 70*th*. forbids Women to talk in the time of the Holy Sacrifice.

The 71*ſt*. is againſt ſome prophane Practices of Students in the Law.

The 72*d*. declares the Marriages between an Orthodox Chriſtian and an Heretick to be null and void.

The 73*d*. ordains, that Reverence ſhall be paid to the Croſs; and that Croſſes ſhall not be ſuffer'd to be made on the Floor.

The 74*th*. forbids making the Feaſts, call'd Agapæ, in Churches.

The 75*th*. ordains, that they ſhall ſing in the Church without Straining or Bawling, modeſtly and attentively.

The 76*th*. enjoins, that no Tavern or Tradeſman's Shop ſhall be ſuffer'd to ſtand within the Incloſure of the Church.

The 77*th*. that Men ought not to bathe with Women.

The 78*th*. that they ought to inſtruct thoſe that are to be baptized.

[* Miſſa præſanctificatorum, was the Sacrament which was adminiſtred with Elements which were before conſecrated, oblatio prius oblati, & perfecti ſacrificii, ſacrique Myſterii. Balſam. in hunc Can.]

The 79*th*. is againſt an Abuſe of ſome, who at Chriſtmas made Cakes to the Honour of the Virgin's Lying-in.

Of the Councils held in the Eighth Age.

The Assembly of Barkhamstead in the Kingdom of Kent.

Of Barkhamstead.

WIGHTHRED, King of Kent, held an Assembly (Anno 697.) which Birchwald, Bishop of Canterbury, assisted at, and Gebmond, Bishop of Rochester, with several of the Clergy and Laity, which made some Ecclesiastical and Civil Laws.

The 1*st*. ordains, that the Church shall be free, and enjoy her Courts of Justice, Revenues, and Pensions, that they shall pray for the Prince, and voluntarily submit to his Orders.

The 2*d*. that the Fine, for infringing the Justice of the Church, shall be 50. Pence, as that of the King's Justice is.

The 3*d*. ordains, that the Adulterers of the Laity shall be put to Penance, and they of the Clergy shall be deposed.

The 4*th*. that Foreigners, guilty of that Crime, shall be expelled the Realm.

The 5*th*. and 6*th*. that those of the Nobility, overtaken in that Sin, shall be fined in 100. Pence, and the Peasants in 50.

The 7*th*. permits an Ecclesiastical Person guilty of Adultery, if he break off that habit, to continue in the Priesthood, provided that he have not maliciously refused to administer Baptism, or that he be not a Drunkard.

The 8*th*. imports, that if one, with the Tonsure, that is, a Monk, do not keep his Rule, he shall retire into an Hospital with Permission.

The 9*th*. that the Slaves efranchised before the Altar, shall enjoy their Liberty, and be capable of Succession, and of the other Rights of Free Persons.

The three next Canons punish with pecuniary Mulcts those who set their Slaves to work, or to go a Journey on a Sunday.

The four following appoint Corporal Punishments or Fines against those who sacrifice to Devils.

The 17*th*. imports, that the Bishops and the King's Word ought to be believed without any Oath.

The 18*th*. that Abbots shall swear, as Priests do; and that that the Priests shall swear before the Altar, by saying simply, I speak the truth in Jesus Christ, and I lie not; that the Deacons shall take the same Oath. Of Barkhamstead.

The 19*th*. that other Clerks shall take four Persons more with them to clear themselves by Oath, and that they shall lay one of their Hands upon the Altar.

The 20*th*. that Strangers shall not be obliged to bring other Persons with them.

The 21*st*. that the Peasants shall present themselves with four Persons more, and shall bow the Head before the Altar.

The 22*d*. declares, that the Causes of the Bishops Clients belong to the Ecclesiastical Court.

The 23*d*. ordains, that if any Body impeach a Slave, his Master may purge him with his bare Oath, provided he take the Eucharist; but if he taketh it not, he must put in Bail, or submit to the Penalty.

The 24*th*. that a Clergyman shall purge his Slave with his bare Oath.

The 25*th*. that he that kills a Robber, is not liable to pay any Sum for that Death.

The 26*th*. that he that shall be catched carrying something away, shall be punished with Death, Banishment, or Fine, according to the King's Will: that he that got hold on him, shall have half the Fine; but if he kills him, he shall be fined in 70. Pence.

The 27*th*. that he that helps the Flight of a Slave, who hath robbed his Master, shall be fined in 70. Pence, and he that killeth him shall pay the worth of him.

The 28*th*. that the Strangers and Vagabonds which run up and down the Country, without blowing the Horn, or crying aloud, shall be used as High-waymen.

These Laws are followed with some Canons concerning the Pecuniary Compensation of the Wrongs done to the Church or the Priesthood. They were found in the same Monument; but it is not known whose they are, nor at what time they were written.

Councils held in England about the matter of Wilfrid.

Of England.

FEW Men have been more molested and cross'd in their Life than Wilfrid, Abbot of Rippon, and afterwards Bishop of York. He was a Native of Northumberland, born towards the year 634. He left his own Country to go to Rome, where he was instructed in the Discipline of that Church. Thence he returned to Lyons, and there he received the Tonsure from Delphin, Bishop of that City, who was murder'd soon after by Ebroin's Order. After his Death, Wilfrid was called home by Alfrid, eldest Son of Oswi, King of Northumberland, who gave him the Monastery of Rippon, founded by him in the Bishoprick of York. He was ordain'd Priest by Hagilbert, Bishop of Dorcester. He was present at the Conference, held at Streneshall before the King, about the Difference between the Church of Rome, and the ancient British and Irish Churches, about Easter-day; and there he maintain'd the Usage of the Roman Church against Colman, an Irishman. Afterward, he was nominated to the Archbishoprick of York, and passed over into France to get himself ordain'd, there being but one Bishop in England. He was consecrated by Angilbert, Bishop of Paris, and eleven Bishops assisted at that Ceremony. During his Absence, they that stood for the Usage of the Irish Churches perswaded King Oswi to put into the Church of York, Ceadde, Abbot of Lestinguen, who was consecrated by one English and two British Bishops. St. Wilfrid, after his return, did immediately retire into his Monastery, and after that, he was called out into Mercia, where the King gave him Lichfield, to erect a Bishoprick or a Monastery there. After the Death of Adeodatus, Bishop of Canterbury, he perform'd for some time the Episcopal Functions in that Church, till Theodorus obtained that See. This Man re-established St. Wilfrid in the Archbishoprick of York, and deprived Ceadde, who did very patiently bear that Expulsion. Wilfrid enjoy'd that Archbishoprick peaceably, during King Oswi's Reign; but he was turned out of it in the beginning of Egfrid's Reign, towards the year 670. being deposed by Theodorus himself. He presently withdrew into Friesland, and thence went to Rome. He was very well entertain'd by Pope Agatho, who restored him to his Dignity in a Council of Bishops, and that Sentence was confirm'd by the Popes Benedict and Sergius. Being fortified with this Authority, he came back again into England, where he met with bad Entertainment, and was imprisoned by the Order of Queen Ermenburge, Egfrid's Wife. Being got out, he went to preach Of England.

preach the Gospel to the South-Saxons, and baptized, as 'tis believed, Edelwach [or Ethelwolfe] their King. Theodorus seeing that he had suffered himself to be surprized by St. Wilfrid's Enemies, reconciled himself with him, and prevailed with King Alfrid to consent to his Re-establishment: He return'd to York in 686. but five years after, he was expelled again, for refusing to receive some Constitutions, made by Theodorus, Archbishop of Canterbury. He returned to his Bishoprick of Lichfield, which he found vacant. Some years after, he was invited by Brithwald, Archbishop of Canterbury, to be present at a Synod, within two Leagues of Rippon, in hope of an Agreement. They urged him to withdraw into his Abby of Rippon, and to quit his Bishoprick. He did not only refuse to do it, but he had recourse to the Holy See. Therefore he went to Rome again, and purged himself before Pope John in a Synod, in the presence of the Deputies of both Parties, and was declared innocent. With this Sentence he returned into England, but Alfrid would not permit it to be executed. Sexulfus, who succeeded him, continued in the same resolution; but being turn'd out, two Months after, and Osred having succeeded him, Brithwald, Archbishop of Canterbury, went into Northumberland, and there held a Synod in 705. near the River Nid, at which the King also and the Officers, and the great ones of the Country were present. They read the Pope's Letters, and after some difficulties, raised by the Bishops of the Country, they were reconciled, and that long Contest was thus happily ended. Wilfrid yielded up his Episcopal See of York to John of Beverly, and he was restored to the Possession of the Church of Hagustad, and of the Abby of Rippon. He died in 709.

Councils held in Eng'and.

These Matters of Fact are certain, being affirmed by Eddi, St. Wilfrid's Disciple and Author of his Life, by John VII's Letters, and the relation of Bede and William of Malmsbury.

The Council of Rome under Gregory II.

Of Rome.

THIS Council was held in April 721. in St. Peter's Church. Twenty two Bishops were present at it, among whom there was one of Spain, one of England, and another of Scotland, eleven Priests and five Deacons. Gregory II. presided in it, and published the Constitutions which were approved by all that were present.

The eleven first are against them that marry their Kindred, Persons consecrated to God, or the Wives of Priests and Deacons, or who steal away Widows and Maidens.

Of Rome.

The 12*th*. is against those that consult Diviners or Sorcerers, or use Enchantments.

The 13*th*. against those that invade Gardens or Places belonging to the Church.

The 14*th*, 15*th*, and 16*th*. against a * private Man, who had married the Deaconness [Epiphania.]

[* Adrianus the Son of Exhilaratus.]

And the 17*th*. against Clerks wearing long Hair.

The Council of Germany under Carloman.

Of Germany.

[* In Longus's Abridgment of the Councils, it is said to have been at Ratisbon or Augsburg.]

THIS Council was assembled in Germany, An. 742. by the order of Carloman the French Prince. Boniface held the first place there. Both the number of the Bishops, and the place of it *, are unknown. The Canons of this Council are set down in the Capitularies under the name of Carloman, who declares, that following the advice of his Bishops, Monks and Lords, he caused Bishops to be ordain'd in his Towns, and subjected them to the Archbishop Boniface, the Legate of the Holy See; that he hath ordered a Synod to be kept every year in his Presence, to re-establish the Churches Rights, and to reform Manners and Discipline; that he hath caused Church-lands, that had been invaded, to be restored; hath deprived wicked Priests, Deacons and Clerks, guilty of Fornication, of the Ecclesiastical Revenues, degraded them and put them to Penance. This is the Sum of the first Canon.

The 2*d*. imports, that he hath forbidden Clerks to bear Arms, or to go to the Army, except those that have been chosen to celebrate Divine Service there, and to carry the Relicks of Saints, that is, one or two Bishops, with two Chaplains, and two Priests for the Prince; and for the Lords one Priest only, to hear Confessions and impose Penances. He forbids the Chair or Pulpit to the Clerks.

By the 3*d*. Canon he enjoins Parsons to be subject to their Bishop, to give him an account once a year in Lent of their Ministry, to receive him when he is Visiting, to go every year to fetch new Chrism on Holy-Thursday before Easter; that the Bishop may be a Witness of the Chastity, Life, Faith and Doctrine of his Presbyters.

Of Germany.

The 4*th*. prohibits admitting into the Presbyterial or Episcopal Functions, unknown Priests or Bishops, before they be examined in a Synod.

The 5*th*. orders Bishops, with the help of the Magistrates, to purge their Dioceses from Pagan Superstitions.

The 6*th*. ordains, that he or she that shall henceforward fall into the Crime of Fornication shall be imprison'd, and shall do Penance there with Bread and Water; and if he be a Priest that hath committed this Crime, he shall be shut up for two years, having been whipt till the Blood comes; and then the Bishop shall lay on him what Penance he pleases. And if it be a simple Clerk or Monk, he shall be whipt three times, and then shut up for one year; that the Nuns which have received the Veil, shall be used after the same manner and shaved.

The 7*th*. forbids Presbyters and Deacons to wear close Coats, as Laicks do; and ordains, that they shall use long Cassocks. It forbids them to have Women in their Houses with them. It enjoins Monks and Nuns exactly to follow St. Benedict's Rule.

The Council of Lestines.

Of Lestines.

ANN. 743. the same Carloman assembled a Council at Lestines, near Cambray, the Canons whereof do immediately follow the last mention'd, in the Book of the Capitularies. They go also under Carloman's name, declaring, that in the Assembly then held at Lestines, the Bishops, Nobles and Governors of Provinces have confirm'd the foregoing Decrees of the Assembly, promising to observe them, to receive the Canons of the Fathers, and to re-establish the Church-discipline and Doctrine in its Splendor. That the Abbots and Monks have received St. Benedict's Rule, and promised to keep it. That they have degraded and put to Penance such Priests as are guilty of Adultery or Fornication, and ordained, that the Decree made against them shall be executed.

Of Lestines.

In the 2*d*. he ordains, by the advice of his Clergy and People, that the Laity shall enjoy the Church-lands, which they hold as Tenants at will, upon condition that they shall pay a Penny for every House, and when he that enjoys them, comes to die, they shall return to the Church; yet so, that if it be needful still for the good of the State, or if the Prince orders it so, they shall renew their Leases; provi-ed, nevertheless, that the Churches or Monasteries, whose Lands are held by such a Title, are not extreme poor.

In the 3*d*. Canon, Adulteries, Incests and illegitimate Marriages are prohibited. Bishops are ordered to hinder and punish them. It forbids also delivering Christian Slaves to Pagans.

In the 4*th*. Carloman renews his Father's Decree against them that observe Pagan Superstitions, condemning them to a 15 Pence Fine.

Council of Lestines.

These Canons in an ancient Collection are joined with an Abjuration in the Tudesk Tongue, a List of the most ordinary Superstitions, and an Instruction about prohibited Marriages, and about the prohibition of keeping the Sabbath-day. This hath so much relation to the Canons of this Council, that it may be rationally believed to have been part of it.

The Council of Rome held under Pope Zachary.

Of Rome.

THIS Council was held (An. 743.) and composed of 40 Italian Bishops or thereabouts, and of many Priests. Zachary published there the following Canons, which were written and approved by those that assisted at it.

The 1*st*. decrees, that Bishops shall not dwell with Women.

The 2*d*. that Presbyters and Deacons shall have no strange Women in the House with them, tho' they may have their Mother and near Relations.

The 3*d*. that Priests and Deacons shall be decently clad, and shall wear a Cloak in the Town.

The 4*th*. that the Bishops ordain'd by the Holy See shall every year in the Ides of May come to the Council, if they be near; if not, they shall perform this duty by writing Letters.

The 5*th*. anathematizeth those that marry a Priest's or a Deacon's Wife, a Nun, or a Religious Woman, as also those who marry their God-mother.

The 6*th*. forbids any Person to marry his Cousin-german, Niece, Mother-in-law, Sister-in-law, and any near Relations.

The 7*th*. anathematizeth those who steal Maidens and Widows [to marry them.]

Of Rome.

The 8*th*. is against those [Clerks or Monks] that let their Hair grow.

The 9*th*. prohibits Feasting on New-year's-day, as the Heathens did.

The 10*th*. anathematizes those who give their Daughters in Marriage to the Jews, or sell Christian Slaves to them.

The 11*th*. ordains, that the times appointed by the Canons for Ordinations shall be observed; that Persons twice married shall not be ordained; that no Clerk of another Diocess shall be ordained or received without a Dimissory Letter, or permission from his Bishop.

The 12*th*. Canon ordains, that if Priests, Deacons or other Clerks, have any difference among themselves, they shall apply themselves to the Bishop only to be judged; and if they differ with their own Bishop, they shall go to the next Bishop; and if they will not refer the matter to him, they shall go to the Holy See.

The 13*th*. forbids Bishops, Priests and Deacons, to carry a Staff to the celebrating of the Mass, or to step up to the Altar with the Head uncovered.

The Council of Soissons.

Of Soissons.

THIS Council was assembled by Pepin Prince and Duke of France, the 2*d*. year of Chilperick's Reign, An. 744. March 2*d*. It was composed of 28 Bishops, of some Priests and Lords. Adalbert was condemned there. After this Council, Pepin published 10 Canons in his own and this Assembly's name.

By the 1*st*. they own the Faith established in the Nicene Council, and the Authority of the Canons of other Councils; and they publish them in France that the Discipline, which was corrupted there, may be re-established.

It is ordain'd in the 2*d*. that there shall be a Synod kept every year, to procure the Salvation of the People and to prevent Heresies, such as that of * Adalbert was, who was condemned by 23 Bishops and several Priests, with the Prince's and the People's consent.

[* Adelbert's Heresy was that he taught, that it was lawful to marry the Elder Brother's Wife, according to the Custom of the Jews, and that Jesus Christ, when he went down into Hell, did release as well the Wicked as Godly. And for these Doctrines he was condemned in this Council. Vide Bon. Ep. ad Zach. in Us. Ep. Hib. Syl.]

In the 3*d*. he declares, that by the advice of the Bishops and great ones, he hath put legitimate Bishops in the Towns of France, and hath given them for Archbishops over them, Abel and Ardorbert (the former was Archbishop of Rheims and the latter of Sens) to have recourse to their Judgments, when it shall be needful both for the Bishops and the People, to the end that the Monasteries may be regular and orderly, that Monks and Nuns may peaceably enjoy their Revenues, and the Clerks be not debauched, not wearing secular Habits nor going a Hunting.

Of Soissons.

By the 4*th*. He forbids the Laity to commit Fornication, Perjury and bear false Witness. He enjoins Parish-priests to be subject to their Bishop, to give him yearly, in Lent, an account of their management; to demand the Holy Oil and the Chrism of him, and to receive him when he is upon his visit. The 5*th*. forbids receiving foreign Clerks and Priests, before they be approved by the Bishop of the Diocess. The 6*th*. charges Bishops to endeavour the utter extirpation of Paganism. The 7*th*. orders the Crosses set up by Adalbert, in his Diocess, to be burnt. The 8*th*. forbids Clerks to have Women in their Houses, except their Mother, Sister or Niece. The 9*th*. forbids the Laity to have in their Houses Women devoted to God, and also to marry another Man's Wife during the Life of her Husband; because Husbands ought not to forsake their Wives, but in case they have catched them in Adultery. The last ordains, that whoever shall violate these Laws, made by 23 Bishops, Servants of God, with the consent of the Princes and the Grandees of France, shall be judged by the Prince, or by the Bishops, or by the Counts.

The second Council of Rome under Zachary.

Of Rome.

THIS Council (assembled An. 745.) was composed of 7 Bishops and some Presbyters. The Presbyter Deneardus, sent by Boniface, came before the Council (October. 25.) and declared, that this Bishop had called a Synod in France, in which Clement and Adalbert, false, schismatical and heretical Bishops, had been deposed, and then put in Prison by the Prince's order; but, that they would not obey this Sentence, keeping their Dignity still, and continuing to seduce the People. He added, he had * a Letter of Boniface's upon this Subject: it was read, he demanded, that those two Bishops should be kept in Prison, and that no Body might speak with them. He accuses Adalbert, who was a French Man

[* This Letter is extant in Usher's Hib. Syllog. p. 31.]

Council ſecond of Rome.

Man, to have been an Hypocrite in his Youth, to have made People believe, that an Angel from Heaven had brought him ſome Relicks from far, by which means he could obtain whatever he deſired of God; that afterward he had given Money to be ordain'd by ſome ignorant Biſhops; that at laſt he equall'd himſelf to the Apoſtles; that he would conſecrate no more Churches to the honour of the Apoſtles or Martyrs; that he condemned Pilgrimages to Rome to viſit the Sepulchres of the Apoſtles; that he had conſecrated Altars in his own Name; that he had ſet up little Croſſes and ſmall Chappels in the Country, where he kept Aſſemblies; that the People crowded thither and forſook the Churches; that ſome had been ſo impudent as to ſay, St. Adalbert's Merits ſhall help us; and that he had the Face to give ſome of his own Nails and Hair to be honoured and carried with St. Peter's Relicks; that the People flocking to him, to caſt themſelves down at his Feet, ready to confeſs their Sins, he told them, there was no need for them to do it, that he knew all they had done, that their Sins were forgiven them, and that they might be aſſured of it.

As for Clement, who came out of Ireland, that he did reject the authority of the Canons; that he would not receive the Writings of the Fathers, and maintain'd he might continue Biſhop, after having had two Baſtards; that he gave leave to marry the Brother's Wife; that he affirmed, that Chriſt, being deſcended into Hell, had delivered all thoſe that were there, whether Believers or Unbelievers, Jews or Pagans, Worſhippers of the true God or Idolaters.

These Accuſations, brought to the Synod of Rome, provoked the indignation of the Biſhops againſt thoſe two wicked Villains: yet the Pope put off the judging of this Matter to another Meeting on the ſame day. They read in this the Proofs of the Facts alledg'd in Boniface's Letter, the Life of this Adalbert, a Letter which he affirmed to have fall'n from Heaven, and to be found by St. Michael, and brought to Rome by another Angel. Theſe Follies became a Laughing-matter to the Council.

Council ſecond of Rome.

The next day they read a Prayer of Adalbert's making, wherein he called upon the Angels Uriel, Raguel, Tubuel, Michael, Incar, Tubicas, Sabaoc, Simiel. The Council, hearing all this, declared, that all theſe pretended Angels, except St. Michael, were Dæmons; that they knew the names but of three Angels, Michael, Raphael and Gabriel. They required Adalbert's Writings to be burnt; but the Pope judg'd it better, to ſecure them in the Library of the Roman Church. After this, the Council declared, that Adalbert, whoſe Acts had now been read, who made himſelf be called Apoſtle, and his Nails and Hair be honoured as Relicks, who had ſeduced the People into ſeveral Errors, and invoked Dæmons for Angels, ought to be depoſed and put to Penance. They pronounced the ſame Sentence againſt Clement, upon the Accuſations brought in Boniface's Letter.

This is the ſum of the Acts of this Council, in the end of which is the Letter of Gemmulus Deacon of the Roman Church to Boniface, about the condemnation of thoſe two falſe Biſhops.

The Council of Cloveſhaw.

of Cloveſhaw.

THIS Council was held in England at Cloveſhaw, Septemb. 1*ſt.* 747. Altho' it was compoſed but of 12 Biſhops, it may paſs for a National Synod of England, becauſe, beſides the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and the Biſhop of Rocheſter, there were the Biſhops of the Mercians, Saxons, both Eaſt and Weſt Angles, and ſome other People of England preſent at it. They read a Letter, which Zachary wrote to the Church of England, to exhort them to reſtore the Diſcipline. After which, they made 30 Canons. In the 1*ſt.* the Biſhops are exhorted to do their Duty, to diſcharge their Miniſtry with Zeal and Vigilance, to give themſelves wholly to it, and to entangle themſelves no more in ſecular Affairs, but apply themſelves to the Service of God and the Church, to inſtruct their People, and to ſet them a good Example, by leading an exemplary Life. The 2*d.* recommends Peace and Union to them. The 3*d.* preſcribes them to viſit their Dioceſs every year, and to aboliſh the remainder of Heatheniſh Superſtitions. The 4*th.* to warn Abbots and Abbeſſes to live regularly, to be Examples to the Monks and Nuns under their Government, and to take care of them. The 5*th.* enjoins them not wholly to neglect the Monaſteries held by Seculars, to viſit thoſe that dwell therein, and to put a Presbyter in them. The 6*th.* forbids them ordaining Presbyters, before they be aſſured of their unblameable Life. The 7*th.* ordains, that there ſhall be Lectures in the Abbies both for Men and Women, and that they take care to inſtruct the Youth therein. The 8*th.* enjoins Presbyters to leave their Secular Buſineſſes, to apply themſelves wholly to the Service of the Church, to read Divine Service with attention; to look to the Church and the Ornaments of it; to addict themſelves to Reading, Praying, Celebrating the Divine Office; to admoniſh and reprove thoſe under their Tuition, and to draw them to God by their Words and Example. The 9*th.* enjoins them to adminiſter the Sacraments, and to live without ſcandal. The 10*th.* imports, that they ſhall know how to perform their Functions, and ſhall be able to explain the Creed, the Lord's Prayer, the Prayers of the Maſs and of Baptiſm; that they ſhall alſo take care to learn the ſignification of thoſe Ceremonies and Sacraments. The 11*th.* that they ſhall all adminiſter Baptiſm in the ſame manner, and ſhall explain the Ceremonies and the Effects of this Sacrament. The 12*th.* that the Prieſts ſhall not read the Prayers aloud, but ſhall ſing them with a ſweet and agreeable Melody; and if they cannot do this, they ſhall only pronounce them diſtinctly. The 13*th.* that in Feſtivals they ſhall follow the Roman Rites. The 14*th.* that the Abbots and Parſons ſhall not fail to read Divine Service in their Churches every Sunday and Holy-day. The 15*th.* commands them to ſing the ſeven Canonical Hours of the day and the night, and forbids intermixing unuſual Prayers, which are neither out of the Scripture, nor according to the Roman Uſage. The 16*th.* appoints, that Rogations or Litanies ſhall be made by the Clergy and People, on the uſual days, namely, on the 26*th.* of November, and three days before the Aſcenſion, on which they ſhall faſt till the ninth Hour of Prayer and ſay Maſs. It prohibits mixing prophane Songs with this Ceremony, and will have nothing to be carried in (a) Proceſſion but only the Croſs and ſome Relicks.

of Cloveſhaw.

[(a) Proceſſion.] This piece of Devotion, which for the time was both ſeaſonable and ſolemn, when it was firſt inſtituted by Claudius Mamertus in a time of a general Earthquake at Vienna, wherein all the People walking two by two through the Streets and Fields of the City, did ſing Litanies imploring God's Mercy in averting that Judgment; being found a ſucceſsful means to obtain the Bleſſing deſired, was ever after continued in the Church, and in this Age, with other things, degenerated into a pompous Ceremony and a ludicrous Worſhip, the Chriſtians carrying before them Croſſes, Relicks, yea, and the Sacrament it ſelf after the manner of the Perſians. This Canon ſets limits to the growth of this Superſtition, allowing only Croſſes and Relicks to be carried in Proceſſion. But that which might give a greater Check to it is this, that ſome of the moſt Learned that uſe it, have much ſuſpected the Goodneſs of this ſort of Worſhip, and whether it is pleaſing to God or no; for thus one of them ſpeaks: Haud ſcio, an tam rectè quam bellè id fiat; Vereor inquam, vereor, ne iis in rebus Diis potius gentium quam Chriſto gratiam faciamus. I am doubtful, whether in this Ceremony there be not more Pomp than Goodneſs; for I am afraid, that in theſe Matters we do more Service to the Falſe Gods than the true. The 17*th.* ordains, that they ſhall keep the Feſtivals of St. Gregory the Pope, and St. Auſtine the Apoſtle of the Engliſh. The 18*th.* that the Faſts of the Ember-weeks ſhall be kept. The 19*th.* enjoins Monks ſub-ſubmiſſion to their Superior, and forbids them to wear ſecular Habits. The 20*th*. warns the Biſhops to ſee that Monaſteries be, according to their Name, the abode of Folks living in ſilence, peace and repoſe, and working for God, praiſing and praying to him, and giving themſelves to ſpiritual Reading; and not places of retreat for Poets, Muſicians and Buffoons. It forbids admitting Laymen into them, particularly into the Convents of Virgins. It enjoins theſe to ſet themſelves to reading or ſinging, rather than to embroidering of Stuffs of divers colours to make ſecular Habits. The 21*ſt*. ordains, that the Meals of Friars and Nuns ſhall be ſober and modeſt, and ſhall not begin, if poſſible, till the third hour of Prayer be over, that is, till noon. The 22*d*. enjoins Monks and Eccleſiaſticks to make themſelves worthy Communicants of Chriſt's Body and Blood, and reproves thoſe that neglect this Duty to live licentiouſly, without any care of confeſſing their Sins. The 23*d*. orders, that they ſhall bring Lay-children, not yet corrupted by youthful Luſts, to communicate frequently; and that aged Perſons alſo, ceaſing from Sin, ſhall be exhorted to frequent communicating. The 24*th*. enjoins a ſerious trying of thoſe who come to make a religious Profeſſion, and that they ſhall not give them the Habit till they have been well proved. The 25*th*. that the Biſhops ſhall publiſh, in their Dioceſs, the Canons of the Synod, and if there be any abuſes in their Dioceſs, which they cannot remedy, they ſhall acquaint the Synod with them. The 26*th*. recommends Almſgiving, but will not have Men give ill-gotten Goods, or with an intent to ſin more freely, or to leſſen the ſatisfaction of the canonical Penance, or to free themſelves from Faſting, &c. The 27*th*. teaches how to pray; there it is ſaid, that tho' they do not underſtand the Latin of the Pſalms they ſing, yet they may refer their intention to the general Petitions, which are to be made to God (b). (This ſhews, that the publick Service was then performed in Latin in England, altho' ſome did then pray in the Saxon-tongue, privately, as it is obſerved in this place). In the end, it condemns an Abuſe which began to grow common, of thoſe who diſpenſed with themſelves in Faſting and Praying, getting others to do it for them for Money, and thinking, by this means, to ſatisfie their Duty and the Penance laid upon them.

[(b) Publick Service performed in Latin in England, tho' not underſtood.] Altho' 'tis very probable, that in ſome places of England the Latin-tongue was not underſtood, where the Prayers of the Church were read in that Language, which was the reaſon of the making of this Canon; yet it is certain, that it was generally known in England, as not only Corn. Tacitus teſtifies of his time, but Bede alſo aſſures us of the time wherein he lived, which did not much precede this Council. And for this reaſon doubtleſs it was, that the Liturgy and H. Scriptures were read in the Churches of England in the Latin-tongue, there being no need of tranſlating them into the Language of the Country; eſpecially, if it be true that ſome Hiſtorians relate that the Saxons, when Auſtine the Monk came into England, had no Letters. So that this is no Argument for the Romiſh Impoſition of the Latin Service upon Nations, where that Tongue is not underſtood; a thing ſo highly unreaſonable in it ſelf, ſo oppoſite to H. Scripture and ſo contrary to the Primitive Practice as the Fathers do unanimouſly agree, that for the ſpace of 800 years after Chriſt we can find no Nation, but what had their Liturgy and Scriptures either in their own Tongue or in a Language well underſtood by them, by the reading and hearing of which they might be edified, and in which they might join with Heart and Voice. Indeed the Latin-tongue was generally received in Europe and Africa, and moſt of the Chriſtian Churches in the Roman Empire, but then it was as generally underſtood, the Romans labouring to have all the Provinces of the Empire to ſpeak Latin. And when through the Incurſions of the Goths and Vandals, and other barbarous Nations, the Latin-tongue was not only corrupted but loſt, then Tranſlations became neceſſary, tho' the Church continued the publick Service in the ſame Language; for 'tis not ſufficient, as this Council ſays, to refer their Intention to the general Petitions, but they muſt hear and pray with the Spirit and Underſtanding alſo, and the moſt ignorant and illiterate ought to be able to ſay Amen to the Prieſts Prayers and Thankſgiving, as the Apoſtle reproves, 1 Cor. 14. 16.

The Council of Verberie.

Of Verberie.

THIS Council, or Aſſembly rather, was held in the beginning of Pepin's Reign An. 752. at Verberie in the Dioceſs of Soiſſons: they made twenty Chapters which were publiſhed by the Authority of Pepin.

The firſt ordains that thoſe that marry in the third Degree of conſanguinity ſhall be put aſunder, and that after having done Penance they may marry others. That thoſe in the fourth Degree only ſhall not be ſeparated, but only be put to do Penance if they be Married; or otherwiſe not ſuffered to marry.

The 2*d*. declares, that if any Man had any commerce with his Daughter-in-Law, he ſhall dwell no longer, neither with the Mother nor with the Daughter, and neither the Daughter nor he ſhall marry others, but the Mother may marry another.

The 3*d*. imports, that if a Presbyter marry his Niece, he ſhall be obliged to leave her, and looſe his degree; and if any body elſe marry her, he ſhall be oblig'd to leave her, but ſhall have Liberty to marry another.

The 4*th*. that a Maid, in what manner ſoever ſhe hath taken the Veil, ſhall be obliged to keep it, unleſs it was given her againſt her Will; and in that caſe, the Prieſt that veil'd her, ſhall be depoſed. If a Woman takes the Veil without her Husband's conſent, it ſhall be free for her Husband, to let her keep it, or to hinder her.

The 5*th*. gives leave to the Husband, whoſe Wife conſpired his death, to ſend her away, and to marry another.

The 6*th*. gives leave to thoſe who have married Slaves, whom they thought to be Free-born Women, to marry others.

The 7*th*. permits Slaves, who have a Concubine, to leave her, to marry their Maſter's Maid-ſervant, tho' they do better, if they keep the firſt.

Of Verberie.

The 8*th*. permits the Maſter to oblige his Slave to marry his Maid-ſervant, if he hath had any Carnal Knowledge of her.

The 9*th*. imports, that if Men be forced to go away from the place of their Habitation, and their Wives refuſe to follow them without any other Reaſon, but their Love to their own Country, it ſhall be free for thoſe Men, whoſe Wives have thus left them, to marry others; but not for the Wives to marry again.

The 10*th*. forbids him to marry, who hath layn with his Mother-in-Law, and the Mother-in-Law likewiſe; and permits the Father-in-Law to marry another Woman.

The 11*th*. inflicts the ſame puniſhment upon them who defiled their Daughter-in-Law, or Siſter-in Law.

The 12*th*. ordains, that he that lies with two Siſters, ſhall have neither, tho' the one of them were his Wife.

By the 13*th*. He that marrieth a Bond Woman, knowing her to be ſuch, is bound to keep her.

The 14*th*. forbids ambulatory Biſhops to ordain any Prieſts; and if any be found to have been thus ordain'd, and they deſerve it, they ſhall be [illegible] crated anew.

The 15*th*. that a Prieſt degraded may [illegible] caſe of neceſſity.

The 16*th*. forbids Clerks to bear Ar[illegible]

Council of Verberie.

The 17*th*. permits a Woman, which complains that her Husband never did cohabit with her, to try the Proof of the Cross; and if it appears by this Tryal, that the thing is so, then she may do what she pleaseth.

The 19*th*. ordains, that Bond Slaves be exhorted not to marry again, if they be found to be sold severally.

The 20*th*. imports, that the Slave who is set at Liberty, may put away his Wife, being a Bond Woman, and marry another.

The 21*st*. forbids him, who suffered his Wife to be defiled, to marry another.

Regino recites some Articles more about the said Matters, which he ascribes to this Council of Verberie. They may be seen in the Edition of the Capitularies of M. Baluz. 19. 166. Vol. 1.

Council of Verberie.

The Council of Verneville.

of Verneville

THis Council was held at Verneville upon Oise, and not at Vernon, as some have thought about July (An. 755.) by the Order of Pepin, who confirm'd by his Edict, and published the Canons that had been proposed in this Council.

The 1*st*. imports, that there shall be a Bishop in every great City.

The 2*d*. that Obedience shall be paid to the Bishops made Metropolitans.

The 3*d*. that the Bishop shall be empower'd to correct the Regulars and Seculars in his Dioces.

The 4*th*. that there shall be two Synods yearly kept in France, one in March, the other in October.

The 5*th*. that the Monasteries of Men and Women shall be regular; otherwise, the Bishop shall see to it; and if he cannot do it himself alone, he shall acquaint the Metropolitan with it; if the Metropolitan cannot yet correct and order it, he shall inform the Synod of it; and if they slight the Synod, they shall be excommunicated.

The 6*th*. that an Abbess shall have but one Monastery to govern; that neither she, nor any of her Religious Women shall go out without Permission from the King, that they shall send secular Persons to the Prince or Synod, to represent their Grievances; that those, that are not veiled, shall be put out of the Community, and if they be willing to live regularly, they shall be admitted after Tryal.

The 7*th*. that no Baptistery shall be erected without the Bishop's Leave.

The 8*th*. that the Priests shall be subject to the Bishops, and that they shall neither baptize, nor celebrate the Office without Permission from him.

The 9*th*. that they that communicate with excommunicated Persons shall be excommunicated; that excommunicated Persons shall not enter into the Church; that they shall not eat with any of the Faithful; that no body may receive Gifts from them; nor kiss nor salute them.

The 10*th*. that Monks shall not go to Rome, nor out of their Monasteries, unless the Bishop gives them Leave to go into a more strict Monastery.

The 11*th*. imports, that all Clerks shall live, as Canons, under the Bishop's Care; or as Monks, under an Abbot.

of Verneville

THE 12*th*. that Clerks do not change the Church, and that Clerks of another Church shall not be received.

The 13*th*. forbids Bishops to ordain or perform any other Episcopal Function out of their Dioces, without the Bishop's Order [of the Dioces.]

The 14*th*. permits necessary Works, such as dressing of Meat, or making the House clean on Sunday; but forbids the Works of Agriculture.

The 15*th*. enjoins both the Nobles and the Common People to be married publickly.

The 16*th*. renews the third Canon of the Council of Chalcedon, which forbids Clerks to meddle with secular Affairs.

The 17*th*. is the 25*th*. of the Council of Chalcedon, about the Vacancy of Bishopricks.

The 18*th*. renews the Ordinance of the 9*th*. ch. of the 3*d*. Council of Carthage, which forbids Clerks to come before the Tribunals of the Laity, without the Bishop's Leave.

The 19*th*. is concerning the Immunities of Churches.

The 20*th*. ordains, that the Accounts of Monasteries Lands and Revenues, if they be Royal, shall be given to the King; if Episcopal, to the Bishop; this Canon was made in another Synod, and perhaps the following Canons also.

The 21*st*. that the Bishop shall have the Cures of his Dioces.

The 22*d*. that no Right shall be exacted from Pilgrims.

The 23*d*. that Counts and Judges shall hear the Causes of Churches, Widows and Orphans preferably to others.

The 24*th*. that no Money shall be given, to get into Holy Orders.

The 25*th*. that Bishops, Abbots, and others shall take no Presents to administer Justice.

The 26*th*. is concerning the Rights of Portage.

The 27*th*. the Weight of Money.

The 28*th*. Exemptions.

The 29*th*. Secular Courts of Justice.

The 30*th*. forbids Ecclesiastical Persons to go to Law, with their Superior, without Permission.

The Council of Metz.

of Metz.

THis is another Synodical Assembly, held under Pepin after the former, An. 756. the Laws whereof were authorized and promulged by Pepin.

The first is against the Incests, committed either with a Person consecrated to God, a She-Gossip, a Godmother, whether at Baptism, or Confirmation with two Sisters, with a Niece, a Cousin-German, or Aunt, &c. they are deeply fined.

The 2*d*. appoints the Deposition of the Superior Clergy, convicted of these Crimes, and the Inferior are condemned to Whipping, or Imprisonment.

Of Metz.

The 3*d*. ordains, that the Archdeacon shall bring the Priests to the Bishop's Synod.

The 4*th*. renews the Ordinance of the Council of Verneville, that they that hold Benefices of the King, shall give an account to him.

The 5*th*. imports, that those that hold Churches in a Dioces, shall pay the Rights, and the Wax due to the Mother Church.

The four last are in the Council of Verneville.

The Council of Compeigne.

of Compeigne.

Pepin's last Capitulary is that which he made at Compeigne in 757. It contains 21. Canons, which are almost nothing else but a Repetition of the Canons of the preceding Capitularies: So that it is needless now to set down the Particulars of it. We shall not speak neither of the Assemblies of the same Nature, held under Charles the Great, seeing we have related the Canons of them in the Abstract of his Capitularies.

Of Compeigne.

The second Council of Nice for Images. The seventh General. Wherein the Acts of another Assembly, held at Constantinople, An. 754. against Images, are related: And the Books written in France against these two Councils: Together with the Letters of the Popes upon that Subject.

Of Nice.

(a) THE Use and Worship of Images was commonly received in the East, when the Emperor Leo, surnamed Isaurus, [or the Isaurian] being advanced to the Empire (An. 717.) undertook to abolish this Practice. The Contest begun about the year 725. He found in his way Pope Gregory II. Patriarch of Constantinople, and St. John Damascene. The first of these wrote vehemently to him upon this Subject. In his first Letter, he represents to him, that having received in former years several of his Letters, very Orthodox, he wondred, that ten years after, he went about to destroy Images, and treat them as Idolaters, who honoured them. He maintains, that the Word, having rendered himself visible, by taking the Humane Body, they might draw Christ's Picture. Yea, and he pretends, that the first Christians had some Pictures of him, and of St. James, St. Stephen, and the other first Martyrs. He alledges the Picture which Christ sent to King Agbarus. He confesses that no Image can be made of the Deity. He adds, Images are very useful to stir up Motions of Piety and Compunction in the Faithful. He says, they don't worship Cloths, and Stones, but they are a Means of renewing the Memory of Saints, and raising our Mind to God. He denies also that they are worshipped as Deities; but he says, that, if they be Images of Christ, they (b) say before them, Lord Jesus, save us: And if they be Images of the Virgin, they say, Holy Mother of God, intercede for us with thy Son, that he may save our Souls: If it be a Martyr, Intercede for us, &c. He complains, that he did not follow the Counsels of German, who was then 95. years old, but those of Apsimarus, and other like Persons. He tells him, that it belongs to Bishops, and not to Emperors, to judge of Ecclesiastical Doctrines; that as Bishops do not meddle with Secular Affairs, so the Emperors should not meddle with the Ecclesiastical. He observed, that it was to no purpose to assemble the General Council he had required; if he would only give over prosecuting Images, the Church would be at quiet. He protests, that (c) he was so far from raising Tumults against him, that he hath written to all the Princes of the West in his Behalf, and that they were resolved to live peaceably with him; but, that hearing he was the Destroyer of Images, and had sent an Officer to break an Image of our Saviour, which was done before several Persons of the West, they had laid aside all Respect of him, had broken down his Statues, and the Barbarians had invaded Decapolis, had put out the Magistrates, and taken the City of Ravenna; that his Imprudence had been the Occasion of all this.

Of Nice.

Then he relates the Emperor's Threatnings to him in these Terms: 'I will send to Rome, says he, to 'break down St. Peter's Image, and will carry Gre-'gory away, as Constans did formerly Martin. He answers him thus: 'You ought to know, and be sure, 'that the Roman Bishops do always imploy them-'selves to maintain the Peace between the East and 'the West; our Predecessors endeavoured to do it, 'and we do follow their Example. But if you go on 'to insult over us, we will not fight against you, but 'will withdraw within 24 Furlongs from Rome, into 'Campania; after that, do what you please.' Then he puts him in Mind, that Constans, who persecuted Pope Martin, died unfortunately in his Sin, being slain in the Temple by one of his Officers, being informed by the Bishops of Sicily, that he was an Heretick: that Martin, contrariwise, was honoured as a Saint in the Place of his Banishment in Thrace, and the Northern Countries. That he desires nothing more, than to tread in the Steps of his Predecessors; but, that he thought himself bound to preserve his own Life for the People's Good; because in all the West, every body's Eyes were upon him, and all Christians had confidence in him and St. Peter, whose Image Leo threatned to destroy; that they looked upon St. Peter as a God upon Earth; and if Leo attempted any thing in the West, he feared that they would also avenge those of the East mis-used by him: that he knew his Empire did not reach far in Italy; that Rome only had cause to fear, by reason that the Sea was so near; but if the Pope removed but 24 Furlongs, he was safe. He wonders lastly, that when all the most barbarous People of the West grew mild, the Emperor of the East should grow fierce and barbarous. He declares to him, that if he sends Men to break down St. Peter's Image, the Blood that will be spilt, shall fall upon his Head: As for himself, he protests he is clear and pure from it. This Letter shews the Falshood of what some Greek Historiographers, out of Hatred to the Pope, have reported, that Gregory II. had forbidden the Romans and Italians to pay the Tributes due to Leo the Emperor, and had freed them from their Oath of Allegiance to this Prince.

*(a) The Use and Worship of Images were commonly received in the East.] Before the Contest about Image-Worship began in the East, it cannot be denied, but that Images had been for some time allow'd in Churches, as Helps of the Memory, Instructors of the Illiterate in Sacred History, and Ornaments of the Church. Gregory Nyssen speaks of the Lively Pictures of the Martyrs, and their Sufferings, then painted upon the Walls of Churches, who being the first of all the Greeks that mention them, Writers do unanimously agree, that Pictures and Images were about his time [viz. about the year 370,] admitted into the Eastern Churches, and that only for Ornament, or History sake. Some indeed did zealously oppose themselves against this Innovation (of whom Epiphanius was the Chief) not as a thing absolutely unlawful, but as fearing it might introduce Idolatry among the People. But because it was declared, that no Worship was intended or allowed them; they submitted. But notwithstanding, what these Men foresaw, did, in process of time, come to pass: For not only the People became downright Idolaters, but even the most Learned paid too great a Reverence to them, saying Prayers before them, and worshipping Christ by his Image. This grand Abuse of them stirred up the Emperor Leo to remove Images out of Churches, and to destroy and burn them, as the Cause of so great a Sin. This is evident from Damascene's Words, who himself was one of the most violent Opposers of the Emperor's Proceedings. Exprobrant nobis, says he, quòd σεβασμιον ; τιμῶμεν, adoramus, & veneramur Christi Mariæ, & Reliquorum Sanctorum Imagines. They accuse us of Image-worship and Idolatry. And 'twas for this Crime that they appeared so vigorously against Images. They had been used, but when they were abused to the Dishonour of God, Leo would endure them no longer in the Church. Assoon as they were worshipped, they were pulled down.

Greg. Nyss. Orat. in Theod. Martyr.

(b) If they be Images of Christ, they say before them, Lord Jesus, save us, &c.] What plainer Evidences of an Idolatrous Worship than this; not only to bow themselves before the Images, but to pray unto them; just Grounds for Leo to charge those Men with Idolatry, that did it, and to be moved like another Hezekiah, or Josiah, against such horrible Corruptions of God's Worship.

(c) He protests, that he was so far from raising Tumults.] Notwithstanding these Protestations of this Pope, yet the Historians of those times assure us, that he caused several of the Countries, belonging to the Empire, as Hesperia, Camilia, Liguria, and all his Western Dominions to revolt from him, and forbad them to pay him his Tributes; yea, offered to betray the City of Rome it self to the growing Power of the French. So wilful and resolute were the Roman Patriarchs in maintaining their Superstitions and Idolatry.

This

2d. Nicene Council.

This Letter did not alter Leo the Isaurian's Mind; nay, he wrote to the Pope, that he was Emperor and chief Bishop, Imperator sum & Sacerdos. Gregory writing again to him, in his second Letter, tells him, 'Tis true, the Emperors, his Predecessors, shewed themselves both Emperors and chief Bishops by their Deeds, defending Religion jointly with the Bishops; but he could not pretend to this Dignity, seeing he divested the Church of its Ornaments, and spoiled Temples of Images, which did equally instruct and edifie the People: that Emperors ought not to meddle with Doctrines; that Bishops only had the Understanding necessary to decide them; that Ecclesiastical and Civil Matters being judged by quite different Principles, he might be very skilful in Civil Matters, and have very little Skill in Matters Ecclesiastical; that as Bishops had no Right to meddle with State Affairs, so the Emperor had no Right to govern Church Affairs, to make Elections in the Clergy, to consecrate, to administer the Sacraments; no, nor to receive them, but from the Bishops Hands. That the Prince does punish the Guilty with Death, Banishment, and other Penalties; but the Bishops don't do so; but when any body hath sinned, and confessed his Sin, instead of Beheading, or Hanging of him, they lay on his Head the Gospel or the Cross, they put him in the Vestry, or among the Catechumens, they make him fast, watch and pray; so that after a long Correction and Affliction, they at last give him the Body and Blood of Christ; and having purify'd him, and made him a Vessel of Election, they lead him to Heaven. Then he does sharply rebuke him for his Cruelty, Barbarity and Tyranny, and exhorts him to submit himself. And as to that which was objected, (d) that in the six first Councils, nothing had been said of Images, he answers, that they were so common, that there was no need to speak of them. He advises him to refer himself to his Judgment, and German's, Patriarch of Constantinople, seeing they have received from Christ, the Power of binding and loosing in Heaven, and on Earth. All this did not hinder Leo the Emperor from going on in his Enterprize, and from setting out, Jan. 7. An. 730. an Edict, whereby he ordered Images to be removed out of Churches, and sacred Places, and to be thrown into the Fire, inflicting Penalties upon those that would not obey this Order. German was then turn'd out, and Anastasius put in his Room, in the See of Constantinople.

Constantine Copronymus, Leo's Son, followed his Father's Steps, and for the better establishing the Discipline, he had a mind to introduce, he called a Council (An. 754.) at Constantinople, composed of 338. Bishops. It began in February, and ended in August. This Council made a Decree against the Use and Worship of Images, which we will set down afterwards. It was not received by the Romans. But by the Authority of the Emperor, a great part of the Eastern Churches received and executed it; till (e) Irene, who had married Leo the Fourth, Brother to Constantine Copronymus, being a Widow, and Mistress of the Empire, her Son Constantine being but young, yet was so devout, as to set them up again. To succeed in her Enterprize, she resolved to call a new Council, and wrote to Adrian in her own, and her Son's Name, shewing him, that the Princes, her Predecessors, had destroy'd Images in the East, and had drawn the People, and all the Eastern Churches to their Persuasion; and that to reform this Abuse, they judged it fit to assemble a Council, and desired him to be there without fail, to hold the Place of the first Bishop in the World; and if he could not come himself, to send some Legates in his Place, that the ancient Tradition of the Church might be confirmed in this Synod, and that there might be no Schism hereafter in the Apostolick and Catholick Church, of which, Christ is the Head. They add, they send him Constantine, Bishop of Leonce, in Sicily, to bring him this Order, desiring him to send him back again with an Answer as soon as he can.

2d. Nicene Council.

Tarasius, whom the Emperor and Empress had caused to be chosen Patriarch, though he was but a Layman, and Officer of the Crown, having excused his accepting of that Dignity, set forth the Division of the Church about Images, and the Necessity of calling a General Council. The Assembly assented to it, he was ordained Patriarch, and wrote Synodical Letters to the Patriarchs of Rome, Alexandria, Antioch, and Jerusalem. Pope Adrian sent * two Priests to hold his Place in the Council, and the Eastern Bishops did the same. After their Arrival, the Emperor's Officers would have had the Council to sit at Constantinople; but this became impracticable, because many of them that had approved the Destruction of Images, would have no more Synods to be held about that Affair, which they thought to be already decided. As they were discoursing these Matters in private Meetings, the Emperor sent them word, that it was not lawful for them to meet without the Consent of the Bishop of Constantinople, and that in rigor, they were deposed. Nevertheless, they raised some (f) Tumult, when the Council assembled the first time, the 1*st*. Day of August, An. 786. and having caused the Soldiers of Constantinople to rise, they got them to besiege the Bishops, and to require with threatnings, that no Council should be held. So they were forced to separate themselves; and to the end they might hold another without constraint, they sent the Soldiers to the Army, under pretence, that the Agarenians had made Incursions into the Empire. After this the Council was assembled at Nice about the end of 787. The Pope's Legates held the first place there, Tarasius Patriarch of Constantinople the 2*d*. the Deputies of the Eastern Bishops the 3*d*. after them Agapetus Bishop of Cæsarea in Cappadocia, John Bishop of Ephesus, Constantine Metropolitan of Cyprus, with 250. Bishops, or Archbishops, and above 100. Presbyters or Monks, and two Commissioners of the Emperor and the Empress.

* Viz. Petrus Vicedomus, and Petrus Hugumeus.

The first Action or Session was held the 24*th*. of September in the Church of St. Sophia, after they had declar'd the Cause of holding of the Council, they read the Letter of the Empress Irene, and the Emperor, wherein they both assure them, that they have assembled the Synod with the consent of the Patriarchs; that they leave the Bishops at full Liberty, (d) Obj. That in the six first General Councils, nothing had been said of Images.] A very weighty Objection, and not to be slid over with such an Answer as the Pope gives it, viz. That they were so common, that there was no need to speak of them. There was hardly any Doctrine or Practice of the Christian Church, but had been either explained, confirmed, or regulated by some of these Councils; and had Image-Worship been then used, it would have been mentioned in some of them. But the Truth of it was, that it was a perfect Innovation, a Practice never used but among Heathens, and therefore this Pope could do no other than pass it over with such an insufficient, and sorry Answer.

(e) Irene] A second Athalia or Jezebel, not less zealous for Images, nor less scandalous and notorious for Wickedness and Cruelty; for she put out the Eyes of her Son Constantine, gave her self up to follow Wizzards and Sorcerers, put many good and innocent Persons to Death; a fit Instrument to set up this Doctrine of Devils.

(f) Tumult] The true Cause of this Tumult was, that the Image-Worshippers being resolved to carry the Point, having gotten so powerful, as well as zealous Patron of their Idolatry, as Irene the Empress was, would have shut the contrary Party out of the Council, who thereupon endeavour'd to gain Admission by Force, that their Doctrine might not be condemned unheard. This being granted them, they carried themselves peaceably, as well in Publick, as in their Disputes in the Councils, which they managed with such undeniable Arguments drawn from Holy Scripture, that the Image-Worshippers were obliged to dissolve the Council at Constantinople without accomplishing their Design. But not long after by the Empress's Order they called another Council at Nice, where they established Idolatry by a Law, the Empress's Guards keeping the Iconoclasts from entering the Council, and her self undertaking to put the Constitutions of it in Force.

to ſpeak their mind; that Paul the laſt Patriarch of Conſtantinople; acknowledging the Fault he had committed in receiving the Synod, which enjoyn'd the deſtroying of Images, having quitted his See, he had cauſed Tarafias to be choſen in his Room; that he had refuſed this Dignity; but being urged to accept of it, he had required a Synod might be held, to ſuppreſs the Schiſm which divided the Church in the point of Images; that according to his requeſt they had called this Council; that they exhorted them to judge juſtly and couragiouſly, to condemn Errors, and eſtabliſh the Truth, in order to bringing Peace back again into the Church; that they had received Letters from Pope Adrian, which they would have read in the Aſſembly, with the Papers ſent by the Eaſtern Biſhops. After the reading of this Letter, Baſil Biſhop of Ancyra, Theodoſius of Myra, made very large Declarations, that they did honour, reverence and worſhip Images, and that they were ſorry for having been of another Perſuaſion; and they were received. After them, Hypatius Biſhop of Nice, and four others, who had been caballing the year before, did alſo preſent themſelves to be received, declaring that they did admit of Image Worſhip. Theſe gave an Occaſion to examine, how and in what Quality they ſhould be received. They ſearched ſeveral Eccleſiaſtical Laws touching the manner of receiving Hereticks. Thereupon they read the 53. Canon of the Apoſtles, the 8*th*. Canon of the Nicene Council, the 3*d*. of the Council of Epheſus, the 1*ſt*. Canon of St. Baſil's Epiſtle to Amphilochius, a Letter of the ſame Father to the Eveſians, the Definition of the Council of Epheſus againſt the Meſſalians, St. Athanaſius's Letter to Ruffinian, the Judgment of the Council of Chalcedon about the Reception of the Biſhops, who had aſſiſted at the Council of Epheſus under Dioſcorus, and ſome Abſtracts of their Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtories of Rufinus and Socrates. They debated, whether they ought to receive converted Hereticks ſo, as to leave them in the Sacerdotal Dignity. Some inſiſted upon Athanaſius's Letter to Ruffinian, which imports that they ſhall be admitted to Penance, but ſhall not continue in the Clergy; but it was anſwered, that it was to be underſtood of Hereſiarchs only. Some voted, that according to the Nicene Council, they ſhould lay Hands on them anew; but ſome ſaid, that the Council did not mean a new Conſecration, but a ſimple Ceremony of Impoſition of Hands. They enquired, whether the Hereſie of the Iconoclaſts, was greater or leſſer than the former Hereſies; and there was nothing determined upon that Point. Laſtly, after many Allegations, they declared, that thoſe who return'd from their Hereſie, yea, and thoſe alſo who had been ordain'd by Hereticks, were to be received and to keep their Dignity; if there was nothing elſe that hindred them from continuing in the Degree of Clerks.

2*d*. Nicene Council.

In the ſecond Action of the 26*th*. of the ſame Month, after Gregory, Biſhop of Neo-cæſarea, had preſented himſelf, and owned that he had done amiſs in rejecting Image-Worſhip, they read Pope Adrian's Letter to Conſtantine and Irene, in which having commended their Zeal, he eſtabliſheth the Worſhip of Images, and affirms, that the Church of Rome received it by Tradition from St. Peter. He proves by a falſe Relation, that in St. Sylveſter's time, St. Peter's and St. Paul's Pictures were in the Church. He alledges the Oppoſition his Predeceſſors had made to the deſtroying of Images. He exhorts the Emperor, to re-eſtabliſh the Uſe of them in the Eaſt, as it was eſtabliſhed in the Weſt. He ſays, that Chriſtians do not make their Images God; but uſe them as Memorials of the Worſhip due to God and his Saints. He grounds the Uſe of them upon ſeveral Inſtances of the Old Teſtament, as thoſe of the Sacrifices, the Mercy-ſeat, the Cherubims, and the Brazen Serpent, and upon ſome Teſtimonies of the Fathers, which are either ſuppoſititious, or impertinent, proving nothing at all, or proving only the Uſe of Images, but not that any Worſhip was paid to them. Nevertheleſs, Adrian does not only maintain, that it is uſeful to have Images, to teach the Ignorant the things which they repreſent, to remember them of the Saints, to ſtir up Piety and Compunction; but beſides, he will have them to be worſhipped. To this Letter Anaſtaſius adds many Lines, wherein the Pope entreats the Emperor. 1. To cauſe the Council held againſt Images to be rejected and anathematiz'd, and to reſtore thoſe that had been perſecuted for defending of them. 2. To cauſe St. Peter's Patrimony to be reſtored him. 3. To order that all the Archbiſhops of his Dioceſs ſhall receive Ordination from him. 4. To maintain the Church of Rome's Primacy. 5. To hinder the Patriarch of Conſtantinople from aſſuming the Title of Univerſal Biſhop. 6. Not to leave Tarafius in the See of Conſtantinople, to which he was advanced, being a Layman. 7. He acquaints him with Charles the Great's Victories, and his Beneficence to the Roman Church. 'Tis no hard Matter to apprehend, why the Greeks did not tranſcribe theſe Articles; nay, the Pope's Legates durſt not perhaps preſent them to the Synod in which Tarafius preſided. They read another of Adrian's Letters, written to Tarafius, in which, having freely expreſſed to him how much his Ordination had troubled him, he commends his Confeſſion of Faith, and exhorts him to procure the Condemnation of the Synod, which had rejected Images. After the reading of the Letter, the Pope's Legates asked Tarafius, whether he did not approve of it. He anſwered, he did, and declared he did affectionately worſhip the Images of Chriſt, the Virgin, Holy Angels, and of all the Saints, though he worſhipped God only with a Sovereign Worſhip of Latria, and put his Truſt in him alone. The Synod approved of this Declaration, and the Pope's Letter. All the Biſhops made the ſame Declaration ſeverally, and the Abbots followed them.

2*d*. Nicene Council.

In the third Action, of the 28*th*. or 29*th*. of the ſame Month of September, Gregory of Neo-cæſarea was admitted, though with much Contradiction, after he had read a Retractation of his old Opinions, and Profeſſion of Faith about Images. The reſt of the Biſhops that abjured, were likewiſe received, and took their Place in the Council. Then was read Tarafius's Synodical Letter, ſent to the Patriarchs, in which, to his Confeſſion of Faith about the Trinity, and the Incarnation, he adds the Interceſſion of Saints, of the Virgin, the Angels, and the Worſhip of Images. Therein he owns but ſix General Councils. They alſo read the Letter of Theodoſius of Jeruſalem, approved by the Eaſtern Biſhops; in which, after a long Confeſſion of Faith about the Trinity and Incarnation, he adds the Worſhip of Saints and Images. The Biſhops approved theſe Writings, and rejected the Council againſt Images.

In the fourth Action, Tarafius cauſed (g) the Teſtimonies of the Scripture and the Fathers, whereby he pretended the Worſhip of Images was authorized, to be read. They alledge but three Paſſages of the Old Teſtament, where mention is made of the Cherubims upon the Mercy-Seat, and one Paſſage of the New, taken out of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, Chap. 9. where the Cherubims are mentioned, and what was (g) Teſtimonies of Scriptures, and Fathers, whereby he pretended the Worſhip of Images to be authorized.] This Learned Sorbonift, in the Recitation of theſe Teſtimonies, hath ſo ingenuouſly owned both the Falſhood and Impertinency of them, that it is needleſs to ſpend any further Pains or Time upon a Confutation, there being not any one pertinent Allegation, or genuine Proof out of any ancient Author, to prove the Worſhip of Images lawful. All that can fairly be gathered from them is this, that ſome Images have been made by Chriſtians, and allowed a Civil Uſe, or at moſt, but an Hiſtorical Uſe in the Church, which none diſallows, ſo long as they are kept within thoſe Bounds, and not ſuffered to become an Object of Worſhip, though but in an inferior Senſe, which is Idolatry. Yet if any one deſires an Anſwer to them, the Abridgment of the Caroline Books, which our Author gives us at the end of this Council, will give him Satisfaction.

2d. Nicene Council.

in the Tabernacle. The Bishops insist upon this, and pretend, that the Cherubims had Humane Faces, and that the Use of Images is thus established in the Old Testament. I leave you to judge, whether that be a sufficient Proof. Then they quote a Place out of St. Chrysostome, taken out of St. Meletius's Panegyrick, which proves only, that the Faithful being affectionate to that Saint, did not only repeat his Name, but moreover represented his Picture upon Rings, Cups, Glasses, Bed-Curtains, and in many other Places; but he does not speak at all of the publick Worship of Meletius's Pictures. The next Passage alledged by them, under St. Chrysostome's Name, is drawn out of an Homily, which shews that there is but one Legislator in the Old and the New Testament, which is not this Saint's, as we shewed in the Criticism of his Works. The Author of this Homily says, that he beheld with Pleasure a goodly Picture, wherein was represented an Angel putting to flight some Barbarian Troops. The Passage of St. Gregory Nyssen, which they alledge here, does not prove it much better, though this Father speaks in other Places of the Pictures representing the Conflicts of the Martyrs, set up in some Churches. That of St. Cyril proves the Use of Images among Christians, as well as that of St. Basil, in St. Barlaam's Panegyrick; which Passage is cited out of its Place, in this Council. But it is hard to understand how they can draw a good convincing Argument for Image-Worship, from what is reported by St. Gregory Nazianzen, that a debauched Woman was perswaded to leave off her Lewdness, by beholding a Picture, representing Polemon's Change of Life, whom Xenocrates converted from his Vices. Do they believe that Polemon, the Heathen's Picture, deserved any Religious Worship? 'Tis true, St. Gregory Nazianzen says, that Picture was venerable (σεβασμία); but he means no more but this, that it was well done, and did inspire some Respect for the Manner of the Painting; which shews, that though this kind of Epithets (Holy, Venerable) were said somewhere else of the Pictures of Saints, that would not come up to an invincible Proof, that they ought to be honoured; but only, that what was represented in them, did inspire some Reverence and Devotion. Antipater of Bostra speaks of the Statue, which the Woman, cured of the Bloody-Flux, erected to Christ. But this does neither prove the Worship of Images, nor the common Use made of them in Churches. The Passage of Asterius of Amasea, is quoted more pertinently, and proves, that on St. Euphemia's Day, they did expose the Picture of the Martyrdom of this Saint. The Narrative of a Miracle of a Woman troubled with a Pain in her Back, for speaking with little Respect to St. Anastasius's Relicks, which they were bringing over from Persia, is indeed a Proof of the Worshipping of Relicks, but not of Images; therefore the Sicilian Bishops add, that a Woman possessed with a Devil, was cured at Rome by St. Anastasius's Image. Then they bring in a Supposititious Piece, falsly attributed to St. Athanasius; importing, that the Jews of Berytus, having used Christ's Image, as the Gospel relates, that their Fathers used Christ himself; and having at last pierced his Side with a Spear, there came out of it Blood and Water, and that so many Miracles were wrought by it, that an infinite Number of Jews being convinced by them, turned Christians, and received Baptism. This Relation is followed with two Letters of St. Nilus, whereof the one, directed to Heliodorus, is alledged to prove the Vertue of Images, though it shews only the Vertue of the Intercession of Saints; and the other to Olympiodorus, had been alledged by the Iconoclasts, and falsified, as it's pretended. They quoted a Passage out of Maximus, who, in the Relation of what passed between him and Theodosius, reports, that they brought the Holy Gospels, the Cross, with the Image of Jesus Christ and the Virgin Mary, that they saluted them, and laid their Hands on them, to confirm what they had agreed upon. This Passage is fitter than the other to prove Image-Worship; yet they wrangle a while about the Word (Saluting) which they pretend was not expressive and strong enough; nevertheless it was concluded, it was enough to honour them with a Kiss or Salutation, and that God only was worshipped with a Worship of Latria. The 82*d*. Canon of the Council in Trullo, is indeed a Proof of the Use of Christ's Images, but it does not establish the Worship of them. The Passage of Leontius Bishop of Cyprus is more formal, and establisheth the outward Worship of Images, by rejecting the ill Interpretation that might be put on it. Those of Anastasius Sinaita prove only the Honour due to Saints and Angels. That which is drawn out of the Spiritual Meadow, and recited under Sophronius's Name, though this Work belongs to John Moschus, contains an Answer so strange and exorbitant, that I don't believe any body would approve of it. They say, it was made to a solitary Man, vexed with the Evil Spirit of Fornication, who understanding from that Evil Spirit, that he would let him alone, if he would give over worshipping the Virgin's Image, consulted his Abbot what he should do, and received from him this Answer, which I do not think fit to translate. Expedit autem tibi potius, ut non dimittas in civitate ista lupanar, in quod non introeas quàm ut recuses adorare Dominum nostrum Jesum Christum cum propria Matre in sua imagine. Notwithstanding, this Instance was made use of, to prove, that they who had sworn to persist in Heresie, were not bound to keep that Oath; because that good Monk having promised the Devil with an Oath that he would do what he desired of him, if he would let him alone, did not regard that Oath. The Miracles related in the Acts of St. Cosmus, and St. Damian, do prove an excessive Devotion to the Images of Saints, if the Authority and Antiquity of those Acts were well established; but it being otherwise, no convincing Proof can be drawn out of them. The Passage cited under St. Chrysostome's Name, taken out of an Homily upon the Washing, is doubtful; and were it true, it does not concern Saints Images, but the Nature of God's Image which is in Man. Those of St. Athanasius and St. Basil are more impertinent yet, for the perfect Resemblance of the Son of God, with his Father, whose Image he is, is spoken of. The latter, cited under the Title of St. Basil to Julian, which to the Confession of Faith joins the Worship of Saints and Images, is a Suppositious Piece. The Stories taken out of the Lives of St. Simeon, St. John the Faster, of St. Mary the Ægyptian, and other such Acts are of no great Authority. After they had recited these Extracts, they read the Letter of Pope Gregory the second to German of Constantinople, wherein he established the Worship of Images, and three Letters of this Patriarch of Constantinople upon the same Subject, wherein he does acknowledge, that the Worship paid to Images is but an outward Worship, expressing the inward Veneration Men have for what is represented thereby. All the Bishops approved this Opinion, and anathematized those that brake down Images, and those also who did not reverence and salute them. After this, Euthymius, Bishop of Sardis, read, in the Name of the Council, a Confession of Faith, in which, to the Articles concerning the Trinity and Incarnation, they add Praying to Saints, their Intercession, the Honour due to them, and to Crosses, to Saints Relicks, to the Saints and the venerable Images, which we honour, which we embrace, and worship respectfully, especially the Images of Christ's Humanity, and those of the Holy Virgin, Mother of God; those of the Angels, who, though incorporeal, have appeared under Humane Shapes to the Just; and lastly, those of the Apostles, Prophets, Martyrs, and other Saints, which is the end of this Action.

2d. Nicene Council.

In the 7*th*. which was held the 4*th*. of October, they alledge several Pieces, to shew that the Iconoclasts had done, what some other Hereticks had attempted before them. The first Passage is St. Cyril's,

2d. Nicene Council.

Sermon of John of Theſſalonica; aſſuring, that not only Mens Pictures may be drawn, but Angels alſo, by reaſon they are Corporeal. The fourth, is an Abſtract of a Diſpute between a Jew and a Chriſtian, wherein the Chriſtian anſwering the Jew, who charged him with adoring of Images, tells him, that Chriſtians do not adore them, but preſerve and behold them, adoring and invoking God. The fifth is a Fragment of a falſe Itinerary of the Apoſtles, which had been cited by the Iconoclaſts. The Council does reject and anathematize it, and condemns it to the Fire; and, to prove the Falſity of this Monument cites a Paſſage of Amphilochius. There was no need of this, for that Monument is viſibly Apocryphal. They reject alſo a Teſtimony of Euſebius to Euphration; which Paſſage proved nothing, neither for, nor againſt Images; yet it gave an Occaſion to condemn the Memory and Writings of Euſebius, againſt whom they cite Antipater of Boſtra. The ſixth Piece alledged by the Council, is an Extract of the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of one John, whom they call the Separate, who ſays, that Chriſtians would not have Angels Pictures to be drawn, and that Philoxenus could not endure Doves. They prove by a Paſſage of St. Sabas's Life, that Philoxenus was one of the Hereticks Enemies to the Council of Chalcedon. They cite in the eighth Place, a Fragment of the Council of Conſtantinople, held under Mennas, where Severus is accuſed of breaking down Altars and taking away the Doves hanging over them; ſaying, Doves ought not to be called the Holy Ghoſt. In the ninth, they report a Teſtimony of John, Biſhop of Gabale, accuſing Severus of not honouring Angels. The tenth Monument is a Paſſage of Conſtantinian, Library-Keeper of the Church of Conſtantinople, maintaining, that no Image can be made of the Deity; but of Chriſt's Humanity there may. The eleventh is a Paſſage of Evagrius's Hiſtory, about Chriſt's Image, ſent to Agbarus. The 12th. are ſome Extracts of the Spiritual Meadow. From all theſe Paſſages, they pretend to conclude, that the Jews, and Pagans, the Samaritans, the Manichæans, and the Severians were the firſt Enemies of Images. Laſtly, they read an Account of the Origine of the breaking down of Images, ſhewing, that a certain Jew of Tiberias, counterfeiting himſelf to be a Diviner and Sorcerer, perſuaded the King of the Arabians to order all Images to be taken away out of the Churches of the Chriſtians in his Kingdom, promiſing him a long Life, if he would do it; that this Order being given out, the Chriſtians refuſing to take away the Images with their own Hands, the Jews and the Arabians had pulled them down, burnt, torn, or defaced them; that the King, inſtead of the long Life, which the Magician had promiſed him, died within two Years and ſome Months after, and that his Son put the Magician to Death, and ſuffered Images to be ſet up again. After this Relation, all the Biſhops demanded the Reſtoration of Images; they called for ſome to be brought in, that they might honour them, and repeated the Anathema's againſt thoſe that broke, or diſhonoured them.

In the 6th. Action, held the 5th. or the 6th. of October, they read the Acts of the Council of Conſtantinople, held againſt Images, and a (b) Refutation of what is in this Council. The 1ſt. thing they quarrel at, is the Title it had aſſumed, of the Holy ſeventh General Council. They pretend, it cannot have thoſe Titles, ſince it was not received, but contrariwiſe rejected, and anathematized by ſeveral Biſhops; nor was it approved by the Biſhop of Rome, and the Biſhops about him, nor by his Vicars, nor by a Circular Letter, according to the uſual Law of Councils. And laſtly, that the Patriarchs of Alexandria, Antioch, and Jeruſalem, did not aſſent to it, neither in Perſon, nor by the great Biſhops of their Provinces. Yet they do not queſtion the Number of the Biſhops ſet down in the Acts of 338: but they ſay, that this Number could not make a General Legitimate Council, becauſe thoſe that compoſed it had ſwerved from the Truth, and embraced an Error. I omit the Prefaces of the Council of Conſtantinople, and the Reflections of the Nicene Council, which reſpect the Confeſſion of Faith about the Trinity, and the Incarnation, and the Acknowledgment of what was decided in the ſix firſt General Councils, which are Articles which both Councils agreed in: But the former pretends, that they who make Images, do overthrow the ſix firſt Synods. The others contrariwiſe maintain, that they who condemn them do act contrary to the Spirit, and the Practice of the Biſhops, who aſſiſted at theſe Synods, and contrary to their Tradition. There is nothing weaker, than what the former do alledge, to prove, that the Uſe of Images is contrary to the Deciſion of the General Councils. They are nothing but meer Petitiones Principii, or evident Sophiſms, which deſerve no Refutation. There is one upon the Euchariſt, which is nothing better than the reſt. They pretend, that no Image of Chriſt ought to be made, becauſe the Euchariſt is the viſible Image. To which, the Fathers of the ſecond Council anſwer, that the Name of Image is not given to the unbloody Sacrifice, offered by the Prieſt, but it is the very Body, and the very Blood of Chriſt; that thoſe Oblations, before the Sanctification, have been called Types by ſome of the Fathers, as by Euſtathius of Antioch, and St. Baſil; but after the Sanctification, they never were called Types or Images of Chriſt, and that they are believed, and properly called the Body and Blood of Chriſt. They add, that their very Adverſaries could not forbear acknowledging this Truth, and that they confeſs in the ſame Place, that the Euchariſt, by the Conſecration, is made Chriſt's Body; which is an Argument, that the two Councils held the Reality of Chriſt's Body in the Euchariſt, and that they differ only in the Expreſſion, and the Name they give it; the one pretending, that the Euchariſt, even after the Conſecration, may be called and conſidered as an Image and a Type; and the others denying expreſly, that the Fathers did ever give it that Name after the Conſecration; which is not altogether true, though it cannot be ſaid, that the Euchariſt may be called a Type or Image, as other Images, and the whole Arguing grounded upon this Analogy be very weak.

2d. Nicene Council.

The Biſhops of the firſt Council deny Images to be of the Tradition of Chriſt, of the Apoſtles or of the Fathers. Thoſe of the ſecond, maintain them to be a Tradition of Chriſt, which was, not written, and prove it by the Story of the Statue, erected by the Woman with the Bloody-Flux to the Honour of Chriſt. I ſhall deſire a better Proof of it. They alledge the other Proofs they had brought in, ſome of which do indeed ſhew the Uſe of Images was common in Churches in the 4th. and 5th. Century; but never a one comes up to the time of Jeſus Chriſt, the Apoſtles, or their immediate Succeſſors.

The Biſhops of the firſt Council add, that there is no Prayer in the Church for the hallowing of Images. Thoſe of the ſecond anſwer, there are many Holy things in the Church which are not Hallowed by Prayer, but are Holy by their very Name; as the Croſs and the Sacred Veſſels, which are reverenced by reaſon of their Shape and Uſe; that it is ſo with Images which have Reverence paid them for the ſake of that they repreſent, and of their Uſefulneſs.

The Biſhops of the firſt Council, charge them that honour Images of Saints, with lapſing into Heatheniſm. Thoſe of the ſecond, make a vigorous (b) A Confutation of the Acts of the Council of Conſtantinople.] The Arguments drawn from the Scriptures and Fathers, which the Council of Conſtantinople inſiſts upon, to ſhew the Incongruity of the Worſhip of Images to the Nature of God, and the Deſign of the Chriſtian Religion, though not ſo clear and cogent as might be produced, yet are ſo weakly, and inſufficiently anſwered by the Nicene Fathers, that they may well paſs for inconfutable, till ſome better Anſwer of them appears, which ſince M. du Pin hath not done, but doth acknowledge the ſame. It is needleſs to ſtand upon the Juſtification of the Former, or labour to diſcover the Inſufficiency of the Latter, which is ſo evident to every Reader.

De-

2d. Nicene Council.

Defence upon this Article, maintaining, that they worship them not as they worship God; but that they embrace and salute them, and pay them an outward Worship, to express their Veneration of the Saints represented by them; besides that, they use them for their own Instruction, and for raising Godly Motions in the Beholders.

From Reasons they come to Authorities, and first of all they alledge two Testimonies of the Scripture, where it is said, That God is a Spirit, that they that worship him, must worship him in Spirit and in Truth; and that no Man hath seen God at any time. The Fathers of the Second Council answer, This cannot be understood but of the Deity, and cannot be applied to Christ's Humanity; thus confessing that they would not have approved of the Images of the Trinity.

The second Place of Scripture is that famous one of Deuteronomy, Ye shall make to your selves no Graven Idols. The Fathers of the second Council answer, this ought not to extend to the Images of Christians, but respects only the Jews and prophane Images, and that Moses himself explained this Precept, by making Cherubims by God's Order. I pass by the other places of Scripture, which are less pertinent by far than the preceding, to come to the Testimonies of the Fathers.

The first is that of St. Epiphanius, who will not have Christians to set up Images in Churches, nor in Church-Yards, nor even in their Houses. The Fathers of the second maintain this Letter to be false, that St. Epiphanius could not be of a contrary Mind to St. Basil, St. Amphilochius, St. Gregory Nyssen, and the other Fathers, who commanded the Use of Images. It had perhaps been better for them to say, That this Father speaks too harshly.

The Second Passage is drawn out of St. Gregory Nazianzen's Verses, where it is said, Men ought not to have their Trust and Hope in Colours, but in their Hearts. This Passage is of a dubious Sense, and does no way concern Images; but 'tis a moral Reflection, according to the Remark of the Fathers of the Second Nicene Council, wherein this Father observes, that Men ought not to place their Confidence in worldly Goods, which he compares to Colours, but in a good Conscience.

The Passages of St. Basil are yet of a larger Sense: they say, that Scripture does represent to us the Images of the Souls of Saints, but not of their Bodies. This does not overthrow other Images; neither should they have alledged against Images a Place taken out of an Homily which is not St. Chrysostome's.

The Passage of St. Athanasius, that Creatures ought not to be worshipped, is only against Idols. That of Amphilochius hath something in it of greater Difficulty. This Father says, that we should have no care to paint out in Colours a Corporeal Representation of the Saints, because we have no need of them, but that we should imitate their Virtues. The Fathers of the Second Council make a large Discourse, to shift off this Passage. They shew the Usefulness of representing the Histories of Saints, which do both instruct and stir up Godly Motions. But they say, it's not enough to erect Temples and Images to their Honour, but we ought besides, to to imitate their Virtuous Actions. They pretend, Amphilochius meant nothing else, and explain themselves with a Passage of Asterius of Amasea, which gives them an opportunity to produce another of the same Father, proving the Use of Images.

2d. Nicene Council.

The Bishops of the first Council had cited a Passage stronger yet than that of Amphilochius, drawn out of a Writing of Theodotus of Ancyra; saying, That Christians have not learnt to draw the Pictures of the Faces of Saints, but to imitate their Virtues: For (saith he) what benefit can they, that would set up those kind of Representations, reap thereby? And what Spiritual Thought can they suggest to them? 'Tis a Vain Imagination, and a Diabolical Invention. The Fathers of the second Council answer, That this place of Theodotus is suppositious. Perhaps it had been more to the purpose to observe, that the first part is Theodotus's, but the second is a Conclusion which their Adversaries draw from the place of Theodotus, to which they might easily have returned the same Answer they had done to that of Amphilochius.

The last Passage reported in the Acts of the Council of Constantinople, is a Passage taken out of a Letter [of Eusebius Cesarienses] to Constantia Augusta, which is attributed to that Author; yet is it not sure that it is his, and the Passage drawn out of it does not at all concern Images. Nevertheless the Fathers of the second Council, without telling us thus much, reject the Authority of Eusebius, charge him with being anathematized, represent him as a Theopassian, who hath condemned Images, and rank him with Severus, Peter Gnapheus, Philoxenus, &c. believing it advantageous to them, that Eusebius should be their Adversary, and the Enemy of Images.

The Definitions of the Council of Constantinople follow these Testimonies: they forbid all sorts of Persons to make, to worship, or to set up in Churches, or in private Houses, any Image, upon pain of Deposition, if it be a Bishop, a Priest, or a Deacon; or of Excommunication, if it be a Monk, or a Layman; and it enjoins them to be dealt withal according to the Rigour of the Imperial Laws, as Adversaries of God's Laws, and Enemies of their Ancestors Doctrines. But they forbid to take the Sacred Vessels under that pretence, or to make them pass for Images; as also the Veils, the Vestments, and the other things used in the Sacred Ministry. This Declaration is joined with the Anathematizing of those, that do not receive the Doctrine of the six First Councils. They are also anathematized, who make Images of Christ, or of the Saints, after the Acclamations to the Emperors Leo and Constantine, and Imprecations against German, Gregory, and John Damascene, who are anathematized and deposed. The Council of Nice confutes these Definitions in every Article.

The 7th. Action was held the 13th. of October. It contains a Confession of Faith, in the end whereof (i) it is defined, that the Holy and Venerable Images may be exposed to the sight, as well as the Cross, both those which are made in Colours, upon Cloath, and those of another kind; that they may be placed in Churches, set upon Sacred Vessels, upon Sacerdotal Vestments, upon the Walls and Tables, in Houses, and in the Highways, viz. The Images of Jesus Christ and the Virgin, of the Angels and (i) It is defined, that Images may be placed in Churches, and reverenced, but not adored with the true Adoration due to God only.] It is clear from the Premises, that this Definition of the Council was resolved upon before the Matter was heard, or canvassed; and though they had no Grounds for this Practice, either from Scripture, Reason, or Ecclesiastical Constitutions, yet Image-worship they must have; but then it must be a very nice sort too, a Veneration, not true Adoration; or, as Tarasius distinguishes, not with λατρεια: Which evidently shews, that though they would not forsake Image-worship, yet they were afraid of incurring the Guilt of Idolatry by it, which they thought to salve by a nice distinction of Veneration and Adoration, or as the Modern Romanists, δουλια, and λατρεια. But this will not serve the turn, nor clear the Guilt, for, as Aquinas and his Followers have at large proved, where any Thing is worshipped merely for the sake of another, it must have the same kind of Worship given it, which is given to the Thing represented by it. And then if they give the Image any Veneration, notwithstanding this distinction, it must be a Divine Worship, the same which is given to God, and that is gross Idolatry. Aquin. Sum. p. 3. q. 25. art. 3.

Saints, that they are useful to remember Men of them, and to renew the Desire of the Saints; that they may be kissed and reverenced, but not adored with the true Adoration, due to God alone; that Incense and Wax-candles may be burnt before them, as they are before the Cross; because the Reverence paid to them passeth to their Object; and they that honour them, honour those represented by them. This Confession is followed with a Letter of the Council to the Emperor and Empress, and a Circular Letter to all the Bishops and Churches.

Anastasius the Library-keeper, who translated the Acts of this Council, reckons but seven Actions, and attributes to the last the Canons, and Tarasius's Letters. But in the Greek Edition, there is an 8*th*. Action of the 20*th*. of September, because what is related there, was indeed transacted at Constantinople, whither the Patriarch and Bishops went, to give an account of their Proceedings to the Emperor and the Empress. They were kindly entertained by them, and the Empress her self would be present at the Synod, to hear the Acclamations of the Bishops in her commendation. She caused the Definition of the Council to be read, and asked the Bishops, whether it had been made by the Unanimous Consent of all. It was approved by many Acclamations, and presented by the Patriarch to the Empress, who subscribed it, and caused it to be subscribed by the Emperor, her Son. After that, the Acclamations began again, to wish a long Life to the Empress, and the Emperor: These being over, some of the chief Testimonies, alledged in the behalf of Images, were read before the Lords and the People. After the reading of them, the Bishops, the great Lords, and the People made many Acclamations.

There are 22 Canons of this Council yet extant, which Anastasius attributes to the 7*th*. Action.

In the first, they confirm the ancient Decrees of the Councils, [as well Provincial, as General,] and anathematiz'd those which are anathematiz'd by them, and deposed those which are deposed by them, and suspend and put to Penance those, which they have ordained to be suspended and put to Penance.

In the 2*d*. they ordain, That they shall examine, whether he, who is preferred to the dignity of a Bishop, be skilful in the Psalter, the Gospel, St. Paul's Epistles, and the Canons; and whether he be able to instruct his People in the Commandments of God, and in their other Practical Duties.

The 3*d*. declares all the Elections of Bishops or Priests, made by Princes, to be void. It ordains, That Bishops shall be chosen by other Bishops, and thereupon cites the Canon of the Nicene Council, which does not speak of the Election, but of the Ordination [of Bishops:] For of old time the Election did belong to the Clergy and People, and the Ordination to the Bishops.

The 4*th*. is against the Bishops, who take Money for deposing or excommunicating a Clerk.

The 5*th*. degrades those, who did boast of having ordained for Money, and renews the Canonical Laws against Simonists.

The 6*th*. renews the Canon of the Nicene Council for the holding of Provincial Synods. It threatens with Excommunication those Princes who would hinder it, and imposes Canonical Penalties upon the Metropolitans who should neglect it; and forbids them to take any thing which the Bishops have brought with them to the Synod.

The 7*th*. ordains, that some Relicks of Saints shall be put into the Temples, which have been consecrated without any Relicks being put into them, and the accustomed Prayers used at that Ceremony. It forbids Bishops, upon pain of Deposition, hereafter to consecrate a Temple without Relicks.

The 8*th*. forbids baptizing or receiving the Jews, unless they be throughly converted.

The 9*th*. ordains, that all the Works made against Images shall be put in the Palace of the Patriarch of Constantinople, among the Heretical Books. It threatens to depose or excommunicate those that shall conceal them.

2d. Nicene Council.

The 10*th*. forbids the Admission of Clerks into Chappels or Churches, without permission from their Bishop.

The 11*th*. ordains, that there shall be Stewards in all Churches, yea and gives the Bishop of Constantinople leave to put some in the Metropolitan Churches, if the Metropolitans neglect to do it. The same is ordained for Monasteries.

The 12*th*. forbids Bishops and Abbots to yield up, or to give away unwarrantably, their Churches, or Monastery Lands or Revenues.

The 13*th*. ordains, that Monasteries and Bishops Houses shall be repaired, and restored to their proper uses, and shall no more be suffered to serve for publick Inns.

The 14*th*. forbids such Children as have indeed received the Tonsure, but not the Imposition of the Bishops hands, to read in the Desk. It gives the Abbots, who are Priests, leave to make Readers for their own Monastery only, whom the Chorepiscopi are permitted to ordain.

The 15*th*. forbids a Clerk to be entitled to two Churches.

The 16*th*. forbids Bishops, and other Clergymen, to wear gay and fine Garments to make themselves taken notice of. It orders those to be punished, who laugh at such Clerks as are meanly clad. It is observed there, that in former times all Men consecrated to God went plainly and modestly apparell'd, because, as St. Basil says, any Garment which is not put on for Necessity, but for Ornament, carrieth a suspicion of Pride.

The 17*th*. forbids to undertake the building of Oratories, or Chappels, without a sufficient Fund to defray the Charges necessary for finishing of them.

The 18*th*. forbids Women to live in Bishops Houses, or in Monasteries of Men.

The 19*th*. prohibits taking any thing for Orders, or Entrance into Monasteries, upon pain of Deposition for the Bishops, and such Abbots as are Priests, and for Abbesses and Abbots who are not Priests, upon pain of Expulsion from their Monasteries. Nevertheless it permits those, who are admitted into Monasteries, or their Parents or Relations, to give voluntary Gifts; yet upon this condition, that those Gifts shall belong to the Monasteries, whether he that is admitted stays or goes away, unless the Emperor turn him out.

The 20*th*. prohibits making double Monasteries, that is, for Men and Women; and as for those that are founded, it ordains, that the Monks and Nuns shall dwell in two several Houses, that they shall not see one another, nor have any Commerce together.

The 21*st*. forbids Monks to quit their own Monastery to go to others.

The 22*d*. forbids Monks to eat with Women, unless it be needful for their Spiritual Good or upon a Journey, yea though they be their Relations.

Moreover, to the Acts of this Council is joyned a Panegyrick, pronounced in Commendation of it by Epiphanius Deacon of Catana in Sicily; a Letter of Tarasius to Pope Adrian, about the Subject of the Council; another Letter of the same Person against the Simonists, in which he hath gathered together several Canons upon that Subject; another Letter of his to John the Abbot, upon the Definition of the 2d. Nicene Council, and against Simoniacal Ordinations.

The Acts of this Council being brought to Rome, they sent Extracts of them into France, where they had a different Practice about Image-worship. They were indeed permitted to have them, and to put them in their Churches; but they could not endure that any Worship or Honour should be paid them, whilst the Cross and Sacred Vessels were permitted to be honoured. Charles, who was then King of France,

2d. Nicene Council.

France, and afterwards was Emperor, caused these Extracts to be examined by * some Bishops of his Kingdom, who composed a Treatise to vindicate their own Usage, and to answer the Proofs alledged in the Council of Nice for the Worship of Images. This Work was put out by Charles's Order, and under his Name, within three Years, or thereabouts, after the Nicene Council. It is divided into four Books.

* Of whom Alcuin was the chief; and R. Hoveden says, He it was that composed the Caroline Books.

In the Preface having observed, that the Church, redeemed with the precious Blood of Christ her Spouse, washed with the saving Water of Baptism, fed with the precious Blood of her Saviour, and anointed with Holy Oyl, is sometimes assaulted by Hereticks and Infidels, and sometimes vexed by the Quarrels of the Schismaticks and the Proud; that she is an Ark, containing those that are to be saved, figured by that of Noah; which undergoes the Storms of the Deluge of this World, without any danger of Shipwrack; which does not yield to the deep and deadly Whirlpools of this World, and which cannot be overcome by the Hostile Powers wherewith she is surrounded, by reason Christ does continually fight for her; so that she does still withstand her Enemies, and inviolably maintain the true Faith and Confession of the Trinity. That she is a Holy Mother, without Spot and Corruption, always Fruitful, and yet a Virgin; that the more she is set on by the Contradictions of the World, the more she encreases in Virtue; the lower she is brought, the higher she raiseth up her self. After this Encomium of the Church, they add in Charles's Name, That, seeing he hath taken the Reins of his Kingdom in his hands, being in the Bosom of this Church, he is obliged to endeavour her Vindication and Prosperity; that not only the Princes, but the Bishops also of the East, puffed up with sinful Pride, had swerved from the Holy Doctrine, and the Apostolick Tradition, and do cry up impertinent and ridiculous Synods, to make themselves famous to Posterity; that some years ago they had held in Greece a certain Synod full of Imprudence and Indiscretion, in which they went about to abolish the use of Images, which the Ancients have introduced as an Ornament, and a Remembrance of Things past, and to attribute to Images what God hath said of Idols, though it cannot be said, that all Images are Idols: But 'tis plain there's a Difference between an Image and an Idol; because Images are for Ornament and Remembrance, whereas Idols are made for destroying Souls by an impious Adoration, and vain Superstition. That the Bishops of this Council had been so blind, as to anathematize all those who had Images in Churches, and so boast, that their Emperor Constantine had freed them from Idols. That besides this, there was another Synod held about three years since, composed of the Successors of those of the former Council, yea and of those that had assisted at it, which was not less erroneous and faulty than the former, though it took a clean contrary way. That the Bishops of this Synod order Images to be adored, which those of the former would not permit to be had or seen; and that whenever these find Images to be spoken of, whether in the Scripture, or in the Writings of the Fathers, they conclude from thence, that they ought to be worshipped. That thus they both fall into contrary Absurdities; those, confounding the Use, and the Adoration of Images; and the other, believing Idols and Images to be one and the same thing. 'As for us, says he, being content with 'what we find in the Gospels, and the Apostles 'Writings, and instructed by the Works of the Fa'thers, who have not swerved from him, who is 'the Way and the Truth, we receive the 6. first 'Councils, and reject all the Novelties both of the 'first and the second Synod. And as to the Acts of 'this latter, which are destitute of Eloquence and 'common Sense, being come to us, we thought our 'selves bound to write against their Errors, to the 'end, that if their Writing should defile the Hands 'of those that shall hold it, or the Ears of those that 'shall hear it, the Poison which it might instil, may 'be expell'd by our Treatise, supported by the Au'thority of the Scripture; and that this weak Enemy 'which is come from the East, may be subdued in 'the West by the Sentiments of the Holy Fathers, 'which we have produced. In fine, we have under'taken this Work with the consent of the Bishops 'of the Kingdom which God hath given us, not 'out of any ambitious Design, but animated with 'the Zeal of God's House, and the Love of Truth; 'because, as it is a holy Thing to pursue good Things, 'so it is a great Sin to consent to Evil.' This is the Subject of his Preface.

2d. Nicene Council.

In the first Book, after having made some Cursory Observations upon some Terms of the Council, he shews, that the places of the Scripture, alledged in that Council for Image-Worship, being explained in their genuine Sense, and according to the Fathers, do not at all prove what they pretend. In the first Chapter, he reproves this Expression in the Letter of Constantine and Irene; By him that reigns with us: He says, that it is a piece of intolerable Rashness in Princes, to compare their Reign to that of God. He says, that, properly speaking, God alone reigns, and Princes reign, but improperly, as none but He is really Immortal and True, and all other Things are Immortal and True only by Participation. In the 2d. he charges them with too much Boldness, in saying, that God hath chosen them, who do truly seek his Glory. He finds fault in the 3d. with their calling their Letter Scripta Divalia, as a profane Expression; Nay, he would not have the Dead called Divæ Memoriæ; and he says, that 'tis Ambition, not Apostolical Tradition, that brought in that Expression. In the 4th. Chapter, he blames another Expression of their Letter to Pope Adrian, We beseech your Holiness, or rather that God, who suffers none to perish, beseeches you. He calls this Expression, a wretched way of speaking, and an execrable Error; because he who is God, and hath a Sovereign Empire over all his Creatures, cannot debase himself so, as to beseech them. In the 5th. Chapter he observes, that 'tis a great Crime to explain any thing in another manner, than it ought to be understood. In the 6th. he says, that when there arises any Question in the Church, they ought above all to consult the Church of Rome, which is preferr'd before all others, and that no Writings should be made use of, but such as she receiveth: That as St. Peter was preferr'd before all the Apostles, so the Church of Rome is above all other Churches, and is the first of the Apostolical Churches, and so much the more, because she holds her Primacy from the Authority of Jesus Christ himself, and not from the Constitutions of Synods; that St. Paul also hath contributed to the Establishing of the Church, that she might have all the Authority of both those Apostles. He quotes the Passage of St. Jerome to Damasus, and observes that his Father Pepin enjoyn'd the French and German Churches to follow the Roman Usage in the singing of Divine Service. I do not well see, what the Author of this Book aim'd at in this place, it being evident, that the Church of Rome was contrary to his Pretension, and that Pope Adrian had been consulted, and had approved the Decision of the Synod which he confutes. In the following Chapters, he runs over the Proofs and Passages out of the Old Testament alledged by the Council, or by particular Bishops in the Council, and shews at large that they signifie nothing for the Worshipping of Images. He insists more particularly upon the Cherubims, and maintains that no Worship was paid them. He confesses that it is said, that Abraham worshipped the People of the Land of Heth, and that Nathan worshipped David; but he pretends there was a great Difference between Men living and Images. He allows that those may be saluted and reverenced upon the Account of the Dignity they have; but he cannot endure the ſame ſhould be done to a Picture, made with Colours, which can neither ſee, nor walk, nor feel. 2d. Nicene Council.

In the 2d. Book he finiſheth his Anſwer to the places of the Scripture they had made uſe of, to authorize Images, and begins in the 13th. ch. to anſwer the Authorities of the Fathers, or of other Eccleſiaſtical Records. In this, having made a Proteſtation, that he does not forbid having Images, but only worſhipping of them, he anſwers the Teſtimony drawn from the Acts of Sylveſter, wherein it was ſaid, that this Pope had cauſed the Images of the 12. Apoſtles to be carried to Conſtantine; he anſwers, I ſay, this does not prove that he cauſed them to be worſhipped, but only that he ſhewed them, to raiſe his Mind by theſe viſible Signs to things inviſible; that, tho' he had perſuaded him to honour them, which he did not, it was to lead that Prince, who was newly converted, by things viſible to the knowledge of the inviſible. And laſtly, tho' thoſe Acts of Sylveſter be read by ſeveral Orthodox Perſons, yet they are not of ſufficient Authority, to decide controverted Points. In the 14th. ch. and the 15th. he ſhews that the Paſſage of Athanaſius, alledged by the Council, proves nothing at all. In the 16th. he exclaims mightily, that they had applied to the Images a Paſſage of St. Auſtine, which is meant of the Son of God. In the 17th. he ſays, he does not anſwer St. Gregory Nyſſen, whoſe Life and Writings are unknown to him. In the following Chapters, he ſhews, that the Paſſage, drawn out of the 16th. Council, and thoſe of St. John Chryſoſtome, and St. Cyril prove nothing at all for the Worſhip of Images. In the 21ſt. he maintains, that the Adoring of Images is prejudicial to our Duty to God, but not the ſuffering them in Churches for a Remembrance of things paſt, and for an Ornament he conſents, as he tells us in the next Chapter, that thoſe of a weak and dull Memory uſe them, to put them in mind of things; but he will not yield, that they ſhould pay them any Worſhip. He proves in the 23d. ch. that this was Pope St. Gregory's Opinion. In the 24th. he owns, that Men may be bowed to, and reverenced; but he denieth, that the ſame may be done to inanimate Images. He pretends in the 25th. that Image-Worſhip is not grounded upon any Example of the Apoſtles. In the 26th. he affirms it to be a great Temerity, to compare Images with the Ark; but he ſays in the 27th. 'tis a kind of Impiety to compare them to the Sacrament of Chriſt's Body and Blood. He ſpeaks of the Conſecration of the Euchariſt very plainly and clearly, and he intimates in the end, that the Euchariſt was ſtill given to Children newly baptized. Laſtly, he is not willing that Images ſhould be compar'd even to the Croſs, to the ſacred Veſſels, and to the Books of the Goſpels and the Holy Scripture. As to this Article he is in the wrong, and all his Reaſonings are meer Sophiſms; for indeed the Croſs, the ſacred Veſſels and the Books are no leſs inanimate Creatures than Images, and deſerve neither more nor leſs Adoration. If then we may pay an (k) outward Worſhip to the Croſs, becauſe it puts us in mind of that, which Chriſt was nailed to, and to ſacred Veſſels, becauſe of the Uſe made of them, and to ſacred Books, becauſe of what they contain, thereby to ſhew our inward Reſpect and Worſhip of Chriſt, the Holy Myſteries, and the Truths of the Holy Scripture: Why ſhould we not likewiſe honour with an outward Worſhip the Images of Jeſus Chriſt, of the Virgin and the Saints for a ſimple Teſtimony of our inward Veneration of the things repreſented by them, according to the common Notion of Men? There can be no Difference at all, but from the Practice of the Church, receiving the Worſhip of the one, and not of the other. But when the Church pleaſes to approve of this, as well as that, the one can no more be condemned than the other. Anaſtaſius is in the right then, when in the Preface to the Tranſlation of the Acts of the Nicene Council, he urgeth this reaſon, as a convincing Argument againſt the Opinion of the French. They ſays, quoth he, That no Work of Mens Hands is to be worſhipped; as tho' the Book of the Goſpels were not the Work of Men, which they adore by kiſſing it, and the Sign of the Croſs, which Chriſtians do worſhip every where, tho' it be a Wooden, Golden, or Silver'd Croſs, different from that which Chriſt was faſtened to. But let us come again to Charles the Great. In the 31ſt. Chapter, he cries out againſt the Council's anathematizing thoſe, who do not worſhip Images. He pretends that hereby they have declared their Fathers Hereticks, and they being ſo, could neither conſecrate nor impoſe Hands; from whence it follows, that their Succeſſors are not true Prieſts, nor true Biſhops. Thereupon he oppoſeth the Practice of the Weſt to that of the Eaſt. 'We pray, ſays he, and give Alms, according to the 'Practice of the Church for our Fathers, and they 'anathematize them. We beg Reſt for them in the 'Sacrifices of the Maſs, and they make Imprecations 'againſt them in their Councils. We remember them 'in our Prayers, and they do not mention them, but 'to condemn them. We pray, that they may reſt in 'Abraham's Boſom, and they wiſh them to be damned with Hereticks.' Yet he confeſſes they were both miſtaken; the former in condemning the Uſe of Images for ever, the latter in commending them to be adored; thoſe in throwing them to the Fire, theſe in burning Incenſe to them; the former in avoiding the ſight of them, the latter in continually embracing of them; thoſe in anathematizing thoſe that have them, and theſe in condemning thoſe that do not worſhip them. Then he concludes with propounding the Judgment of the French, which holds the mean between both. 'We do not believe, ſaith 'he, they ought to be aboliſhed, as the former have 'done; but then we do not declare, that they are 'to be adored as the latter have done. But let us a'dore God alone, and let us reverence his Saints ac'cording to the ancient Tradition of the Church. 'We tolerate Images in the Church, to ſerve as an 'Ornament, and if they pleaſe, as a Memorial of 'things paſt. On the one hand we avoid too great 'a Severity, and on the other a baſe Flattery. We 'avoid Malice and Sottiſhneſs: We are neither too 'bold nor too weak; and thereby we ſhew to thoſe 'that run into contrary Extreams, the Way they 'ought to keep in going to Chriſt. 2d. Nicene Council.

The 3d. Book begins with a Confeſſion of Faith, in which, having ſet forth the Doctrine of the Church about the Trinity and the Incarnation, he recites the other Articles of the Creed, and remarks upon that of the Reſurrection, that Men ſhall have the ſame Body; upon that of the Life Eternal, that the Happineſs and the Torments ſhall be greater or leſſer, according to the Difference of Virtues or Crimes; upon that of Baptiſm, that it ought to be adminiſtred to Children. Then he adds, that the Gallican Churches believe, that a Man fallen into Sin after Baptiſm may be ſaved by Repentance; that they receive the Number of the Canonical Books, own'd for ſuch by the Authority of the Church; that they believe God hath created all Souls; that they anathematize thoſe, who believe them to be a Portion of the Divine Subſtance; that they do alſo condemn thoſe that ſay, (k) If we may pay an outward Worſhip to the Croſs, ſacred Veſſels, Bibles, &c. Why ſhould we not alſo honour the Images of Jeſus Chriſt.] If the Worſhip be the ſame, we grant the Idolatry is the ſame, but who ever bowed down to the Book of the Bible, or the ſacred Veſſels and prayed to them, tho' but with a relative Worſhip. There is an inferior ſort of Reſpect and Honour due to all things conſecrated to God's Service, or inſtrumental in his Worſhip, whereby tho' no Man worſhips or adores them, yet he ſo far reſpects them, as not to put them to any common or prophane Uſes, but keeps them clean and decent; and this all Perſons may be allowed to give to the Holy Bible and Sacred Veſſels, uſed in the Service of God (which is all that is intended by Worſhip in theſe Books) and yet it may be and is unlawful to worſhip the Images of Jeſus Chriſt and his Saints, as the Nicene Fathers have decreed; for all Reſpect is not Worſhip.

2d. Nicene Council.

that they have formerly ſinned in Heaven, before they were ſent into the Bodies; that they abhor thoſe that affirm God hath commanded any thing impoſſible to Man, and that the Commandments cannot all be obey'd by every particular Perſon, but only by every Chriſtian Society in common; thoſe that condemn firſt Marriage, with the Manichees, and the ſecond with Cataphryges; that they anathematize them that ſay, that Jeſus Chriſt did lie out of neceſſity, or weakneſs of the Fleſh; of that he could not do all he would, that they condemn the Hereſie of Jovinian, who denied there ſhould be any Difference in the other Life between Mens Merits, and affirmed Men ſhould have there the Virtues neglected by them here below. Laſtly, that they confeſs Free Will, ſo as to aſſert that Men do continually ſtand in need of God's Aſſiſtance, and that they are perſuaded, that they do err, who ſay with Manichæus, that Man cannot avoid Sin; as alſo thoſe who aſſert with Jovinian, that Man is not capable of Sin, becauſe both have Free Will. This is the Abridgment of the Confeſſion of Faith, which the Author of theſe Books tell us, he hath expreſſed in St. Jerome's own words. In the 2*d*. Chapter, he upbraids Taraſius with his haſty and precipitated Election, and Promotion to Holy Orders. In the 3*d*. he finds fault with the Expreſſion he had uſed, that the Holy Ghoſt proceeds from the Father by the Son: He ſaid they ought to believe that he proceeds from the Father and the Son, and brings in ſeveral Proofs of this Doctrine, blaming Taraſius for expreſſing his Mind ſo, more than thoſe who only ſaid he proceeded from the Father, without joyning the Son to him, tho' in the 8*th*. Chapter he ſuſpects all them that omitted it, to be in an Error. In the 4*th*. he reproves Theodorus for ſaying that the Son hath no other Principle but the Father. He believes that that Expreſſion ſeems to inſinuate that the Son is not the Principle himſelf, and that it may occaſion one to think, that he believ'd him Poſterior to his Father. In the 5*th*. he taxeth one Expreſſion more of Taraſius's upon the Trinity; but he could not endure, that moſt of thoſe Biſhops add to their Confeſſion of Faith the Worſhip of Images, and does vehemently complain of it in the following Chapters. He taketh it worſe yet, that they ſhould dare to anathematize thoſe of a contrary Mind. He taketh it ill in the 14*th*. and 15*th*. Chapters, that the Empreſs and the Emperor medled with that Buſineſs: But methinks he ſhould have remembred, that the Emperors had concerned themſelves more in the other Councils, and ſhould have conſidered that he did buſie himſelf about it in the Weſt more than Irene had done in the Eaſt. In the 15*th*. Chapter, he anſwers this Objection: They honour the Statues, Medals, and Pictures of Princes; why ſhall they not honour thoſe of Chriſt and the Saints? He anſwers it, I ſay, by maintaining that the former ought not to be honoured. In the 16*th*. Chapter, he anſwers another Reaſon of the Council, that the Honour of the Image paſſeth to that which is repreſented by it. He ſays firſt of all, that he cannot apprehend, how a Cloath and ſome Colours have any Relation to a Saint in Heaven; that it is not ſo with Pictures, as with Relicks which have a natural Relation to the Saints; that it depends upon the Painter's Fancy to make Folks believe that a Picture repreſents a Saint, or a falſe God. He asks, whether thoſe that have moſt Reſemblance deſerve more Honour than thoſe of a more precious Matter. He ſays, that if the latter, 'tis then the Matter that they reſpect; and if the former, it ſeems an unjuſt thing to prefer them before thoſe that are more valuable. Laſtly, he confeſſes, that the Learned may indeed honour Images without any Abuſe, by referring the Honour not to what they are, but to what they ſignifie; but he believes that they can be nothing elſe but a Cauſe of Offence, and a ſtumbling Block to the ignorant, who reverence and adore nothing but what they ſee; from whence he concludes, 'tis better quite to aboliſh the Uſe of them. This ſhews, that the Diſpute between the Greeks and the French was not ſo much a Diſpute about Doctrine as Practice. In the 17*th*. Chapter he condemns an Expreſſion of Conſtantine's Biſhop of Cyprus, but it was badly tranſlated; for whereas that Biſhop had ſaid, that he honoured Images and adored the Trinity; he maketh him ſay, that he honoured Images with the Honour due to the Trinity: So 'tis an Error of Fact. In the following Chapters he reproves the Opinions of ſome Biſhops. In the 21*ſt*. he derides the inſtance of Polemon's Picture. The two next Chapters are againſt the Praiſes given to the Art of Painting. In the 24*th*. he pretends there's no Compariſon to be made between the Relicks of Saints and their Images. In the 25*th*. he ſays, that the Miracles done by Images are no Argument that they are to be adored, for then Thorn-Buſhes ſhould be adored, becauſe God ſpake to Moſes out of a burning Buſh; Fringes ſhould be adored, becauſe Jeſus Chriſt healed the Woman with the Bloody-flux, by the Fringe of his Garment; and Shadows too, becauſe St. Peter's Shadow wrought Miracles. In the 26*th*. he laughs at Theodoſius Biſhop of Myra, who had related his Archdeacon's Dreams, to authorize Image-Worſhip. In the 30*th*. Chapter he confutes ſeveral Proofs alledged by the Council, becauſe they were taken out of Apocryphal Hiſtories. In the 31*ſt*. he taxeth with Impiety and Folly, the Anſwer of that Abbot, who told a Monk, it was better to frequent Bawdy-Houſes, than not to adore the Images of Jeſus Chriſt and the Virgin.

2d. Nicene Council.

In the laſt Book he goes on to confute ſome Expreſſions of the Council, and of particular Men in the Council. He maintains no Wax Candles ought to be lighted, nor Incenſe to be burnt before Images, becauſe they are ſenſeleſs. He cannot endure, that the Council ſhould compare thoſe, who do not adore Images to Hereticks. He taketh it ill, that they ſhould thus abuſe their Predeceſſors, confeſſing nevertheleſs, that theſe laſt were to blame for burning and deſtroying Images. He rejects the Story of Chriſt's Image ſent to Agbarus, as a mere Fable. He makes no great reckoning of another Story of a Monk, who had ſet up a Lamp before an Image, which burnt ſeveral Days. He adds, that tho' thoſe Miracles were true, it would not follow from thence that Images were to be adored. Laſtly, having derided them for many of their Arguments, he maintains, That that Synod was to blame for aſſuming the Title of Univerſal; becauſe whatever is Univerſal ought to be conformable to the Tradition and Practice of all the Churches. 'Thus, ſays he, if it fall out, that the 'Biſhops of two or three Provinces meet together; 'and that according to the Authority of Tradition, 'they eſtabliſh ſome Doctrine, or make ſome Rule 'agreeable to the Doctrine and Diſcipline of the 'ancient Church; what they do is Catholick, and 'their Council may be called Univerſal; becauſe 'tho' it be not compoſed of the Biſhops of all the 'Parts of the World, what it does is agreeable to 'the Faith and Tradition of the whole Church; but 'contrariwiſe, if they go about to eſtabliſh ſome 'Novelty, what they do is not Catholick. In a 'Word, whatſoever is Eccleſiaſtical is Catholick, 'and whatſoever is Catholick is Univerſal, all that 'is Univerſal is not New. Thus the Synod, we 'ſpeak of, being contrary to the Sentiments of the 'Univerſal Church, we cannot own it for Uni-'verſal.

Theſe Books were brought to Rome and preſented to Pope Adrian, by Angilbert, Charles's Ambaſſador. The Pope, who maintain'd the Council, having received them, thought himſelf bound to anſwer them by a Writing directed to Charles the Great himſelf. Firſt of all he vindicates the Expreſſions of Taraſius and the other Greeks about the Holy Ghoſt, by ſome Paſſages of the Fathers, which have ſpoken after the ſame manner, ſuppoſing thoſe Greeks did not differ from the Roman Church about the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt. Then he defends the Paſſages of the Scripture, the Reaſons, Authorities and Hiſtories alledged by the Synod, and cenſured in the Caroline Books; but his Anſwers are but weak. He pretends, that St. Gregory taught in his Letter to Secundinus, that Images deſerved ſome Worſhip. He cites ſome Paſſages out of the Fathers upon almoſt every Article; but he maketh ſuch Applications of ſeveral of them, that very few would approve of, and he vindicates ſome Reaſonings, that ſome could hardly reliſh. But about the End, having reported all the Teſtimonies of St. Gregory, he expreſſeth himſelf about Image-Worſhip after a manner, which cannot be poſſibly condemned; for he ſays that Images are not reverenced, but ſo far forth as they raiſe up our Mind to God, and that whoſoever proſtrates himſelf before Chriſt's Image, 'tis God whom he adores; that likewiſe we ſhew our Love and Affection to the Saint by the Means of his Images. He adds, that the Nicene Synod, having eſtabliſhed this Doctrine, and rejected the falſe Synod which would have quite aboliſhed Images, he had received it as a Legitimate and Catholick Synod; that nevertheleſs he had not yet written an Anſwer to the Emperor, leſt he ſhould relapſe into the Error of his Predeceſſors; which he fear'd ſo much the more, becauſe writing to him, to exhort him to reſtore Images, he had alſo demanded of him the Reſtitution of the Dioceſes of the Church of Rome, and of the Patrimonies alſo belonging to it, but had received no Anſwer from him. Wherefore he ſays, that if Charles will give him Leave, in his Anſwer to the Greek Emperor, he will approve of what he hath done for Images; but at the ſame time he will maintain the Quarrel with him, about the Dioceſes and Patrimonies of the Church of Rome, and if he do not reſtore them, he will declare him an Heretick for it.

This Letter of Adrian did not alter the Sentiments, nor the Practice of Charles, nor of the Gallican Churches: For in the Synods of Francfort held in 794. where this Queſtion was again debated after they had done with the Opinion of Felix and Elipandus; they rejected the Opinion of the Greeks, and condemned all Manner of Adoration or Worſhip of Images. This is the ſecond Canon of that Synod.

In the Eaſt, tho' the Definition of the Nicene Council had reſtored Images in ſeveral Places, yet it was not equally obſerved every where, and Conſtantine himſelf abrogated it. Leo the 5*th*. his Succeſſor re-eſtabliſhed the Decree of the Council of Conſtantinople; ſo that the Eaſt was altogether divided in the Point of Images, Anno 820. Michael Balbus ſucceeding Leo, and being deſirous to ſettle Peace in the Church aſſembled a Council, in which they followed the Sentiments of the Gallican Church, for they took away the Images that were ſet up in dirty Corners; and they left thoſe, which were in high Places, where they might be ſeen, that the Picture might ſerve for a Book to inſtruct the Ignorant, upon Condition that they ſhould not adore them, and that they ſhould burn no Lamps nor Incenſe before them. Some of thoſe that were moſt zealous for Image Worſhip, came to Rome to complain of this Council; which forced Michael to ſend Deputies thither, whom he directed to Lewis the Meek, that he might help them with his Credit. This Emperor finding ſuch a fair Opportunity to procure Peace to the Church, ſent Freculphus and Adegarius to Rome, with the Deputies of the Greek Emperor, to treat of this Affair. But Lewis's Envoys not finding the Romans complying, deſired the Pope's Conſent, that their Maſter might diſcuſs the Matter with his Biſhops. Having obtained it, they came back again to France. They held at Paris, An. 824. an Aſſembly of the ableſt Biſhops of the Kingdom; and this Queſtion was ſearched to the Bottom. They read Adrian's firſt Letter, written upon this Subject to Conſtantine and Irene. They found that he was in the Right to condemn thoſe that broke down Images; but that he acted indiſcreetly, when he permitted them to be adored; becauſe they may be had, but may not be adored. They examined a-new the Nicene Synod held in purſuit of this Letter; and they thought that they found in theſe Acts, that it did not only eſtabliſh Image-Worſhip, but enjoyn'd them to be called Holy, and to believe ſome Holineſs to be derived from them. They cauſed what had been written by Charles the Great's Order againſt this Council to be read over again. They made no great Reckoning of Adrian's Anſwers, in which nothing was found conſiderable, beſides the Pope's Name, which they did bear. They complain'd, that this Abuſe was eſtabliſhed at Rome and in Italy. They commended the Emperor for oppoſing this pretended Superſtition, and for endeavouring to reſtore Peace to the Church, by avoiding the Extreams which both Sides had run into. They approved the prudent Carriage of the Deputies in demanding this Matter ſhould be debated in France. They judged, that for the better effecting of their Deſign, it was neceſſary to lay the Fault at the Greeks Door, to pacifie the Pope, and to commend his Zeal and Piety, yet ſo as to eſtabliſh the Truth by Places out of the Scripture and the Fathers, and to ſet it forth with Sincerity and Modeſty; that by this Means they might draw the Pope over and reclaim him; and if they could not effect that, they would ſtill have the Satisfaction to have ſpoken the Truth and done their Duty. Laſtly, they made a Collection of the Paſſages of the Fathers, divided into fifteen Chapters: The 1*ſt*. is againſt thoſe that pretend, that Images ought to be taken away out of the Churches, and to be defaced upon the Sacred Veſſels. The 2*d* contains ſome Teſtimonies of St. Gregory the Great about Images: Shewing the Uſe that may be made of them. The 3*d*. contains Teſtimonies of St. Auſtine againſt thoſe that would adore them, or that believe any Holineſs or Vertue to be in them. The 4*th*. contains ſeveral other Paſſages againſt the Worſhipping of Images. The 5*th*. contains ſome Paſſages, proving that Saints and their Relicks may be honoured, but not adored; from whence it is inferred, that much leſs may Incenſe be burnt and offered to them. The 6*th*. contains ſome Teſtimonies againſt them that maintain Image-Worſhip, by the Uſage of thoſe that introduce it. In the 7*th*. they pretend to ſhew from ſome Paſſages of the Fathers, that honouring of Images ought to be avoided, that we may give no Scandal to the Weak. In the 8*th*. and 9*th*. they bring ſome Explications of the Fathers, to ſhew that the Paſſage of Geneſis, where it is ſaid, that Jacob worſhipped * the Top of his Son Joſeph's Staff; and that of the Kings, where Nathan is ſaid to have worſhipped David, proves nothing for the worſhipping of Images. The 10*th*. Chapter contains a Teſtimony of St. Auſtine, concerning the Sacred Veſſels. The 11*th*. contains one about the Cherubims. The 12*th*. contains ſome to ſhew, that Adoration is due to God alone. The 13*th*. contains ſeveral of them upon the Croſs, to prove that a great Difference is to be made between that and Images. This Difference is confirmed in the 14*th*. Chapter, by the Uſage of the Church, which hath always worſhipped the Croſs, and uſed that Sign in Benedictions, Conſecrations, and Exorciſms. In the 15*th*. they adviſe the Deſtroyers of Images, not to take from thence an Occaſion to break them down, or to ſcorn them; and they put them in mind, that have them, not to adore them: And to eſtabliſh the Truth of theſe two Points, they cite ſeveral Paſſages of the Fathers. Laſtly, they drew up the Form of two Letters, one whereof is that which Lewis was to write to the Pope, to exhort him to procure the Peace of the Church, by correcting the Abuſes that ſtir up Tumults in the Eaſt; ſome being for adoring of Images, and others againſt the very tolerating of them. The 2*d*. is a Form of that which they will have the Pope to write to the Greek Emperors. It begins with a long Exhortation to ſubmit themſelves to the Roman Church, and to pay her Reverence; and then they adviſe the Emperors Emperors to restore Peace to the Church, by following the Opinion of the French, that is, by permitting Images to be had, but not to be honoured. Lastly, they alledge some of the most expres Passages of the Fathers, to establish that Usage.

Lewis the Meek sent this Deliberation, and these Acts to Pope Eugenius, by Jeremy, Archbishop of Sens, and Jonas, Bishop of Orleans, and desired him by his Letter, to confer with them, about the Ambassage which he was to send into Greece. But, to give the Pope no cause of Jealousie, he says, He did not send them with these Papers to impose Laws upon him, or to take upon himself to teach him, but meerly to give him an account of the Sentiments of the Gallican Church, and to contribute to the Peace of the Universal Church. He recommends them to him, and prays him to receive them favourably, and entreats him to endeavour the Re-union of the Greek Church, and to carry himself with great wariness in such a nice Affair as this is. He desireth that his Deputies may accompany those whom the Pope shall send into the East.

At the same time he gave the two Prelates, his Ambassadors, Instructions, wherein he charges them to shew to the Pope the Collection of the Passages made in the Assembly held at Paris, to examine the Businesses about Images, by his own Consent. He commands them to satisfie him about the Business of Images, to handle this Question gently and moderately, and to have a great care not to make him obstinate, by too openly resisting of him. At last, he warns them, that when that Business is ended, if yet the Peremptoriness of the Romans permits it, to ask the Pope, if he be not willing and desirous, that they should go into Greece with his Deputies: If he be willing, to send him word on't immediately, to the end, that at their return, they may find Amalarius and Halitgarius, and before their Departure, to agree about the Place where the Deputies shall take Ship.

It is very probable, that the Pope and the French did not agree about this Matter; but this did not hinder the King from sending Halitgarius, Bishop of Cambray, and Aufridus, Abbot of Nonantula, into Greece, to the Emperor Michael. What they did concerning Images, is not known; it is only said, that they were well entertained. Perhaps they perswaded Michael to permit Images to be had. But this Emperor, and his Son Theophilus, were set against the Ordinance of the Nicene Council. This last being dead in 842, and his Wife Theodora being left in Possession of the Government, she re-established the Worship of Images, and the Authority of the Nicene Council. But the French and the Germans persisted long in their Usage, and it was very late e're they owned that Council, in the Room of which, they put that of Francfort, as it appears by the Testimonies of several French Authors and Historiographers.

Now to re-capitulate in a few Words, what we could observe upon the Point of Images, from the beginning of the Church. It must be confessed, that in the three first Centuries, yea, and in the beginning of the Fourth, they were very scarce among Christians. Towards the end of the Fourth Century, they begun, especially in the East, to make Pictures and Images, and they grew very common in the Fifth: they represented in them the Conflicts of Martyrs, and Sacred Histories, to instruct those who could not read, and to stir them up to imitate the Constancy, and the other Virtues of those represented in these Pictures. Those of the Simpler and Weaker Sort, being moved with these Representations, by seeing the Saints Pictures thus drawn, could not forbear, expressing by outward Signs, the Esteem, Respect and Veneration they had for those represented therein. Thus was Image-Worship established, and was moreover fortified by the Miracles ascribed to them.

In the West, some Bishops at first would not suffer any Images, but the greater part agreed, that they might be of some Use, and only hindred them from being honoured. But the Worshipping of Images being established in the East, was also received at Rome, whilst in France, Germany, and England, all outward Worshipping of them was unknown. This Difference did not occasion any Contest or Division between the Churches, when on a sudden a furious Storm rose in the East against Images, which which was raised by the Emperor Leo, the Isaurian: He resolved to abolish them, and had Power enough to draw a great number of Bishops into his Opinion, and to get the Abolition of them to be ordered in a Council, and to be execu't'd in the East. The Popes did always vigorously withstand that Decree, and maintained both the Use and the outward Worship of Images. The face of things was also soon changed in the East, and maugre the Opposition of several, the Empress Irene caused it to be decided in the Nicene Council, that Images might be had and honoured, and re-established the Use of them. This Decision had different Fortunes in the East, according to the Will and Humour of Princes, but at last it carried it. In the West, the Italians received it; but the French, Germans, and English rejected it; and without any regard to all the Contests in the East, in which they had no hand, they continued in their ancient Usage, equally rejecting the Opinion of those that were for abolishing the Images, and of those that were for paying Worship to them. They worshipped the Cross, the Sacred Vessels, the Gospels, the Relicks, but would not worship Images. They did what they could, that the West and the East might embrace their Discipline; yet without separating from the Communion of any Church. They continued long in this Practice, but at last they yielded, and the outward Worship of Images was brought in amongst them, as among the other People.

2d. Nicene Council.

Some Reflections may be made upon these different Epocha's, which will raise our Admiration of God's Conduct towards his Church in all these Changes. There's no doubt, but when Paganism was the prevailing Religion, it would have been dangerous for Christians to have Images or Statues, because they might have given occasion of Idolatry to them, who were newly recovered from it, and they might have given the Pagans reason to object to Christians, that they had, and worshipped Idols as they did: therefore it was fitting there should be no Images in those first Ages, especially in Churches, and that there should be no Worship paid them. Afterwards, People being better taught, more learned, and farther off from Idolatry, there was not so much Danger to propose them to them, and the Church being then more splendid in her Ceremonies, they served as Ornaments to Temples, and had their Use, because they set forth before their Eyes, the Actions of the Martyrs. There can be no doubt, but Pictures do not only bring to mind those we love, but moreover, representing their Actions lively, they make some Impression, and stir up Admiration and Esteem for them, and a Desire of imitating them. Therefore, there being no more danger of Idolatry, Why should not Christians have Images? Nevertheless, they that knew their People to be prone to Idolatry still, and were afraid lest Images should draw them back to it, they might take them away; and this justifies the Proceeding of St. Epiphanius, Serenus, and of some other Bishops. But to go about to break them, to burn them, to reduce them to Ashes, and to look upon those that have them as Idolaters; wholly to condemn Painters, and the Art of Painting, as the Bishops of the Council of Constantinople have done; 'tis a piece of intolerable Imprudence and Folly. As to the Worship that was paid them, 'tis certain it cannot be referred to the Images, and that they have no Veneration for the Matter they are made of, nor for their Shape and Form; but only they give some outward Signs before them of the Veneration they have for what's represented by them. This Worship being thus explained, as it hath been, by moſt of the Defenders of Images, cannot be taxed nor accuſed of Idolatry, as even thoſe who do not uſe them, do not deny. But then it cannot be ſaid to be abſolutely neceſſary; and thoſe, who for ſome private Reaſons, do not think themſelves bound, for inſtance, to proſtrate themſelves before Images, to bow to them, to kiſs them, to embrace them, to expreſs their Reverence for that they repreſent; thoſe I ſay, are not to be condemned as Hereticks, who will not do ſo, for ſome particular Reaſons, either becauſe the Practice of their Church is otherwiſe, or becauſe they fear thoſe outward Duties ſhould be miſtaken for Adorations; or laſtly, becauſe they do not believe the Worſhip of Images to be ſufficiently warranted, ſeeing, to prove it, they have alledged a great number of falſe Pieces, or of impertinent Paſſages that prove nothing.

Moreover, the Proceeding of thoſe Perſons could not be blamed, who, to ſettle Peace in the Church, and to re-unite two oppoſite Parties, of which, the one were for breaking down all Images, and the other for honouring of them, endeavoured to make their own Uſage to be received every where, and wrote to the Pope reſpectfully about it. This was the Temper of our French People, in the time of the Nicene Council, and after; thus they carried themſelves: therefore they cannot be blamed. But then, the Worſhip paid to Images being well explained and underſtood by all, there being no more fear of Idolatry, the whole Church being agreed in the Acknowledging of it: it would be a piece of Temerity in a private Man, or ſome private Churches, to refuſe to comply with this Uſage, and condemn thoſe that honour them. (l) The Reformed Churches therefore are to blame, to go about to aboliſh the Worſhip and Uſe of Images. Only it were to be wiſhed, 1. That great Care ſhould be taken to inſtruct the People well in the Nature of the Worſhip paid to Images, and to teach the Simple that it is not paid to the Images properly, but to Jeſus Chriſt, and to the Saints repreſented by them; and that the Image is only the Occaſion of it, in as much as before it, they give outward Signs of the Worſhip rendered to the Object. 2. That the Abuſes and Exceſſes committed in this Worſhip ſhould be avoided, ſuch as thoſe, of kindling a greater Number of Tapers before the Images than before the Holy Sacrament, of Dreſſing and adorning them with ſo much Pomp, of Kneeling before them, ſooner than before the Altar, where Chriſt's Body is kept, of believing ſome Vertue to be in one Image, which is not in another, &c. 3. Perhaps it were fitting, to ſuffer no Image of the Trinity, nor of the Deity, all the moſt zealous Defenders of Images having condemned theſe, and the Council of Trent having ſpoken but of the Images of Chriſt, and of the Saints. Beſides, they ſhould be more careful to remove prophane Images, and all thoſe that have ſomething undecent and fabulous in them, from Churches.

2d. Nicene Council.

(l) The Reformed Churches are to blame for aboliſhing the Uſe and Worſhip of Images.] All the Reformed Churches are not ſo great Enemies to the Images of Chriſt or his Saints; but as the Lutherans do ſtill allow them in their Churches for Ornament, or as Helps of Memory, without giving them any Worſhip: So, were it ſafe, and not offenſive to many good Men, could many other Churches alſo. But we have ſo great Experience of the People's Proneneſs to Idolatry, and are ſo unſatisfied with the Bowing down to them with a Relative Veneration, that we think it better to want the Hiſtorical, than run the Hazzard of falling into the Idolatrous Uſe of them. And though we meet with very few of the Romiſh Communion, that are ſo moderate as our Hiſtorian, not to brand us with the odious and ignominious Name of Hereticks; yet we had rather, with St. Paul, worſhip God after the way that they call Hereſie, than after that which Scripture calls Idolatry.

The Council of Northumberland.

Of Northumberland.

POpe Adrian having ſent two Legates into England, Gregory of Oſtia, and Theophylactus, Biſhop of Todi, they were very well entertained by the Kings, and the Biſhops of the Country, and held a Council in Northumberland (An. 787.) in which they made the following Canons to be received.

1*ſt*. That the Faith of the Nicene Council ſhould be maintained, even to the laying down of their Lives in the Defence of it, if need were.

2*d*. That Baptiſm ſhould be adminiſtred only according to the Order, and at the time appointed by the Canons, except in Caſe of Neceſſity; that all Perſons ſhould be obliged to learn the Creed and the Lord's Prayer; that the Sureties ſhould be put in mind of the Obligation they had taken upon themſelves, to take care that thoſe whom they undertake for at the Font, be inſtructed in the Creed and the Lord's Prayer.

3*d*. That every year two Councils ſhould be held; that the Biſhops ſhould viſit their Dioceſes, and watch carefully over their Flock.

4*th*. That they ſhould take care to ſee their Clerks live Canonically, and their Monks regularly; that they wear different Garments; that Clerks be clad modeſtly and plain, and that of this, the Biſhops, Abbots and Abbeſſes ought to be Examples to ſuch as are under their Care.

5*th*. That after the Death of an Abbot or an Abbeſs, they ſhould chooſe others in their Room, with the Biſhop's Advice, and that they ought to be choſen out of the Monaſtery, if there were any fit for that Place; if not, that they are to be taken out of another Monaſtery.

6*th*. That Biſhops ſhall ordain none Presbyters or Deacons, but Men of an exemplary Life, and ſuch as are able to diſcharge their Functions well; that they that are ordained, ſhall remain in the Title and Degree, to which they are deſtined; and that no Clerk of another Church ſhall be received without Cauſe, and without Letters from his Biſhop.

Of Northumberland.

7*th*. That in all Churches, Divine Service ſhall be performed at the uſual time, and with Reverence.

8*th*. That the old Privileges granted to Churches ſhall be preſerved; but if any of them be found made againſt the Canonical Conſtitutions, at the Suit and Requeſt of wicked Men, they ſhall be abrogated.

9*th*. That Clerks ſhall not eat by themſelves, and in private.

10. That none ſhall come near the Altar, but reverently, and in decent Clothing, that the Oblations of the People ſhall be a whole Loaf of Bread, and not a bare Cruſt; that no Chalice or Patin ſhall be made of an Ox-horn, and that Biſhops ſhall not undertake to judge in Secular Affairs.

In the 11*th*. Kings are exhorted to perform their Duty, and to govern like Chriſtians.

The 12*th*. recommends Obedience due to Kings, and deteſts them that attempt any thing againſt their Life.

The 13*th*. exhorts the Grandees and the Rich to do Juſtice.

In the 14th. Fraud, Violence and Exactions are forbidden, and Concord, Peace, Union and Charity are recommended.

The 15*th*. prohibits illegitimate Marriages upon Pain of Anathema.

The

Of Northumberland.

The 16*th.* deprives Baſtards of the Right of Succeſſion.

The 17*th.* enjoyns paying of Tythes, and forbids Uſury.

The 18*th.* ordains that Chriſtians ſhall perform their Vows.

The 19*th.* prohibits certain Cuſtoms, which ſeemed to them ſome Remainders of Heatheniſm, ſuch, as to cut and ſlaſh themſelves, to decide Controverſies by Lot, to eat Horſe-fleſh, &c.

The 20*th.* enjoyns Confeſſing of Sins, and Receiving the Sacrament, and declares, that thoſe ſhall not be pray'd for, who die without Confeſſion.

Of Northumberland.

Theſe Articles were propoſed in Northumberland by Adrian's Legates, in the Preſence of Oſred II. King of Northumberland, of the Archbiſhop of York, the Biſhops, the Abbots and Lords, who received them, and promiſed to keep them, and ſubſcribed them. From thence they were carried to Offa, King of the Mercians, and read in his Preſence, in an Aſſembly, at which the Archbiſhop of Canterbury was preſent, with the Biſhops, Abbots, and great Lords, who alſo received and ſubſcribed them.

† The Council of Aquileia.

† Concilium Forojulienſe in Longo.

Of Aquileia.

THIS Council was held by Paulinus Biſhop of Aquileia, An. 791. It begins with a long Explication of the Doctrine of the Trinity, and the Creed, in which it does chiefly eſtabliſh theſe two Doctrines: That the Holy Ghoſt proceeds from the Father, and the Son; and, That Jeſus Chriſt cannot be called an Adoptive Son. After this Expoſition of Faith come 14 Canons.

The firſt is againſt Simony.

The 2*d.* upon that excellent degree of Virtue which is neceſſary for Paſtors, [above their People.]

The 3*d.* againſt Drunkenneſs.

The 4*th.* againſt Womens cohabiting with Clergymen.

The 5*th.* forbids Clerks to meddle in Secular Affairs.

The 6*th.* forbids them Secular Employments and Divertiſements, ſuch as Hunting, Muſick, Dances, &c.

The 7*th.* forbids the Suffragan Biſhops of Aquileia to condemn a Presbyter, an Abbot, or a Deacon, without conſulting the Metropolitan.

The 8*th.* prohibits unlawful Marriages between Kindred, and clandeſtine Marriages too. It ordains, that no Marriage ſhall be contracted but between Parties, which ſhall be known not to be a-kin; that there ſhall be an interval between Betrothing and Marriage; that the preſence of the Prieſt ſhall be requiſite; that Kindred, which ſhall be found to have married within the Degrees forbidden, ſhall be ſeparated and put to Penance; that, if it be poſſible, they ſhall remain unmarried; but yet if they will have Children, or if they cannot keep their Virginity, they ſhall be permitted to marry others, and their Children ſhall be declared Legitimate.

The 9*th.* forbids to contract Marriage before 14 years of Age.

The 10*th.* forbids a Man or Woman, which have been divorced for Adultery, to marry again. It affirms, that Jeſus Chriſt in this caſe permitted a Man only to put away his Wife, but not to marry another, and confirms this Opinion by the Authority of St. Jerome. The common Practice was then contrary to this Law.

Of Aquileia.

The 11*th.* declareth, that Women, of what condition ſoever, whether Virgins or Widows, which have promiſed to live Single, and have taken the Habit as a token of their Promiſe though they have not received the Conſecration from the Biſhop, ſhall inviolably keep their Vow; and if they do ſecretly marry, or ſuffer themſelves to be defiled, they ſhall be puniſhed according to the rigor of the Civil Laws; and beſides this, they ſhall be put aſunder, and do Penance all their Life-time, unleſs their Biſhop, conſidering the greatneſs of their Repentance, ſhew them ſome favour; but at the point of Death they ſhall not be deprived of the Viaticum. Nevertheleſs none of them is permitted to take the Religious Habit, without her Biſhop's Advice.

The 12*th.* forbids Men to enter, without great need, into the Monaſteries of Virgins. It extends this Prohibition to all Eccleſiaſtical Perſons under any pretence whatſoever, without permiſſion from the Biſhop; nay, it forbids the Biſhop himſelf to go into them, unleſs in the company of his Presbyters and Clerks. It ordains, That whether he goes himſelf, or ſends any other, to preach, and inſtruct Religious Women, the Perſon that does do it ſhall have Witneſſes of his Carriage, that he may not be evil ſpoken of. It forbids Abbeſſes and Nuns to leave their Convents to go to Rome, or on any other Pilgrimages.

The 13*th.* enjoyns the keeping of Sunday, beginning from the Hour of the Veſpers of the Saturday; and for the due Solemnization of it, it ordains, That they ſhall firſt of all abſtain from Sin, and every Servile Work; that they ſhall wholly give themſelves to Prayer, and ſhall be preſent at all the Divine Service. It ordains alſo, that the other Feſtivities ſhall be kept; and exhorts Presbyters to give good Examples to the People.

The 14*th.* enjoyns the paying of Tythes.

The Council of Ratisbone.

Of Ratisbone

FELIX Biſhop of Urgel in Catalonia, being conſulted by Elipandus Biſhop of Toledo, whether Jeſus Chriſt, as Man, was an Adoptive or Natural Son? Anſwered him, That in this reſpect he was to be looked upon as an Adoptive Son. He maintained this Opinion by his Writings, and went about to ſpread it, not only in Spain, but alſo in France and Germany. But he found theſe Biſhops oppoſite to his Error; for being met together at Ratisbone, (an. 792.) they condemned it with this Author, who was ſent to Rome to Adrian, who confirmed the Sentence of this Synod, and made Felix to recant. Alcuin, and Jonas Biſhop of Orleans, ſpeak of this Council. This Letter was confuted and condemned, Firſt, by Pope Adrian; Secondly, by an Italian Council; and Laſtly, by the Council of Francfort, who wrote to Elipandus, and the other Biſhops of Spain, Letters, in which they prove, both from the Scripture and the Fathers, that Jeſus Chriſt ought to be called the Natural Son of God, and cannot be called an Adoptive Son, there being no Diviſion nor Separation of the two Natures. Charles the Great wrote alſo to thoſe Biſhops a Let-

This Council of Francfort was aſſembled by the Order of Charles the Great, (An. 794.) in the Beginning of Summer. It was compoſed of 300. Biſhops, or thereabouts, of France, Italy, and Germany. The Pope's Legates were at it, and it hath been long looked upon in France as an Univerſal Council. And indeed if National Councils in the Eaſt, and in Africa, have been ſtyled Univerſal; why ſhould we not give the ſame Title to a Council made up of the Biſhops of the principal Kingdoms of the Weſt? In this Council, the matter of Images was debated, and they decided the Queſtion ſtarted by Felix and Elipandus, about the Title of Adoptive Son, which they gave to Jeſus Chriſt. They made 56 Canons. Council of Francfort.

THE Affair of Felix of Urgel, which had already been brought to Rome under Adrian, was examined there anew under Pope Leo the Third, in a Council of 57. Biſhops, held in 799. of which Felix makes mention in his laſt Confeſſion of Faith; and of which, ſome Fragments are extant. Of Rome.

Leo the Third relates in the firſt Action, how that Hereſie, which was condemned by his Predeceſſor Adrian, was renewed, and began to ſpread.

In the 2*d*. he deſcribes, how Felix, having been condemned at Ratisbone, had after that retracted his Error at Rome, and made a ſolemn Promiſe upon St. Peter's Tomb, 'That he would no more call Jeſus 'Chriſt the Adoptive Son of God, but did believe 'and call him his own proper Son.' He adds, that ſince that time he had relapſed into his Error, and would not ſubmit himſelf to the Judgment of the Council of Francfort, aſſembled by the Order of King Charles, which had condemned his Error, and had threatned with Anathema thoſe that maintain'd it, if they perſiſted in it. That not yielding to this Judgment in the leaſt, he had written againſt Albinus a Book full of Blaſphemies and Errors, more horrid than thoſe he had delivered heretofore. Of Rome.

In the 3*d*. Action, the Pope repreſenteth it as a thing neceſſary, that thoſe that are in an Error be exhorted again to endeavour to reclaim them; and he anathematizes Felix of Urgel, if he will not abandon the Heretical Doctrine which he teaches, viz. That Jeſus Chriſt is the adopted Son of God.

The Council of Aix-la-Chapelle againſt Felix.

IN the ſame year Charles the Great invited Felix of Urgel to Aix-la-Chapelle, promiſing him, that he ſhould have the Liberty to propound to the Biſhops, which he would call thither, all the Reaſons and Allegations that he could produce to defend his own Sentiment, and that all the Proceedings in the Determination of this Queſtion ſhould be managed with full Liberty: Which was done by the Acknowledgment of Felix himſelf in a Confeſſion of Faith; for after he had alledged the Paſſages he had, Alcuin anſwered them, and did ſo clearly confute his Opinion by formal Paſſages of St. Cyril, St. Gregory, St. Leo, and other Fathers, and by the Authority of the Synod held at Rome a little before, that Felix did voluntarily abandon his Opinion, to embrace the Doctrine of the Church, and made an Orthodox Confeſſion of Faith: Which was followed by thoſe of his Adherents that were there with him. Of Aix-la-Chapelle. Of Aix-la-Chapelle.

AN HISTORY OF THE CONTROVERSIES And Other Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, Tranſacted in the CHURCH In the Ninth Age.

CHAP. I.

Containing an Account of what paſſed in the Eaſtern and Weſtern Churches at the Beginning of the Ninth Century about the Uſe and Worſhip of Images.

About the Uſe and Worſhip of Images.

IN the beginning of the Ninth Century the Greek or Eaſtern Church enjoyed Peace, and the Worſhip of Images was received by the greateſt part of the Members of it. The Emperor Nicephorus had choſen a Perſon of his own Name Patriarch of Conſtantinople in the year 806, who being of the ſame Judgment with the Emperor in the Uſe of Images, joyned with him in maintaining and upholding their Worſhip. Some little Differences there were between them, and Theodorus Studita about the Reſtoration of Joſeph, the Steward of the Church of Conſtantinople, who had been depoſed by the Patriarch Taraſius, Nicephorus's Predeceſſor, but they were ſoon buried by the Death of the Emperor Nicephorus, which happened in the year 811; for Michael Curopalates, his Son-in-law and Succeſſor, made up the Breach between Theodorus, Joſeph Archbiſhop of Theſſalonica, and Nicephorus. The Peace of the Church being thus reſtored again, the Emperor and Nicephorus unanimouſly uſed their utmoſt Endeavours to promote Image-worſhip, and root out ſome Reliques of the Manichees Hereſie, yet remaining in the Eaſt. But the State of Affairs was much changed by the Death of Michael, whom Leo Armeniacus having ſlain, poſſeſſed himſelf of his Throne. This Emperor was a Favourer of the * Iconoclaſts, who having been much kept under, and ſcarce daring to appear after the Death of Conſtantinus Copronymus, made uſe of their Intereſt with him, and procured the Baniſhment of their moſt inveterate Enemies, Nicephorus, Theodorus Studita, Nicetas, and ſeveral others, who were zealous Patrons of Image-worſhip. After the Death of Leo, Michael, ſirnamed Balbus, who ſucceeded him in 820. mitigated the Severity uſed againſt the Patrons of Images in the laſt Reign, and ſuffered ſeveral of them to return from their Exile, ſeeking out all fit means to bring the Iconoclaſts and them to an Agreement, for which end he ſummoned both Parties to a Council. But the Image-worſhippers refuſed to come to any Conference with their Adverſaries, and boldly required him to reſtore the Biſhops of their Judgment to their Sees again, and to depoſe the Iconoclaſts in poſſeſſion of them: Michael hearing this inſolent Demand was very angry, and immediately declared, that he would have all Images removed out of the City of Conſtantinople, which he had hitherto permitted, but his Reſolution dyed with his Paſſion, and he left all Men at Liberty to worſhip Images, or not, as their Opinion was; yet he put out a Decree forbidding ſeveral Abuſes then commonly practiſed in the Adoration of Images, as to remove Croſſes out of the Churches, and put Images in their places, to adore the Images themſelves, to adorn the Statues with Cloaths, to accept them as Godfathers and Godmothers to their Children in the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm, to cut off the Hair of thoſe that profeſſed a Monaſtick Life over them, to mingle their Colours with the Elements and deliver them to the Communicants, to put the Body of Jeſus Chriſt between their Arms, and celebrate the Holy Myſteries in their Preſence in their Houſes. And that this Edict might take the better Effect, he commanded by the ſame, that the Images which ſtood in low Places ſhould be removed, and thoſe that ſtood more high ſhould be permitted to ſtand, and that they might be only of an hiſtorical Uſe, and not be adored by the more weak and ignorant, he ordered, that no Tapers ſhould be burnt, nor Incenſe offered in honour to them. Michael having thus publiſhed this Decree, was very deſirous to have it approved by the Weſtern Church, and for that end reſolved to ſend his Ambaſſadors to Rome with rich Preſents; and that he might be the better received by the Pope, he made his Application to Lewis, ſirnamed Benignus, by them deſiring him to ſecond his Petition, and aſſiſt him with his Intereſt. This Emperor thinking this a fit Opportunity of ſettling the Peace of the Church, ſent two Ambaſſadors, Treaſphus and Adegarius to Rome with the Deputies of the Greek Emperor, to treat of this Affair. But the Romans could not be brought to Compliance, no not by the Miniſters of Lewis, whereupon they requeſted, and obtained leave of the Pope, that their Maſter might have this Queſtion debated among his Biſhops. With this Grant they returned into France to Lewis, who ſoon after in 824. ſummoned a Council of the moſt learned and judicious Biſhops of his Realm, by whom this Queſtion was throughly can-vaſſed and examined. They firſt read Pope Adrian's Letter to Conſtantine and Irene upon this Subject, in which they found, that he did juſtly condemn thoſe who demoliſhed and defaced the Images, but thought that he had given too much Encouragement to the Adoration of them. Then they re-examined what the Synod of Nice had done by means of that Letter, and found, that in the Acts of their Council, they had not only eſtabliſhed the Worſhip of Images, but had commanded them to be called Holy, by which they ſeemed, to them, to attribute ſome Holineſs to them. They alſo read over the Book which Charles the Great had cauſed to be written againſt this Council, to which tho' Pope Adrian had given an Anſwer, yet they ſaw ſo little of Solidity in it, that they looked upon nothing in it worthy of their notice, but the Name it bore. They complain of the Rigor and inflexible Humour of the Church-men in Rome and Italy, and commend the Moderation of the Emperor in avoiding the Heats of both Parties, and labouring ſo earneſtly for the Peace of the Church. They commend the Prudence of the Ambaſſadors, who had obtained that that Queſtion might be debated in France. They judged, there was no other way to make their deſign ſucceſsful, but to make uſe of the Imperial Authority in ſettling what they ſhould upon the moſt impartial Examination find to be true by plain Texts of Holy Scripture, and the Judgment of the Fathers, which they would do modeſtly and ſincerely.

In the laſt place, they made a large Collection of Paſſages of the Fathers, which they divided into 15 Chapters. The firſt was againſt thoſe that held, that Images ought to be wholly removed out of Churches, and Pictures blotted out which were engraven on the Holy Veſſels of Miniſtration. The 2*d*. contains ſeveral Authorities out of St. Gregory the Great, ſhewing what profitable uſe may be made of Images. The 3*d*. is ſeveral Teſtimonies of St. Auſtine againſt thoſe that worſhipped Images, and believed that they had any Holineſs or Vertue in them. The 4*th*. contains ſeveral other Quotations againſt the Worſhip of Images. The 5*th*. proves by ſeveral Authorities that Saints and their Relicks may have ſome Honour given 'em, but not be adored, from whence they infer, that it is not lawful to burn Incenſe to Images. The 6*th*. contains ſome Teſtimonies againſt them that defend the Worſhip of Images by the common uſage of them, which hath been lately introduced. In the 7*th*. they undertake to prove by ſeveral Paſſages of the Fathers, that even any Honour ought to be denied to Images, when it may give an offence to the weak. In the 8*th*. and 9*th*. they produce ſome Explications of the Fathers, to prove that the Text in Geneſis, where 'tis ſaid, that Jacob worſhipped the top of his Son Joſeph's ſtaff; and another in the Kings, where 'tis ſaid, that Nathan worſhipped David, do prove nothing for the Worſhip of Images. The 10*th*. contains a Teſtimony of St. Auſtine concerning the Holy Veſſels. The 11*th*. contains one touching the Cherubims. The 12*th*. contains ſome, which evince that Adoration is due to God only. The 13*th*. contains ſeveral about the Croſs, which ſhew that a great difference is to be obſerved between that and Images, which is confirmed in the 14*th*. by the practice of the Church, which hath always given ſome Reſpect and Reverence to the Croſs, by making uſe of that Sign in Benedictions, Conſecrations, and Exorciſms. In the 15*th*. they exhort the Iconoclaſts, who were for deſtroying all Images, not to take occaſion from the former proofs to deface, beat down, or deride Images, ſince there is no Worſhip given, or intended to them; and to confirm the truth of theſe two Points, they recite ſeveral Paſſages of the Fathers. Laſt of all, they compoſe a Copy of two Letters, the one to be ſent in the Name of the Emperor Lewis to the Pope, to exhort him to further the Peace of the Church, by removing thoſe abuſes which had raiſed ſo many troubles in the Eaſt. In it, ſome were for intimating that he worſhipped Images, but others would not hear of it. The other was ſuch a Form as they wiſhed, that the Pope would write to the Greek Emperors. It begins with a long Exhortation to them, to ſubmit to the Church of Rome, and pay all due reſpect to it; Then it adviſes the Emperors to reſtore the Peace of the Church, by permitting Images to be uſed, but not worſhipped. And laſtly, produces ſome moſt plain and remarkable Paſſages of the Fathers, to confirm and eſtabliſh that uſage of them, and none elſe, as lawful.

Lewis the King ſent this Conſultation, and theſe Acts, to Pope Eugenius, by Jeremiah Archbiſhop of Sens, and Jonas Biſhop of Orleans, and deſired him in his Letter to conſer with them about the Embaſſy, which he was to ſend into Greece. And that he might not give the Pope the leaſt offence, which might ſerve for a pretence to fly off from this deſign, he ſays, that he did not ſend thoſe Papers to him, to impoſe Laws upon him, or direct him, as a Maſter, but barely to repreſent to him the Judgment of the Church of France, and contribute all he could to the Peace of the Church Univerſal. He recommends them to him, prays him to accept them favourably, and beſeeches him to uſe his utmoſt endeavours to re-unite the Greek Church, and to act with a great deal of Prudence and Caution in ſo difficult and nice a Point as this is. He deſires alſo, that his Ambaſſadors might go along with the Pope's into the Eaſt.

About the Uſe and Worſhip of Images.

At the ſame time he gave the Biſhops, whom he ſent Ambaſſadors to the Pope ſome private Inſtructions, in which he charges them to ſhew the Pope the Collections of Authorities made by the Council held at Paris, to examine the buſineſs of Images according to the permiſſion he had given them. He commands them to manifeſt his deſign to the Pope about Images, to treat of that Queſtion with all Candor and Moderation, and to be very careful that they did not provoke him by oppoſing him too plainly. Laſtly, He orders them that if they could not compleat the buſineſs, when they had done all they could, they ſhould ask him whether they might not go with his Ambaſſadors into Greece, to which if he conſented, they ſhould immediately ſend him word, that at their return they might find Amalarius and Halitgarius, who before they went ſhould meet them at the place where they were to embark.

What the Reſolution of the Pope was in this Affair is not known, but Lewis the Kind did ſend Halitgarius Biſhop of Cambray, and Auſridus Abbot of Nonantula, to the Emperor Michael, who received them kindly. Nevertheleſs, it doth not appear that their Negotiation had any good effect, for things remained almoſt in the ſame ſtate in Greece as long as Michael Balbus lived, and after his Death his Son Theophilus uſed great ſeverity againſt the Image-Worſhippers. But the Empreſs Theodora, the Wife of Theophilus, becoming Miſtreſs of the Empire [in the Minority of her Son Michael] after the Death of her Husband, which happened in 842. called a Council at Conſtantinople, in which the Worſhip of Images was again reſtored, the Iconoclaſts condemned, and Methodius made Patriarch of Conſtantinople in the Room of John, who was of the Party of the Iconoclaſts. And thus the Controverſie of Image-Worſhip was ended in the Eaſt.

Cl. Clemens an Enemy to Images.

In the Weſt, Claudius Clemens, a Spaniſh Prieſt, and Scholar of Felix Orgelitanus, and afterwards Biſhop of Turin, imitating the Conduct of Serenus Biſhop of Marſeilles, took up a Reſolution not only to give no Honour to Images himſelf, but to remove them out of all the Churches of his Dioceſs, not ſparing ſo much as the Croſs it ſelf. Theodemirus, [a Benedictine] Abbot, much diſliked the Actions of this Biſhop, being perſuaded that Images, as St. Gregory taught him, were to be retain'd in Churches without giving them any Adoration. Whereupon he wrote a Letter to him, exhorting him to change his Opinion and Management. Claudius was ſo far from following his Advice, that he wrote a Defence of his Proceedings, wherein at large he confutes what he had ſaid, and diſproves the Uſe of Images he contended for. We have nothing remaining of this Letter, but what Jonas Biſhop of Orleans, and Dungalus the Monk, have preſerved in their Confutations of it, by which it appears, that it was written with much Briſkneſs and Cloſeneſs, full of Ingenuity and Subtlety. [Melchior Goldaſtus, in the end of his Collection de Cultu Imaginum, hath put all the Pieces of this Letter together, and in a ſmall Treatiſe put them forth.]

Jonas Biſhop of Orleans's Judgment of Images.

This Writing of Claudius Biſhop of Turin, being brought to the Court of Lewis the Kind, this Prince commanded the moſt learned Men, which he had about him, to examine it, who found great fault with it, and made a Collection of the moſt obſervable Aſſertions, which the Emperor ſent to Jonas Biſhop of Orleans to confute, as having ſeveral Errors and Falſities in them. Jonas began that Work, but Claudius dying before he had finiſhed it, he laid it aſide, believing that his Error would be buried with him. But Jonas hearing afterwards, that he had left ſome Writings behind him, wherein he revived the Error of Arrius, and that his Opinion did begin to ſpread in his Country, he thought himſelf obliged to finiſh that Work. He divided it into three Parts: In the firſt, he maintains the Uſe of Images, the Invocation, Interceſſion and Worſhip of Saints, and the Veneration that is due to their Relicks. He confeſſes, that the French did not worſhip Images, reproved the Greeks, whom they ſuppoſed to adore them, and aſſerts, that it is abſurd to repreſent the Divine Nature under Corporeal Figures. In the ſecond, he maintains not only the Uſe, but Veneration of the Croſs. In the laſt, he defends the Pilgrimages which were made to Rome out of Devotion, and anſwers, in the Name of Theodemirus, to that which Claudius of Turin had objected, viz. If that were a Piece of Penance to go to Rome, why had he received, and did retain in his Monaſtery 140. Monks, who entred thither only to do Penance? He anſwered, I ſay, that there were ſeveral Ways of doing Penance, and many different States. Men may either go into a Monaſtery, or go to Rome, with a Deſign of doing Penance; but thoſe that have once taken upon them a Monaſtick Life, ought to obſerve the Rule, and live according to the Order of St. Benedict, keeping continually in their Monaſtery. In theſe Books, he ſets down the very Words that had been taken out of the Letter of Claudius of Turin, and after he anſwers them, and confirms his Anſwers with the moſt ſolid Proofs he could find, as the Teſtimonies of St. Jerome, St. Auſtine, St. Gregory, the Examples of the Saints, Dungal's Treatise of Images.

Not long after the Deacon Dungal [a Monk of St. Dennis at Paris] wrote another Treatise against Claudius of Turin's Book, and dedicated it to the Emperor Lewis and Lotharius. In it he opposeth three Points, which that Bishop had delivered in his Treatise, That we ought to have no Images; that we ought not to worship the Cross; and that 'tis of no Advantage to visit the Churches where the Bodies of the Saints are laid, or honour their Relicks. He alledges a great number of Quotations of the Fathers, both Greek and Latin, as also of the Christian Poets, as St. Paulinus and Tradentius, to confute these Errors; and in the Conclusion demands, how a Bishop, who hates the Cross of our Lord, can baptize, consecrate the Chrism, confirm, bless or consecrate any thing, or celebrate the Communion, since none of these can be done without making the Sign of the Cross? And how he can celebrate Divine Service without invoking the Saints, and honouring their Relicks? In this Treatise of Dungal's there is little of his own, being nothing but a Collection of Passages out of Ecclesiastical Writers; what is his, is written in an harsh and unpleasant Style. ['Tis extant in Biblioth. Patrum, Tom. 14. p. 196.]

The Opinion of Agobardus about Images.

Agobardus, Archbishop of Lyons, seems not so great a Favourer of Images, for tho' indeed, at first, he seemed to oppose the Adoration of them only, against which he alledges several places out of the Fathers; yet afterwards he maintains, That we ought not to make use of these visible Signs to represent Things Spiritual by, nor give them a relative Worship in Respect to the Saints represented by them. He affirms, That in the ancient Church, the Images of Jesus Christ, and of the Apostles, were preserved rather for the Love they bore to them, and to put them in mind of them, than out of Religion, or to adore them. He is of Opinion, that it were fit upon this Occasion, wholly to suppress them, as being the Causes of much Superstition; in which he differs from the Judgment of the Church of France. [These Things he chiefly asserts in his Book de Picturis, & Imaginibus, which, together with his other Treatises, were printed at Paris, 1605. 8vo. by the care of Papyrus Massionus, who found the MS. by chance in a Book-binder's Shop After which his Works were printed again at Paris with Baluzius's Notes, 1666. 8vo. 2. Vol. an accurate Edition, but he endeavours to weaken his Authority against Image-Worship. This Edition is put in the Biblioth. Patrum, Tom. 14. p. 234.]

Wal. Strabo's Judgment about Images.

Walafridus Strabo, a Monk of Fulda, who wrote some time after Agobardus, speaks of Images with much more Moderation, for he not only approves the Use of them, but allows some Respect to be given to them. He observes, that we ought not to honour them with a direct Worship, but he would have us not to contemn them. He distinguishes them into three sorts, some of which signify some Mysteries, as the Ornaments of the Tabernacle and Temple, others which serve to perpetuate the Remembrance of sacred History, and others, which are made to impress upon our Hearts the Love of those Persons which they represent, as the Images of Jesus Christ and the Saints. Whereupon he says, that the Devotion with which the Faithful are touched, when they look upon and contemplate them, is not to be blamed, since they draw so much Profit from them; but he condemns the Superstition of those who honour them with Religious Worship. That as some worship them more than they need, so others reject them imprudently, as a kind of Idolatry; that this Question had stirred up great troubles among the Greeks. That in the time of Pope Gregory II. the Emperor Constantine had removed all Images, but that under Gregory III. there had been a Council called at Rome against the Heresie, in which it was appointed, That the Images should be set up again in the Churches according to the ancient Usage. Lastly, That the Complaint of the Greeks having been brought into France, had been confuted by a Synodical Writing by the Order of Lewis the Kind. That Claudius of Turin, who had revived that Error, died before he had received a Confutation. That Christians being well instructed, that none ought to be worshipped but God, and that the supreme Honour, that is due to him, can't be communicated to Saints or Martyrs, whom they invoke as Intercessors with him. These lawful and moderate Honours of Images are not to be rejected wholly. Non sunt omnimodi honesti & moderati Imaginum honores abjiciendi. That as we do not demolish Temples, altho' we believe God to be every where, and that he doth not dwell in them, so we ought not to deface Pictures as useless and noxious, because we are persuaded that we ought not to worship them. In fine, he says, that they have many Advantages; they are the Books of the Ignorant, and such as can't read, and teach them those Histories that they could hardly know any other way. He concludes, that we ought to have and love Images, and not render them useless by contemning them, lest the Irreverence which we shew them, should reflect upon them that are represented by them. Nevertheless, we ought to be careful not to corrupt our Faith by an excessive Worship of them, for fear lest by rendring too great honour to things corporeal, we should give just Ground of Suspicion, that we do not sufficiently consider things spiritual. [These things are spoken in his Treatise De Divinis Officiis, which was printed at Mentz, 1549. at Paris, 1610. and in Biblioth. Patr. Tom. 15. Other small Treatises of his are extant in Surius & Canisius Antiq. Lection. Tom. 6. & Biblioth. Patrum. Tom. 15.]

About the Use and Worship of Images.

After this time I do not find that there was any Contest in the West about the Use and Worship of Images, which henceforward became common in France, Germany, and other Places. Let us now speak of the Authors chiefly engaged in this Controversy.

Nicephorus Patriarch of Constantinople.

Nicephorus was but a Layman when he was chosen Patriarch of Constantinople, in 806. after the Death of Tarasius. He had passed some Part of his Life at Court, but had been for some time before his Election retired from the World, yet was no Monk. He was no sooner in Possession of the Patriarchal Dignity, but through Complaisance to the Emperor Nicephorus, he restored in a Council Joseph the Steward, who had crowned Theodota, whom Copronymus had married, having divorced his lawful Wife. Theodorus Studita and Plato violently opposed this Act, whereupon the Patriarch held a Council in 809. in which Joseph was not only confirmed in his Place, but the second Marriage of Constantine was declared lawful by Dispensation, and every one that should maintain the contrary, was anathematized. This Decision raised a great Quarrel between Nicephorus and Theodorus, who together with several Monks separated themselves from his Communion, and treated him as an Heretick, which Division continued till the Death of Nicephorus the Emperor. But the Emperor Michael put an End to this Schism, and made them Friends upon Condition, that Joseph should be displaced, and that the Monks for the future should obey the Patriarch in all things that were not manifestly contrary to the Faith and Law of God. From this time Nicephorus and Theodorus Studita were perfectly good Friends, and suffered Persecution together for the Worship of Images. Nicephorus was driven out of his Church and banished in 814. by the Authority of Leo Armeniacus; and although under the Emperor Michael Balbus, many that were banished had Liberty to return, yet he was not allowed that Favour, but remained 14. years in Banishment, in which he died in 828. The Works which he hath left us are these that follow.

The first is a Letter written in 811. to Pope Leo III. which contains a long Confession of Faith. Baronius hath printed it in Latin in his Annals, and 'tis also printed in Greek with the Acts of the Council of Nice, and in Greek and Latin in Zonaras, and in the Collection of the Councils. In it Nicephorus speaks of himself with much Humility and Abasement; He says, that having passed the former Part of his Life at Court, and in Worldly Affairs, he had retreated into Solitude, out of which he was drawn against his Will and made Patriarch of Constantinople, that finding himself burdened with the Weight of so great a Charge, he begged the Prayers of the Bishop of Rome, and all the Faithful of his Church: He commends the Piety and Faith of the Church of Rome, but adds, that New Rome was not at all inferior to Old in the purity of her Faith. To make Proof of this Assertion, he joins a Confession of Faith to his Letter, in which, after he hath explained the Mysteries of the Trinity and Incarnation, and acknowledged the Invocation and Intercession of Saints, and Worship of Images, he declares, that he receives the 7. first Councils and the Doctrine of the Fathers. After this he excuses himself to the Pope, that he did not write to him sooner, and says that the Cause was, that he was made to believe that the Church of Rome was at Enmity with that of Constantinople, but now the Cause of the Division being removed, he doubted not but there would be a perfect Agreement between the two Churches. In the Conclusion he recommends to the Pope Michael the Archbishop of Philadelphia, who carried this Letter and some Presents with it. [This Letter is extant in Greek and Latin at Heidelberg, 1591. put out by Cornelius, and with Zonaras at Paris, 1620.

Nicephorus's Abridgment of History is his most considerable Work, it begins at the Death of the Emperor Mauritius, and ends with the Reign of the Empress Irene, [ad an. 769.] It hath been published in Greek and Latin by Petavius, and printed in Latin and Greek in Octavo 1616. and since put into the Bizantine History, Tom. 1. [It hath been since put out with Theoph. Simoccitta's History, Paris 1648.]

Some attribute to him also a Chronology, which was heretofore translated by Anastasius Bibliothecarius, [into Latin, and inserted into his History:] it contains a Catalogue of all the Patriarchs, Kings, and Princes of the Jews, Kings of Persia and Macedon, Roman Emperors according to the Order of their Successors, the Years of their Lives and Reigns, the Names of some of the Empresses, Kings of Israel, and Jewish High-Priests, the Names and Years of the Patriarchs of the Churches of Jerusalem, Rome, Constantinople, Alexandria

dria and Antioch. This Work is very defective if it be Nicephorus's, ſome other Perſon hath added the Names of ſome of the Emperors, and ſome Patriarchs which lived after his Death: At firſt there appeared only a Tranſlation attributed to Anaſtaſius; afterward Camerarius made another Verſion, upon which Contius, a Lawyer at Bruges, made a Comment. Scaliger printed it in Greek at the End of his Edition of Euſebius's Chronicon, [or Theſaurus Temporum] and laſt of all F. Goar printed them in Greek and Latin at Paris, 1652. with Syncellus's Chronicon. At the Beginning of this Work is prefixed a Book, intituled, Schometria, which contains a Catalogue of Canonical [Eccleſiaſtical] and Apocryphal Books, but 'tis not certain, that it is the Work of this Patriarch, [our Learned Biſhop of Cheſter, Dr. Pearſon, proves, that 'tis not Nicephorus's, but ſome other Author's coeval with him in his Vind. Ignat. p. 1.]

He made alſo four Treatiſes againſt the Iconoclaſts, of which we have only a Latin Verſion compoſed by Turrian, which is extant in Canifius's Collection, [Tom. 4. p. 253] and in the Biblioth. Patrum, [Tom. 14.] In the firſt, he ſuppoſes the Iconoclaſts to have wrong Sentiments of the Incarnation, from whence he concludes, that they are juſtly condemned, becauſe they have not followed univerſally the Doctrine of the General Councils, becauſe they have demoliſhed the Temples, beat down the Images, and treated them as Idolaters which worſhip them, inſomuch, that they have been the Cauſe of the Effuſion of much Chriſtian Blood; and laſtly, becauſe they have ſeparated themſelves from the Church. In the 2*d.* Tract, he endeavours to prove by 10. Reaſons, that the Image of Jeſus Chriſt ought to have more Reſpect than the Croſs. In the 3*d.* Book he proves the Worſhip of Images by the Example of the Cherubims over the Ark. In the laſt, he ſhews, That the Image of Jeſus Chriſt may be formed and painted, becauſe according to his Humane Nature he is bounded, and finite.

He hath alſo 3. Books which he terms Antirrheticks, againſt the Council held at Conſtantinople under Conſtantius Copronymus, which aboliſhed the Uſe of Images, but we have only ſome Fragments of this Work put out by F. Combefis in his 2*d.* Volume of his Addition to the Biblioth. Patrum, [at Paris, 1648.] Laſtly, we meet with ſeveral Canons which bear the Name of Nicephorus among the Greek Canoniſts. Glycas cites 51. which proves, that he made a great number. Cotelerius hath publiſhed a Collection of 37. and another of 9. [inter Monument. Eccleſ. Græc. Tom. 3. p. 445.] Theſe are the Contents of them, 1. If a Perſon by chance waſhes a Cloath conſecrated to the Service of the Altar, it loſeth not its Conſecration. 2. A Man that hath been twice married ſhall do Penance two years, and he that hath been married thrice, 5. years. 3. He that remains but a ſmall time within the Cloſe of a Church ſhall not be puniſhed for it, but he that continues long there ſhall ſuffer the Puniſhments in that Caſe provided. 4. The Gifts beſtowed upon the Church by dead Men may be received, though they died inteſtate, if it be known that it was their Deſign and Intention. 5. If the Feaſt of the Annunciation happen upon the Thurſday or Friday * in the Holy Week, the Chriſtians might upon that Day eat Fiſh and drink Wine. 6. He that is conſecrated an Abbot, and is a Prieſt, may ordain Readers and Subdeacons in his Monaſtery. 7. He may not ordain any Perſon who hath lived viciouſly in his Youth, although he be become a virtuous Man, becauſe he that is conſecrated to God muſt be without ſcandalous Faults. 8. Such as are born of Concubines, or of 2*d.* and 3*d.* Marriages, may be ordained. 9. The Communion may be given to a ſick Perſon, who is near death, although he be not faſting. 10. Bending of the Knee may be uſed in ſaluting upon Sundays from the Paſſover to Pentecoſt, but the ordinary kneeling may not be uſed. 11. A Prieſt doth not ſin, if he conſecrate the Sacrament, or burn a Taper for 3. Perſons at once. 12. He may not conſecrate a Chalice in the Veſtry. 13. A Prieſt may not conſecrate the Sacrament without hot Water, unleſs in Caſe of abſolute Neceſſity. 14. A Monk who hath left his Profeſſion, may reſume it again, without uſing the accuſtomed Prayers. 15. Religious Perſons may go within the Rails of the Altar to light the Tapers, or bruſh the Altar. 16. Monks may not labour on Good-Friday, that they may not have a Pretence of breaking the Faſt. 17. A Monk may forſake his Monaſtery in 3. caſes, 1. If the Abbot be an Heretick. 2. If any Woman be admitted into it, or 3. If they teach the Children of Tradeſmen in it. 18. Becauſe theſe Youngſters will divulge the Secrets of the Monaſtery. 19. Monks that are put under Penances and Cenſures, may eat and pray with the reſt, and have part of the Eulogies and conſecrated Bread. 20. On the Faſts of the Apoſtles and St. Philip the Monks in the Monaſteries ſhall not eat till Night, but they that labour may eat After-noon, and ſup at Night. 21. If a Nun hath been forced by the Barbarians, if ſhe hath lived an orderly and commendable Life before, ſhe ſhall be diſcharged after 40. Days Penance, but if ſhe hath lived a lewd and ſcandalous Life, ſhe ſhall undergo the Penance of an Adultereſs. 22. He that hath put on the Habit of a Monk for any Temporal Ends, as to exempt himſelf from bearing Arms, and afterwards diſcovers his Hypocriſie, ſhall be put to Penance ſix ſcore Days, and afterwards may be admitted to the Communion. 23. Young Monks, who forſake their Monaſtery, muſt not be admitted to the Communion. 24. An Abbot ought not to pull off the Cowl from the Monks, nor endeavour it. 25. A Monk that hath put off his Habit, and will not reſume it, ought not to be received to the Communion. 26. If a ſick Man deſires Baptiſm, or a Monk's Habit, they ought to be given him immediately. 27. A Monk that is a Prieſt ought not to celebrate the Maſs without his Cloak. 28. A Confeſſor who hath had ſecret Sins diſcovered to him, ought to keep thoſe ſecret Sinners from the Communion, mildly adviſing them to Repentance and Prayer, and impoſe a ſuitable Penance upon them, but not prohibit them from coming into the Church, nor defame them. 29. As to Adulterers, Manſlayers, and other notorious Sinners, who confeſs their Crimes, they muſt be kept from the Communion, endure a long Penance, and not be ſuffered to remain in the Church longer than the Prayers for the Catechumens; but if their Sins are publick, they muſt go through the ſeveral Degrees of Penance commanded by the Laws of the Church. 30. If a Layman do voluntarily confeſs his Sins, the Confeſſor may diſpenſe with Part of his Penance. 31. A Prieſt by the Permiſſion of his Biſhop may uſe the Ceremonies of ſetting up the Croſs. 32. The Sacrament may not be given to Uſurers. 33. Monks muſt faſt on Wedneſday and Friday in Quinquageſima-week, but after they have eaten of the Fore-conſecrated Elements, they ought to eat a little Cheeſe in oppoſition to the Hereſie of the Jacobites and Tetradites. 34. If a Man that hath a Concubine will neither put her away nor marry her with the Bleſſing of the Church, his Offerings may not be received by the Church. 35. If a Monk leaves his Habit, eats Fleſh, marries, and will not reform or repent, he muſt be excommunicated, taken by Force, and being put into his Habit, ſhall be ſhut up in his Monaſtery. 36. A Man that hath been guilty of Fornication ought not to be ordained. 37. Such Perſons as are reputed to be Fornicators need not to be avoided, but ſuch as are known and proved ſuch. Theſe are the Canons of the firſt Collection, and the ſecond are theſe, 1. Churches conſecrated by Hereticks are to be accounted no better than common Houſes; and therefore, though there be ſinging before the Croſs, yet there ought to be no Service at the Altar, burning Incenſe, Prayers, nor lighting of Candles and Tapers. The 2*d.* is about the Ceremonies in the Reſtoration of a Monk, who reſumes his Habit which he had once left. The 3*d.* declares, That we ought not to receive the Sacrament from the Hands of a Prieſt that doth not faſt on Wedneſdays and Fridays. The four next are in the precedent Collection. The 8*th.* ſays, That a Prieſt, Deacon, or Reader, depoſed, if he become a Monk, may ſay Grace in the Monaſtery. The laſt is the ſame with the 25*th.* of the former Collection.——Leunclavius in his Collection of the Greek and Roman Laws, hath publiſhed 17. Canons attributed to Nicephorus, which are all in the former Collection, except the 2*d.* which forbids travelling on Sundays, the third, which rejects ſome Apocryphal Books, the ninth, which forbids travelling in the Week after Eaſter, and ſinging the Hymn called Beati Immaculati the Saturday which is before Quaſi-modo, the 12*th.* which inflicts the Penance of Manſlayers upon him that ſtrikes his Father, the 13*th.* which allows Monks to baptize, and the 16*th.* which ſays, That 'tis lawful for Laymen to baptize Infants when a Prieſt cannot be had.

After theſe Canons Cotelerius hath alſo printed a Canonical Letter of Nicephorus's, wherein he anſwers ſeveral Queſtions of Diſcipline propounded to him. The Queſtions and Anſwers are as follow. Queſt. 1. Whether it be lawful to communicate, eat or ſing, with thoſe Prieſts which have been ordained at Rome, Naples, or in Lombardy, without Proclamation, or Title? He anſwers, Yea, if it be through Neceſſity, and could not be done otherwiſe. Queſt 2. Whether they ought to receive Prieſts ordained in Sicily out of the Province? He anſwers, Yes, for the ſame Reaſon. Queſt. 3. Whether they may communicate with thoſe Biſhops in Prayer and Singing, who had Communion with Hereticks, and go into their Churches? He anſwers, No, in no wiſe. Queſt. 4. Whether they may do it if the Churches be not poſſeſſed by Hereticks, but Catholick Biſhops? He anſwers, Yes, provided that the Catholick Biſhops do ſolemnly open, and call Aſſemblies in them. Queſt. 5. Whether the Orthodox Chriſtians may go into the Church-yards, where the Bodies of the Saints lye, and pray to them, when the Church-yards are in the Poſſeſſion of Hereticks? He anſwers, No, unleſs in Caſe of Neceſſity, or to honour the Saints Relicks. Queſt. 6. How thoſe Monks ought to be treated who have been inveſted in that Habit by Hereticks? He anſwers, They ought to be received to Communion by an Orthodox Prieſt after they have done their Penance. Queſt. 7. How thoſe Prieſts and Monks are to be dealt with who have ſubſcribed to Hereſie? He anſwers, They ought to be received when they have done their full Penance.

Penance. Quest. 8. Whether they may communicate with those Monks who hold communication with Hereticks? He answers, No. Quest. 9. Whether they ought to be put upon Penance, who have eaten but once only with Hereticks? He answers, they ought to do Penance, and then they may be admitted with the ordinary Prayers and Ceremonies. Quest. 10. Whether such Laymen, as have subscribed to Heresie, and communicated with Hereticks, may eat with the Orthodox Laity? He answers, they may not, till they have done Penance. Quest. 11. Whether Men may be baptized by a Priest, who hath held communion with Hereticks, when they cannot have an Orthodox Priest, especially in cases of danger? He answers, it is allowable for such Priests, in case of necessity, to baptize, and administer the Sacraments, which have been consecrated by an unblameable Priest, to invest Monks, to read the Prayers at Funerals, and bless the Water at Epiphany. Quest. 12. Whether it be allowable to receive Schismaticks? He answers, they ought to undergo Penance before they are received. Quest. 13. Whether a Priest, who hath been ordained by a lapsed Bishop, may exercise the Office of his Priesthood, after he hath done Penance, as a certain Priest in a Monastery now doth? He answers, There is no doubt at all but that he may not. Quest. 14. How they are to be dealt with who have eaten with the Patriarch of Constantinople, who is a Heretick? He answers, They may be received, as he said before, after they have underwent the Penance imposed on them, and continue in the Order wherein they were. The Penance ought to be proportioned to the Persons and their Manners, which is sufficient, if it be undergone 80. or 120. days. Quest. 15. May Men have Society with those, who have communicated with those Priests, who have eaten with the Patriarch, not knowing it? He answers, Their Ignorance excuses them. Quest. 16. Whether Orthodox Priests may impose Penance, as Hilarion and Eustatus have done? He answers, Priests may certainly do it, and 'tis probable Monks may do it, when there is no Priest. Quest. 17. Whether a Monk invested by a deposed Priest, not knowing it, is rightly and sufficiently consecrated? He answers, his Ignorance makes him safe. This Letter was written by Nicephorus, in the place of his Exile to a Bishop of his Province, about the difficulties which then happened in communicating with the Iconoclasts.

Photius, who had read this History of Nicephorus, passes his Judgment upon it in the 66th. Vol. of his Biblioth. in this manner. His Style, saith he, hath nothing superfluous nor obscure, neither too much affected, nor yet too careless in his Words and Expressions, but yet he uses such choice and elegant terms, as might well become a good Orator. He avoided all new fangled Words, and uses only the common and ancient expressions, and is very agreeable and pleasing. In fine, he might be said to have out-done all that ever wrote History before him, had not his desire of Brevity hindred him from using necessary Ornaments for such a Work.

Theodorus Studita

This Judgment of Photius is true, as to the History of Nicephorus, but the same commendation may not be given to his other Works, which have nothing in them Praiseworthy but their Method and Brevity. I except his Letter to the Pope, which is of a copious, but flat Style.

Next to Nicephorus, Theodorus Studita is the most considerable of the Patrons of Image-Worship; He was the Scholar of St. Plato, Head of the Monastery upon Mount Olympus, who voluntarily resigned the Government of it to him in 795. The same year Constantinus Copronymus having forced his Wife to enter upon a Religious Life, married one of her Maids of Honour named Theodota which Tarasius the Patriarch was extreamly against, tho' he did not oppose it with so much vigour as he ought, nor punished Joseph, the Monks Steward of the Church of Constantinople, who had married them; but Plato and Theodorus declared themselves openly against the Emperor, and separated themselves from his Communion, blaming the carriage of Tarasius. The greatest part of the Monks followed their example, which angred Constantine so much, that he banished Theodorus with eleven of his Monks. After the Death of this Emperor, Theodorus returned to Constantinople, but not being able to stay in his own Monastery, by reason of the Inroads of the Barbarians, he was created Abbot of the Monastery of Studa at Constantinople, which was so called from the Name of the Founder. He restored this Monastery, put in his Monks, and enjoy'd it some time peaceably. But afterwards quarrelling with the Patriarch Nicephorus about the restoration of Joseph the Steward, he was banished a second time, because he would not approve the Decision of the Synod, which declared the second Marriage of Constantine Lawful. In his Exile, he continued his opposition to that Allegation violently; he wrote to Pope Leo III. about it, and treated them that maintained it as Hereticks, calling them Macbians, because they approved, or at least, tolerated Adultery. And whereas some of his Friends told him, that he could not properly impute Heresie to an Opinion that only respected Manners, he on the contrary held, that his Adversaries had made a Doctrine of it, by giving a Dispensation or Indulgence to an Adulterous Match, and pronouncing them accursed who would not acknowledge it Lawful. They produced several Precedents of Indulgences and Dispensations; in answer to which, to shew the present case to be very different from those they alledged, he wrote a Treatise of Dispensations or Indulgences. In 811. he returned from his second Exile, after the Death of the Emperor Nicephorus, and was reconciled to the Patriarch Nicephorus by the Mediation of the Emperor Michael and the Pope. In the Reign of Leo, he undertook the Defence of Image-Worship with much heat and vigour, and tho' the Emperor commanded him to be silent, yet he spake and wrote Zealously against a Synod held by that Emperor against the Worship of Images. This was the cause of his third Exile, in which he suffered much through the Cruelty of Leo, whom he provoked by Writing to his Fellows in his Exile, and animated them to maintain their ground. In the beginning of the Reign of Michael Balbus, in 821, he had Liberty given him to return to Constantinople, but having spoken too freely, he was forced to retire for some time. At the end of his Life, he visited the Patriarch Nicephorus in his Exile, and several others. He died in the Year 826. Michael his Scholar hath written his Life, who thus speaks of his Writings. 'He wrote, or 'dictated several Works, which shew, that he was enlighten'd by the Holy Spirit. The first was a Catechism, which 'he calls a small one, tho' it contains 135 Sermons spoken to his Brethren, proper for each day, of which the 'Sentences are choice, and Terms elegant. In them he 'treats of Constancy, contempt of Adversity, Perseverance 'in the Austerities and Exercises of a Monastick Life, resisting of Temptations, and Courage under all Accidents 'of Life, with great Eloquence. He hath also another 'Work called a large Catechism, divided into three parts, 'containing the Rules and Discipline of a Monastick Life. 'He hath also composed a Volume of Panegyricks, or Sermons upon the chief Festivals of the Year, as well those 'of our Lord, as those of the Virgin and St. John, whose 'solitary and retired Life he commends in an Hymn by it 'self. He hath made a Piece also in Iambick Verse, in 'which he describes the Creation, the Fall of the first Man, 'the Murther of Cain, the Life of Enoch, and of Noah. In 'the same Book also, he delivers an History of the Here'sie of the Iconoclasts. We have five Books of his Letters, 'in which he manifests a great deal of freedom in his Dis'course, Zeal for the Truth, Care of the Church, and 'Constancy in Adversity. Lastly, he hath made a Dogma'tical Treatise, in which he confutes the Sophisms of the 'Iconoclasts with solid Reasons.---- Of these Works, only these are come to our hands, a Latin Version of his 134 Sermons, made by Livineius, Canon of Antwerp, and printed there by Miræus in 1602. The Version of several of his Letters, which Baronius had out of a MS. and caused them to be translated by Sirmondus to put into his Annals, where they may be found between the Years 795 and 826. A Sermon in Latin upon the 4th. Sunday in Lent, [which is in the *Biblioth. The Life of St. Plato, Head of the Monastery of Mount Olympus, published by Surius, December 6th. [or 16th.] Lastly, a Doctrinal Treatise about the Worship of Images, printed at Antwerp 1556. in Lat. and at Rome in 1553. in Gr. with a Treatise of St. John Damascene of Images. Baronius hath also printed the Testament or Will of this Abbot [in his Annals in 826.] which contains several profitable Admonitions and Directions for his Monks, [but chiefly a Superstitious Zeal for Image-worship. It is also printed with his Sermons at Antwerp in 1602. and in Biblioth. Patrum, Tom. 14.] In the Greek Liturgies there are several Hymns, or Songs, in Honour of the Restoration of Images, attributo to him, but they are not his, being made since the Peace was restored to the Greek Church about that subject. F. Sirmondus hath published the Works of this Monk in Greek and Latin at the end of his own Works. His Works are useful for Monks. He wrote in a plain and easie Style. He died in the year 826. Nov. 11. His Life was written by his Scholar Michael, part of which is published in Baronius's Annals, [Tom. 9.] The Relation of his Death made by Naucratius, who was another of his Scholars, hath been published in Greek and Latin by F. Combefis, in Vol. 2. Auctuar. Biblioth. Patr. [Dr. Cave hath this Treatise in MS. and hath given us a Specimen of its trifling, and vain commendation of the Image-worshippers, and in particular of Theodorus Studita, in *Hist. Joseph, Archbishop of Thessalonica, was the Brother of Theodorus, and his Companion in all his troubles. He was banished with him for opposing the Marriage of Constantinus Copronymus; the Restoration of Joseph the Steward of Constantinople; and for so zealously maintaining Image-worship. He hath left us a Discourse in Honour of the Cross, [extant in Gretzer de Cruce, Tom. 2. p. 1200.] and an Epistle to Simeon the Monk, printed in Baronius's Annal in 808. p. 10. About the Uſe and Worſhip of Images.

There was another Theodorus [Sirnamed Graptus] which flouriſhed about the ſame time with Studita, and was one of the moſt zealous Patrons of Image-Worſhip; for the Defence of which, he died in Exile and Priſon. He compoſed the Relation of a Conference of Nicephorus, Patriarch of Conſtantinople, with Leo, publiſhed by F. Combefis, with a Narration of the Martyrdom of himſelf, and Brother Theophanes, who out-lived him, and was Biſhop of Nicæa. There is attributed to him an Hymn in commendation of his Brother, which is found among the Greek Offices. [Theodorus alſo hath a Letter to Joannes Cyzicenus, concerning his own and Brother's Sufferings from the Emperor Theophilus; publiſhed alſo by F. Combefis, and a Book de fide Orthodoxâ contra Iconomachos, yet in MS.

Theoſtrictus, a Monk and Scholar of Nicetas, a Defender of Image-Worſhip, wrote the Life of his Maſter in a Panegyrick, recited by Metaphraſtes, [and is extant in Surius, April 3.] It contains an Abridgment of the Perſecutions raiſed upon the account of Image-Worſhip, from the Reign of Leo Iſaurus to that of Michael Balbus. Theſe are the chief of the Greek Authors, which wrote in the beginning of this Age in the diſpute of Images. [Beſides the foremention'd Authors, there were others engaged in this conteſt of Image-Worſhip, tho' of leſs note in the Greek Church, as Sergius, called Confeſſor by Photius, who wrote an Hiſtory againſt the Iconoclaſts, of which we have nothing but the Name, and the Judicious Cenſure of Photius of it, in his Biblioth. Co. 67. 2. Michael called Syncellus, who endured much for Image-Worſhip with Theodorus Studita and Nicephorus, he hath left nothing in the defence of the Cauſe for which he ſuffered, but hath two Pieces extant, viz. An Encomium of Dionyſius the Areopagite, which is among the Works of Dionyſius, Tom. 2. And an Encomium upon the Holy Angels and Archangels of God, put out in Greek and Latin by F. Combefis in his Auctuar. Nov. Tom. 1. p. 1525.]

Claudius Archbiſhop of Turin, beſides the Treatiſe of Images, of which we have already ſpoke, hath compoſed ſeveral other Works. We have a Comment of his upon the Epiſtle of St. Paul to the Galatians, printed at Paris in 1542. and inſerted into the Biblioth. Patrum, [Tom. 14. p. 134.] Two Prefaces put out by F. Mabillon in Analect. Tome 1. of which the firſt is to his Commentaries on Leviticus, and the other to thoſe of his Epiſtle to the Epheſians. Trithemius makes mention of ſeveral other Commentaries of this Author upon many other Books of the Bible viz. The Pentateuch, Joſhua, Judges, Ruth, and all St. Paul's Epiſtles. His Comment upon Leviticus is in MS. in the Library of St. German de Prez. His Comment upon the Goſpel of St. Matthew is in MS. in the Jeſuits College at Paris, and in the Library at the Cathedral Church of Laon. His Comments upon St. Paul's Epiſtle to the Romans, and 2*d.* to the Corinthians, are in the French King's Library. That upon the Epiſtle to the Epheſians is in the Library of the Abby of Fleury, and upon Ruth in the Abby of Good-Hope. F. Labbe hath publiſhed a ſhort Chronicon attributed to this Author. Altho' Jonas Biſhop of Orleans makes no great account of this Author's Commentaries, yet we may truly ſay, that in his Comment upon the Galatians, he explains the literal Senſe in a familiar and eaſie manner, agreeing with the true Senſe of the Apoſtle, without mixing any Allegories, and invented Senſes far from the Subject. Jonas of Orleans, and Dungal accuſe him of reviving not only the Errors of Euſtathius, and Vigilantius, touching the Relicks and Honour of the Saints, and that of Felix Orgelitanus about the Incarnation, but alſo that of Arius about the Trinity; yet Jonas owns, that it doth not appear by his Writings, but that he received it from Perſons worthy of Credit.

About the Uſe and Worſhip of Images.

Dungal, beſides his Treatiſe againſt Claudius of Turin, hath a Letter directed to the Emperor Charles the Great, about two Eclipſes in the Year 810. 'Tis extant in the 10*th.* Tome of Dacherius's Spicilegium.

CHAP. II.

A Relation of the Diſpute concerning Grace and Predeſtination.

Of Grace and Predeſtination.

OF all the Queſtions that were debated in the ninth Age, there was none that was managed with more heat and noiſe, than this of Predeſtination and Grace. Gotteſchalcus, a German Born, was the firſt Broacher of it. He was brought up and inſtructed in the Monaſtery of Augia [the Rich] or Richenou, and was Sirnamed Fulgentius. He made Profeſſion of a Monaſtick Life in the Monaſtery of Orbez in the Dioceſs of Soiſſons, and was ordained Prieſt at forty years of Age, not by his own Biſhop, but by Rigboldus, Suffragan of the Church of Rheims, which made his Ordination to be ſuſpected. Hincmarus deſcribes him to us as an ill-bred, turbulent, and fickle Man, and aſſures us, that this was the Senſe which the Abbot and Monks of his own Monaſtery had of him. Nevertheleſs, they could not but ſay he was an Ingenious, Studious, and Subtle Man, but very troubleſome and over-reaching.

About the Year 846, he had a mind to leave his Monaſtery, (Hincmarus accuſes him of doing it without the leave, or conſent of his Abbot) and go to Rome to viſit the Holy Places there. From thence he went into Dalmatia and Pannonia, where, ſome ſay, under a pretence of Preaching the Goſpel to the Infidels, he began to ſpread his Doctrine of Predeſtination. But however this was, at his return he tarried ſome time in Lombardy, in an Hoſpital founded by Count Eberard, and had a Conference in 847, with Notingus Biſhop of Vienna, concerning the Predeſtination of the Saints to Glory, and of the Wicked to Damnation. Notingus offended at this Opinion of Gotteſchalcus not long after being come to meet Lewis King of Germany at a Town of Switzerland, told Rabanus Archbiſhop of Mentz, who promiſed him to confute this Error of Gotteſchalcus in Writing, by the Authorities both of Holy Scriptures and Fathers, which Promiſe he not long after performed in a Treatiſe, which he ſent with two Letters, one to Notingus, and the other to Count Eberard, both againſt the Error of Gotteſchalcus. In his Treatiſe he accuſes this Monk of teaching that Predeſtination is ſo made, that every Man, that is predeſtinated to Life, can't be damn'd; and every Man predeſtinated to Damnation can't be ſav'd. He chiefly oppoſeth this laſt Aſſertion, and ſhews, that ſuch a Predeſtination is contrary to the Goodneſs and Juſtice of God, who deſires the Salvation of all Men, becauſe nothing is more unjuſt than to damn a Man who can't avoid Sin. He owns that Predeſtination is aſſerted in Holy Scripture, but in this Senſe, that all Men being fallen by the Sin of the firſt Man into a State of Damnation, can't be delivered but by the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, who was provided, and predeſtined from all Eternity. That thoſe, who are freed from the State of Damnation, and to whom both their Original and Actual Sins are pardoned by Baptiſm, are afterwards damned for the Sins that they commit wilfully and freely; and that it is by the foreſight of their Evil Will, that they have been predeſtined; But that the Predeſtination of God, whether to Good or Evil, hath no influence upon Man to neceſſitate him either way. That God predeſtines things only, becauſe he foreſees after what manner they will happen. That he doth not predeſtine Evil, but foreſees it only, whereas he both foreſees and predeſtines Good. That out of the whole Maſs of Mankind, he through meer Grace, accepts thoſe, whom he pleaſeth, to Salvation, and leaves others, yet not ordaining them to Damnation, but for their Sins, which he foreſees they will commit freely. Theſe are the Doctrines which Rabanus lays down againſt Gotteſchalcus in his Treatiſe to Notingus, which he endeavours to prove by Texts of Scripture, and Teſtimonies of St. Auſtine, Fulgentius, and Gennadius, whoſe Book concerning the Doctrines of the Church, he cites under the Name of St. Auſtine. He repeats the ſame thing in his Letter to Eberard, and exhorts that Lord not to ſuffer any contrary Doctrine to be taught in his Dominions. [This Treatiſe and Letters are printed alone at Paris, 1647. by the care of Sirmondus.]

Of Grace and Predeſtination.

Rabanus's Book againſt Gotteſchalcus.

Gotteſchalcus ſeeing himſelf thus attacked by an Adverſary of great Credit and Authority, reſolved to ſet himſelf about the Explication of his Opinion, that he might make him underſtand his true Meaning, and rectify his Miſtake concerning him. Wherefore he went into Germany in the beginning of the Year 848, and finding that the difference between himſelf and Rabanus might be reduced to three Queſtions, 1. Concerning the Predeſtination of the Wicked; 2. Concerning the Will and Death of Jeſus Chriſt to ſave all Men, even Infidels themſelves; and 3. Concerning Free-will, he compoſed a Treatiſe, in which he oppoſes the Opinion of Rabanus under theſe three Heads. He reproves him for aſſerting, that the Reprobate are not predeſtined to Damnation. He maintains, that God foreſeeing that they would live and die in Sin, hath predeſtined them to Eternal Torments. Concerning the 2*d.* Article he ſays, that we muſt underſtand that Text of Scripture, God will have all Men to be ſaved, of thoſe that are actually and effectually ſaved, becauſe there is none that God will have to be ſaved but ſhall be ſaved; and that Jeſus Chriſt hath not poured out his Blood to redeem thoſe that are finally and eternally reprobated, but only for the Elect. Upon the 3*d. Queſtion*, which concerns Free-will, he reproves Rabanus for taking up the Opinion of Gennadius, the Scholar of that unfortunate Man Caſſian, inſtead of St. Auſtine's. We have not this Treatiſe of Gotteſchalcus, but ſome Fragments of it cited by Hincmarus. Gotteſchalcus propounded theſe three Queſtions to the moſt able Men of his time, praying them to reſolve solve them agreeably to the Doctrine of St. Austine. He wrote particularly to Lupus Servatus, Marcaldus Abbot of Prumiers, and one named Jonas.

Of Grace and Predestination.

The Council of Mentz against Gotteschalcus.

In October 848, there was a Council held at Mentz, in which Gotteschalcus was accused by Rabanus. Gotteschalcus presented a Confession of his Faith, in which he declared, that he owned and believed before God, and his Saints, that there were two sorts of Predestination. The one of the Elect to Eternal Happiness, and the other of the Reprobate to Damnation, because as God hath immutably predestined the Elect before the Creation of the World through his free Mercy to Life Eternal, in like manner hath he immutably predestined the Reprobate for their wicked Actions to Eternal Death. This expression shews plainly, what was the state of the Question between Gotteschalcus and Rabanus. Rabanus accuses him for believing, that God predestined men to Damnation, without any prevision of their wicked Works. Gotteschalcus in this Confession of Faith owns, that no Man is predestined to Damnation but for his Crimes. Propter ipsorum mala Merita. Rabanus acknowledges, that God knows those, that are in a state of Sin, and hath decreed to punish them with Eternal Death, because of their Sins; but he will not call it Predestination to Death, lest Men should think God also predestines them to Sin. And Gotteschalcus resolutely maintained, that there was a Predestination to Death as well as to Life. They both agreed, that Predestination to Life was free and gratuitous; that God hath chosen, whom he pleaseth, out of the Corrupt Mass of Mankind, to Salvation, and through meer Mercy, and fits them for Salvation by his Graces, and all other necessary means for that end; as also they both confess, that God deals after the same manner with the Reprobate, whom he condemns to Eternal Death only for their Sins, of which he is no manner of cause. But Rabanus would by no means allow this last Decree, Predestination to Evil, and Gotteschalcus stiffly maintained it. The Bishops of this Synod not being able to persuade him to change his Opinion, or way of speaking, condemned him; and knowing that he was a Monk of the Diocess of Soissons, which was subject to the Archbishop of Rheims, where he was ordain'd, they sent him to Hincmarus, to whom Rabanus wrote in these words. Te know, that a certain Vagabond Monk named Gotteschalcus, who says that he was ordain'd Priest in your Diocess, being come from Italy to Mentz, is found to teach a wicked and pernicious Doctrine concerning Predestination, maintaining that as there is a Predestination of God for the Good, so there is also for the Evil; and that there are many Persons in the World that can't return from their Errors, nor turn from their Sins, because of the Predestination of God, which constrains them to suffer their Death, to which they are determin'd, being in their own Nature incorrigible, and worthy of Damnation. This Man being known to maintain this Doctrine in the Council lately held at Mentz, and being found incorrigible, we have thought fit, according to the Order and Advice of our most Pious King Lewis, to send him to you, after we had condemn'd him and his pernicious Doctrine, that you may keep him within your Diocess, out of which he is gone contrary to the Canons. Do not suffer him to teach his Errors any longer, nor seduce the People; for I perceive, he hath already seduced several Persons, who are become less careful of their Salvation, since he hath put this Opinion into their Minds, saying in them, Why should I labour for my Salvation? If I am predestin'd to Damnation I can't avoid it; and on the contrary, whatever Sins I am guilty of, if I am predestin'd to Salvation I shall be certainly saved. Thus have I, in a few words, shewed you his Doctrine, which you may better, and more fully understand, from his own Mouth, and act according as you think fit against him. [This Epistle is also printed by Sirmondus at Paris, 1647.]

The Life of Hincmarus.

Hincmarus was descended of a Noble Family in France, and brought up in the Monastery of St. Denys [near Paris] where he wore a Canon's Habit, according to the Custom of the Monks of that Monastery. Being come from it, he was a long time at the Court of Lewis the Kind, but returned again to the Monastery of St. Denys, after it was reformed by Hilduin in the year 829 [then Abbot of it.] He accompanied him into Saxony, whither he was banished, but did not abet the Faction of Lotharius with him, but, on the contrary, continued faithful to Lewis the Kind. When this Prince was restored, Hincmarus, who had a disposition very proper for such Affairs, abode at Court to serve the King and Bishops about Ecclesiastical Matters. After some time spent thus about Worldly Matters, he returned again to his Retirement in the Monastery, but he staid not long there, for in May 844, he was chosen Archbishop of Rheims, ten years after the Deposition of Ebbo, in whose place Fulcus was put, and presided almost nine years in it, and was succeeded by Noto, who held the See but a year and half. He was consecrated in a Synod of Archbishops and Bishops held at Beauvais, after he was desired by the Clergy and People of the Metropolis of Rheims, with the consent of the Abbots, and Monks of his Monastery. A year after his Ordination, the Emperor Lotharius, who favoured Ebbo, (who was deposed meerly because he had put Lewis the Kind to Penance) and hated Hincmarus, whom he looked upon to be wholly for Charles the Bald, King of France, endeavoured to revoke the Sentence passed upon Ebbo, and restore him, supposing, that some did not acknowledge Hincmarus to be their Lawful Bishop of Rheims. To this end he wrote to the Pope, and obtain'd a Letter from him, wherein he gave Gonbaldus, Archbishop of Rouan, Commission to examine this Affair with such Bishops of the Kingdom as he should think fit to choose; who should meet at Treves, and having cited Hincmarus, examine him before the Pope's Legates, who should be present. After Easter, Hincmarus went to the Council, and waited for the Pope's Legates till the time appointed. After this, Gonbaldus summoned Ebbo, who not daring to appear, left Hincmarus in quiet possession of the Archbishoprick of Rheims. He governed that Church almost thirty years, for he died not till Dec. 21. 882. He had a great share in all the Affairs which were transacted in that time in the Church of France, and as to his own particular, had no small difficulties to extricate himself out of, in which he shewed a great deal of Wit, Diligence and Courage. Being endued with these Qualities, he was pleased to meet with so good an occasion of signalizing himself by the Condemnation of Gotteschalcus; he first heard him himself, and resolved with himself to present him before the Council of Bishops, that was to meet with the Parliament appointed by Charles the Bald at Quiercy, which was the King's Palace in the Diocess of Rheims. And that things might be done in the better order, he gave Rhotadus notice of it, to be present there, because he was the propereſt Judge of Gotteschalcus. Wenilo Archbishop of Sens was present with Hincmarus, and eleven other Bishops, among whom were Rhotadus Bishop of Soissons, two Suffragan Bishops, of whom Rigboldus, who ordain'd Gotteschalcus, was one, and three Abbots, viz. Paschasius Rathbertus Abbot of Corby, Bavo Abbot of the Monastery of Orbez, where Gotteschalcus was a Monk, and Hilduinus Abbot of Hautevilliers. Gotteschalcus having been questioned in their presence, and maintained the same Opinions which he had done at Mentz with the same obstinacy and incorrigibleness, casting some reflections upon his Enemies, was condemned for an Heretick, degraded from his Priesthood, which he had received from Rigboldus Suffragan of Rheims, without the knowledge of his Bishop; and moreover, for his obstinacy, was condemned, according to the Laws, Canons of the Council of Agatha, [Can. 38.] and Constitutions of St. Bennet, to be beaten with Rods, and imprisoned, as the Bishops of Germany had before ordered. Hincmarus fearing that Rhotadus had not power enough to see this Sentence executed, and so he might escape, took care to shut him up in a Monastery of his Diocess. The Judgment passed against Gotteschalcus was delivered in these Words.

Of Grace and Predestination.

Council of Quiercy.

Brother Gotteschalcus, know that thou art deprived of the sacred Office of Priesthood, which if thou hast ever received, thou hast managed contrary to all Rules, and profaned, to this day, by thy Manners, disorderly Actions, and corrupt Doctrines; And that by the Judgment of the Holy Spirit, of whose Grace the Priesthood is a special Gift, and by the Vertue of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, thou art utterly forbidden to officiate in any Office of it for the future. Moreover, because thou hast intermeddled with Ecclesiastical and Civil Affairs, contrary to the Profession and Duty of a Monk, and in contempt of the Ecclesiastical Laws, we do, by Vertue of our Episcopal Authority, order and command, that according to the Rules of the Church, thou be severely scourged, and afterwards shut up in a close Prison; And that thou may never teach again to infect others, we enjoyn thee perpetual silence in the Name of the Eternal Word. Thus was Gotteschalcus condemned in the presence, and with the consent of his Bishop, Abbot, him that ordain'd him, and of those who were well affected to the Doctrine of St. Austine, which shews that he had an injury.

Gotteschalchus punished and imprisoned.

This Sentence, which was pronounced against him, was executed with the utmost severity, for he was whipped in the presence of the Emperor Charles, and the Bishops, till he cast out of his own Hand, into the Fire, a Book, wherein he made a Collection of such Texts of Scripture, and Testimonies of the Fathers, as proved his Opinion; after which he was kept close Prisoner in the Monastery of Hautevilliers in the Diocess of Rheims. Nevertheless, Hincmarus, that he might induce him to change his Opinion, sent him a Writing, in which he explained those places of the Fathers on which he grounded it, and proved, that God indeed knows them that shall be reprobated for their Sins, but hath predestinated no Man to Evil; and that his Prescience is not the cause of any Man's ruin. He sent him also a second Instruction, but could not remove him from it.

Two Confessions of Faith made by Gotteschalcus.

Hincmarus also wrote to Prudentius Bishop of Troyes, an Account of what had passed in the Judgment given against him, and consulted that Bishop what he ought to do in case Gotteschalcus should continue obstinate, whether he should deprive him of the use of Divine Service and the Communion. What answer Prudentius gave to these Questions is not known, but about the same time Gotteschalcus composed two Confessions of Faith, one more long, in which he confesseth, that God hath not predestinated any Man to

Of Grace and Predestination.

Sin, or Evil, but to Good only, which is of two sorts, viz. The Rewards of his Favour, and the Effects of his Justice; That he hath freely predestinated his Elect to Life Eternal, and also hath predestinated the Devils and Reprobates to Eternal Death. He grounds this Doctrine upon Consequences taken from Holy Scripture, and Assertions of the Fathers, chiefly of St. Austine, Gregory, Fulgentius, and Isidore. That this Predestination is but one in it self, though it hath respect to two Objects, as Charity towards God and our Neighbour is the same Charity in two parts. To prove himself no Heretick, he brings a Definition of an Heretick out of St. Cassiodorus, viz. He is a Person, saith this Author, who either out of Ignorance, or Contempt of the Law of God, defends a new Error, or follows an old one. He affirms, that he holds nothing but what is agreeable to the Doctrine of Holy Scripture and the Ancients; and consequently, the Definition of an Heretick doth not touch him. He doubts not but he can prove the Truth of his Doctrine in an Ecclesiastical Assembly, if he could be so happy as to have the liberty given him, not only by his Discourses, but also by casting himself into scalding Water, Pitch, or flaming Oyl, without suffering any harm. He explains himself more clearly in his shorter Confession of Faith, declaring, that God hath not predestinated the Devils, and Wicked Men to Damnation, but for their Sins, which he foresees that they will commit. [These two Confessions are published by Bishop Usher, in his History of Gotteschalcus. Dublin, 1631. Hanov. 1662].

Hincmarus also wrote a Treatise in defence of his Opinion, to the Monks and Recluses of his own Dioceſs, against the Opinion of Gotteschalcus. † Ratramnus a Monk of Corby, finding some things in it that deserved a Confutation, wrote a Letter against that Treatise. Prudentius Bishop of Troyes wrote also a Book, in which he explains his Sense of the Questions of his time, and sent it with a Letter, which served instead of a Preface to Hincmarus Archbishop of Rheims, and Pardulus Bishop of Laon. He attributes much to the Authority of St. Austine in these Matters, and in the body of his Book, he sets down a Collection of several passages to that purpose out of him and other Fathers. He doth not disagree from Gotteschalcus's Opinion concerning Predestination, declaring notwithstanding, that God is not the Author of Sin, and that he damns no body but for their Crimes, which deserve so great a punishment. He follows also the Principles of St. Austine about Grace, Free-will, and God's Will to save all Men. This Writing was sent to Hincmarus and Pardulus, after the Council held at Paris about the end of the year 849, in which this Matter was mentioned, but not debated, or determined in a full Council; nevertheless the part, which the Bishops began then to abet, made it so famous, that Charles the Bald being at Bourges on his return from the Siege of Thoulouse, would have it cleared, and gave Order to Lupus Abbot of Ferrara, and Ratramnus Monk of Corby, to write upon that Subject. Hincmarus, for his part, wrote about it toward Easter in 850, to Rabanus Archbishop of Mentz, who had engaged in this Contest. He sent him the Treatise which he had written to the Monks of his Dioceſs against Gotteschalcus, with the Writings of some other Authors, which seemed to favour him, and among them the Books of Prudentius Bishop of Troyes. Rabanus having seen them, would not undertake to answer the Testimonies alledged by that Bishop, but collected some Texts of Scripture, and Sayings of the Fathers, about Predestination, to prove that the Word Predestination was never taken in an ill Sense; That God inclines no Man to Evil; That He is not the Author of our Damnation; That he doth not in a proper sense harden the Heart of a Man, but only permits it to be hardened, either by his own sinful actions, or by the malice of the Devil; That he made not Death; That he repents not for the Destruction of the Angels; That he would have all men to be saved. In the conclusion, he advises Hincmarus to hinder men from debating such sort of Questions, which may cause much scandal among the Faithful, and not to suffer Gotteschalchus either to write or teach. He wonders that that Monk should be allowed to write, who is culpable both in Practice and Doctrine. He advises him to suffer him no longer to write, or dispute for the future, till he hath retracted, and much disapproves of their letting him enjoy Communion. He accuses him of Obstinacy and Pride, and looks upon him as incorrigible. He reproves him for wishing that he might pass through Vessels of scalding Water, Pitch, or flaming Oyl, and says he never heard the like; That it was to tempt God; That he could not endure that punishment if it were ordained for him, and therefore 'tis a great piece of presumption to wish for it, and desire it.

† Or Bertram.

The Writings of Hincmarus, Bertram and Rabanus, about Predestination.

Nevertheless Lupus Servatus, which I do not believe to be a different Person from the Abbot of Ferrara, who was consulted about the Questions of the Times, 1. by Gotteschalchus; 2. By Hincmarus; and lastly, by Charles the Bald; made a Book to clear the three Questions which Gotteschalchus had propounded to the Council of Mentz, about Free-will, Predestination to Evil, and about the Death of Jesus Christ for all men; in which Treatise he lays down, and proves these Principles and Doctrines; That God, who only is immutable, hath made Spiritual Creatures subject to change, who may do either Good or Evil. This appears in the Fall of the Angels, who being created Good, fell into Sin by the depravation of their Nature, whereas others of them adhering voluntarily to God, have received this as the Reward of their Fidelity, That they can't fall from their Happiness. That Man who is compounded of a Material Body and Spiritual Soul, was created in a State of Happiness, exempted from Death, and perfectly free; That he could do good by making use of the assistance of God's Grace, and sin by abandoning of it, but having sinned freely, he is under an unavoidable necessity of Dying, and subject to the irregular Motions of Concupiscence. That the whole Nature of Man hath been corrupted by the Sin of the first Man, and all descended of him are fallen with him. That Men have some sort of freedom, but can't choose that which is good but by the assistance of the Grace of Jesus Christ. That our Liberty only inclines us to Evil, and so we may ruin our selves, but no Man can save himself, or free himself from the power of Sin, but by the help of Jesus Christ. That they that are damned, are so by Gods Justice; and they that are saved, are so by his gracious Mercy, because by the Sin of the first Man, we all deserve Damnation, and that no Man could escape it, if God did not save him through pure Mercy; tho' we must not enquire, why God shews Mercy on some and not on others; that he could do so to all, but it is his good Pleasure to save some, and leave others in the Mass of Perdition: That when he says in Scripture that he will have all Men to be saved, it ought to be understood only of those that are actually saved. That the Word All is capable of exceptions, and may mean all sorts of Men; That Predestination is gratuitous, and not upon the account of our Merits. That it is in pursuance of this Election, that God gives his Grace to some, by which they are able and sedulous to do good, and leaves others to their corrupt wills by not assisting them. That he is not the Author of the Evil Men do, but Man ought to impute it to himself, or rather to the Devil, who leads him into it. That God foresees both good and evil, but he predestines nothing but the good, that he only suffers the evil and punisheth it; That what God hath predestined shall infallibly fall out, but that his Predestination imposeth no necessity; That no Christian ought to think himself of the number of the Reprobate, Men ought to labour to live well, that their punishment may be the less. He passes over slightly the Question about Predestination to Damnation. He confesses that he meets not with that Word used in that Sense in Holy Scripture, and that the great Lights of the Church abhor that expression, for fear Men should think God hath made his Creatures to punish them, and that he unjustly condemns Persons, who have no Power to avoid Sin or Damnation. That nevertheless it happens, that as God hath ordained the punishments which are consequent upon the Sin of the First Man, so he hath ordained the punishment of Sinners, yet so as they themselves are the Authors of their own Damnation. That since Men agree in the Matter, they should not quarrel about the Words and Expressions, seeking to get an unprofitable Victory. Lastly, he passeth to the 3*d*. Question concerning the Extent of the Redemption of Jesus Christ, which he calls the Measure of his Blood. He sets down and approves of the Expressions of Scripture, which import, that Jesus Christ died for all Men, and hath redeemed all, but he says, that they ought to be understood as he hath explained them, in which it is said, He will have all Men to be saved. He adds, that it may be said as a probability, that he died for all, that are in his Church, and receive the Sacraments, whether they be in the number of the Elect, or Reprobate. He says, that some Men condemn this Opinion of Blasphemy; that he himself should be of that Judgment, and should believe that God punishes some of the Reprobate the less for the Merits of Jesus Christ, but that the Apostle speaking of the Merits of Jesus Christ, that they are of no worth to those that are circumcised, it seems reasonable to believe that the Death of Jesus Christ is of no worth to those that are indeed baptized, but relapse and die in their Sins and Infidelity; That nevertheless, that he may not render himself odious to them who hold that Jesus Christ died not only for the Good, but also for Sinners, he sets down a Passage of St. Chrysostome, which seems to favour that Opinion, and may unite all divided Minds about that Matter. Jesus Christ, saith that Excellent Bishop, by his Doctrine and Holiness died for all, not only for the Faithful, but all the World, if all do not believe he hath done whatever was requisite on his part to save them. After these Remarks Lupus concludes, leaving every one to their liberty to choose what Opinion they judge truest. He confirms his Opinion, which he laid down in this Treatise, by a Collection of Passages out of St. Austine, St. Jerome, and some others of the Fathers upon these three Questions. [This Treatise of Lupus is extant, printed by Sirmondus in Holland, 1648, and 1650, and with the rest of his Works at Paris, 1664.]

Lupus's Treatise upon the three Questions.

After Lupus had composed this Tract, he sent a Letter to Hincmarus and Pardulus, which contained an Abridgment Lupus's Letter to Hincmarus and Pardulus.

Of Grace and Predestination.

ment of his Doctrine. In it he says, that the truest Opinion is, that Predestination in regard to the Elect is a Preparative Grace, and in respect to the Wicked is a withdrawing of the same Grace; that all Men are born in a State of Damnation, and God takes such out of that State, as he pleaseth by his Mercy, and leaves others in it by his Justice. So that it is true that God predestines those he hardens, not by impelling them into Sin, but by not keeping them from it; That this Predestination doth necessitate neither the Good nor Evil, because both have a Freedom of Will, which excludes a fatal Necessity; that the Elect, who receive from God the Power to will and to do, do freely perform all that conduceth to their Salvation, and the Reprobate who are forsaken by God, do voluntarily, and not against their Wills, those Actions which deserve Eternal Punishment; that no Man is so silly, as to say, that there is a Necessity, where the Will hath a Command, although it be assisted by the Grace of God, or left by his just Judgment. But as to Infants, who dye before they come to the Use of Reason, it cannot be said that their Will hath a Part in their Salvation, or Damnation, because they are either saved by the Grace of Baptism, or damned by the Sin of the first Man. [This Letter is among his Epistles printed by Massonus at Paris, 1588. and in the forementioned Edition of all his Works.]

It is easie to see, that this Author, although he was of St. Austine's Judgment, yet manages his Expressions so warily, that he may offend neither side, but bring them to an Agreement, but it happened to him, as it ordinarily does to them that are Mediators for Peace, though they carry themselves never so wisely and cautiously, and have often Reason on their side, they are disliked by both Parties at Variance. Gotteschalcus, a very rough and severe Man, blamed the Mildness which Lupus Servatus had used, and the moderate Expressions which he had brought. That Man, saith he, in a Letter written to Ratramnus, is so cautious and moderate, and hath so cunningly answered the 3. Questions of which he speaks in his Book, that he agrees not throughly with either Party. Hincmarus and Pardulus were not better satisfied, but accused him of Opinions unworthy of the Mercy and Goodness of God, which forced him to write his Letter to Charles the Bald, to explain his Judgment more clearly in that Dispute. It contains an Abridgment of his former Treatise concerning the Fall of all Men in Adam, concerning the Election which God is pleased to make of some; concerning Predestination and Reprobation; concerning the Assistance which God is pleased to give Men through his mere Mercy; concerning the just Desertion of the Wicked; concerning the Loss of Man's Free-will to do Good; concerning the Efficaciousness of Grace, and the Death of Jesus Christ for all Men. Which last Article he explains more largely, for after he hath cited some Passages of St. Austine to prove, that when he says, that Christ died for all Men, he ought to be understood of those only that are saved; he opposeth the Saying of St. Chrysostome, against them, but we must observe, that he is not of his Judgment, by taking notice, that he saith with all due Respect to him, that he did not well understand that Place of Scripture, and that he hath not proved his Opinion by any Testimony. Lastly, he rejects the Authority of Faustus, as a Bishop who was in an Error, and says, that we must keep to the Judgment of St. Austine, St. Jerome, and other Fathers, commended by Pope Gelasius, and advises the Emperor to call a Council of Learned Men about these Questions, who may examine whether he speaks Reason, or no. [This Letter is also extant in the fore-mentioned Editions of his Works.]

Lupus's Letter to Charles the Bald.

At the same time Ratramnus, a Monk of Corby, who had also been consulted by the Emperor about these famous Questions, composed a Treatise of Predestination divided into two Books. The first contains a Collection of Passages out of the Fathers, that all that is done in this World, is done by the Order and Direction of God's Providence. That although he be not indeed the Cause of the Crimes, and Sins of Wicked Men, yet they are also subject to the Order of Providence, and serve for the Execution of his Will. That God hath foreseen from all Eternity what shall befall the Good and Evil, the Elect and Reprobate. That the Predestination of the Saints is the Effect of his Mercy, and the Number of the Elect can neither be increased, nor diminished, nor altered. That all the holy Thoughts and good Actions of the Saints, by which they acquire themselves Happiness, are the Effect of the mere Grace of God. That our Free-will is too weak to do any good, unless it be strengthened by the Grace of God, which helps us to do good. That this Grace operates in us to will and to do, and that it is necessary for the Beginning of Faith and Prayer. In the second he treats of the Predestination of Sinners, and speaks by the by of the Predestination of the Elect. He shews by the Testimonies of St. Austine, Fulgentius, and other Fathers, that God hath not predestined Sinners to Sin, but to the Punishment of their Sins, and eternal Torments. He rejects the Distinction of those who say, That eternal Punishment was ordained and appointed for Sinners, but they were not predestined to it. He maintains that this Predestination did not impose a Necessity of Sinning upon any Man, though those that are elected by the mere Mercy of God, shall be infallibly saved; and those whom God leaves in the Mass of Perdition, shall be infallibly damned for their Sins which they voluntarily commit. He adds, that we ought to attribute all the Good we do to God, and all the Evil we do to our selves, because God never inclines us to do evil, but only leaves us to the Motions of our Wills. At the End of these Books Ratramnus prays the Emperor not to publish them, before these Questions be fully examined and cleared, that they might know which Opinion to follow. He adds, That if this Book displeaseth the Emperor, that he would correct it, or shew him what Corrections he would have made in it, [This Treatise is published by Mauguinus in Collect. Script. Tom. 1. p. 29. and in Biblioth. Patr. Tom. 15. p. 442.]

Ratramnus or Bertramus's Treatise about Predestination.

Of Grace and Predestination.

The Emperor gave these two Books of Lupus and Ratramnus, to Hincmarus and Pardulus to examine them, who opposed them to Amalarius, a Deacon of Treves, and Joannes Erigina Scotus, whom they had ordered to write upon this Subject. We have not the Work of Amalarius, but only that of Joannes Scotus, which, according to the Genius of that Author, is full of Scholastick Subtleties and Distinctions. He begins with this Position, That every Question may be resolved by four general Rules of Philosophy, viz. Division, Definition, Demonstration, and Analysis, and the rest of his Work is not less Logical, for although he cites several Passages of St. Austine, yet he chiefly proves his Assertions by Scholastical Reasons and Arguments. He rejects the double Predestination, and proves that Predestination doth not impose any Necessity. He maintains, That Man is absolutely free after the Sin of Adam, and that although he cannot do Good without the Grace of Jesus Christ, yet he doth it without being constrained to it, or forced by the Will of God, by his own free Choice. He adds, that Sin, and the Consequence of it, the Punishments with which it is rewarded, being mere Privations, are neither foreseen nor predestined by God. That Predestination hath no Place but in those things which God hath pre-ordered in order to Eternal Happiness, and supposeth, that this Predestination ariseth from the Foresight of the good Use of our Free-will. To prove what he had asserted, That Eternal Punishments are mere Privations, he affirms, That the Torments of the Damned are nothing but Privations of Happiness, or the Trouble of being deprived of it; so that according to him Material Fire is no Part of the Damned's Torments. That there is no other Fire prepared for them but the fourth Element, through which the Bodies of all Men must pass, but that the Bodies of the Elect are changed into an Æthereal Nature, and are not subject to the Power of Fire, whereas on the contrary the Bodies of the Wicked are changed into Air, and suffer Torments by the Fire because of their contrary Qualities; and for this Reason 'tis that the Dæmons, who had a Body of an Æthereal Nature, were massed with a Body of Air, that they may feel the Fire. Thus did Philosophy lead this Author to many wild and extravagant Notions and Opinions. [This Piece is put out by Mauguinus in his Vind. Prædest. & Gratiæ Tom. 1. p. 103.

Scotus's Book about Predestination.

Wenilo or Ganelo, Archbishop of Sens, having read this Work, gathered out of it several Propositions, which he put under 19. Heads, according to the Number and Order of the Chapters of Scotus's Work, and sent them to Prudentius Bishop of Troyes, who having read them, found, as he thought, not only the Errors of Pelagius in them, but also the Impiety of the Collyridians. Whereupon he composed a Book to confute him, in the Preface of which he accuses John Scotus of following of Pelagius, Cælestius, and Julian, to resist the Grace of Jesus Christ, and the Justice of God, to deny Original Sin, and many other Blasphemous Doctrines. Yet John Scotus did not deny Original Sin, and acknowledged the Necessity of Grace in his Work, but Prudentius thought he found such Principles in it, as seemed to abet the Doctrine of Pelagius. Prudentius answered John Scotus's Book Chapter by Chapter, and opposed the Judgment and Authority of the Fathers to his false Reasonings. [The 19 Heads gathered out of Scotus's Book, are printed in Bishop Usher's History of Gotteschalcus, chap. 19.]

Prudentius's Work against Scotus.

After he hath rejected his Method of deciding all things by the four Rules of Logick, and shew'd, that Questions of Divinity are not so to be handled, he confutes Scotus's Opinion of Predestination, Free-will, and the Punishment of the Damned, and proves the contrary Opinion. He distinguishes Predestination from Prescience, and shews that Prescience extends to Sin, but not Predestination. He distinguishes Predestination into two Sorts, the one by which God hath freely predestined the Elect to Grace and Glory, the other by which he hath destined the Wicked, whose Sins he foresees, to Eternal Damnation. He proves that Man, since the Fall, hath not a full Liberty and Power to do Good, and that he cannot do it, not only without the Grace of Jesus Christ, but that his Grace excites, impels, and enables him to do it. He maintains, that no Man affirms that

Of Grace and Predeſtination.

Grace wholly deſtroys Free-will, or that Predeſtination impoſes any Neceſſity upon Men, but he obſerves, that Free-will is nothing elſe but a voluntary Choice, and unconſtrained acting of the Mind. He, in the laſt place, decides the extravagant Opinions of Scotus about the Torments of the Damned, and propounds the Doctrine of the Church and Fathers, who acknowledge, that Damnation conſiſts not only in the Privation of Happineſs, but Tortures of Fire. [This Confutation of Scotus's Book by Prudentius is extant in Maugninus's Vindic. Gratiæ, Tom. 2. p. 191. and ſome Parts of it are in Biſhop Uſher's Hiſt. of Gott. c. 8. & 11.]

Florus's Writings againſt Scotus.

The ſame Extracts of Scotus's Book being ſent to the Church of Lyons, they employed one of their Deacons, named Florus, to write againſt him. This Deacon ſome time before delivering his Opinion concerning Predeſtination, ſaid in his Diſcourſe, That God hath freely predeſtinated the Elect to Grace and Glory, but he only foreſees the Crimes and Sins of the Reprobate, and afterwards ordains, and predeſtines them to Damnation; and concerning Free-will, that 'tis ſo much weakened by the Sin of the firſt Man, that it can do no good Thing unleſs it be enlightned, and ſtrengthned by the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt. The ſame Doctrine he teaches us in his Tract againſt Scotus, and lays down a two-fold Predeſtination, or rather Predeſtination under a two-fold Reſpect. 1. A gratuitous Predeſtination of the Elect to Grace and Glory, and a Predeſtination of the Reprobate to Damnation, for their Sins which they commit by their own Free-will; and maintains, that tho' our Free-will can chooſe that which is good, yet it never would chooſe, or do it, if it were not aſſiſted by the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt. And to explain this, he makes uſe of the Compariſon of a ſick Man, of whom we may ſay, that he may recover his Health, although he hath need of Phyſick to reſtore it; or of a dead Man, that he may be raiſed, but by the Divine Power. In like Manner, ſaith he, the Free-will being diſtempered and dead, by the Sin of the firſt Man, may be revived, but not by its own Vertue, but by the Grace and Power of God, who hath Pity on it, which Florus underſtands not only of that Grace, which is neceſſary for Actions, but of that alſo which is neceſſary to ſeek Converſion by Prayer, and begin to do well: Hitherto neither Prudentius, nor the Church of Lyons, nor any other Author, had declared themſelves for Gotteſchalcus. They contented themſelves in thus treating upon the Queſtion, without engaging on either ſide. Florus, who in his firſt Diſcourſe thought him much to blame, ſeems to doubt in his Anſwer to Scotus, where in the 4th. Chapter he ſays, That he knows not how that unhappy Monk was condemned and impriſoned; adding, That if he was really guilty of Hereſie, as he is accuſed, it were juſt, that according to the Cuſtom of the Church, all the Churches of the Kingdom ſhould be acquainted with his Condemnation, and the Cauſe why he was condemned. [This Treatiſe is extant in Maugnin's Vind. Gratiæ at Paris, 1650. p. 575. and in the Biblioth. Patr. Tom. 8.]

Amolo's Letters to Gotteſchalcus.

Nevertheleſs, Amolo Archbiſhop of Lyons wrote a Letter to Gotteſchalcus about the ſame time, in which it appears, that he thought him faulty. In the Beginning of it, he gives him the Title of Moſt Dear Brother, (although he ſays, he knew him an Enemy to Brotherly Unity) becauſe Chriſtian Charity ought not to ceaſe nor be cooled, even towards thoſe that are our Enemies. He tells him, that he loves him moſt heartily, and wiſhes as well to him as to himſelf; But he ſays, that having read and examined his Writings, which he had ſent him by a Brother, he had diſputed with himſelf a long time whether he ſhould anſwer him, becauſe he had been accuſed a long time of dangerous Attempts againſt the Church, and had ſtill held his Opinion, although he was condemned by the Authority of a Council for his Obſtinacy; That he was afraid leſt he ſhould be thought imprudent in holding Correſpondence by Letters with a Perſon who had been condemned by his Brethren; but on the other ſide, he took himſelf obliged by Chriſtian Charity, to anſwer his Requeſt. Laſtly, That being convinced by the Admonition which Jeſus Chriſt propounds in the Parable of the Samaritan, that it is our Duty to comfort our Brethren in Affliction, and to have ſuch a ſincere Charity towards our Brethren, as to live in Unity, and communicate one with another in all Offices and Services of Love; after he had begged God's Grace to enable him to give him neceſſary Comforts and Inſtructions, and to fit his Mind to receive them with Meekneſs and Humility, he looked upon himſelf to be under Obligations to anſwer him. And firſt of all, he adviſes him to be of a peaceable and ſubmiſſive Spirit. He tells him, That he had heard with Grief, that he had begun to ſpread abroad his new Doctrines, and to raiſe Diſputes about unprofitable Queſtions in Germany. That ſince he had ſeen one of his Writings, in which he explains his Opinion at length, and endeavours to prove it by the Teſtimonies of the Fathers, and Holy Scripture. And laſtly, That he had lately received a Writing of his directed to the Biſhops, or rather made againſt the Biſhops who were concerned in his Condemnation. That by his Writings he perceived, that his Tenents were dangerous; ſo that he thought he could not do a better Piece of Service, than to ſet down in ſhort thoſe Propoſitions that ſeemed contrary to the Doctrine of the Church, and confute them by Scripture, and the Judgment of the Church. That he ought to keep firmly to that Doctrine, if he will be one of the living Members of Jeſus Chriſt. That he did not ſend this Work directly to him, becauſe he was excommunicated, but to his Metropolitan, that he being moved with Compaſſion toward him, may admit him again into the Unity of the Church upon the abjuring of his Errors. After this Preface he ſaith, that this Propoſition which he hath delivered diſpleaſeth him. That all thoſe that are redeemed by the Blood of Chriſt cannot periſh; becauſe he ſays, 'twill then follow, that either no Man that is baptized can be damned; or, that thoſe who are baptized, and regenerate by Baptiſm, and yet afterward periſh, are not truly baptized, nor redeemed by the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt; now both are falſe, and contrary to the Scripture, and Faith of the Church. In the ſecond Place, he is angry that he is perſuaded that the Holy, and True Sacraments of the Church, Exorciſm, Baptiſm, Confirmation, Unction, and the Euchariſt, are given to no purpoſe, to thoſe that are in the Number of the Reprobate, becauſe they are not redeemed by the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, without which the Sacraments are no better than uſeleſs Ceremonies. He maintains, that they do effectually work upon thoſe that do not perſevere. In the third Place, he can't approve that which he holds, That Infants and adult Perſons, who are baptized, but are not of the Number of the Elect, are not true Members of the Church of Jeſus Chriſt. In the fourth Place, he doth not like his Words, where ſpeaking of Predeſtination, he ſaith, That the Devils and Reprobates are predeſtined to Damnation, ſo that none of them can be ſaved. He affirms, That this is an horrible Blaſphemy againſt God, and an Impiety that makes Sin neceſſary. That God, indeed, foreſees the Sins of Devils and wicked Men, without which they would be neceſſitated; and that he hath not deſtined them to eternal Puniſhments but upon the Previſion of their Sins, which he knew they would commit freely. Fifthly, He abhors the Propoſition delivered by Gotteſchalcus, that the Damned are as infallibly, and irrevocably predeſtined to Damnation, as God is Infallible and Immutable: And he laughs at that which he adds, That the Biſhops ought to exhort the Reprobate to pray, that tho' their Damnation is irrevocable, yet their Torments may be leſs. Sixthly, He can't endure what he hath ſaid, That God and his Saints rejoyce at the eternal Condemnation of the Reprobates. He ſays, That God rejoyces in their Deſtruction, but not for it; That he rejoyces not in their Evil doing, but in the Exaltation of his own Juſtice. Laſtly, He condemns his Behaviour toward the Biſhops, by railing at them, contemning them, and calling them, that are not of his Judgment, Hereticks and Rabaniſts. He chides him for being unconcerned at the Separation of the Church which he had ſuffered a long time, for exalting himſelf againſt his Spiritual Fathers the Biſhops, for ſubmitting to no Authority, nor deſiring a peaceable Deciſion of the Controverſy in hand with Humility, and for thinking himſelf the only Perſon enlightned and inſpired by God to confirm the Truth. He exhorts, adviſes, and conjures him to reflect upon himſelf, return from his Errors to the Church, and ſubmit himſelf to the Biſhops; and gives him, with a fatherly Goodneſs, ſuch other Councils as were proper for him to follow. [This Epiſtle is printed by Maugnin in Collect. Script. 9. Seculi, Tom. 2. and with his other Works, at the End of Agobardus's Works put out by Baluzius at Paris, 1666.]

Of Grace and Predeſtination.

Some have pretended, that this Writing of Gotteſchalcus, which Amolo confutes in his Letter, was forged by Hincmarus, whom they accuſe of this Forgery, but they have no Proof of it, and the two Conjectures upon which they ground the Accuſation are too weak to raiſe any Credit upon, ſo that 'twould be a very raſh thing to condemn ſo illuſtrious an Archbiſhop of ſo ſcandalous a Crime without better Proofs, eſpecially ſince we do not find any of the Favourers of Gotteſchalcus to have laid any ſuch thing to his Charge. It is moſt reaſonable for us to believe, that Gotteſchalcus compoſed this Writing privately, and ſent it to Amolo Archbiſhop of Lyons, ſuppoſing that that Church would be more favourable to him, becauſe it was of St. Auſtine's Judgment about Predeſtination and Grace; but ſince he ſtrain'd his Opinions to too high and faulty a Pitch, and drew hard and unwarrantable Conſequences from them, 'tis no wonder that Amolo gave him ſuch an Anſwer, which is written with all the inſinuating Art poſſible to appeaſe Hincmarus, and oblige this Monk to make him Satisfaction. There is another ſmall Piece, which is annexed to this Letter to Gotteſchalcus, which is thought to be a Fragment of the Letter written at the ſame time to Hincmarus, in which he treats of Grace and Predeſtination. In it he teaches us to believe, that 'tis Grace by which Men are ſaved, which is not given them according to their Merits, but through the pure and free Mercy of God, which moves them to Good not by Neceſſity, but by their Will and Love. That this Grace is given to Infants in their Baptiſm, to adult Perſons, and all the

Of Grace and Predestination.

the Faithful, in all their Actions, Thoughts and Words that are good, because there is no Good but is the Gift of God: That his Prescience is certain, and that he foresees how all things will come to pass; so that the Number of the Elect is known to him, and cannot be changed. That the Predestination of the Just is of free Mercy, and is not done in Consideration of their Merits, but that he hath justified and sanctified by his Grace in time, all those who have been predestinated from all Eternity through his meer Mercy, that they may be holy and just. That Perseverance is a Gift of God; that our Free-will is so much weakened by Sin, that it can't raise it self to the Love of Truth and Justice, if it be not excited, healed and strengthened by the Grace which frees it. He adds, That this Doctrine needs not cast us into Despair, but gives us Confidence in the Mercy of God; That that which is found in St. Austine, and some other Fathers, that God hath predestinated the Wicked to Damnation, and eternal Death, ought not to be understood as tho' God constrained them by his Power, or Predestination, to be Sinners, and so damned, but in this Sense, That God hath ordain'd by his just Judgment eternal Punishments, for those that he foresaw would continue in the Mass of Perdition by the Sin of Adam, or who would make themselves subject to Damnation by their own voluntary Sins. [This Fragment of Amolo's Epistle is also extant in the forementioned Edition of Agobardus.]

Hincmarus's Letter to the Church of Lyons.

Hincmarus seeing Amolo thus in a Manner to condemn Gotteschalcus, thought it convenient to write to the Church of Lyons upon that Subject. Whereupon he wrote a Letter to him, giving him an Account after what Manner Gotteschalcus was judged and condemned in two Councils, and comprises his Doctrine under five chief Heads. 1. That God hath predestined from all Eternity, those whom he pleaseth to the Kingdom of Heaven, or eternal Damnation. 2. That they that are predestined to eternal Death can't be saved, and those that are predestined to eternal Glory can't be damned. 3. That God will not have all Men to be saved, and that the Apostles Words ought to be understood only of those that are saved. 4. That Jesus Christ came not to save all Men; that he hath not suffered for all Men, but for those only who are saved by the Mystery of his Passion. 5. That since the Fall of Man, no Man can keep himself safe by his own Free-will from the Commission of Sin. Pardulus Bishop of Laon, wrote also to the Church of Lyons upon the same Subject, telling them, that of those six Persons who had written upon these Questions, none of them had sufficiently cleared them. Some join to these Letters one of Rabanus's written to Nonigus. [Pardulus's Letter to the Church of Lyons is not extant.]

The Answer of the Church of Lyons to Hincmarus by Remigius.

When these Letters were carried to Lyons, Remigius, who succeeded Amolo in the Archbishoprick of Lyons, wrote, in the Name of his Church, an Answer to three Letters that were brought him. He abandons Gotteschalcus, and condemns the Rashness and Temerity of that unhappy Monk, but defends the Opinion of St. Austine about Predestination and Grace; and after he hath produced seven Rules, and several Passages of the Holy Fathers, to prove that the Prescience and Predestination of God are infallible, he concludes, that none of those whom God hath predestined from all Eternity to his Glory, through his free Goodness, shall perish; and none of those, whom God hath predestined to eternal Death, through his just Judgment, having foreseen their Sin, shall be saved, not that they are unavoidably sentenced to Damnation, by the Power of God, but because they deserve it by the Malignity of their Will, which is unconquerable, and unchangeable. This was the Sense of Remigius, upon two of the Propositions which Hincmarus reproved Gotteschalcus for. Concerning the third, which respected the Will of God to save all Men, he says, That 'twas a difficult Doctrine to resolve; but 'tis certain, that all are not saved, and that all that God wills shall come to pass. How then can he will all Men should be saved, when 'tis plain all Men are not? He finds this Difficulty resolved four ways in the Writings of the Fathers. 1. They say, that All is put in that Place for all Sorts of Persons. 2. For all those that are saved, because there is none saved but by him. 3. Because he inspires his Servants with Desires and Wishes, that all Men should be saved. 4. That he will have all Men to be saved, as Creator, because he hath given them a Will by which they may be saved, if they please. He saith, that this last Explication hath many Difficulties attending it, because God doth not expect the Will of Man to save them, but prevents them with his Grace. Yet he confesses, that according to some Fathers, it may be said, that God, as Creator, would have all Men to be saved, but at the same time, as he is Judge, he will not have them saved who dye in their Sins, either Original or Actual. So that 'tis not true, that God doth not accomplish his Will that he hath, that all Men should be saved, because of the Opposition of Man's Will to his, but because he will not have it fulfilled himself, that he may punish their Sins. He adds, that these things are so obscure and intricate, that he is not willing to contend much about them, nor define them rashly, but contents himself to hold what is certain, without engaging in these fruitless Disputes. Nor is he more willing to deliver his Opinion rashly about the 4th. Question concerning Christ's dying for all Men, but would search diligently in the Scripture what he ought to believe. Wherefore, after he has recited several Texts which prove that Jesus Christ died for the Redemption of Men and of the World, he saith, that in the Order of Reconciliation, the first Men are the Elect, of whom none can perish. The second are the Faithful, who have received their Baptism sincerely, and whose Sins are pardoned by Grace, but do not persevere. The third are such as yet remain in their Infidelity, but shall soon be called through the Mercy of God. The fourth are those that will remain always in their Infidelity, and shall not receive Grace, either for a time, or in the end. He acknowledges and proves, by the Authority of the Fathers, that Jesus Christ died for the three first, but maintains, that properly speaking, he died not for the Wicked, who were Dead before his coming, without the Knowledge of the true Religion, nor for Infidels, which are born since, or shall be born in future Ages. He adds, nevertheless, that he finds some Fathers, who assert that Jesus Christ died for those Infidels that were never baptized, nor converted; which Expression, he says, may be tolerated for Peace sake, though it be not exact nor true. That Men ought not to condemn one another in Questions of this Nature, because there may be some things which we know not because of our Ignorance. Concerning the last Proposition, he says, that he much wonders that any Man should hold, that since the Fall of Adam Men can't use their Free-will to do Good. He says, if they had added, Without Grace, the Proposition had been Orthodox, but to say it in general, as supposing that Grace alone does all the Good we do, is a Proposition which he never heard of before nor understood, and which the Hereticks themselves never yet asserted. He owns, That the Free-will may be said to be dead and perished by the Sin of the first Man, provided it be not meant, that the Nature and Essence of the Will is perished, but that the Good which is in the Will, i. e. the Faculty of inclining it self to Good, and that it hath need of the immediate Grace of Jesus Christ to incline it to Good. Remigius Archbishop of Lyons, after he hath thus treated of the Doctrine contain'd in the Letter of Hincmarus, passes to the Judgment and Person of Gotteschalcus. He finds fault, that he was first of all condemned by the Abbots and Monks, which were of the Council, to undergo their regular Discipline, and afterwards was judged by the Bishops. He says, That according to the ancient Usage, since he was accused of Heresie, he ought to have been judged by the Bishops only. He complains of the Cruelty with which their Sentence was executed. And as to the Heads of his Doctrine related by Hincmarus, he says, That the first and second were agreeable to the Doctrine of the Church and Fathers; that the 3d. and 4th. were not to be condemned; and as to the 5th. if it were true that he asserted it in those Terms, it deserves to be condemned. In fine, That he deserved to be condemned for his Imprudence and Troublesomeness, for his Talkativeness and Inconstancy: That nevertheless they ought not for all that to condemn the Truth, nor use him with so much Severity and Cruelty as they had done. Then he confutes what Hincmarus had said concerning the Will of God to save all Men, against the Predestination of the Wicked to Damnation, and concerning Free-will. He also answers the Letters of Pardulus and Rabanus. This Answer was accompanied with another small Treatise from Remigius, intitled, A Resolution of the Question, in which he endeavours to confirm the Principle of St. Austine; That all the Generation of Mankind is corrupted by the Sin of Adam, and subject to Damnation, of whom some are chosen through mere Mercy, others left through just Judgment, the one are elected through the free Mercy of God to Glory, the other predestined for their own or the first Man's Sin to Damnation. [This Treatise of Remigius, with some other Tracts of his are extant in the Biblioth. Patrum, Tom. 15. and are put out by Mangnin in Collect. Script. de Pred. & Grat.

The Articles of Quiercy.

This Answer not being such an one as Hincmarus expected, he endeavoured to establish his Doctrine another way. Wherefore meeting at Quiercy, in his return from the Council of Soissons held in 853, with several Bishops and Abbots, he propounded four Heads of Doctrine to the Emperor, which were published by his Authority. The I. was, That there is no other Predestination but only to Life, by which God hath chosen out of the Mass of Perdition, into which all Men are fallen by the Sin of Adam, those whom he hath predestined by his Grace to Glory. And as to those whom he hath left in the State of Damnation, he foresaw that they would perish, but he hath not predestined them to Destruction, but only hath predestined the eternal Punishment which they have deserved. The II. is, That the Free-will which we have lost by the Sin of the first Man, is restored by Jesus Christ, and we have a full Power to do Good by the Assistance of his Grace, and to do Evil, being forsaken by it. The III. is, That God would have all Men without Exception to be saved, although they are not all saved. That those that are saved, are so by the Grace of Christ, and those that perish are damned for their own Sins. The IV. was, That Jesus Christ hath suffered for all Men, although all Men are not redeemed by the Mystery of his Passion, which doth not happen because the Price of Redemption is not great enough, or sufficient, but because they have not Faith, or not such a Faith as is saving, i. e. a Faith which worketh by Love.

Of Grace and Predestination.

These four Articles were signed by the Bishops and Abbots present at their Assembly, and if we may believe Hincmarus, were subscribed by Prudentius himself. But this Bishop repenting of what he had done, wrote to the Bishops assembled at Sens to choose a Bishop of Paris, that since he could not be present himself at that Synod, he had sent Arnoldus, a Priest, to whom he had given commission to subscribe to their Election of a Bishop, provided they would sign and approve these four Articles concerning Grace. 1. That the Free-will of Man which was lost by the disobedience of Adam, is so far restored by the Grace of Jesus Christ, that we cannot do, think, or desire any good thing without it. 2. That God hath predestinated some to Eternal Life through his mere Mercy, and others through his just Judgment to Damnation. 3. That the Blood of Jesus Christ was shed for them that believe on him, and not for those that do not believe. 4. That God saves all those he will have saved, and that no Man can be saved whom he will not have saved. 'Tis not known what effect this Letter had in the Council of Sens, but it is probable that it was read, but nothing was determined in that matter.

Prudentius's Letter to the Council of Sens.

The four Articles of Quiercy confuted by the Church of Lyons.

But the 4 Articles of Quiercy being sent to the Church of Lyons, the Archbishop examined them, and confuted them in a Book made on purpose, [intituled, A Censure of the Articles of Quiercy, or a Book proving that the Truth of Scripture is to be held, and the Judgments of the Holy Fathers followed.] In answer to the first Article, he finds fault with these Assertions; 1. That the first Man was free to do good, not mentioning the Divine Assistance, without which neither he nor the Angels themselves can do good; 2. That they speak of the Predestination of the Elect, as if it were made upon the account of their good Works foreseen; 3. That they deny, that God hath predestinated the Wicked to Damnation. Upon the 2d. Article he objects, 1. That they have spoken too succinctly and briefly about Free-will, having said nothing, but produced some Explications of the Fathers upon that point; 2. That they had asserted, that we have utterly lost our Free-will by the Sin of the first Man, though the Fathers acknowledge, that though it be weakened by that Sin, it still subsists in Man, but he can't use it well without the assistance of Grace. That all Men have naturally Judgment, Reason, and Understanding, by which they are able to distinguish that which is good from that which is evil, and that which is just from that which is unjust. That they also have a liberty of choosing good in some sort, but though the love they have to Humane Affairs, 'tis wholly carried upon the good of Society, Transactions of the World, and certain private Interests. Lastly, That in that respect we can do some good, but we can do nothing towards our Eternal Happiness but by the Inspiration and Motions of Grace. 3. He also reproves them in this Article for saying, that after Regeneration we have liberty of doing evil, as if we had it not before Regeneration. Concerning the 3d Article, which is about the Will of God to save all Men, part of his Remarks are lost, but by what remains we may see, that he disapproved their asserting of it so generally, and had rejected the Fathers Explications of it. In the last Article he reproves them for saying, 1. That there is no Man's Nature that is not healed by Jesus Christ, and asserts, that Jesus Christ did not assume the Humane Nature of necessity, but of his own good will, and that for the Elect; 2. He dislikes them for holding, that there is not, never was, nor shall be a Man for whom Christ died not. He confesses that he died for all that are baptized, and for the Righteous Men of the Old Testament, but denies, that he died for all Infidels which died before Christ's Nativity, for those who never received the Faith, or Infants dying without Baptism. He maintains, that Christ died for none, but for those for whom the Church prays, and mentions in their Holy Services after their Death. Lastly, he disapproves their comparison between Infidels that never received the Faith, and Christians, who though they have been baptized, die in their Sins. [This Confutation of Remigius of the Articles of Quiercy is extant with the Treatises last mentioned.]

The Canons of the Council of Valence about Grace.

Remigius Bishop of Lyons having thus confuted the Articles made at Quiercy by his own Writings, caused his Doctrine to be confirmed in a Council held at Valence, An. 855. made up of 14 Bishops of the Provinces of Lyons, Arles, and Vienne, in which the 3 Metropolitans presided, and Ebbo Bishop of Grenoble was present. They made 6 Canons in this Synod concerning Grace, Free-will, and Predestination. The first forbids all Novel Expressions about such Matters, and commands Men to follow the Doctrine of the Latin Fathers. In the 2d. they declare, that God hath foreseen from all Eternity all the Good which Righteous Men will do by his Grace, and all the Evil that Sinners will do by their own Malice; That the Righteous shall receive Eternal Life as a Reward of their good Actions, and the Wicked be condemned justly for their Crimes to Eternal Punishment. That this Prescience lays no necessity upon any Man, none being condemned but for their Original or actual Sins. In the 3d. the Bishops strongly assert the Predestination of good Men to Eternal Life, and of wicked Men to Eternal Death. Nevertheless after such a manner, as that in the Choice of them that shall be saved, the Mercy of God goes before their Works, but on the contrary in the Damnation of those that perish their Crimes go before the just Judgment of God, yet God hath predestinated no Man to sin by his own power, so that those that are predestinated are under necessity of being damned. The 4th. is about the Death of Jesus Christ, concerning which they think it sufficient to say, and confess sincerely, that Jesus Christ died for all those that believe in him. They reject the 4 Canons of Quiercy as idle, vain, and false, and condemn Scotus's Treatise as a silly Book. In the 5th. they assure all those that are Baptized and Regenerate, that they have a part in the Redemption of Jesus Christ, although afterward they loose the Innocency of Baptism, and are in the number of the Reprobate. Lastly, in the last they declare, that as concerning the Grace of Christ, by which Men are saved, and the Free-will of Man weakened by the Sin of Adam, but restored by the Grace of Jesus Christ, they do hold as the Holy Fathers have taught, what the Councils of Africa and Orange have decided, and what is held and maintained by the Bishops of the Apostolick See.

Of Grace and Predestination.

The Relation of what followed the Council of Valence about the Contest of Grace.

These Canons of the Council of Valence were presented to the Emperor Lotharius, the King of these Bishops who had made them, with the Treatise made upon that Subject by the Church of Lyons, and the Propositions of Scotus, that he might send them to Charles the Bald, and that he would advise him at the same time not to suffer the contrary Doctrine to be published in his Realm, but Lotharius not being to do it, Ebbo Bishop of Grenoble presented these Pieces himself to Charles the Bald, who went to him to his Palace at Verbery, An. 856. This Prince in September the same year, delivered them to Hincmarus to examine them, who composed an Answer to them. His Book was of a considerable bulk, and dedicated to Charles the Bald; it was intituled, Of Predestination and Free-will, and divided into 3 parts. We have not the Work it self, but only the Letter written to Charles, which served for a Preface to it. In it he complains that they had condemned his 4 Articles without so much as reciting of them, and had put a bad construction upon them. That they would have him undertake the Defence of Scotus's Propositions, which he never saw, nor knew, and which were collected only to make Orthodox Persons odious. That they had made this noise without desiring his Opinion, without advertising him of what they disliked, without hearing him or citing him to the Synod. He wondered that Ebbo Bishop of Grenoble, a Person so eminent for Piety, should engage in such a Faction. He observes by the bye, as a thing extraordinary, that of all the Bishops that were at the Council of Valence, he only was named in the Head of the Council amongst the Archbishops, which looked like affectation of Greatness, though he would not call it Pride. Lastly, That the Bishops of this Council had began the Quarrel, and laid the foundation of the Difference. He then lays down the order of his Answer; first, he tells the Emperor, that he had sent him the Writings which had been presented to him by the Council; 2. That he had joined to them several other Tracts which he had received from other places upon the same Subject, of which he approved so much only as was agreeable to his 4 Articles; That he will make a Collection of the Authorities and Passages of the Fathers. Lastly, That he will prove, that these Articles are agreeable to the Doctrine of the Church of Rome, and the Scriptures, which she acknowledges for genuine, and the Fathers whose Writings she allows, to which he will add the Authorities of more late Orthodox Writers, as Bede, Alcuinus, and Theodorus, Archbishop of Canterbury.

In the year 859. the same Bishops which were present at the Council of Valence, being met in the Suburbs of Langres with the Emperor Charles, presented to him the 6 Canons under debate, but suppressed what was said in them particularly against the 4 Articles of Hincmarus; Fifteen Days after they met at a Council at Savona in the Province of Trent [or Tullum], where they were also read. Hincmarus and those of his Party opposed their Reception, but Remigius Archbishop of Lyons desired, that the Decision of the Controversie might be entirely left to the next Synod, to which they would every one bring the Books of the most eminent Fathers of the Church, and out of them determine what they should follow, that they might be of one mind. This was the conclusion of this Council, but Prudentius did not rest here but brought the matter to Rome, sending the Canons of the Council of Valence to Pope Nicholas, that he might confirm them. Prudentius, says the Pope, approved of them, but Hincmarus did not yield to it, and would not take notice of the Definition which he had passed upon the Question.

Of Grace and Predestination.

We do not find that this Question was afterward examined or judged in any Council of France, but Hincmarus made another Treatise of Predestination to defend his 4 Articles, and confute the Canons of the Council of Valence. This also is dedicated to Charles the Bald, containing 38 Chapters. In the first he treats of the Original of the Heresie of the Predestinarians, and pretends to prove, that it began since the time of St. Austine; and to prove it, he makes use of the Testimonies not only of St. Austine, but of St. Prosper and Cœlestine, by whom it appears that St. Austine's Doctrine of Grace was opposed by several, but he doth not observe, that they who opposed it then, were altogether opposite to the Error of the Predestinarians, for the Priests of Marseilles, and the other Frenchmen of whom St. Austine and Prosper speak, were so far from being Predestinarians, that they contradicted the Doctrine of St. Austine about Predestination, because it seemed too rigorous. He cites a Book falsly attributed to St. Austine, called Hypomnesticon. He maintains very positively that it is his, and proves it by the Letter of Faustus to Lucidus about the recantation of that Priest, and by the Authority of the Council of Arles, which through a mistake (he says) was held by the Authority of Cœlestine, who was dead 44 years before that Council. In the 2*d*. he gives the History of Gotteschalcus, whom he pretends to have revived the Error of the Predestinarians. In the 3*d*. he rejects the Authority of Fulgentius, but he gives one bad Reason for it, when he says, that he is not much to be esteemed, because Pope Gelasius doth not reckon him among the Doctors of the Church, for Gelasius was dead 8 or 9 years before this Father wrote. In the 4*th*. he proves himself conformable to the Doctrine of the Apostolick See. In the 5*th*. after he hath observed that Gotteschalcus and his Followers write the Authorities of the Scripture and Fathers to establish that Error imperfectly, he brings the Propositions of Gotteschalcus, Prudentius, and Ratramnus, in which they acknowledge Predestination to Eternal Torments. In the 6*th*. he begins to treat of the Canons of the Council of Valence in particular. He observes in that Chapter, that the first is taken out of Florus, a Deacon of the Church of Lyons, but his Sentence is changed and altered by him that transcribed and abridged it. In the 7*th*. he explains the Passage of St. Paul alledged by the Compiler of them, in which he says there are Vessels of Wrath fitted for Destruction. He cites several places of the Fathers to explain that Text, and shew, that 'tis not God that hath fitted those Vessels for Death, but they fitted themselves for it by their Sins. In the 8*th*. he alledges some places in Fulgentius, to shew, that God hath predestinated no Man to Death. In the 9*th*. he cites some Passages of Isidore of Seville, St. Austine, St. Fulgentius, and Florus, to explain those which his Adversaries had alledged. In the 10*th*. he expounds several places of Scripture which they made use of. In the 11*th*. he examines the following Canon of the Council of Valence. He finds fault, that they had laid aside the Explication of Florus, and distinguished between Predestination to Grace and Predestination to Glory. In the 12*th*. he treats of Predestination at large according to the Principles of St. Austine. He saith that God hath predestinated the Works as well as the Glory of the Elect. That he hath foreseen the Sins of the Reprobate, and knowing them, not only foresees, but predestines the Punishment which they shall suffer, but he affirms, that it can't be said, that he hath predestinated them to Death or Damnation. So that all the difference between Hincmarus and his Adversaries is in this, that these affirm, that God foreseeing the Sins which the Reprobate would voluntarily commit, hath predestinated and condemned them upon the account of them to Damnation. And Hincmarus confesses, that God hath prepared and predestinated this Eternal Punishment for their Crimes, but will not say that he hath predestinated them to be damned. St. Fulgentius in his Book which he wrote to Monimus, was most favourable to the Opinion which Hincmarus opposes, for which reason it is, that in the 13*th*. Chapter he opposes some Passages of St. Prosper, and in his 14*th*. a Passage of St. Austine's cited by Fulgentius himself. In the 15*th*. Chapter he returns to the History of the pretended Predestinarians. He says that the ancient Predestinarians had 4 Errors. The first, That God condemns Men for the Sins which they have not committed, but would have committed had they lived. The 2*d*. that Baptism doth not take away Original Sin from them who are not of the number of the Predestinated. The 3*d*. that there is no difference between Prescience and Predestination. The 4*th*. that God hath predestinated Men to Sin and Damnation. He owns that the Modern Predestinarians held not the first Error, that they pass by the 2*d*, avoid the 3*d*, and have new moulded the 4*th*, although they retain the substance of it, asserting, that God hath predestinated the Reprobate to Damnation, although he hath not predestinated them to Sin, since they can't suffer Damnation but by Sin. He confutes the two former Errors in a few words. Then he undertakes to justifie his Articles, by shewing that they are agreeable to the Doctrine of the Holy Fathers, and chiefly of St. Austine, St. Fulgentius, and St. Gregory. He proves the first, which is concerning Predestination, by transcribing in the 16*th*. Chapter several long Quotations of those Fathers. In the 17*th*. he examines a place in the Book intituled, Hypomnesticon, attributed to St. Austine. In the 18*th*. he proves, that the number of the Elect is certain, and determined. In the 19*th*. he owns, that a double Predestination may in some Sense be allowed, though not in that of Gotteschalcus and his Adherents, who affirm, that God hath predestined Sinners to Torments, as he hath the Good to Glory, but that it may be said, the Elect are predestined to Glory, and Eternal Torments are predestined for the Wicked. In the 20*th*. he examines in what Sense St. Gregory speaks of the Predestinarians in the Plural Number. In the 21*st*. Chapter he produces several Passages of St. Austine, to justifie the Sense and Terms of his 2*d*. Article of Free-will. In the 22*d*. he shews, that what is said in that Article is conformable to the Decisions of the Councils of Africa and Orange about Grace and Free-will. In the 23*d*. he answers the Accusation brought against him, that he had affirmed, that Man had wholly lost his Free-will by the Fall of Adam. He owns, that Man hath a Freedom of Will since Adam's Sin, but his Free-will is a Slave to Sin, which leads him to the commission of Evil only, so that he can't do any good through the weakness of it without the Grace of Jesus Christ. In the 24*th*. Chapter he treats about his 3*d*. Article, which is about the Will of God to save all Men. He declares, that the Church of Rome, which is the first Church in the World, ought to be consulted about that point in the first place. He compares it to the Ancient Jerusalem, and cites a Passage in the forged Decretal of Pope Anacletus, which says, that that Church was founded by God himself. He adds also a Citation out of Innocent's Letter to Decentius Bishop of Eugubium, after which he quotes a Sentence of Cœlestine, where he says, that the Prayers of the Church determine what we shall believe, Legem credendi lex statuat supplicandi; From whence he concludes, that since the Church prays for all Men without restriction or exception, we ought to believe, that God will have all Men to be saved without exception. But why then are not all Men saved? He says, 'tis because they will not; They that love Darkness rather than Light, Injustice than Justice, Sin than Virtue, destroy themselves; That it will not then follow, that God is not Almighty, because he knows how to dispose of their Actions who will not do as he wills them. Whereupon he cites several Passages out of St. Austine and St. Gregory, but depends chiefly upon the words of St. Chrysostome. In the next Chapter he joins some expressions taken out of the Writings attributed to St. Dionysius the Areopagite, St. Cyprian, St. Hilary, St. Chrysostome, St. Theophilus, St. Jerome, and St. Cyril, some things also he brings out of St. Austine and St. Prosper, to whom also he adds St. Cœlestine, St. Leo, St. Gregory, Bede, and Cassiodore. In the following Chapter he confirms this Doctrine of the Will of God to save all Men without exception, because if God would not have all Men to be saved, some would be under a necessity of Damnation. And whereas his Adversaries objected, that the Will of God is all powerful, and therefore, if God would have all Men to be saved, they would be so; he puts the same Question to them as to the Angels, and urges them to answer it. Are those Angels which are fallen, fallen by the Will of God, or not? And since they could not deny according to their own Principle, but that God did desire their Salvation; He concludes, that they must own, that God's Will hath not always its effect. He there recites several Passages of the Fathers to explain those places of Scripture where the Allpowerful Will of God is spoken of. In the 27*th*. Chapter he examines the State of the Question concerning the 4*th*. Article, the Death of Jesus Christ for all Men. He declares, that it extends not to the Devils, for whom Jesus Christ was no Mediator, but only to Men. And whereas it was demanded of him, whether Jesus Christ died for Antichrist; He answers, that Antichrist shall be a Man, and since Jesus Christ died for all Men, he is of the number of those for whom Christ died. In the 28*th*. Chapter he cites several Passages of the Fathers, to prove, that Jesus Christ died for those Men who are dead in their Sins, although it can't be said, that they are redeemed for Eternal Salvation. In the 29*th*. he justifies the Expression which he had delivered, that there never was a Man whose flesh was not assumed by Jesus Christ, and cites several places of the Fathers which approve that Expression. He then shews, that those that are Baptized receive the Faith that worketh by Love, which he had affirmed in his last Article. He adds in the following Chapter, that except two Sentences of it, the rest of that Article is taken out of St. Prosper.

Hincmarus having thus justified himself, passes his judgment upon the Writings which were come to his hands, made upon this subject. He disapproves Scotus's and Praedestus's Books, and says, that he will not enter into any Council with them because he does not know their design, yet he tells us, that he had observed some Expressions in them contrary to the Catholick Truth, viz. That there is a Triple Divinity; That the Sacrament of the Altar is not the true Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, but a Memorial only only of his true Body and Blood; that the Angels are Corporeal; that the Soul of Man is not in his Body; that the Tortures of Hell are nothing elſe but the Remembrance of Sins, and the Reflection of a guilty Conſcience; and other fruitleſs Queſtions concerning the Manner how we ſhall ſee God, which ariſe perhaps, ſaith Hincmarus, from hence, that thoſe who are buſieſt to move ſuch Diſputes take no Care to ſee him. He rejects the 7. Rules laid down by Prudentius. In the 31*ſt*. Chapter he ſhews, That thoſe that lived before the coming of Jeſus Chriſt are redeemed by his Death, as well as thoſe that live after his coming. In the 32*d*. he produces a great Number of Teſtimonies both from the Greek and Latin Fathers, to prove, that Jeſus Chriſt died for all Men without Exception. In the next Chapter he confirms the ſame Doctrine by ſeveral Reaſons grounded upon the Doctrine of the Holy Fathers, and ſhews, that although Jeſus Chriſt died for all Men, yet they are not all redeemed and ſaved, becauſe they will not. In the 35*th*. he approves the 5*th*. Canon of the Council of Valence, propounded by his Adverſaries; That Jeſus Chriſt died for all thoſe that are regenerate by Baptiſm: But he maintains, that Gotteſchalcus and the Predeſtinarians deny that Baptiſm waſhes away the Guilt of Original Sin from thoſe that are not predeſtinated, and confutes their Error.

Hincmarus's Remarks upon the Conſtitution of the Council of Valence about Ordinations.

The Biſhops of the Council of Valence, after the Articles of Grace, Free-will, and Predeſtination, confuted by Hincmarus, added a Canon concerning the Ordinations of Biſhops to this Effect: To prevent for the Future, that ignorant Biſhops, unable to diſcharge that great Function, and whoſe Lives are not ſufficiently examined, may not be put into the Sees, as they formerly have been, (to the utter Ruine and Overthrow of all Church Diſcipline) it is decreed, That after the Death of any Biſhop, they ſhould petition the Princes to grant the People and Clergy of that City Power to make a Canonical Election of ſome Perſon of the ſame, or the neighbouring Dioceſs, who is fit to fill the See, and if any Clerk be ſent from Court to be made their Biſhop, they ſhould ſtrictly examine and look into his Life, and Doctrine, and Manners, before they ordain him; and if he be found an Ignorant, Vicious, and Simoniacal Perſon, the Metropolitan ſhould refuſe to ordain him, and going to Court repreſent it to the Prince. Hincmarus imagining, that this Canon was made againſt him, and ſome other Biſhops who had been ordained through the Favour of the Court, takes it into Examination, and therefore, in the 36*th*. Chapter he obſerves firſt, that this Canon makes directly againſt him whom he thought the Author of it, becauſe he was ſhaved and ordained in another Church than that of which he was Biſhop, evidently meaning Remigius Archbiſhop of Lyons. Secondly, he obſerves, That he had left out ſeveral things which concerned the Ordination of a Biſhop, as for Example, If they chooſe a Clergyman of another Church, that he ſhould not be ordained till his Biſhop hath given his Conſent. Thirdly, he ſays, That thoſe Men are not worthy to bear the Names of Biſhops whoſe Ordination was ſuch, as he deſcribes, Ignorant, Vicious, and Simoniacal. Fourthly, he ſays, That in ſpeaking ſo he affronts all the Biſhops of France, the Metropolitans who have made ſuch unlawful Ordinations, and the Princes who have approved them. Fifthly, he defends his own Ordination, and relates the whole Hiſtory of the Depoſition of Ebbo, and the Proceſs had againſt him; he relates the Judgment given in Favour of him againſt Ebbo in the Council of Soiſſons in 853, the Declaration of Ebbo, who acknowledged himſelf juſtly depoſed, and conſented another ſhould be made Biſhop in his Place, approved by the Biſhops met at Thionville in 835, whoſe Sentence was confirmed by Pope Sergius. He adds, That 10. Years after this Depoſition, the Biſhops of the Dioceſs of Rheims being aſſembled at Beauvais, deſired him of the Prince, and he was ordained by his Conſent after he had been Canonically choſen by the Clergy and People of Rheims. Hereupon he ſays, that he ſpake theſe things with regret, but he was obliged to it, leſt any Man reading this Canon ſhould think his Ordination contrary to the Canons and Rules of the Church. Then he oppoſes to this Article 12. Canons of the Church concerning the Penalties to be inflicted upon ſuch Perſons as revive old Hereſies that have been condemned; which are, 1. When an Error hath been once condemned by the Church, it needs no further Confutation. 2. That when the Author of an Hereſie is condemned, all that fall into the ſame Hereſie are involved in the ſame Condemnation. 3. That the ſame Condemnation extends to all the Abettors of an Hereſie. 4. That they that communicate with Hereticks, ought not to be admitted to any Synod of the Orthodox. 5. That thoſe that revive a condemned Hereſie ought to be reproved by all the Biſhops by Vertue of the ancient Condemnation. 6. That it is not lawful to introduce new Doctrines, nor compoſe new Creeds. 7. That ſuch as acknowledge their Errors may be again received into the Church, provided that we find ſure Tokens of their ſincere Repentance in their Return. 8. That ſuch Perſons may never be promoted to any higher Degree of the Clergy than what they are now in. 9. That if they relapſe again they deprive themſelves of their Dignity. 10. That thoſe that act any thing contrary to the Definitions of Pope Cœleſtine ought to be excommunicated. 11. That ſuch Clergymen may be received, and continued in their Degree of Prieſthood, who having once aſſented to the true Faith, ſubſcribe to Errors, provided they deliver a Recantation of their Errors in Writing. 12. That they that will not ſubſcribe to the Truth are condemned of themſelves. Hincmarus alledges a great Number of Authorities of Popes, Councils and Fathers, to prove theſe Points of Diſcipline, which never were conteſted, in which he ſhews more Learning and Skill in the Canons of the Church, than Judgment or Equity. Laſtly, Hincmarus ending this Work, adds a Concluſion divided into 6. Chapters, in which he ſums up what he had before ſaid concerning Predeſtination, Grace, Free-will, the Will of God to ſave all Men, and the Death of Jeſus Chriſt for Infidels.

Of Grace and Predeſtination.

Theodonis Villa.

Some time after, Hincmarus wrote another Treatiſe againſt Gotteſchalcus upon another Subject. He had forbidden, that the Hymn of the Martyrs, called Sanctorum Meritis, ſhould be ſung in his Church, becauſe at the End of it the Three Perſons of the Trinity were called Trina Deitas, thinking that Expreſſion to be contrary to the Manner of ſpeaking exactly about that Myſtery. Gotteſchalcus ſeeking an Occaſion to expoſe and accuſe him, compoſed a Treatiſe to defend this Expreſſion, maintaining that the Trinity was Perſonaliter Trina, i. e. Perſonally Three, becauſe each Perſon of the Trinity hath his perfect and entire Deity, & Naturaliter una. He juſtified this Expreſſion by ſome Examples of like Expreſſions drawn out of the Fathers. Hincmarus maintained the contrary, that the Deity was the Name of the Nature not of the Perſons, and that we might not ſay Trina Deitas, as we ordinarily do Tres Perſonæ, becauſe there is but one God in Three Perſons. It is apparent, that this Diſpute was only about Words and Names, which Hincmarus ſpins out to a great Length with much Zeal in his large Treatiſe intitled, De Trina Deitate, reciting ſeveral Quotations of the Fathers, and producing ſeveral Arguments, which it is both tedious and needleſs to abridge. We underſtand by Hincmarus, that not only Gotteſchalcus, but alſo Ratramnus Abbot of Corby had written in the Defence of this Expreſſion, and that the Benedictine Monks did ſing this Hymn, not leaving out Trina Deitas. But now we do not find thoſe Words in the Hymn of the Martyrs, which ſeem to be changed into Te Summa Deitas, for they are in the Proſe of St. Thomas upon the Euchariſt. [The Editions of Hincmarus's Works are ſet down at the End of the 6*th*. Chapter following, to which the Reader is referred.]

CHAP. III.

A Relation of the Conteſt between Hincmarus and Rothadus Biſhop of Soiſſons.

Of the Conteſt between Hincmarus and Rothadus.

HINCMARUS was engaged in many other Controverſies and Quarrels, which were not ended with leſs trouble than that with Gotteſchalcus. The firſt was the Conteſt with Rothadus Biſhop of Soiſſons, in which he was forced to contend with the Pope himſelf, and at laſt give place to his Judgment. This Rothadus had been ordained Biſhop of Soiſſons in the Reign of Lewis the Kind. He had an Order to apprehend Ebbo, his Metropolitan, who was fled, and to ſhut him up in a Monaſtery, that he might attend the Synod. He was preſent in 835. at the Synod held at Thionville, where Ebbo was depoſed. So that Rothadus was an ancient Biſhop when Hincmarus was made Archbiſhop of Rheims, which was 10. years after the Depoſition of Ebbo, which perhaps was the Reaſon, that he would not give ſo much Reſpect and Subjection to Hincmarus as he expected of him. The Beginning of the Buſineſs of Gotteſchalcus ſhews, that Rothadus and Hincmarus were not well affected to one another, for Hincmarus would not put that Monk into his Cuſtody, ſuſpecting him to be inclinable to Novelties. There were alſo ſome other differences, about which Hincmarus was angry with Rothadus, as his frequent Admonitions and Threatnings of him ſhewed. At laſt the Quarrel broke out, when Hincmarus accuſed him at the Council held at Senlis in 863. that he had unjuſtly depoſed a Prieſt of his Dioceſs, and would not obey his Metropolitan, who commanded him to be reſtored, stored, and the Person put in his Place to be removed; that he had squandered away the Church Revenue, and pawn'd a Golden Chalice; that he had sold the Vessels and Ornaments of the Church without the Consent of his Metropolitan, the Bishops of Provence, yea, of the Steward and Clergy of his own Church, and that he had lived in such a way as did not become a Bishop. Rothadus seeing himself likely to be condemned, appealed to the Holy See, and desired that he might have Leave to go to Rome. Hincmarus and the Bishops of the Council consented to it, upon Condition that he should return by such a time. Rothadus returned immediately to his Diocese, and prepared for his Voyage to Rome. But before his Departure he wrote to the King, and Hincmarus, and at the same time sent some Heads of Request to a Bishop that was his Friend, to be shewn to the King, in which he prayed the Bishops that had not consented to his Condemnation, to stir in his Defence. The Priest that carried this Letter was constrained by the King and Hincmarus to shew it them, although the Bishop to whom it was directed was not present. When Hincmarus had read it, he made use of it directly to hinder his going to Rome, and have him judged in France. He interpreted this as a tacit Renunciation of his Appeal, and that he would be contented to be judged in France by the Bishops he had desired the Assistance of, and since they were the Judges he had chosen himself, he could not afterward appeal from them according to the Rule Ab electis Judicibus appellare non licet.

Of the Contest between Hincmarus and Rothadus.

Rothadus's Appeal to Rome.

Rothadus's Condemnation

Being therefore glad of this Opportunity, he persuaded the King to appoint those very Bishops for his Judges, whose Assistance he begged, and immediately sent a Prohibition to Rothadus to stop his Journey to Rome, and caused him to be summoned to a Synod by those Bishops. Rothadus refused at first to come, and insisted upon his Appeal to Rome, but it was denied him; so, against his Will, he was brought to the Synod, deposed, and afterward deprived, banished and imprisoned. Another Bishop was put into his Place, but to lighten his Sufferings, Hincmarus gave him a good Abby, with which he might live commodiously. Hincmarus says, that Rothadus, at first, seemed to acquiesce in this Judgment, but afterwards being sollicited by the Bishops of the Kingdom, and by Lotharius, who quarrelled with him, because he would not wholly join with them in the Matter of Waldrada, as also by some Bishops of Germany, Lewis's Kingdom, he put himself in the Head of them, and went to Rome, to obtain his Restoration. But Rothadus on the contrary maintain'd, that he never acquiesced in that Judgment; that he always protested against it; and demanded, that he might be judged at Rome, and never had any Intention to choose the French Bishops for his Judges; that it was a Trick of Hincmarus's, who made that ill use of the Letter he wrote to a Bishop his Friend. But however that was, Charles the Bald having given Pope Nicholas an Account, that Rothadus who had governed the Dioceses of Soissons very ill for 30. years, was deposed, and desiring him to approve his Deposition, was answered, that he did not approve it in the least; and wrote in Particular to Hincmarus, that he should restore Rothadus within 30. days, after he had received his Letter, or suffer him to come to Rome, and come himself, or send his Deputy on his Behalf, threatning him, that if he did not do one of them within that time, he will interdict him from the Celebrating the Holy Sacrament, and would inflict the same Sentence upon all those who consented to the Condemnation of Rothadus. Hincmarus, and the other Bishops of France, understanding that Pope complained of their Judgment, sent the Acts of his Deposition to him, by Odo a Bishop, and wrote to him at large concerning that Matter, but the Acts did only confirm the Pope in his Resolution and Opinion: Wherefore he wrote again to Hincmarus, that he was much troubled to see, that they had judged that Bishop contrary to the Appeal he had made to the Holy See; that they ought not to have deposed him without writing to the Bishop of Rome; and which is much worse, ordained another Bishop in his Place after he had entred his Appeal. For which Reason, he refused to confirm those Privileges which Hincmarus had requested him to do, exhorting him to amend what he had done amiss, and enjoining him a second time to send Rothadus to Rome, threatning him, that if he did not do it, he would pass a definitive Sentence upon him, after a third Admonition. He gave Charles the Bald also an Account of what he had written to Hincmarus, desiring him to take it into serious Consideration; and to shew his Displeasure, told him plainly, that he must expect no Favour from Rome, if he would not maintain the Privileges and Prerogatives of the Holy See. He also wrote a Letter to all the Bishops who were present at the Synod of Senlis, and had consented to the Deposition of Rothadus; in which, after some Allegations out of the Fathers, and the Canons of the Council of Sardica, to confirm the Right of Appeals to the Holy See, and condemning the Behaviour of the Bishops of France, in pronouncing Judgment against Rothadus, he orders them to recal him from the Place of his Exile, and to send him to Rome, and with him two or three Bishops, or their Deputies, that he might re-examine that Affair, assuring them, that if they did not obey his Order within thirty days after they had received his Letter, he would absolve Rothadus, and treat them as they had used him. Nicholas, at the same time, also gave Rothadus Notice of what he had done for him, viz. That he had written to Hincmarus, and exhorted him to come to Rome and answer his Appeal; and after he had received the Acts of his Condemnation, he let him know what he had answered to the Bishops of France, at the same time advising him, if he knew himself guilty, to submit to the Sentence passed against him, as he had advised his Adversaries to restore him, if they believed him wrongfully condemned. He tells him also, that he was permitted to come to him, being assured by the King and Hincmarus, that he was already let out of the Monastery to which he was confined. He desired the King likewise to furnish him with all Things necessary for his Voyage, and tells the Queen Hermentruda, that he could not pass by this Matter, as she had desired him, to gratify her Husband Charles the Bald. It is evident that Hincmarus, who had a mind to keep the Matter as it was, hindred Rothadus from going his Journey, for Nicholas was forced to send him a fourth Letter, wherein he complains of his Carriage, and forbids him consecrating him Bishop of Soissons, who was chosen to be put in Rothadus's Place. Hincmarus seeing himself out of Favour at Rome about this Affair, and some other Matters, writes a long Letter to Pope Nicholas to justify himself, chiefly about this Matter. In the Letter he assures him, that Rothadus was not condemned with a Design to hinder his Appeal to the Holy See, that he was try'd by such Judges as he had made choice of himself, upon which Account it was that he thought it not necessary to send him to Rome, but judged it sufficient to acquaint his Holiness of the Sentence they had passed on him; that he was persuaded the Holy See ought not to be troubled with personal Differences, between either the Superior or Inferior Clergy, for the Canons of Nice, and the Constitutions of Pope Innocent, and many others, leave them to the Judgment of the Metropolitan, and Bishops of the Province. 'Tis true, when the Causes of the Bishops are difficult, and can't be decided by the ordinary Canons in a Council of the Province, then they ought to be carried to the Holy See. As also if a Bishop, who hath been tried by a Council of the Province, and hath not appealed to Judges of his own choosing, thinks himself unjustly condemned, he may appeal to the Patriarch to have his Cause re-examined, and the Pope may write to those that have been his Judges, as it is appointed in the Council of Sardica. That the Archbishops only receive their Pall of the Pope, who therefore ought only to be judged immediately by him. Coming in the next Place to the Business of Rothadus, he says, That he had been admonished of his Duty long before, and reproved for his Disorders, but not reforming in the least, he was obliged to accuse him before the Synod of Bishops, that he might grow better upon their Advice; and that instead of hearkening to them, he desired that they would be Judges of the Difference between him and his Metropolitan. That these Judges had condemned him, and he acquiesced at first in their Sentence, but afterward being sollicited by the Bishops of the Provinces of Lotharius, and Lewis of Germany, required his Restoration. That upon the Letters that the Pope had written he was set at Liberty, and they would send him to Rome, but they did not think it fit to restore him, because he was unworthy, and his Disorders being so publick, they could not do it without Scandal. That if his Holiness would restore him, he would quietly submit to his Decision, but he took himself obliged to let him know the Crimes of that Bishop, of which, if he was well informed, he could not believe that he would disannul the Judgment given against him, especially since he chose the Judges himself; and according to the Council of Carthage, it is not allowed to appeal from the Sentence of those Judges a Person hath chosen himself. He insinuates, that according to the Council of Sardica, the Pope ought not to have the first Hearing of the Causes of the Bishops, nor judge them at Rome, but they ought first to be determined in their own Province; and in Case of Appeal, the Pope must send his Commissioners to the Places. He adds, That if he that hath been condemned at the first Tryal be restored, the latter Examination ought not to hurt the Persons of the first Judges, nor ought they to be reproved for it, unless it appears that they have condemned him out of Enmity, Covetousness, or Partiality. In fine, That if the Pope annuls the Judgment passed upon Rothadus, he would render all the Judgments of the Bishops of France ever after contemptible. As for himself, he would never concern himself to judge, or condemn any Man, but, if they would not amend upon Admonition, send them to Rome. And this he shall be obliged to do, to avoid the Menaces of Excommunication which the Pope hath so often repeated to him, altho' it is the Opinion of the Fathers that Excommunication ought rarely to be used, and that in Case of great Necessity. Lastly, he implores him, that his Compassion for Rothadus should not make him over-look the Rules of Discipline, and give an ill Example of Impunity to the Church. These Maxims he confirmed by the Canons of the Councils, and the ancient and genuine Writings of the Popes. Hincmarus alſo in this Letter aſſures the Pope, that they had ſent their Deputies to Rome in their ſtead, not to accuſe Rothadus, but only to ſatisfy him, that the Biſhops of France intended no Manner of Diſreſpect to the Holy See in judging him, and to certify the Pope, that that Biſhop was condemned by thoſe Biſhops whom he choſe for his Judges. But tho' Hincmarus had promiſed, in the Name of the French Biſhops, to ſend their Deputies to Rome, nevertheleſs they did not go, and pretended, for an Excuſe, that it was told them that the Ways were not open, and they ſhould be ſtopped in their Journey if they went. Wherefore Rothadus went alone, and having waited almoſt eight Months for his Accuſers, he preſented a Petition to the Pope, in which he complains, That he had been depoſed in contempt of his Appeal to the Holy See. He maintains, that he never deſiſted from his Appeal, nor did chooſe nor demand any other Judges. He accuſeth Hincmarus of Compulſion and Deceit. He complains of his ill Uſage which he had received from him, and prayed the Pope to try him.

Pope Nicholas's Letters in favour of Rothadus.

Nicholas, who had entertain'd him civilly, and dealt with him as a Biſhop, declared himſelf wholly for him, and made an Oration in St. Mary's Church upon the Eve of the Nativity, 865. in which he pleaded Rothadus's Cauſe, and maintains, That having appealed to the Holy See, he could not chooſe any other Judges, nor be judged at another Tribunal; that he had not done it. And laſtly, Since if he had not appealed, they could not have depoſed him without acquainting the Biſhop of Rome with it, becauſe the Canons reſerve the Knowledge of ſuch Cauſes as concern the Biſhops to the Holy See: He declares him innocent, and diſannuls the Judgment given againſt him, and reſtores him to his Dignity; and after he had done it, with great Noiſe, upon a ſolemn Day, he makes it known to the Clergy and People of Rome in a Letter on purpoſe. He ſent alſo an Expreſs to Carolus Calvus, in which he much blames the Proceedings of Hincmarus in derogation of the Right which he pretended to belong to the Biſhop of Rome, without whoſe Cognizance they could not judge a Biſhop. He complains of the Delays which they had made for above two Years, keeping Rothadus from Rome, and neither ſending their Deputies, Witneſſes, nor Accuſers. He declares Rothadus innocent, and deſires the King, Charles the Bald, to ſee him reſtored to his Dignity and Eſtate. At the ſame time he wrote a Letter to Hincmarus, in which, after he had upbraided him with the ſame Dealings, he commands him to ſubmit to the Judgment he had given in favour of Rothadus, and to execute it, or come himſelf to accuſe him, upon Condition, nevertheleſs, that Rothadus ſhould be firſt reſtored to his Dignity and Revenues. In Concluſion he ſays, That if he did not do one of them, he pronounced him, by Vertue of his Apoſtolick Authority, depoſed from his Prieſtly Dignity, and ſeparated from the Communion of the Church, without Hopes of Reſtoration. He wrote alſo a large Letter to all the Biſhops, to oblige them to receive Rothadus, and approve the Judgment he had given in his Favour; and taking this Occaſion to greaten his Authority, he claims, as his due, that all Cauſes of the Biſhops ſhould be brought to the Holy See. He upholds this Pretence by the falſe Decretals, which he vouches to be genuine, ancient, and very authentick; and becauſe the Cauſes of the Biſhops are the greateſt Cauſes, whoſe Cognizance belongs to the Biſhop of Rome, according to the Conſtitutions of the Popes. He proves that Rothadus made no Choice of his Judges, becauſe he named none in particular, but had only written to ſome Biſhops that they would undertake his Defence; that he never renounced his Appeal, nor indeed could he, becauſe having once appealed to a ſuperior Tribunal, he can't be judged at an inferior. Nevertheleſs, he declares that he will do no Injuſtice to any Man, and gave them free Liberty to accuſe him before the Holy See, upon Condition they ſhould firſt reſtore him, and put him in the ſame Quality he was in before their Sentence paſſed upon him. He wrote alſo to the Clergy and People of Soiſſons, to congratulate the Reſtoration of their Biſhop, and exhorts them to receive him joyfully. Laſtly, he gave Rothadus a Letter directed to him, in which he reſtores him to his Dignity and Revenues, forbids all Men to trouble him, exhorts him to take care of his Biſhoprick, and execute his Epiſcopal Functions diligently, (upon Condition nevertheleſs, that if after he is reſtored, any one ſhall accuſe him before the Holy See, he ſhall be ready to defend himſelf) and pronounced a Sentence of Excommunication againſt them, who, after three Admonitions, would not reſtore any Goods, that belong to the Church of Soiſſons, which they had invaded, and againſt them who communicated with ſuch. This Letter is dated January, Indict. 13. An. 866. [Theſe Epiſtles of Pope Nicholas, with many others, are printed in one Collection at Rome, 1542. and in Tom. 8. of the Councils, p. 268, 480, 514, and 563.]

Of the Conteſt between Hincmarus and Rothadus.

Rothadus furniſhed with all theſe Letters returned into France. The Biſhops of that Kingdom ſeeing the Pope ſo earneſt in that Affair, would not contend with him, but for Peace ſake reſtored Rothadus, altho' they were perſuaded that the Pope did not act according to the Canons, which appoint that Biſhops ſhould be judged in the Province, and that their Cauſes ſhould not be carried to Rome, but he ought to ſend Commiſſioners to the Places. And this they did ſo much the more willingly, becauſe the Perſon who had been put in his Place was dead, as Hincmarus Biſhop of Rheims obſerves in the 5th. Article againſt his Nephew Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon.

The Concluſion of the Buſineſs of Rothadus.

CHAP. IV.

A Relation of the Conteſt between Hincmarus and Wulfadus, and other Clerks ordained by Ebbo, who had been Archbiſhop of Rheims.

Of the Conteſt between Hincmarus and Wulfadus.

HINCMARUS had no better Succeſs in the Conteſt with Wulfadus, and ſome other Clerks ordain'd by Ebbo, after the Depoſition of him from his Archbiſhoprick, than he had in the former with Rothadus. The Story is this; Hincmarus, then Archbiſhop of Rheims, having obſerved that there were ſome Clerks in his Dioceſs ordain'd by Ebbo, after he was degraded, would not permit them to execute their Office of Prieſt in the Church, nor acknowledge them as Clerks lawfully ordain'd. Theſe Men ſeeing this, appealed to the Council held at Soiſſons, in the Monaſtery of St. Medardus, in April, 853. in which Hincmarus preſided with Wenilo Archbiſhop of Sens, Paul Biſhop of Rouen, and Amauri Biſhop of Tours, and at which alſo Thierri Biſhop of Cambray, Rothadus Biſhop of Soiſſons, Lupus Biſhop of Chalons, Immo Biſhop of Noion, Erpuin Biſhop of Senlis, Hermenfridus Biſhop of Beauvais, Pardulus Biſhop of Laon, Hilmeradus Biſhop of Amiens, Hubert Biſhop of Meaux, Agius Biſhop of Orleans, Prudentius Biſhop of Troyes, Herimarus Biſhop of Nevers, Jonas Biſhop of Autun, Godefaldus Biſhop of Chalon upon the Saone, Dodo Biſhop of Angers, Gontbertus Biſhop of Evreux, Hildebrandus Biſhop of Seez, Erloinus Biſhop of Coutance, Balfredus Biſhop of Baieux, Herrardus Biſhop of Lizieux, Anſegaudus Biſhop of Auranches, Breindigus Biſhop of Maion, Launus Biſhop of Angouleme, Rhitbol Suffragan of Rheims, ſeveral Prieſts, Abbots, Deacons and Clerks, were preſent, with Carolus Calvus himſelf. Theſe Prelates being aſſembled, and treating about ſeveral Matters, Sigloardus, who ſupplied the Place of the Archdeacon of the Church of Rheims, told them, That there were ſeveral Clergymen ſtanding at the Door and deſired admittance. They asked him their Names, who told them, That they were Rodoaldus, Giſlaldus, Wulfadus, Fredebertus, Canons of the Church of Rheims, Sigiſmund a Monk of the Monaſtery of St. Thierri, and three others of the Monaſtery of St. Remigius. The Council, and Prince ordered them to come in, and Hincmarus immediately asked them their Buſineſs. They anſwered, That they came to deſire that they might be reſtored to their Prieſtly Function, to which they had been admitted by Ebbo, but had been ſuſpended from the Exerciſe of it by Hincmarus. Hincmarus asked them, Whether they had a Petition in Writing. They anſwered, No. Whereupon he told them, that in Eccleſiaſtical Affairs 'tis uſual to uſe Inſtruments and Records. That the Catechumens gave in their Names in Writing when they required Baptiſm. That the Elections of Biſhops were confirmed by an Inſtrument ſigned by the Electors. That a Biſhop when he was ordained received Letters Teſtimonial of his Ordination. That all Accuſations, Judicial Sentences, Excommunications, and Admiſſions to Communion were performed by publick Records, and ſo they ought to prefer their Petition ſubſcribed by their Hands, that they may determine about their Demands. Therefore they drew up a Petition immediately, and preſented it to the 3. Archbiſhops the Preſidents of the Council. Hincmarus reading it over, and perceiving that Wulfadus's Name was not to it, becauſe he underſtood he was ſick in the Monaſtery, he ſent a Requeſt to him by his Meſſengers to ſign it as the others had done, which he did. When it was brought back, Hincmarus ſaid, that if their Complaint had been made againſt any Biſhop, it had belonged to him to judge of it, but being made againſt that Sentence which he had paſſed upon them, the Determination ought to be referred to Judges choſen by both Parties according to the Canon of the Council of Africa, confirmed in the firſt Book of the Synodal Articles of the Emperor Charles the Great, Chap. 43. Whereupon he delivered a Writing,

The Council of Soiſſons.

Of the Conteſt between Hincmarus and Wulfadus.

Of the Conteſt between Hincmarus and Wulfadus.

Writing, in which he declared, that he chooſes for his Judges in that Cauſe Wenilo Archbiſhop of Sens, Amauri Archbiſhop of Tours, and Pardulus Biſhop of Laon, who ſhould have his place in the Judgment, without any prejudice to the Primacy of the Church of Rheims, to his own Rights, and the Reſpect due to the Apoſtolick See. After which he retired, and Pardulus took his place. The Complainants were then allowed to chooſe either the ſame Judges or others, or to add whom they pleaſed to them. Whereupon they choſe the ſame, adding only Prudentius Biſhop of Troyes, againſt whom Hincmarus had nothing to object. Wulfadus alſo conſented to this Election, and ſo the firſt Action or Seſſion of this Synod ended.

In the ſecond, the Judges declared firſt of all, that if Ebbo had ordained theſe Clerks before he was depoſed, or ſince his Depoſition was declared unjuſt and his Reſtoration Canonical, there had been no diſpute, but that they ought to exerciſe their Prieſtly Office. But ſince thoſe that ordained Hincmarus have proved that Ebbo was juſtly depoſed, and that he never was Canonically reſtored, and that he had the boldneſs to ordain theſe Clerks after his Depoſition, it is evident, that they neither can nor ought to exerciſe their Function. Then Thierri Biſhop of Cambray preſented the Acts of the Depoſition of Ebbo, by which it appears, that he was depoſed after he had owned his fault, that he had himſelf conſented to his Degradation, and had notice given him not to exerciſe any Epiſcopal Function. It was alſo ſet down in the Book of theſe Acts, that Pope Sergius had confirmed his Condemnation, and ordered him to be allowed only a Lay-communion; that ſince he had not been Canonically reſtored, but had dared to exerciſe his Prieſtly Function, of which he had been juſtly diveſted.

In the third Action, Hincmarus's Ordination was examined. Rothadus Biſhop of Soiſſons brought the Teſtimonial of his Election, ſigned by the Clergy and People. Hincmarus himſelf preſented his Letters of Ordination, a Letter of the French Biſhops, and the King's Letters ſigned and ſealed, by which his Ordination was confirmed.

In the fourth Seſſion therefore they concluded, that Hincmarus was lawfully ordained Archbiſhop of Rheims, and began to examine the Validity of the Ordinations made by Ebbo. Immo Biſhop of Noyon cited a Decretal of Pope Innocent, that they can't receive Orders from them who have no power to ordain.

Whereupon it was in concluſion reſolved upon and determined unanimouſly, in the fifth Seſſion, that all that Ebbo had done after his Depoſition, except Baptiſm, was null and void, and all thoſe who had been ordained by him ſhould be deprived of their Orders in what place ſoever they were. Then Fredebert, who was one of the Canons ordained by Ebbo, hearing this Sentence, ſaid, that he was ordained by that Biſhop, becauſe he ſaw the Suffragans of the Archbiſhop of Rheims, of whom Rothadus Biſhop of Soiſſons was one, were come to Rheims by the Order of Lotharius, and had reſtored Ebbo. To prove this, he produced a Letter ſigned by eight Biſhops. It was proved that theſe Subſcriptions were forged, and Immo who was among them, and therefore concerned to clear this Matter, declared, that theſe Clerks being excommunicated had no right to accuſe a Biſhop, but to ſatisfie the Council and Prince, he preſented a Record, by which it appeared, that the Suffragans of Rheims had declared, that they ought not to have any thing to do with Ebbo after his Depoſition. He adds, that what was ſaid in that Letter of the Staffs and Rings which they affirm that Ebbo had given (to three Biſhops ordained in his abſence) was abſolutely falſe, and that thoſe Men who dare ſo boldly to affront and abuſe the Biſhops, ſhould be puniſhed according to the utmoſt Rigour allowed by the Canons.

In the ſixth Action, the Cauſe brought againſt Hincmarus being thus decided, he reſumed his place; and then they handled in particular the Validity of the Ordination of a Prieſt, Abbot of the Monaſtery of Hautvilliers called Halduin, who having been ordained Deacon by Ebbo, was afterwards made Prieſt by Lupus Biſhop of Chalons. The Biſhop excuſed himſelf, that being made Governor of the Church of Rheims during the Vacancy of that See by an Order of the Prince, this Halduin was preſented to him by the Archdeacon of that Church to be ordained Prieſt; the Synod judged, that conformable to the Canons of the Council of Nice and Sardica, the Prieſt Halduin ought to be depoſed.

In the ſeventh Action it was demanded, how they ought to be dealt with who had communicated in the Sacrament and Prayer with Ebbo, becauſe the Canons had ordered, that ſuch ought to be excommunicated, eſpecially if they knew that he was depoſed. Erpuin ſhewed, that according to the Canons they might be favoured ſo far as to enjoy Communion ſtill, if they acknowledged their fault.

Hereupon, in the eighth Seſſion, the King deſired of Hincmarus, that the Clerks which had been ordained by Ebbo, and thoſe who had communicated with him, ſhould be granted Lay-communion, which the Council conſented to, and when they had begged pardon of their fault, and acknowledged it, it was allowed them. Thus was the Judgment of this Affair managed in the Council, as the Acts of it relate more at large, the ſubſtance of which is contained in the firſt of the Canons.

Of the Conteſt between Hincmarus and Wulfadus.

Hincmarus being deſirous to make this Sentence irreverſible, uſed his utmoſt endeavours to get it confirmed by the Pope. And to this end wrote ſeveral Letters to Leo IV. but he refuſed to approve the Acts of this Council, becauſe they were not ſent by ſome of the Biſhops who were at the Council, and becauſe he had heard that ſome of the Perſons who were depoſed had appealed to the Holy See. Nevertheleſs Hincmarus was ſtill urgent to have the Judgment confirmed, and the Clerks who were concerned in this matter carried their Complaints to Rome, inſomuch, that Leo IV. having regard to what Pope Nicholas had written about it, ſent the Biſhop of Spoletum his Legate, to hold a Council in which the Caſe ſhould be decided between the Parties at difference, upon Condition nevertheleſs, that if the Depoſition of the Clerks was confirmed, they ſhould have liberty to appeal to Rome. This was not executed, but, Leo being dead, Hincmarus addreſſed his Succeſſor Benedict, and having deſired the confirmation of thoſe Privileges granted by the Popes to the Archbiſhops of Rheims, prayed him alſo to confirm what had been done againſt Wulfadus and the other Clerks ordained by Ebbo, ſhewing him in what manner that Judgment had been paſſed. Benedict anſwered him, that if the Buſineſs was ſo managed as he had related, and as it was ſet down in the Acts of the Council, he would confirm their Deciſion with the Apoſtolick Authority, and would make it to remain in force.

The Confirmation of the Judgment of the Council of Soiſſons by Leo IV. and Benedict.

Pope Nicholas, who not long after ſucceeded Benedict, confirmed the Privileges granted to Hincmarus in the ſame form, but afterwards being changed in his affections towards Hincmarus and being ſollicited by Wulfadus and his Fellows, he reſolved to review this Affair, and to write to Hincmarus to ſhew thoſe Clerks ſome favour, to reſtore them, or to have their Cauſe re-examined in a Council of Biſhops which ſhould meet at Soiſſons, and at which Remigius Archbiſhop of Lyons, Ado Archbiſhop of Vienna, and Wenilo of Sens ſhould be preſent, with the Archbiſhops and Biſhops of France and Neuſtria, where Hincmarus and the Biſhops of his Province ſhould meet, and Wulfadus and the Clerks in the ſame Cauſe, ſhould be ſummoned: That the whole Matter being examined, they ſhould determine as they thought fit concerning the Reſtoration of thoſe Clerks, but if they ſhall appeal to the Holy See, or deſire to be judged there, both Parties ſhould come to Rome, or ſend their Deputies after the Council, which ſhould begin the 16*th*. of Auguſt. In fine, That it ought not to be pleaded in excuſe, that thoſe Clerks having not appealed in the year ought not to be received; for beſides that this exception is not in the Canons which ſpeak of Appeals to the Holy See, thoſe Clerks did appeal to Pope Leo within the year concerning the Judgment given againſt them, as appears by a Letter of that Pope which he had by him. Wherefore he exhorts Hincmarus not to be ſevere with thoſe Clerks. He anſwers alſo to what might be alledged, that he had the Grants of the Holy See, by which this Judgment was confirmed, by ſaying, that if he read them attentively, he would find, that the final Deciſion of that Controverſie was reſerved to the Holy See, which maintains the Rights of other Churches without leſſening its own. This Letter of Pope Nicholas's is dated April 2. Indict. 14. Anno 866. Hincmarus at the ſame time wrote a Letter to Herard Archbiſhop of Tours, and to other Archbiſhops that were to be at that Council, and prayed King Charles the Bald to call it together. This Prince anſwered, that he would cauſe the Council to be holden, but withall, that he had deſigned to make Wulfadus Archbiſhop of Bourges, in the place of Rodolphus who was lately dead; that he had been choſen by the Biſhops and People of the Dioceſs, but that he dare not let him be ordained before his reſtoration, till he had written to him about it; that he deſired he might be ordained Prieſt, and then Biſhop, or if he would not do it till the Synod was met, that he would permit the Government of that Church to be left to him. The Pope wrote to this Prince, that he ſhould not do any thing concerning Wulfadus till his Cauſe was examined and judged in the Synod.

Pope Nicholas's Judgment about Wulfadus.

This Synod therefore met in Aug. 866. Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims preſented four Petitions or Memoirs to it in his own defence. In the firſt he ſhews, that Wulfadus and thoſe that had been ordained by Ebbo after his Depoſition were declared deprived of their Holy Orders by the Judgment of a Council of five Provinces, and by the Judges they themſelves had pitched upon; That afterward he had himſelf, by the Order of the Council, given an account of the Matter at Rome, and that the Judgment of the Synod had been confirmed there by Pope Benedict, and alſo Nicholas; That he did not envy the Happineſs of theſe Clerks in the leaſt; That he was troubled they were degraded after ſuch a manner, and wiſhed they might be reſtored, but he neither dare, nor could do it after the Judgment of the Synod, it being expreſsly forbidden by the Canons, and Decretals of the Popes, who had ſeveral times declared, that they

the Popes. Hincmarus alſo in this Letter aſſures the Pope, that they had ſent their Deputies to Rome in their ſtead, not to accuſe Rothadus, but only to ſatisfy him, that the Biſhops of France intended no Manner of Diſreſpect to the Holy See in judging him, and to certify the Pope, that that Biſhop was condemned by thoſe Biſhops whom he choſe for his Judges. But tho' Hincmarus had promiſed, in the Name of the French Biſhops, to ſend their Deputies to Rome, nevertheleſs they did not go, and pretended, for an Excuſe, that it was told them that the Ways were not open, and they ſhould be ſtopped in their Journey if they went. Wherefore Rothadus went alone, and having waited almoſt eight Months for his Accuſers, he preſented a Petition to the Pope, in which he complains, That he had been depoſed in contempt of his Appeal to the Holy See. He maintains, that he never deſiſted from his Appeal, nor did chooſe nor demand any other Judges. He accuſeth Hincmarus of Compulſion and Deceit. He complains of his ill Uſage which he had received from him, and prayed the Pope to try him.

Pope Nicholas's Letters in favour of Rothadus.

Nicholas, who had entertain'd him civilly, and dealt with him as a Biſhop, declared himſelf wholly for him, and made an Oration in St. Mary's Church upon the Eve of the Nativity, 865. in which he pleaded Rothadus's Cauſe, and maintains, That having appealed to the Holy See, he could not chooſe any other Judges, nor be judged at another Tribunal; that he had not done it. And laſtly, Since if he had not appealed, they could not have depoſed him without acquainting the Biſhop of Rome with it, becauſe the Canons reſerve the Knowledge of ſuch Cauſes as concern the Biſhops to the Holy See: He declares him innocent, and diſannuls the Judgment given againſt him, and reſtores him to his Dignity; and after he had done it, with great Noiſe, upon a ſolemn Day, he makes it known to the Clergy and People of Rome in a Letter on purpoſe. He ſent alſo an Expreſs to Carolus Calvus, in which he much blames the Proceedings of Hincmarus in derogation of the Right which he pretended to belong to the Biſhop of Rome, without whoſe Cognizance they could not judge a Biſhop. He complains of the Delays which they had made for above two Years, keeping Rothadus from Rome, and neither ſending their Deputies, Witneſſes, nor Accuſers. He declares Rothadus innocent, and deſires the King, Charles the Bald, to ſee him reſtored to his Dignity and Eſtate. At the ſame time he wrote a Letter to Hincmarus, in which, after he had upbraided him with the ſame Dealings, he commands him to ſubmit to the Judgment he had given in favour of Rothadus, and to execute it, or come himſelf to accuſe him, upon Condition, nevertheleſs, that Rothadus ſhould be firſt reſtored to his Dignity and Revenues. In Concluſion he ſays, That if he did not do one of them, he pronounced him, by Vertue of his Apoſtolick Authority, depoſed from his Prieſtly Dignity, and ſeparated from the Communion of the Church, without Hopes of Reſtoration. He wrote alſo a large Letter to all the Biſhops, to oblige them to receive Rothadus, and approve the Judgment he had given in his Favour; and taking this Occaſion to greaten his Authority, he claims, as his due, that all Cauſes of the Biſhops ſhould be brought to the Holy See. He upholds this Pretence by the falſe Decretals, which he vouches to be genuine, ancient, and very authentick; and becauſe the Cauſes of the Biſhops are the greateſt Cauſes, whoſe Cognizance belongs to the Biſhop of Rome, according to the Conſtitutions of the Popes. He proves that Rothadus made no Choice of his Judges, becauſe he named none in particular, but had only written to ſome Biſhops that they would undertake his Defence; that he never renounced his Appeal, nor indeed could he, becauſe having once appealed to a ſuperior Tribunal, he can't be judged at an inferior. Nevertheleſs, he declares that he will do no Injuſtice to any Man, and gave them free Liberty to accuſe him before the Holy See, upon Condition they ſhould firſt reſtore him, and put him in the ſame Quality he was in before their Sentence paſſed upon him. He wrote alſo to the Clergy and People of Soiſſons, to congratulate the Reſtoration of their Biſhop, and exhorts them to receive him joyfully. Laſtly, he gave Rothadus a Letter directed to him, in which he reſtores him to his Dignity and Revenues, forbids all Men to trouble him, exhorts him to take care of his Biſhoprick, and execute his Epiſcopal Functions diligently, (upon Condition nevertheleſs, that if after he is reſtored, any one ſhall accuſe him before the Holy See, he ſhall be ready to defend himſelf) and pronounced a Sentence of Excommunication againſt them, who, after three Admonitions, would not reſtore any Goods, that belong to the Church of Soiſſons, which they had invaded, and againſt them who communicated with ſuch. This Letter is dated January, Indict. 13. An. 866. [Theſe Epiſtles of Pope Nicholas, with many others, are printed in one Collection at Rome, 1542. and in Tom. 8. of the Councils, p. 268, 480, 514, and 563.]

The Concluſion of the Buſineſs of Rothadus.

Rothadus furniſhed with all theſe Letters returned into France. The Biſhops of that Kingdom ſeeing the Pope ſo earneſt in that Affair, would not contend with him, but for Peace ſake reſtored Rothadus, altho' they were perſuaded that the Pope did not act according to the Canons, which appoint that Biſhops ſhould be judged in the Province, and that their Cauſes ſhould not be carried to Rome, but he ought to ſend Commiſſioners to the Places. And this they did ſo much the more willingly, becauſe the Perſon who had been put in his Place was dead, as Hincmarus Biſhop of Rheims obſerves in the 5th. Article againſt his Nephew Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon.

CHAP. IV.

A Relation of the Conteſt between Hincmarus and Wulfadus, and other Clerks ordained by Ebbo, who had been Archbiſhop of Rheims.

Of the Conteſt between Hincmarus and Wulfadus.

HINCMARUS had no better Succeſs in the Conteſt with Wulfadus, and ſome other Clerks ordain'd by Ebbo, after the Depoſition of him from his Archbiſhoprick, than he had in the former with Rothadus. The Story is this; Hincmarus, then Archbiſhop of Rheims, having obſerved that there were ſome Clerks in his Dioceſs ordain'd by Ebbo, after he was degraded, would not permit them to execute their Office of Prieſt in the Church, nor acknowledge them as Clerks lawfully ordain'd. Theſe Men ſeeing this, appealed to the Council held at Soiſſons, in the Monaſtery of St. Medardus, in April, 853. in which Hincmarus preſided with Wenilo Archbiſhop of Sens, Paul Biſhop of Rouen, and Amauri Biſhop of Tours, and at which alſo Thierri Biſhop of Cambray, Rothadus Biſhop of Soiſſons, Lupus Biſhop of Chalons, Immo Biſhop of Noion, Erpuin Biſhop of Senlis, Hermenfridus Biſhop of Beauvais, Pardulus Biſhop of Laon, Hilmeradus Biſhop of Amiens, Hubert Biſhop of Meaux, Agius Biſhop of Orleans, Prudentius Biſhop of Troyes, Herimarus Biſhop of Nevers, Jonas Biſhop of Autun, Godeſaldus Biſhop of Chalon upon the Saone, Dodo Biſhop of Angers, Gontbertus Biſhop of Evreux, Hildebrandus Biſhop of Seez, Erloinus Biſhop of Coutance, Balfredus Biſhop of Baieux, Herrardus Biſhop of Lizieux, Anſegaudus Biſhop of Auranches, Breindigus Biſhop of Maion, Launus Biſhop of Angouleme, Rhitbol Suffragan of Rheims, ſeveral Prieſts, Abbots, Deacons and Clerks, were preſent, with Carolus Calvus himſelf. Theſe Prelates being aſſembled, and treating about ſeveral Matters, Sigloardus, who ſupplied the Place of the Archdeacon of the Church of Rheims, told them, That there were ſeveral Clergymen ſtanding at the Door and deſired admittance. They asked him their Names, who told them, That they were Rodoaldus, Giſlaldus, Wulfadus, Fredebertus, Canons of the Church of Rheims, Sigiſmund a Monk of the Monaſtery of St. Thierri, and three others of the Monaſtery of St. Remigius. The Council, and Prince ordered them to come in, and Hincmarus immediately asked them their Buſineſs. They anſwered, That they came to deſire that they might be reſtored to their Prieſtly Function, to which they had been admitted by Ebbo, but had been ſuſpended from the Exerciſe of it by Hincmarus. Hincmarus asked them, Whether they had a Petition in Writing. They anſwered, No. Whereupon he told them, that in Eccleſiaſtical Affairs 'tis uſual to uſe Inſtruments and Records. That the Catechumens gave in their Names in Writing when they required Baptiſm. That the Elections of Biſhops were confirmed by an Inſtrument ſigned by the Electors. That a Biſhop when he was ordained received Letters Teſtimonial of his Ordination. That all Accuſations, Judicial Sentences, Excommunications, and Admiſſions to Communion were performed by publick Records, and ſo they ought to prefer their Petition ſubſcribed by their Hands, that they may determine about their Demands. Therefore they drew up a Petition immediately, and preſented it to the 3. Archbiſhops the Preſidents of the Council. Hincmarus reading it over, and perceiving that Wulfadus's Name was not to it, becauſe he underſtood he was ſick in the Monaſtery, he ſent a Requeſt to him by his Meſſengers to ſign it as the others had done, which he did. When it was brought back, Hincmarus ſaid, that if their Complaint had been made againſt any Biſhop, it had belonged to him to judge of it, but being made againſt that Sentence which he had paſſed upon them, the Determination ought to be referred to Judges choſen by both Parties according to the Canon of the Council of Africa, confirmed in the firſt Book of the Synodal Articles of the Emperor Charles the Great, Chap. 43. Whereupon he delivered a

Writing,

Writing, in which he declared, that he chooſes for his Judges in that Cauſe Wenilo Archbiſhop of Sens, Amauri Archbiſhop of Tours, and Pardulus Biſhop of Laon, who ſhould have his place in the Judgment, without any prejudice to the Primacy of the Church of Rheims, to his own Rights, and the Reſpect due to the Apoſtolick See. After which he retired, and Pardulus took his place. The Complainants were then allowed to chooſe either the ſame Judges or others, or to add whom they pleaſed to them. Whereupon they choſe the ſame, adding only Prudentius Biſhop of Troyes, againſt whom Hincmarus had nothing to object. Wulfadus alſo conſented to this Election, and ſo the firſt Action or Seſſion of this Synod ended.

In the ſecond, the Judges declared firſt of all, that if Ebbo had ordained theſe Clerks before he was depoſed, or ſince his Depoſition was declared unjuſt and his Reſtoration Canonical, there had been no diſpute, but that they ought to exerciſe their Prieſtly Office. But ſince thoſe that ordained Hincmarus have proved that Ebbo was juſtly depoſed, and that he never was Canonically reſtored, and that he had the boldneſs to ordain theſe Clerks after his Depoſition, it is evident, that they neither can nor ought to exerciſe their Function. Then Thietri Biſhop of Cambray preſented the Acts of the Depoſition of Ebbo, by which it appears, that he was depoſed after he had owned his fault, that he had himſelf conſented to his Degradation, and had notice given him not to exerciſe any Epiſcopal Function. It was alſo ſet down in the Book of theſe Acts, that Pope Sergius had confirmed his Condemnation, and ordered him to be allowed only a Lay-communion; that ſince he had not been Canonically reſtored, but had dared to exerciſe his Prieſtly Function, of which he had been juſtly diveſted.

In the third Action, Hincmarus's Ordination was examined. Rothadus Biſhop of Soiſſons brought the Teſtimonial of his Election, ſigned by the Clergy and People. Hincmarus himſelf preſented his Letters of Ordination, a Letter of the French Biſhops, and the King's Letters ſigned and ſealed, by which his Ordination was confirmed.

In the fourth Seſſion therefore they concluded, that Hincmarus was lawfully ordained Archbiſhop of Rheims, and began to examine the Validity of the Ordinations made by Ebbo. Immo Biſhop of Noyon cited a Decretal of Pope Innocent, that they can't receive Orders from them who have no power to ordain.

Whereupon it was in concluſion reſolved upon and determined unanimouſly, in the fifth Seſſion, that all that Ebbo had done after his Depoſition, except Baptiſm, was null and void, and all thoſe who had been ordained by him ſhould be deprived of their Orders in what place ſoever they were. Then Fredebert, who was one of the Canons ordained by Ebbo, hearing this Sentence, ſaid, that he was ordained by that Biſhop, becauſe he ſaw the Suffragans of the Archbiſhop of Rheims, of whom Rothadus Biſhop of Soiſſons was one, were come to Rheims by the Order of Lotharius, and had reſtored Ebbo. To prove this, he produced a Letter ſigned by eight Biſhops. It was proved that theſe Subſcriptions were forged, and Immo who was among them, and therefore concerned to clear this Matter, declared, that theſe Clerks being excommunicated had no right to accuſe a Biſhop, but to ſatisfie the Council and Prince, he preſented a Record, by which it appeared, that the Suffragans of Rheims had declared, that they ought not to have any thing to do with Ebbo after his Depoſition. He adds, that what was ſaid in that Letter of the Staffs and Rings which they affirm that Ebbo had given (to three Biſhops ordained in his abſence) was abſolutely falſe, and that thoſe Men who dare ſo boldly to affront and abuſe the Biſhops, ſhould be puniſhed according to the utmoſt Rigour allowed by the Canons.

In the ſixth Action, the Cauſe brought againſt Hincmarus being thus decided, he reſumed his place; and then they handled in particular the Validity of the Ordination of a Prieſt, Abbot of the Monaſtery of Hautvilliers called Halduin, who having been ordained Deacon by Ebbo, was afterwards made Prieſt by Lupus Biſhop of Chalons. The Biſhop excuſed himſelf, that being made Governor of the Church of Rheims during the Vacancy of that See by an Order of the Prince, this Halduin was preſented to him by the Archdeacon of that Church to be ordained Prieſt; the Synod judged, that conformable to the Canons of the Council of Nice and Sardica, the Prieſt Halduin ought to be depoſed.

In the ſeventh Action it was demanded, how they ought to be dealt with who had communicated in the Sacrament and Prayer with Ebbo, becauſe the Canons had ordered, that ſuch ought to be excommunicated, eſpecially if they knew that he was depoſed. Erpuin ſhewed, that according to the Canons they might be favoured ſo far as to enjoy Communion ſtill, if they acknowledged their fault.

Hereupon, in the eighth Seſſion, the King deſired of Hincmarus, that the Clerks which had been ordained by Ebbo, and thoſe who had communicated with him, ſhould be granted Lay-communion, which the Council conſented to, and when they had begged pardon of their fault, and acknowledged it, it was allowed them. Thus was the Judgment of this Affair managed in the Council, as the Acts of it relate more at large, the ſubſtance of which is contained in the firſt of the Canons.

Of the Conteſt between Hincmarus and Wulfadus.

Hincmarus being deſirous to make this Sentence irreverſible, uſed his utmoſt endeavours to get it confirmed by the Pope. And to this end wrote ſeveral Letters to Leo IV. but he refuſed to approve the Acts of this Council, becauſe they were not ſent by ſome of the Biſhops who were at the Council, and becauſe he had heard that ſome of the Perſons who were depoſed had appealed to the Holy See. Nevertheleſs Hincmarus was ſtill urgent to have the Judgment confirmed, and the Clerks who were concerned in this matter carried their Complaints to Rome, inſomuch, that Leo IV. having regard to what Pope Nicholas had written about it, ſent the Biſhop of Spoletum his Legate, to hold a Council in which the Caſe ſhould be decided between the Parties at difference, upon Condition nevertheleſs, that if the Depoſition of the Clerks was confirmed, they ſhould have liberty to appeal to Rome. This was not executed, but, Leo being dead, Hincmarus addreſſed his Succeſſor Benedict, and having deſired the confirmation of thoſe Privileges granted by the Popes to the Archbiſhops of Rheims, prayed him alſo to confirm what had been done againſt Wulfadus and the other Clerks ordained by Ebbo, ſhewing him in what manner that Judgment had been paſſed. Benedict anſwered him, that if the Buſineſs was ſo managed as he had related, and as it was ſet down in the Acts of the Council, he would confirm their Deciſion with the Apoſtolick Authority, and would make it to remain in force.

The Confirmation of the Judgment of the Council of Soiſſons by Leo IV. and Benedict.

Pope Nicholas, who not long after ſucceeded Benedict, confirmed the Privileges granted to Hincmarus in the ſame form, but afterwards being changed in his affections towards Hincmarus and being ſollicited by Wulfadus and his Fellows, he reſolved to review this Affair, and to write to Hincmarus to ſhew thoſe Clerks ſome favour, to reſtore them, or to have their Cauſe re-examined in a Council of Biſhops which ſhould meet at Soiſſons, and at which Remigius Archbiſhop of Lyons, Ado Archbiſhop of Vienna, and Wemlo of Sens ſhould be preſent, with the Archbiſhops and Biſhops of France and Neuſtria, where Hincmarus and the Biſhops of his Province ſhould meet, and Wulfadus and the Clerks in the ſame Cauſe, ſhould be ſummoned: That the whole Matter being examined, they ſhould determine as they thought fit concerning the Reſtoration of thoſe Clerks, but if they ſhall appeal to the Holy See, or deſire to be judged there, both Parties ſhould come to Rome, or ſend their Deputies after the Council, which ſhould begin the 16*th*. of Auguſt. In fine, That it ought not to be pleaded in excuſe, that thoſe Clerks having not appealed in the year ought not to be received; for beſides that this exception is not in the Canons which ſpeak of Appeals to the Holy See, thoſe Clerks did appeal to Pope Leo within the year concerning the Judgment given againſt them, as appears by a Letter of that Pope which he had by him. Wherefore he exhorts Hincmarus not to be ſevere with thoſe Clerks. He anſwers alſo to what might be alledged, that he had the Grants of the Holy See, by which this Judgment was confirmed, by ſaying, that if he read them attentively, he would find, that the final Deciſion of that Controverſie was reſerved to the Holy See, which maintains the Rights of other Churches without leſſening its own. This Letter of Pope Nicholas's is dated April 2. Indict. 14. Anno 866. Hincmarus at the ſame time wrote a Letter to Herard Archbiſhop of Tours, and to other Archbiſhops that were to be at that Council, and prayed King Charles the Bald to call it together. This Prince anſwered, that he would cauſe the Council to be holden, but withall, that he had deſigned to make Wulfadus Archbiſhop of Bourges, in the place of Rodolphus who was lately dead; that he had been choſen by the Biſhops and People of the Dioceſs, but that he dare not let him be ordained before his reſtoration, till he had written to him about it; that he deſired he might be ordained Prieſt, and then Biſhop, or if he would not do it till the Synod was met, that he would permit the Government of that Church to be left to him. The Pope wrote to this Prince, that he ſhould not do any thing concerning Wulfadus till his Cauſe was examined and judged in the Synod.

Pope Nicholas's Judgment about Wulfadus.

This Synod therefore met in Aug. 866. Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims preſented four Petitions or Memoirs to it in his own defence. In the firſt he ſhews, that Wulfadus and thoſe that had been ordained by Ebbo after his Depoſition were declared deprived of their Holy Orders by the Judgment of a Council of five Provinces, and by the Judges they themſelves had pitched upon; That afterward he had himſelf, by the Order of the Council, given an account of the Matter at Rome, and that the Judgment of the Synod had been confirmed there by Pope Benedict, and alſo Nicholas; That he did not envy the Happineſs of theſe Clerks in the leaſt; That he was troubled they were degraded after ſuch a manner, and wiſhed they might be reſtored, but he neither dare, nor could do it after the Judgment of the Synod, it being expreſsly forbidden by the Canons, and Decretals of the Popes, who had ſeveral times declared, that they could not themſelves annul the Canons made by the Councils, and approved by their Predeceſſors. The ſecond Memoir concerns the Perſon of Ebbo. Hincmarus proves by the Pope's Letters, that Ebbo owned his Crime, and was depoſed by 44 Biſhops, whoſe Judgment was afterward confirmed and approved by Pope Sergius, who had ordered him to content himſelf with a Lay-Communion, and ſince he was not afterward Canonically reſtored, he ought not to be looked upon as a Biſhop after his Condemnation, and that at this time it ought not in the leaſt to be queſtioned, becauſe this Judgment being paſſed in 835, he had a preſcription of above 30 years againſt him. They alledged, that notwithſtanding his Depoſition he had continued to execute his Epiſcopal Function to his Death. Hincmarus replies, that this unwarrantable Action was of no uſe to him, and that the number of thoſe that approved it could not juſtifie his Carriage, which was ſo oppoſite to the Laws of the Church; That it was contrary to all the Canonical Rules for him to exerciſe all the Offices of a Biſhop in the Church of Mayence, for the Canons do not permit in any caſe whatſoever a Biſhop who is deprived of his own Diocеſs to exerciſe the Epiſcopal Function in another. Hincmarus then ſhews, that his own Ordination was Canonical and Lawful, ſaying, that after the Depoſition of Ebbo, Fulcus took care of the Church of Rheims for 9 years, in which time Ebbo did not claim his Dignity again, nor make any oppoſition to him. That Noto had done the ſame for a year and a half, without any demand of reſtoration from Ebbo. That as for himſelf he was afterward ordained in the Synod of the Province of Rheims held at Beauvais, being deſired by the People and Clergy of the City, and by the Biſhops of the Province, with the conſent of the Abbot and Monks of the Monaſtery of which he was a Member. That he was put in poſſeſſion of it without any oppoſition from any Man. That his Ordination was approved by the Biſhops of France, who wrote about it to Pope Sergius, and confirmed by an Edict of King Charles the Bald. That all theſe Acts were ſent to Leo IV. Sergius being dead in the mean time. That Lotharius himſelf having in vain ſollicited Pope Sergius to have Ebbo reſtored, agreed to his Ordination; That the Holy See had allowed it, and Leo IV. had granted him the Pall, and had writ to him ſeveral Letters; That Pope Benedict and Pope Nicholas had confirmed him by granting him his Privileges. Laſtly, That he was not obliged to enter into any diſpute about it with any Man, ſince Nicholas had not required of him an account of his Ordination of him. Laſtly, having confirmed that which had paſſed in the Affair of the Clerks ordained by Ebbo, it belonged to the Biſhops to direct what they thought juſt and regular to ſatisfie the Pope; That as for himſelf he would not oppoſe what they did; That if it were neceſſary he would explain the Buſineſs more at large, and would ſhew them the Reaſons, why they ſuſpended theſe Clerks at the Synod of Meaux, and degraded them quite in the Council of Soiſſons. Then he preſented to the Synod the Acts of the Council of Soiſſons, with thoſe of the Synod of Bourges, and the Privileges of the Popes Benedict and Nicholas.

Hincmarus alſo preſented a 3*d*. Petition, in which after he had ſet down ſuch Canons and Paſſages in the Popes Letters, as made it appear, that ſometimes Clemency had been uſed towards them whoſe Ordinations were dubious, he conſented for Peace ſake, and to ſatisfie the Pope, that ſome gentle Method might be found out to receive and promote to Holy Orders thoſe who had been ordained by Ebbo, yet with a due care that this fact might not prejudice the Canons of the Church, nor the Judgment given againſt them and againſt Ebbo.

The Fourth Memoir of Hincmarus was preſented to the Council, but not read, for fear of offending ſome Perſons in the Council. It ſhews, that it was againſt his Will, that he was forced to declare, that Wulfadus, after he had been condemned by the Council of Soiſſons, without the conſent of the Biſhops of that Council, without any authority from the Holy See, and without conſulting the Church of Rheims, had left the Province wherein he was baptized, had received the Tonſure of a Clerk, and had executed the Office of a Reader, to go into the Church of Langres, which was then vacant, that he might be ordained a Biſhop there. That he had poſſeſſed himſelf of the Revenues of that Church, which according to the Council of Chalcedon, ought to have been kept by the Steward for the next Biſhop. That having been removed by the Order of the Synod, he had made an Oath that he would never attempt the like again, nor undertake any Eccleſiaſtical Function for the future. That he had delivered this Declaration in Writing in the preſence of Pardulus Biſhop of Laon, Gontbertus Biſhop of Evreux, and Æneas Biſhop of Paris, before the King, and ſeveral Judges choſen by the Synod. That an Oath and Declaration had been required of him, as the Popes had decreed, to prevent a change of his reſolution. And that it was for the ſame cauſe, that he had deſired Pope Nicholas to confirm the Judgment given againſt him in the Council of Soiſſons, which had been already confirmed by his Predeceſſor Benedict. That he did not ſay this out of Malice, or with a deſign to do Wulfadus any Injury, nor to hinder the effect of the Pope's good will towards him, but only to inform the Council fully of what had paſſed in that Affair.

Of the Conteſt between Hincmarus and Wulfadus.

After ſo full an Information, the Biſhops of the Council were of the Opinion, that the Synod of Soiſſons, had judged rightly; That Hincmarus had good reaſon not to reſtore theſe Clerks in contempt of the Decrees of that Council; That they might nevertheleſs be reſtored without injuring the Authority of the Council of Soiſſons confirmed by the Holy See, by granting them to continue in their Orders by Favour and Diſpenſation, and ſo ſucceed the Biſhops when they died. But they thought it not convenient for them to do it by their own Authority, and judged it beſt for the Pope to do it by his. Wherefore they wrote to him, and aſſured him, that they had followed and executed his Orders; and that it might not be thought that they had revoked what was decreed in the Council of Soiſſons, Herardus Archbiſhop of Tours made a ſolemn Proteſtation in the Council in all their Names, that they would never alter their Opinion, but only would conſent, that the Judgment which had been given in ſtrictneſs of Juſtice, might by a merciful Charity be moderated, and ſweetened. Seven Archbiſhops were at this Council, viz. Hincmarus of Rheims, Remigius of Lyons, Frotarius of Bourdeaux, Herardus of Tours, Wenilo of Rouen, Egilo of Sens, Liutbert of Mayence, and 28 Biſhops of France, among whom was Rothadus Biſhop of Soiſſons, who ſubſcribed the Letter ſent to the Pope about the Affair of Wulfadus and his Fellows. Hincmarus wrote in his own Name to Pope Nicholas to excuſe himſelf, that he had not immediately reſtored thoſe Clerks, becauſe he dare not diſannul what been done in a Synod of five Provinces, but that he had ſubmitted to the Synod as he ordered him, and had conſented to the Accommodation that his Brethren had found out agreeable to the Canons of the Council of Nice, made concerning thoſe who had been ordained by Meletius; That he did not conceive it neceſſary for him to ſend a Deputy in his ſtead, ſince Egilo went in the Name of the Council, and the Pope had not enjoined him to come to Rome, or ſend his Deputies, unleſs there were an Appeal from the Judgment of the Synod, either on his own part or Wulfadus's. He beſeeches him to confirm what the Council had done, and aſſures him, that he wiſhed no ill to Wulfadus, and other Clerks ordained by Ebbo, who were but nine in all, as well Canons and Monks, as City and Country Clergymen. Charles the Bald wrote alſo a Letter to the Pope, in which he commends Hincmarus for his Obedience, approves the Method which the Council had taken, to refer the Reſtoration of Wulfadus to the Pope, and gives him notice that he had, in the mean time left the Care of the Church of Bourges to him. The King, alſo deſired of the Biſhops of this Council to crown his Queen Hermintruda, which was granted him, and the Ceremony was performed by them at the ſame time in the Church of St. Medardus.

Egilo Archbiſhop of Sens was ſent with theſe Letters, the Acts of the Council, and a Petition ſent by Hincmarus, which is not met withal among his Works, in which he gives the Sum of all that he had alledged in the Council concerning the Depoſition of Ebbo, and recites ſeveral Authorities out of the Pope's Letters, to ſhew, that he ought not to blame, or condemn, what has been done againſt that Archbiſhop, nor annul the Judgment given againſt Wulfadus, or the Clerks ordained by Ebbo, but only reſtore them by an Act of Grace.

Pope Nicholas's Letter about the Judgment of the Council of Soiſſons.

Pope Nicholas being deſirous to diſannul all that had been done in the firſt Council of Soiſſons, was not at all pleaſed with this Judgment, but returned a large Anſwer to the Biſhops, in which he much blames the Tranſactions of that Council, and ſays, That the Acts of it are full of Falſities, and that they were never confirmed at Rome after a full knowledge of the Cauſe; That Pope Leo his Predeceſſor, had ordered that the Matter ſhould be re-examined, and for that end ſent his Legate to be preſent at the Tryal, but it was never executed, and Pope Benedict's Confirmation was obtain'd by ſurprize by Hincmarus, and by a falſe relation of it; and beſides, 'twas not Definitive, or without a Reſerve; That he had adviſed Hincmarus to receive thoſe Clerks, and in caſe he would not, he commanded that a Synod ſhould do it; That he was mightily pleaſed that there was no difference in the Council, but they had unanimouſly agreed to reſtore Wulfadus, and the other Clerks; That all he complained of was, that ſince they had left their Reſtoration to him, they had not given him a full account of that Affair, and all that concerned it; That they ought to have made a Declaration at large, of all the circumſtances of Ebbo's Depoſition, and Reſtoration, of his ſecond Deprivation, and Tranſlation to another Church; That he wiſhed they had done it in that Cauſe, and would do it in all others, about which he ſhould order a Council to be held. He approved of Hincmarus's ſubmiſſion, but could not but ſmile at his aſſertion, That 'twas not he that had ſuſpended them, or declared them fallen from the Orders, ſince he knew what he had done in his Province againſt them, and how eagerly he had proſecuted that Affair at Rome, He ſubjoins, that the Matter being not ſufficiently cleared, or examined, he could not paſs his definitive Sentence upon it, but becauſe theſe Clerks were depoſed contrary to the Canons, they ought to be reſtored, and reſettled for the preſent, till Hincmarus can produce what he hath againſt them, and prove that they have been lawfully depoſed. He complains, that they had made one of thoſe Clerks a Biſhop at the ſame time that they pretended to leave the Judgment of the Matter to him, and declares, that he will not yield to his Ordination till the thing is ended. Laſtly, in the Buſineſs of Ebbo, he ſays, that 'tis no wonder that Pope Sergius would not receive him to his Communion, becauſe he was condemned, and had not appealed to the Holy See about his Condemnation, nor had his Cauſe been fully diſcovered to him, or examined. He ſpeaks the ſame things to Hincmarus in his Letters written to him at the ſame time, but more eſpecially blames his Carriage, and Adminiſtration, in many ſharp reflections; and concludes, telling him, that he takes it ill that he makes uſe of the Pall on ſuch occaſions as were not allowable. In a third Letter, he thanks King Charles the Bald for the ſatisfaction he had given him, in making the Biſhops of France unanimouſly join in the Reſtoration of thoſe Clerks, but could not blame Hincmarus. Laſtly, in his fourth Letter he congratulates Wulfadus, and the other Clerks, for their Reſtoration, and exhorts them to be ſubject to Hincmarus; and tells them, that he would allow them a Year's time to proſecute that Affair at Rome, if they thought fit. Theſe four Letters bear Date Dec. 7. 866. [Theſe Letters of Pope Nicholas are extant Tom. 8. of the Councils, p. 268. and 480. They are alſo printed with a Collection of his Epiſtles publiſhed at Rome 1542. Fol.]

Of the Conteſt between Hincmarus and Wulfadus.

By what has been ſaid, it is evident that the Biſhops of France would not bring theſe Cauſes to Rome, nor be obliged to appear there themſelves to maintain the Juſtice of their Sentence, nor would endure it to be diſannulled, or blamed in the leaſt; the contrary to which, Pope Nicholas pretended to do. He required, that the Councils which judged any Cauſes at the firſt Hearing ſhould be called by his Authority; that both the accuſed and the accuſers, had liberty of Appealing to Rome, before and after their Sentence; that all Synods ſhould give him a large and full Account of their Proceedings before they paſſed Sentence; that in caſe of Appeal, the Holy See might put the condemned into the Places and Condition they were formerly in, conditionally, and then the Judges ſhould be obliged to come, or ſend their Deputies to Rome, to maintain their Judgment, where the Cauſe ſhall be examined a-new, as if it had never been decided. From this time the Biſhops of France, who were moſt learned, and beſt skilled in the Canons, to evade the Pretenſions contrary to the Canons, which tended directly to the utter ruining of the Epiſcopal Authority, and overthrow of all Church Diſcipline, and that without quarrelling with the Holy See, judged all Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes that came before them in their Synods; and that their Judgment might be of greater Authority, they cauſed the Contending Parties to chooſe their Judges, becauſe, according to a Maxim of Law, it is not lawful to appeal from the Sentence of thoſe Judges whom they had elected. Laſtly, they cauſed that Judgment to be executed, and in caſe the Perſons condemned referred themſelves to Rome, they would ſend the Pope their Reaſons, and require his Confirmation, or rather Approbation of their Judgment, but tho' often cited never would go to Rome, nor ſend their Deputies with a Commiſſion to act in their Names, to call any Matter in Queſtion, but left it to the Pope to do as he pleaſed, without oppoſition. And if it ſo happened, that they were obliged either for the good of the Church, or for Peace ſake, or in Obedience to the Will of that Prince, to do as the Pope would have them, they proteſted that it was without any Abrogation of their Sentence, which was valid and juſt, but only to ſhew Mercy to the faulty. Thus they behaved themſelves in this Cauſe. Hincmarus, firſt of all, cauſed thoſe Clerks to preſent their Petition in Writing, and to leave it to the Synod of France: He then made them chooſe their Judges by agreement, after he had withdrawn from the Tryal. After the Judgment was paſſed he had it executed, and confirmed by the Pope; but at laſt, Nicholas I. being ſollicited to it by Wulfadus, and being deſirous to have that Cauſe re-examined in a Synod, Hincmarus ordered the matter ſo, that not only their Decree was kept in force, but was confirmed without any offence to the Pope, who had reſolved to reſtore theſe Clerks, or to the Emperor, who favoured Wulfadus; for he perſuaded the Biſhops not to deal ſo rigorouſly with Wulfadus and his Fellows, as in Juſtice they might, and to conſent to their Reſtoration, if the Pope deſired it. This ſhewed a great deal of complaiſance to the Pope, in leaving the thing to his diſpoſal, in reſpect to the Holy See, but it was not what the Pope deſired; he would have had the Synod, which he called, to have quite diſannulled what was done at Soiſſons, and himſelf to be made Judge in that Affair; and upon an Appeal, both Parties ſhould have come to Rome to conteſt about it. And for this Reaſon it was that he would not determine the Matter definitively, but ſatisfied himſelf to reſtore Wulfadus, and the Clerks ordained by Ebbo, conditionally.

Of the Conteſt between Hincmarus and Wulfadus.

Before Nicholas's Letters were brought by Egilo, Charles the Bald, who had ſo great a favour for Wulfadus, and would have him ordained Archbiſhop of Bourges by all means whatſoever, ſent his Son Carolomannus, Abbot of St. Medard, to have him ordained and inſtalled, which was done in September, by ſome Biſhops who were not very well skilled in the Laws of the Church, which Wulfadus had provided, and Carolomannus had ſcared into it. It was Aldo Biſhop of Limoges who conſecrated him; and ſome have ſaid, that that Biſhop, in the midſt of the Ceremony, was taken with a Fever, of which he died ſoon after. Egilo being returned with four Letters from Pope Nicholas in the Year 867, Charles the Bald called a Council at Troyes, at which were the Archbiſhops of Rheims, Tours, Rouen, Bourdeaux, Sens, and Bourges, with thoſe 14 Biſhops who were preſent at the Council of Soiſſons the Year before; in which, ſome Biſhops favouring Wulfadus to pleaſe Carolus Calvus, would encounter Hincmarus, but he defended himſelf ſo well, that they only reſolved to ſatisfy the Pope to ſend a Synodical Epiſtle, containing a large Relation of what had paſſed in the Depoſition of Ebbo, his pretended Reſtoration, and the Ordination of Wulfadus, and others, who had been conſecrated after his Depoſition. In it they relate, how the Children of Lewis the Godly would have deprived him of his Eſtate, and for that end had made uſe of Ebbo, and ſome other Biſhops, who having obliged that Prince to confeſs ſome forged Crimes, had put him in a State of Penance, and deprived him of his Authority; how afterwards, when Lewis the Kind was again reſtored by the Authority of his Biſhops, Ebbo had left his See, and fled; how he was apprehended, and carried to the Emperor by Rothadus Biſhop of Soiſſons, and by Ercarau Biſhop of Chalons; how he had himſelf ſigned, and approved the Reſtoration of Lewis the Kind; and owned, that he was unjuſtly, and contrary to the Canons, put to Penance; after which manner having acknowledged his fault in Writing at the Council in Thionville held 835, in which Year Lewis the Kind died; how afterward Lotharius being come out of Italy into France, Ebbo met him at Worms, conducted by the Abbot Boſo in the Monaſtery, where he then abode; how Lotharius having given order that he ſhould be reſtored, he went to Rheims, and began to exerciſe his Epiſcopal Function in the preſence of the Biſhops of the Province, without any contradiction from them; How in that time he had ordained Wulfadus, and the other Clerks, about whom the Controverſie was, who were told, that he was Canonically reſtored to his Church; How after he had enjoyed peaceably, one Year, the Archbiſhoprick of Rheims, he withdrew himſelf into the Kingdom of Lotharius, when King Charles had paſſed over the Sequana, and conquered the Country; How great Service he had done Lotharius, who gave him two Abbies, and had employed him in ſeveral Affairs, and ſent him to Rome with Drogon Biſhop of Metz, 844, to Pope Sergius, who would not acknowledge him for a Biſhop; How having refuſed to go Ambaſſador into Greece, he fell into Diſgrace with Lotharius, and was turned out of his Abby; How afterwards retreating into the Empire of Lewis of Germany, he was made Biſhop of Hildeſheim in Saxony, where he exerciſed his Epiſcopal Function; How in 845, Charles had called a Synod at Beauvais to have a Biſhop ordained for the Church of Rheims, which had been vacant ten Years, yet governed by the Abbot Fulcus, and after by Notho; How Hincmarus had been Canonically elected and ordained Biſhop, and his Ordination had been confirmed by Gonthaldus, whom Pope Sergius had appointed at the Sollicitation of Lotharius to regulate that Affair. They joined to this Relation all that they had written to the Holy See about that Matter, and all that the Pope had given them in Command, declaring to him, that they approved the Reſtoration of the Clerks ordained by Ebbo; and conſented, that they ſhould exerciſe their Office. Laſtly, to gratify the Emperor Charles, they required the Pall for Wulfadus, ordain'd Biſhop of Bourges. This Letter was dated Nov. 867, and ſealed up with the Archbiſhop's Seals, and given to Actardus Biſhop of Nants to be carried to the Pope; But Charles the Bald made him deliver it to him, broke the Seals, read it, and wrote another to the Pope, which was more favourable to Ebbo, relating every thing that was for him, and concealing what was againſt him; He ſays he was the Son of a Perſon that belonged to the King's Treaſury; that having his liberty, he had entred into the Eccleſiaſtick State, and was made the King's Library-Keeper; that after the Death of Charles the Great, in the time of Lewis the Kind, Wulfaraus Archbiſhop of Rheims being dead, and it being left in the power of the People to chooſe whom they would Biſhop, they firſt choſe Gillemarus, but he being preſented to the Biſhops to be examined, was found uncapable of it; wherefore the Emperor propounding Ebbo as a Perſon of Merit, the People agreed to chooſe him; that in the firſt Rebellion of Lewis the Kind's Sons, Ebbo continued loyal, but the ſecond time he had engaged himſelf, and the Party of Lotharius, and acknowledged his fault publickly in the Church of St. Stephen at Metz; that to prevent his Depoſition, he had ſent to the Empreſs Judith the Ring that ſhe had given him; that that Princeſs was employed to pacify her Husband Lewis the Kind, and to ſollicit for Ebbo; that nevertheleſs, ſome Biſhops had perſuaded him to confeſs his fault, and after that Confeſſion, had adviſed him never more to exerciſe his Prieſt's Office; that the Emperor had written to Pope Gregory to confirm his Depoſition, and had received his Letter thereupon, but what was in it they knew not, yet Lewis the Kind did not ſeem ſatisfied by it, becauſe he did not make another Archbiſhop upon it, which he would immediately have done, if the Pope had confirmed the Depoſition of Ebbo; that after the Death of Lewis the Kind, Ebbo was acknowledged by all the Suffragan Biſhops, Archbiſhop of Rheims; that they had all communicated with him, and all that had been ordained Biſhops in his abſence had received the Ring and Croſier from him, with Letters of Confirmation. This is the account that Charles the Bald gave the Pope in particular about the Depoſition of Ebbo, and after excuſes himſelf for having cauſed Wulfadus to be ordained, before he had received the Pope's Anſwer, and demanded the Pall for him, and commends the condition of the Biſhops oppreſſed by the Britains to him.—Hincmarus had alſo written a private Letter to Pope Nicholas, in Anſwer to that which he had received from the Pope, full of reproof, and angry reflections: In it he defends himſelf with much ſubmiſſion, but as much ſmartneſs. He tells him, that he had found in the Letter written to himſelf, and in that to the Biſhops of the Council of Soiſſons, many reproachful imputations, which he deſerved for his Sins; that if he were preſent with him, he would do as St. Benedict ordered his Monks to do, when they found their Prior offended with them, caſt himſelf upon the Earth at his feet, but what he could not do with his Body he would do with his Mind and Heart, according to the Advice of St. Gregory, who bids us to have Patience, and Charity in our Hearts towards our Neighbour, who is at a diſtance from us. In fine, that he had executed the Pope's Command in reſtoring Wulfadus, and the other Clerks ordained by Ebbo. After he hath thus humbled himſelf, he aſſures him that he was much troubled to ſee him ſo angry with him, but he imputes that Charge to the falſe Reports he had received of him, and owns, that had he been really guilty of thoſe things he is accuſed of, he ſhould have deſerved to be dealt withal more ſeverely, but his Conſcience teſtifies to him, that tho' he be a great Sinner, he is not ſuch an one as the World hath repreſented him. He ſays, that he was heretofore accuſed to Pope Sergius, and Leo, that he had not that reſpect he ought for the Holy See, but he ſhewed, by his obedient Carriage, how ſubmiſſive he was to the Holy See, and how far from that ambitious Spirit which was charged upon him, as well as from cruelty and falſhood; that neither his own Church, nor the Neighbouring Churches, ever complained that he was ſubject to thoſe Vices, and beſeeches him never to believe that he hath had any deſign to delude him, or oppoſe his Orders, or deſpiſe his Admonitions; that as to Ebbo, he thought it not convenient to lay open his faults, leſt any Man ſhould think that he inſulted over the Dead, or would revive an Affair that had been ended and determined above 30 Years. Nevertheleſs, to ſatisfy the Pope, he tells him, how he had declared himſelf unworthy of his Prieſthood, without being conſtrained by violent means to it, or engaged by fraud. He takes notice, that of all the Biſhops who had depoſed him, there now ſurvived but two, viz. Rothadus and Erpuinus. He then deſcribes the manner how he was ordained into his place; how Pope Sergius being ſollicited by Lotharius to it, had named Gonthaldus Archbiſhop of Rouen to examine his Ordination; how Ebbo, when he was ſummoned to the Synod by Gonthaldus durſt not appear; whence it was concluded that Ebbo was never reſtored, and ſhould remain depoſed from his Prieſtly Office and Dignity; and that having loſt it in his Life time, he ſhould not recover it after his Death. He next gives him an Account of the buſineſs of Wulfadus, and the other Clerks ordained by Ebbo after his Depoſition; and becauſe Pope Nicholas chiefly inſiſted upon this, that Pope Leo had not confirmed the firſt Judgment given againſt them at the Council of Soiſſons, Hincmarus gives him the particulars of all that had paſſed between him and Pope Leo in that buſineſs, viz. That Pope Leo had written to him that he could not confirm what had been done in that Synod, becauſe the Council had not ſent their Deputies to him, nor were his Legates preſent at it, nor had the Emperor writ any thing to him about it; and becauſe 'twas ſaid that Wulfadus, and the other Clerks had appealed to the Holy See. That, beſides this, Lotharius had importuned him not to confirm the Judgment of the Council of Soiſſons; That the Biſhops hearing that Lotharius concerned himſelf in that Matter, had written to him, and that he had nominated two Biſhops of Italy to look into it in a Council, which was called by the Authority of the Holy See; that after this, that Prince had ſent his Deputies to Rome to Pope Leo, who died as they were on their Journey to him; that being arrived there in the Papacy of Benedict, that Pope had granted him a Grant to confirm the Judgment of the Synod of Soiſſons; that ſince that, neither the Biſhop of Spoletum, nominated by Lotharius, nor any other Biſhop, had held any other Synod about that Affair, but that which was lately called by the Authority of Pope Nicholas; he defends himſelf againſt that Accuſation that the Pope laid againſt him, that he had falſified Benedict's Letter of Privilege, and aſſures him, that the Copy which he had ſent him was a true one, as he will find, if he compares it with the Original Draught, which is in the Regiſtry of the Church of Rome. He adds, that he had not required of the Holy See any other ſpecial Privileges, but what were uſually granted to all Metropolitans, and were anciently granted to the Metropolis of Rheims, but becauſe his Province, and alſo his Dioceſs, were partly in one Kingdom and part in another, he thought it neceſſary to have his Privileges renewed, becauſe men had great regard to them, and carnal men being awed by ſuch marks of diſtinction, reſpected him the more. Laſtly, as to the Pall, he aſſures him, that he never uſed it unleſs upon the great Feſtivals of the Paſſover and Nativity, becauſe on the other Holidays of the Year, tho' 'twas allowed for him to wear it, yet he was obliged through urgent buſineſs, and the Affairs of Church and State, to be abſent from his Cathedral Church. In fine, that he deſired the Pall for no particular uſe, becauſe the Pall is an Ornament which is ſuitable for all Metropolitans, as a mark of the Dignity or Virtue of him that wears it. Hincmarus had compoſed this Letter before the Council of Troyes, immediately after he received Nicholas's Letter, but it was not ſent in that form, for the Biſhops of that Council having given him a large relation of the buſineſs of Ebbo, he cut off the beginning of his Letter, and wrote a ſhorter beginning with his own Ordination, and the buſineſs of Wulfadus. Actardus Biſhop of Nants, the Deputy of the Council to go to Rome, was alſo entruſted with another Affair by the Council of Soiſſons. 'Tis thought commonly to be that of 866, but it was another Council held there in 867, for Actardus, who was the Bearer, went to Rome in that Year only; and Pope Nicholas in his Anſwers to the Synod, and Biſhops of the Council of Soiſſons in 866, makes no mention of any thing written in this Letter. The Biſhops of the laſt Council tell him, how the Churches of Tours and Nants were much annoyed by the Britains, who would not come to the Synods of the Province to which they belonged, nor acknowledge the Metropolitans and Biſhops of France, pretending to govern themſelves; that they valued not the Petitions that had been made to them; that they had encroached upon Nants, and attempted the ſame upon the Biſhopricks of Tours, Angers, and Mans; that almoſt all the Churches of Neuſtria had endur'd much by their Cruelty; that they had depoſed the Biſhops of Dole and Vannes, and put other Biſhops in their place; then they pray the Pope to do them Juſtice, to give Actardus a favourable Audience, to reduce the Britains to good Order, and to write to their Duke, either to ſubmit to King Charles, or elſe to make uſe of the Sword of Excommunication. This Letter is dated Aug. 16*th*.

When Actardus came at Rome he found Pope Nicholas Dead, and Adrian ſettled in his place, to whom he preſented the Synod and King's Letters. Adrian returned this Anſwer to the Biſhops of the Synod of Troyes, that tho' they had omitted ſome things as to the Reſtoration of Ebbo, yet he commends their Zeal; that he was glad that Wulfadus's Innocency had been proved ſo clearly; that he approved of his Promotion to the Archbiſhoprick of Bourges, and granted him the Pall; that he deſired him to put Pope Nicholas's Name into all their Dyptichs, and to oppoſe all that the Greeks might ſay, or attempt againſt this Pope. This Letter is dated Febr. 11*th*. 868. He ſent an Anſwer alſo to the Letter of the Biſhops of the Council of Soiſſons, in the beginning of which it evidently appears, that the Letter before-mentioned was not written by that Council of Soiſſons held in 866, but in another which met there in 867, before the Council of Troyes. He tells them, that he much pitied the condition of Actardus, who was deprived and diſpoſſeſſed of his Biſhopriek and Orders; that he ſhould be put (incardinari) into the firſt vacant Church, to exerciſe his Epiſcopal Function there. He ſays, that he had written about it to King Charles. And indeed, in the following Letter which is directed to that Prince, he anſwers firſt to the Letter which he had written to him concerning Ebbo, telling him, that 'tis to no purpoſe to examine the matters concerning that Biſhop, who is now Dead. He thanks him for the Protection which he had given the Churchmen, which the Holy See thought fit to reſtore. He grants the Pall to Wulfadus, and and recommends Actardus to his Care to be put into the next vacant See, which was not leſs then his own. He alſo recommends him for the ſame reaſon to Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims, and Herard Archbiſhop of Tours, in private Letters to them: He commands this laſt to give Actardus an Abby, which he had heretofore in his Dioceſs, and tells him, that he had written to Solomon Duke of the Britains, and his People, to exhort them to do him Juſtice; and and desires him to be fully assured, that if they should send any one to Rome on their Part, they should not obtain any thing to prejudice his Rights. He grants by another Letter the Pall to Actardus, to comfort him for the Loss of his Diocess. Thus ended the Contest between Hincmarus and Wulfadus, with the other Clerks ordained by Ebbo. CHAP. V.

An History of the several Contests that Hincmarus Archbishop of Rheims had with his Nephew Hincmarus Bishop of Laon.

Of the Contests between Hincmarus and his Nephew

HINCMARUS engaged in another Business against his Nephew Hincmarus Bishop of Laon, which had no better Effects than the former. He had by his Interest and Favour made this Nephew Bishop of Laon, which is subject to his Metropolis, in 859. This Man instead of being subject and devoted to the Will of his Uncle, would govern according to his own Humour, and being grown into Favour at Court, accepted an Office there, and obtained an Abby. This displeased the Archbishop of Rheims, who did all he could to oblige him to quit them, and reproved him for leaving his Diocess to go to his Abby without his Permission, although it was forbidden by the Canons to Bishops to leave their Province without the Consent of their Metropolitan.

The Contests between the Bishop of Laon and Charles the Bald.

The Bishop of Laon fearing the Presence of his Uncle, dare not be at the Synod of Bishops met at Cambray for the Ordination of a Bishop, although he was summoned. In 868. Hincmarus Bishop of Laon engaged himself in a Business with Charles the Bald. Having some Contests with certain Laymen about the Estate of the Church, and principally with a Lord called Normannus, to whom the King had given a Benefice, i. e. some Lands belonging to the Church of Laon, with the Consent of this Bishop Hincmarus himself, who had himself sollicited him, and procured it for him, as one of his Friends, but afterwards repenting of what he had done, and being desirous to get it again, had excommunicated that Lord. He began to discuss the Affair privately before the Commissioners, among whom were some Bishops, but it happened that the Son of Luido accused the Bishop of Laon before the King, and the Lords of his Council, of having deprived him of a Benefice of his Father's, (i. e. of a certain Mannor belonging to the Church, which had of ancient times been possessed and enjoyed by his Father) although to retain the Possession and Enjoyment of it he had paid a Fine to the Church, and had gotten a Grant of him. The King complaining of these Actions to Hincmarus Bishop of Laon, he answered his Majesty with so much Impudence, that the Prince fell into a great Passion against him, and gave him many ill Words. He then summoned him to his Council, but Hincmarus humbly shewed him, that he could not appear, and at the same time sent a Letter to Rome to accuse Normannus, and to request the Pope to take this Matter upon him, and procure that he might come to Rome. Hincmarus hereupon was condemned for his Default by the King's Council, and all the Revenues of his Bishoprick were seized on. The King also put him out of his Office at Court and his Abby. And although Hincmarus Archbishop of Rheims was very angry with him, yet he endeavoured to assist him on this Occasion, and wrote a smart Letter to Charles the Bald, in which he affirms, that what he had done against Hincmarus was altogether unjust; that it was never heard of, that a Christian Prince should confiscate the Revenues of the Church. Whereupon he recites several Laws of the Emperors and Decrees of the Councils and Popes to prove, that 'tis not allowable for any Man to invade the Church Revenues. Then he presented to the King a Memoir, which contained several Canons, to shew, that Bishops ought not to appear before Lay Judges in Matters Ecclesiastical. The King answered, that the Kings his Predecessors had compelled the Bishops to give an Account before the Lords of his Council of the Benefices they would put their Officers out of. Hincmarus replied by another Writing, That that Custom was an Abuse, which was reformed by the Capitularies. The King being at Pistis in Normandy, he held a Council there. Hincmarus Bishop of Laon presented a Petition to the Bishops assembled, requiring them to settle him in his Revenues, or suffer him to shift for himself at Rome, but the Matter was accommodated by Hincmarus Archbishop of Rheims, and the Bishop of Laon was restored to his Place, after he had begged the King's Pardon, and so he retreated immediately into his Diocess. Charles the Bald commanded him several times to come to him, but he would not obey the Order, but designed to fly into the Kingdom of Lotharius, who had promised to receive him into his Protection. He had also the Boldness to write to King Charles, that he had rather live out of his Kingdom, than to be represented such an ill Man as he was reported to be in it. The King then commanded his Domestick Servants to come to him, some obeyed, but he detained the rest. After this the King a second time sent two Bishops to him, and some of his Guards, to bring them either by Persuasion or Force. Hincmarus Bishop of Laon having heard that some Soldiers were coming to him, pronounced Excommunication against those that did meddle with the Revenues of his Church. The two Bishops which Charles the Bald had sent, having put Hincmarus in mind of the Oath which he had made to the King, could not persuade him to go with them to him, and therefore returned after they had obliged such Persons of his Family as were freed by an Oath to appear. Hincmarus of Laon holding on his Course, issued out an Excommunication against several Persons in the Archbishoprick of Rheims, and in other Archbishopricks and Dioceses, not sparing the King, Charles himself, which was a Cause of great Scandal to the whole Church and Kingdom. Nevertheless Hincmarus Archbishop of Rheims found out a Way to compose this Matter, and to hinder the Bishops who were provoked, from bringing it before a Synod, and to reconcile his Nephew with those he had excommunicated; but this did not put an End to this Business, for Hincmarus of Laon, a Man of an untractable Temper, enraged King Charles again, who thereupon called an Assembly at Verbery, Apr. 24. 869. in which that Bishop was accused; and seeing himself ready to be condemned, he required Leave to go to Rome, and remove his Business thither. But King Charles instead of granting it, stopped him for some time, upon which he immediately excommunicated, or rather interdicted his Priests and Clergy, and forbad them to celebrate their Office, administer Baptism, yea, even to Infants in Danger of Death, to give the Communion even to dying Persons, or bury any Person in his Diocess, till he shall return, or they receive a Letter from Rome to order the contrary. The Archbishop of Rheims having heard of this Prohibition by some of the Clergy of the Church of Laon, who came to complain to him, wrote immediately to his Nephew to take off the Interdict, and to the Clergy of Laon, that they ought to exercise their Function, and administer the Sacraments, without any regard to that dangerous and unlawful Excommunication. He sent them also some Rules taken out of the Canons to direct them how to behave themselves. The Bishop of Laon not regarding the Advice of his Metropolitan, he wrote to him a second time more smartly, and enjoined the Clergy of the Church of Laon to do their Duty. He wrote also again a third Time to the Bishop of Laon, who was set at liberty, after he had taken an Oath to be faithful to King Charles. But to justifie himself, he gathered several Extracts out of the false Decretals attributed to the ancient Popes, in which it was said, that Bishops ought to be tried by the Holy See, at the first Examination, if they demanded it.

Of the Contests between Hincmarus and his Nephew

Wermerta

Some time after this, Pope Adrian wrote to Hincmarus Archbishop of Rheims, and King Charles, to compel Normannus to restore immediately to the Church of Laon the Lands he was in Possession of, telling him, that if he did not do it, he would excommunicate them, and to suffer Hincmarus Bishop of Laon to come to Rome to fulfil his Vow he had made of going thither, and to take Care of the Church of Laon in his Absence, which provoked them both against the Bishop of Laon.

Adrian's Letter in Favour of the Bishop of Laon.

The Quarrels of the two Hincmarus's about the Business of Nivinus.

In the mean time Lotharius II. King of Lorrain, being dead in Italy, Aug. 8. 869. Charles possessed himself of his Kingdom, and being accepted by the Grandees of the Country, he was crowned by Hincmarus Archbishop of Rheims, Sept. 7. in the same Year. In the beginning of the Year 870. Hincmarus Archbishop of Rheims expelled out of his Dioces a Person named Nivinus, being accused of debauching a Nun, and carrying her away. His Nephew not only received Nivinus, but put him in Possession of an Estate he had in another Diocess, and gave him in recompence of what he had lost a Pension out of the Revenues of the Church of Laon. Hincmarus wrote, Feb. 19. 870. to him, and tells him, that he ought not to receive either him or his Brother Berivicus, whom he had expelled out of his Dioces for several Crimes, of which he was found guilty. Hincmarus Bishop of Laon returned him an Answer, That he had always avoided to speak or write to him of such things as he had acted contrary to his Judgment, but he was obliged to be plain with him in reference to the Excommunication of Nivinus;

Of the Conteſts between Hincmarus and his Nephew

Nivinus, and could not but tell him, that he thought that he ought not to deal with that Perſon as if he had been regularly accuſed, and could not or would not make his Defence, or had been convicted of the Crime, becauſe when he had obtained a Time of him to clear himſelf, although he had no Accuſers, and was come upon the Day appointed to vindicate his own Innocence by the Teſtimony of credible Perſons, he neither found him, nor any Perſon in his ſtead to be his Judge; but without a legal Hearing he was commanded to depart out of his Dioceſs. He finds fault with Hincmarus for believing falſe Reports ſo eaſily, and aſſures him, that it was not true that he had received the Eſtate of Nivinus, or allowed him a Penſion out of the Revenues of the Church. He alſo defends himſelf ſtrongly againſt the Suſpicion which Hincmarus had entertained againſt him, that he ſold the Goods of the Church. He confeſſes that Nivinus had a great while ago offered him a part of his Eſtate adjoining to his, but he would not accept of his Gift, whereupon he ſoon after gave it to another Perſon; and alledges ſeveral Canons to prove, that he ought not to have paſſed ſo raſh a Sentence. Laſtly, he ſays, That he thinks Bertricus ought not to be looked upon as an excommunicated Perſon, becauſe the Archbiſhop of Rheims could not excommunicate him who was not of his Dioceſs, and had neither been put to publick Penance, nor condemned by a regular Sentence.

Another Difference between the two Hincmarus's about Adulphus.

Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims ſometime after this ſent another Requeſt to his Nephew, in which he had a more favourable Anſwer. The Biſhop of Laon had employed a certain Prieſt named Adulphus in a Commiſſion, who did not diſcharge his Truſt well, but being reproved for it by his Biſhop, ſpoke diſreſpectfully to him, and withdrew himſelf. Hincmarus angry at this, ſent the Prieſt Clarentius to tell him, that he was excommunicated, but he ſtopped his Ears, and would not hear the Sentence, and then fled to Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims. Afterwards being deſirous to return to Laon, the Doors of his Church and Cloyſter were ſhut againſt him, to his Admiration. Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims interceded for him, and deſired his Nephew to receive him, and reſtore him to his Place, or if not, at leaſt to receive him into Communion. Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon anſwered him, That that Prieſt had fled very unfitly, and without any Neceſſity, telling him, that he would never have any thing to do with him. That although he had behaved himſelf ſo ill to him, yet in reſpect to what he had written, he would reſtore him to his Prebend and Houſe, and would permit all that would to communicate with him, upon Condition that he ſhall not be allowed Communion with himſelf till he received him upon his Trial, or had Satisfaction. This Letter of Hincmarus is dated the 19*th*. and the Anſwer the 27*th*. of April, in the ſame Year 870. [This Letter with ſome others of Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon to Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims is printed, with the Works of Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims, by Sirmondus at Paris, 1645. Vol. 2.]

Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon declared openly againſt his Uncle.

At the ſame time Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims and Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon quarrelled about another Matter. There was a Chappel in the Dioceſs of Laon belonging to a Benefice of the Church of Rheims, in which there was ordinarily a Prieſt to officiate, who was preſented by the Incumbent of the Benefice. Sigibert, who had the Benefice, had preſented one named Senatus, a Servant of the Church of Rheims, and Hincmarus would ſet him at Liberty, that he might be ordained by the Biſhop of Laon. This Clergyman, tho' he was not in Prieſtly Orders, had yet officiated in that Chappel for 4. Years. Then the Biſhop of Laon ſent thither two Prieſts of his Company, but after a while he removed theſe Prieſts, and would have a Prieſt only to bear the Titles, and that the Inhabitants ſhould go to a Pariſh of the Dioceſs of Laon governed by Hermerardus. Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims deſired his Nephew, either to ordain Senatus, or to put into that Church another Prieſt whom he ſhould appoint to bear the Title. Inſtead of ſatisfying his Uncle, he gave him an angry and harſh Anſwer, thinking himſelf abuſed by ſome Admonitions which he had given him in his Letter, with the Authority of his Uncle and Metropolitan. He firſt of all accuſes him as the Author of his Impriſonment; Then he tells him, that he can't give him a full Anſwer as to the Buſineſs of Hermerardus, becauſe he had not heard it canonically and regularly; That he did not remember what Deciſion had been made in that Buſineſs, but would inquire of thoſe that had been preſent, and remembred it; That he did not poſitively require the Prieſt Adulphus to be preſent at the Synod to be held at Laon on the 15*th*. of that Month; That he wondred, that he did not ſend again ſooner, ſince he had granted what he had deſired; That as to Senatus, 'twas not true that he had conſented that that Clerk ſhould have the Church in debate, but on the contrary had told him, that he would deal with the Church which the Archbiſhop of Rheims had in his Dioceſs, as he had done with that which the Biſhop of Laon had in his; That he had a Complaint againſt Sigibert for putting that Clerk into the Church that belonged to Hermerardus; That Sigibert had anſwered, that he did it with the Conſent of his Officers, and particularly of Adulphus; That he had anſwered, that if Hermerardus would relinquiſh that Church, well, if not, he would proceed as in Juſtice he might; That not being able to perſuade Hermerardus to recede from his Right, he had given Notice to Sigibert by a Man that belonged to him; That afterward he took that Church from Senatus; That Hermerardus had deſired to determine the Lands in a Synod; That he had adviſed Sigibert to accommodate the Matter; Laſtly, That he could not approve of the Ordination of Senatus, and ſince it was faulty at firſt, becauſe he was a Servant, he ought not to confirm it, nor promote him to a ſuperior Degree of Orders.

Of the Conteſts between Hincmarus and his Nephew

Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims being met with ſeveral other Biſhops, at the Palace of King Charles in Gondeville, in the Dioceſs of Tola, Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon, inſtead of ſaluting him as he did the reſt of the Biſhops, would not ſo much as take Notice of him. Wenilo Archbiſhop of Rouen asking him why he would not live peaceably with his Metropolitan, he anſwered him, that he could never be Friends with him heartily, becauſe he had not burnt the Writings which he had ſent to him concerning the Excommunication which he had iſſued out againſt his whole Dioceſs; adding, that he did but follow his Example in Excommunicating, becauſe he had excommunicated a Village in his Dioceſs belonging to the Biſhop of Laon, becauſe the Inhabitants had refuſed to pay him their Tenths, but payed them to the Church to which they belonged, ſo that ſeveral Infants died unbaptized, and ſeveral noble Perſons without the Sacraments. Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims replied to Wenilo, That that Fact was not true, and, That that Recrimination was a tacit Confeſſion of his Fault, and in ſhort, that he deſired nothing more, but that the Writings on both Sides might be examined by a Synod. Wenilo relating this Anſwer to Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon, he ſaid, That he had not the Papers that had paſſed between them, but gave him the Papers which began with the Verſes directed to Carolomannus, which was the ſecond Collection of ſome Extracts of the Pope's Decretals, and Canons to ſettle the Judgments of the Cauſes of the Biſhops at Rome in their firſt Examination. Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims having read theſe Papers with a great deal of Earneſtneſs, made an Anſwer to them, which he ſent to Wenilo, to be given to the Biſhop of Laon. He waited for an Anſwer, or expected that he would have ſent him the Writings which he complained of, that they might be examined, but Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon would do nothing.

The Conteſt between Hincmarus and his Nephew at the Synod of Attigni.

When they went from hence, the King came to Attigni, where he held a Synod in May, at which the Deputies of the 10. Provinces of France were preſent. Here they firſt gave the Ambaſſadors of Germany Audience about the Diviſion of the Empire. Then the Buſineſs of Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon was brought upon the Board. Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims after he had delivered him 55. Articles to ſerve for an Anſwer: As to the Collections he had made out of the Decretals, and to all that he had ſaid and written againſt him, preſented a Petition to the Council, in which he related to the Biſhops all that he had done to conquer the Obſtinacy of the Biſhop of Laon. He was alſo accuſed in the Council by the Biſhops, who complained of the unjuſt and raſh Excommunications which he iſſued out againſt their Dioceſans; by the King, That he had broken the Oath of Allegiance which he had made to him; and by the Lord Normannus, That he had put him out by Force of Arms of the Benefices which he was in lawful Poſſeſſion of. Hincmarus of Laon, that he might get free from this Buſineſs, demanded that he might be judged by the Holy See, but not being able to gain that Point, he delivered a Writing, in which he promiſed Submiſſion to his Metropolitan Hincmarus, and took a new Oath of Allegiance to King Charles, but he deſired that Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims ſhould give him a Writing to oblige himſelf to maintain him in the Privileges that belonged to him, and to defend him. Frotarius Archbiſhop of Bourdeaux was the Mediator of this Peace. But ſince the Accuſations of Normannus and his Wife, who complained of their ill Uſage, and that they were unjuſtly deprived of the Benefices they had enjoyed, and alſo of ſome others to the ſame Effect, did yet ſtand unſatisfied, Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims choſe for the Judges of that Affair Actardus Biſhop of Nants, Ragenelmus Biſhop of Noyon, and John Biſhop of Cambray. Theſe Judges examined that Matter before the King, and were of Opinion, that the Biſhop of Laon ought to reſtore ſome of thoſe Benefices, but they did not give their Judgment upon the Day prefixed, but put it off to another Day to give Sentence. Then Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon, ſeeing that the Affair would not go well for him, eſcaped away in the Night. What paſſed afterwards, I ſhall give you an Account of, when I have given an Abridgment of the 55. Articles which Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims preſented in the Council to his Nephew, as an Anſwer to all that he had written and ſaid againſt him.

In the Beginning of this Work he puts ſome Verſes, as an Anſwer to thoſe which Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon had put before his ſecond Collection of Canons, and as this Biſhop had taken this for the Subject of his Verſes, That Men might freely appeal to the Holy See, ſo he made it the Subject of his, that according to the Canons all the Biſhops of a Province ought to be ſubject to their Metropolitans, and ſharply reproves his Nephew for not giving him the Reſpect due to him.

Hincmarus's 55. put Articles.

Of the Conteſts between Hincmarus and his Nephew

In Art. 1. he explains the Buſineſs about the Chappel, where the Biſhop of Laon accuſed him for excommunicating the Inhabitants becauſe they would not pay the Tenths. He ſays, That the Chappel, which was in the Country of Attolia, had been a long time before ſubject to the Prieſt of the Church of the Village of Juvigny; That Bertierus, ſent by the Biſhop of Laon to take Care of that Place, had hindred them from paying their Tithes to the Prieſt of the Pariſh, and had employed them as he pleaſed; That the Prieſt Aufoldus, who was to take Care of the Dioceſs of Rheims, where this Chappel ſtood, had demanded Juſtice ſeveral times againſt Bertierus, and when he could not obtain it, he forbid celebrating Divine Service in that Chappel till the Inhabitants ſhould pay their Tithes to their Curate according to the ancient Uſage, in which if they would hearken to him, they might come to the Church of Juvigny, but that Baptiſm and the Communion were denied to no Man, neither did any Man die in that Time without receiving the Sacraments. Having thus cleared himſelf as to that Matter, he proves by a long Poſſeſſion, that the Chappel of the Court and Lordſhip of Attolia did belong to the Territories within the Dioceſs of Rheims.

In Art. 2. he reproves the Biſhop of Laon for getting an Abby, and taking an Office at Court without his Leave, and proves, that by the Canons ſuch Things are not allowable to Suffragan Biſhops without the Conſent of their Metropolitan; as alſo for excommunicating Amalbertus of the Dioceſs of Rheims, being accuſed of Impotency by his Wife, who was taken out of the Biſhoprick of Laon.

In Art. 3. he reproves him for excommunicating Perſons not of his own Dioceſs.

In Art. 4. he relates what had paſſed about the Writings in the Conferences with Wenilo.

In Art. 5. he anſwers the threatning Speeches which the Biſhop of Laon had given out, that he could withſtand his Metropolitan, and valued him not, becauſe the Holy See had already diſannulled two Sentences paſſed by him, viz. thoſe againſt Rothadus and Wulfadus. As to the former, after he hath produced ſeveral Canons to prove, that Metropolitans and a Synod of the Province had a Right to judge the Biſhops at the firſt Tryal, although the Holy See might afterwards reſtore them if it thought fit; He ſays, That the Pope did not find Fault with the Judgment in France given againſt Rothadus, but through his great Wiſdom, he had deſired them to reſtore that Biſhop who had implored his Help. That as to the ſecond Judgment he was not concerned for it, being none of the Judges, and that ſince the Holy See would not join with ſo rigorous a Sentence, he had conſented to his Pleaſure and the Will of the King. That he had fully cleared himſelf to Pope Nicholas, and that his Succeſſor Adrian had through his Goodneſs put away all Diſpleaſure and Anger about that Matter. In fine, he ſays, That he had always done with Alacrity what the Holy See had deſired of him, to avoid all Differences, being perſuaded, as St. Leo ſays, that the Pope hath ſome Reaſon to mitigate the Severity of the Laws, on Condition that they ſhould ever after beware of it, and keep to the due Execution of the Canons.

In Art. 6. he enquires into the Truth of what Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon had ſaid to ſeveral Perſons concerning his Uncle, That he had looſed thoſe whom he had bound, had depoſed thoſe whom he had ordained, I will cauſe that he or I will never ſing Maſs more; Hincmarus ſhews, That it did not become him who was his Inferior to ſpeak ſo of him, and vindicates the Rights of Metropolitans, and the Difference between them and other Biſhops. It belongs to them to call Synods, and all their Suffragans are bound to come to them, or ſend their Excuſe, and if they do not ſo, they may puniſh them; That the Accuſations againſt any Biſhop ought to be brought to them, and they may appoint Judges for the Accuſed, or conſent to them that are elected. It belongs to them to ordain the Biſhops of their Provinces, and thoſe that are not ordained with their Conſent, ought not to be acknowledged for Biſhops according to the Council of Nice, whereas, if a Biſhop be ordained with the Conſent of his Metropolitan, and other Biſhops of the Province, except one or two, his Ordination is accounted good. If a Biſhop dies in his Province, it belongs to the Metropolitan to name a Viſiter of the vacant Church. A Biſhop ought to ſign the Regulations and Canons which his Metropolitan preſents to him, if they contain nothing in them contrary to the Faith. He can't make any Changes or Alterations in the Lands of his Dioceſs, without the Conſent and Advice of his Metropolitan. Men may appeal from the Judgments of the Biſhop to the Metropolitan; if he hath excommunicated any Perſon, and will not receive him again, he may be abſolved by his Metropolitan in a Synod of Biſhops. Laſtly, The Metropolitan hath a Care of all the Province, and all thoſe that have any Eccleſiaſtical Matters may apply themſelves to him, and he can take Cognizance of them: A Biſhop hath only the Government of his own Dioceſs, in which he may ordain Prieſts and Deacons; if he hath any Differences with another Biſhop, they can't take the Biſhops of another Province for Judges; he can do nothing in the general Affairs of a Province without his Metropolitan: In dubious Cauſes he ought to aſſiſt him, he ought not to go directly to Rome; if he will go out of his Province, he muſt firſt obtain Leave of his Metropolitan. Nevertheleſs, if he hath any Accuſation againſt his Metropolitan, he may demand Judges of the Holy See, according to the Council of Sardica. Laſtly, The Metropolitan may cauſe the Canons, and Conſtitutions of the Church, to be put in Execution in all the Province, without aſſembling any Synod, or conſulting the Biſhops, and if he finds any thing oppoſite to them, he may reform it immediately, becauſe in ſo doing he is the Author of no new Laws, but the Executer of the old only.

Of the Conteſts between Hincmarus and his Nephew

In the 7*th.* Article, he reproves Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Laon, for going out of his Dioceſs without his Conſent, and flying from the Judgment of his Metropolitan and the Biſhops of his Province.

In the 8*th.* Article, he accuſes him for ſending the Pope's Letters directed to the King and himſelf, by ſuch Archbiſhops as were at a Diſtance from him, whereas he ought to have ſent them by his own Meſſengers.

In the 9*th.* Article, he reproves him for having excommunicated a Monk of St. Dennis, which the King had put in a Monaſtery in the Dioceſs of Laon, and would not be perſuaded to revoke that Excommunication.

In the 10*th.* Article, he anſwers the Collection of Decretals made by Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon, and becauſe he grounded the Authority of theſe Records upon a Paſſage of St. Leo, who ſays, that we are obliged to obey the Decrees of his Predeceſſors, made and promulgated concerning the Orders and Diſcipline of the Church, quæ de Eccleſiaſticis Ordinibus, & Canonum ſunt promulgata diſciplinis: He explains the Signification of this Expreſſion, and affirms, that it ought to be underſtood of the Laws taken out of the Canons, and which they have publiſhed in their Decretals, and not of the private Decrees which they have made, and which are not agreeable to them; whereupon he cites ſeveral Sentences of the Popes, which declare, That we ought to obſerve the Canons.

In the following Articles, as far as the 16*th.* he treats of the Order and Subordination in general, which ought to be among the Biſhops.

In the 16*th.* Article he treats in particular concerning the Subordination of the Church of Laon to that of Rheims: He ſays that this Metropolis had eleven Churches under it, before St. Remigius erected the Caſtle of Laon in that Biſhoprick: That the Biſhoprick of Laon owes its Erection to the Church of Rheims, and that it hath always been ſubject to it: That the Authority of St. Remigius is in his Succeſſors, and that this Metropolis hath been dignified with ſeveral Privileges by the Holy See.

In the 17*th.* he cites ſeveral Paſſages in the Pope's Letters againſt thoſe Inferiors that exalt themſelves againſt their Superiors.

In the 18*th.* and 19*th.* he ſhews that ſeveral have deſtroyed themſelves through Pride and Vanity, by explaining Holy Scripture according to their own Fancies, and by governing according to their own Humour, without following the Tradition of the Church.

In the 20*th.* he ſhews that the Diſcipline of the Church may change and alter: He ſpeaks of the firſt ſix General Councils, whoſe Authority he acknowledged. As to the ſeventh he ſays, That 'twas not received in France, and cites a Paſſage of the Caroline Book concerning the General Nature of Synods. Afterwards, he heaps together many Hiſtorical Facts, in which he is miſtaken in giving credit to the Suppoſititious Letters of Mark and Fœlix.

In the 22*d.* he explains St. Gregory's Words in his Letter to Theoctiſtus, that they ought not to be abſolved who are excommunicated by the Church; and maintains, that they ought to be underſtood of theſe only that are excommunicated for juſt Reaſons, becauſe we ought not to think that unjuſt Excommunications are made by the Church.

In the 23*d.* and 24*th.* Articles, he ſays, That the Roman Church hath not received the 9*th.* Canon of the Council of Chalcedon, in that which reſpects the Permiſſion, which it gives to a Clerk, who hath any thing againſt his Metropolitan, to apply himſelf to the Biſhop of Conſtantinople. In the laſt of theſe Articles, he rejects the Collection of Canons, which was ſaid to be given by Pope Adrian to Angilram.

In the 25*th.* and 26*th.* He ſhews that there is a Difference to be obſerved between the Deciſions of General Councils and the Letters of Holy Men and Popes: That 'tis abſolutely neceſſary to obey all the Deciſions of the Councils, but the ſame Subjection is not due to all that is contain'd in thoſe Letters.

Of the Conteſts between Hincmarus and his Nephew

In the 27*th*. he ſhews, that Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon is not exempted from anſwering, for ſaying, That he was ſtopped; and by pretending that he hath appealed to Rome.

In the 28*th*. he ſays, That 'twas an Injury to interdict his Prieſts and Clerks without any Accuſation, or they were either convicted of their Crimes, or confeſſed them. To prove this, he produces a great Number of Canons, which preſcribe the Order to be obſerved in Eccleſiaſtical Judgments, and what ought to go before the Condemnation of every Perſon.

In the 29*th*. and 30*th*. he ſhews, That Superiors have a Right to declare no Excommunications which are manifeſtly irregular and contrary to the Laws of the Church, ſuch as that was by which the Biſhop of Laon forbad to adminiſter Baptiſm to Infants, and the Sacrament to dying Perſons, contrary to the Decrees of the Church, which do not allow the Sacraments to be denied to any Perſons in their Neceſſity. He ſets down in this Article many good Rules about Excommunication.

In the following Article he ſays, 'Tis great Inhumanity to deny Burial to the Dead.

In the 34*th*. he ſhews, by ſeveral Paſſages out of the Pope's Letters, that about Matters evident, or already decided, 'tis not neceſſary to call a Synod, nor appeal to the Holy See, and that the things already ordained and decreed ſhould be put in Execution.

In the 35*th*. Article he proves, That the Holy See judges with the Biſhops, and the Biſhops with the Holy See; That no Man can put a reſtraint upon Metropolitans, nor hinder them from judging the Affairs of their Province, much leſs in that which is already ordained, and decided by the Councils. He adds, that in theſe things there is no need of conſulting, or calling together the Biſhops of the Province.

In the 36*th*. Article, he examines the Subſcription of the Inſtrument of the Biſhop of Laon, by which he excommunicated thoſe that would not obey the Decrees of the Popes contained in his Collection. He ſays, That if he affirms that this Collection contains any thing ſingular in it, and contrary to the Conſtitutions of the Council of Nice, and the other Councils received and approved of by the Church, he is himſelf excommunicated by endeavouring to excommunicate others, and ſo hath ſeparated himſelf from the Church's Unity with thoſe he hath cauſed to ſign it.

In the following Articles to the 43*d*. he gives him wholeſome Advice, and aſſures him in the 40*th*. that he was no Cauſe that he was out of Favour with the King.

In the 43*d*. he vindicates himſelf from the Calumny that the Biſhop of Laon had caſt upon him, in accuſing him of falſifying the Quotations which he cited. He ſpeaks of the Buſineſs of Nivinus, he ſays, that his Crime was publick and certain, that all the World knew that he had debauched the Nun, and had conveyed her by Night out of the Monaſtery into his Houſe; that the thing being diſcovered, the Nun had undergone her Penance in the Convent, and afterward he had conveyed her away; that he had done all he could to make him acknowledge his Fault, and oblige him to do Penance, but inſtead of undergoing Penance, he had affronted and abuſed him; whereupon he excommunicated him, and expelled him out of his Dioceſs.

In the 44*th*. and 45*th*. Articles, he exhorts his Nephew to come to an Agreement, lay aſide all Animoſities and Enmities, and to take mild Methods to gain the King's Favour without going to Rome.

In the 46*th*. and 47*th*. he reproves him for bragging he was never conquered.

In the 48*th*. he ſays, 'Tis very dangerous for a Man to be too fond of his own Opinion.

In the 49*th*. he adviſes him not to abuſe the Talent that God hath given him.

In the 50*th*. he reproves him for not ſuffering any to ſay, That he hath received any Kindneſs, or good Turn, which he hath not deſerved.

In the 51*ſt*. he accuſes him of receiving Preſents from his Clergy, and proves, that it is forbidden by the Canons.

In the 52*d*. he accuſes him of being arrogant, proud and vain.

In the 53*d*. he gives him Advice about his Geſture, and the Motions of his Body, which were indecent.

In the 54*th*. he exhorts him not to miſuſe his Health of Body, or Pleaſures of the World, in the Flower of his Age. Laſtly, he concludes this Work with Elias's Words to Eliſha, I have done for you all I was able. He adds, that he believes, tho' he ſhall not profit by his Advice, that it will not be in vain, before God, to him that gives it. He prays to God to grant to him, to will, ſay, know, and do what he hath commanded, and to make his Nephew to hear favourably, and do what is convenient for him, and that both of them may will and do what he hath commanded, and perſevere in the Obſervance of his Commandments.

We will now return to the remaining Part of the Buſineſs of Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon: After he was gone from Attigni, as we ſaid before, he wrote a Letter to Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims, which was given him the 12*th*. of July by one of his Deacons named Ermenoldus, in which he beſeeches him, that ſince he had appealed twice to the Pope, as they themſelves acknowledged, he would get Leave of the King to let him go thither. Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims returned him no Anſwer, whereupon he wrote directly to the King, and having excuſed himſelf for not coming to him, becauſe he had a Feaver, he prays him earneſtly to let him go to Rome, that having performed his Vow, he may be recovered from his Feaver. The King anſwered Bertricus, who brought him the Letter, That 'twas a wonder that the Feaver, which kept him from Court, ſhould not hinder him from going to Rome; that he ſhould come to him, and if he had any juſt Cauſe of going to Rome, he would permit him. The King alſo commanded him to give a Benefice to one named Eloi. Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon having received this Anſwer, ſent Heddo, Provoſt of the Church of Laon, to carry a Petition to the Archbiſhop of Rheims, in which he tells him, 1. That he greeted him, and prayed for him. 2. That he was perſuaded that he was ſenſible that he was perſecuted, and that he did ſhare in his Sufferings. 3. That the King had taken away the Revenues of the Church of Laon, and given them to Normannus, which he knew when he withdrew from Attigni. 4. That ſome other Perſons had poſſeſſed themſelves of the Lands belonging to the Church by the King's Order, who had required him to reſtore a Benefice to Eloi, who had forcibly gotten it. 5. That he intreated him, who was his Uncle and Archbiſhop, to obtain of the King that he might have a free Adminiſtration of the Revenues of his Church, and to order and diſpoſe of them, as he thought fit: He promiſes in this Juncture to obey him, come to him, and follow his Directions, proteſting, That if the King will not grant him this Favour, he never will obey him more, nor never come in his Preſence: That he will fly to the Holy See, and uſe his Authority by excommunicating thoſe who have invaded the Goods of the Church, as it is allowed in the Conſtitution of the Biſhops, which he had ſent him. This Conſtitution was made up of certain Canons of the Council held in 860. at Touſſi, in the Dioceſs of Tola, which decreed, among other things, that thoſe who violently ſeized upon the Goods of the Church, ſhould be excommunicated for their whole Lives, nor ſhould obtain Communion at their Death, nor have a Chriſtian Burial; That the Princes and Judges ſhould find out ſuch Perſons as corrupted Virgins and Widows dedicated to God, upon Penalty of being expelled out of the Church, and deprived of Burial; That thoſe that have taken away any of the Church Revenues, or Goods, ſhould reſtore them double, treble, or fourfold, according to the Thing they have taken.

Of the Conteſts between Hincmarus and his Nephew

A Petition of Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon.

Altho' the Name of Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims be among the Subſcriptions to the Canons of this Council, yet when he received this Writing, he ſaid he had never heard of any ſuch Conſtitutions, and that the Biſhops who were preſent at that Council ſaid the ſame thing: He ſays, That theſe Conſtitutions are unreaſonable, and contrary to the Laws of the Church, and judged by the Subſcriptions, that thoſe Acts were falſe, becauſe he found the Names of ſome Biſhops that were not there, and two Biſhops of the ſame See at the ſame time, viz. Two Biſhops of Auxerre, Chriſtianus, and Ablo, and two Biſhops of Noin, Immo and Raginelmus, who ſucceeded him. He adds, that his Seal was among others there, altho' he was ſure that he had not ſet his Seal to that Act.

The Anſwer to the Biſhop of Laon's Petition.

This Petition of Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon was given to Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims at Pontigon, July 16. by Heddo: He repreſented his Nephew's Petition to the King, and got the Biſhops then at Court to ſecond him in it, viz. Remigius, Hardwicus, Odo, and Willibert. The King anſwered, That he thought the Biſhop of Laon might be ſatisfied with what was ſaid at Attigni; That he had taken more than belonged to his Church out of the Eſtate which the Prince was willing to give him, ſo that he might re-enter upon the Lands of Paulls; but as to the other Revenues about which the Conteſt was, he muſt wait till the Matter could be regulated, and Commiſſioners be ſent on both ſides to the Places to examine what doth really belong to the Church, that it may be reſtored to it. As to the Benefices of which he ſpeaks, Hincmarus anſwers him, That he had deprived the lawful Heirs of them, to whom he himſelf had once granted them; and that the Judges, which he had choſen, had determined that he ought to reſtore them; that he would ſtay but till ſome Articles were decided before he fled, and would not wait till Sentence were pronounced; That he might return, and bring with him the Arreſt, by which the King had given, or reſtored to the Church of Laon, the Lands in queſtion, and would do him Juſtice. In fine, that he had ſent him a Writing of that which was done in the Council of Touſſi, which he never ſaw, and of which the Biſhops of that Council never heard, and which was not agreeable to the Original he had. Laſtly, he adviſes him not to excommunicate Normannus, nor any others, raſhly, nor go to Rome till 'twas examin'd in a Provincial Synod, whether his Appeal to the Holy See were regular.

The Biſhop of Laon's Anſwer

Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon returned a long Anſwer to this Letter of Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims, in which he tells tells him, That he did not deſire to enjoy the Revenues of the Church to put them to a bad uſe, but to employ them as the Canons preſcribe; and that it could not but trouble him much to ſee the Revenues, which were intended for the Subſiſtence of himſelf and Clergy, to be taken away, and given to a Perſon to whom his Predeceſſor would never grant a Church-Farm; That another had got a Farm granted him, which uſed to furniſh the Church with Candles; and ſeveral others were given to ſuch Perſons, who had done no Service to the Church a long time, and could be no ways profitable to it; That the King never ſpake a word to him, of that which Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims mentioned to him; and that he only told him, that he heard he had taken more Grounds in the Lands of Paulls than belonged to him, or were granted by the Letters he had ſent him; That he would have them; That he was willing that he ſhould enjoy what was contained in theſe Letters, except the Farms in the poſſeſſion of Anſgarius, who was his Man, upon condition, nevertheleſs, that they ſhould reſtore them to him, if he found that they belonged to the Lands of Paulls; That the King had delayed to reſtore them to him, but he was put upon doing it by the Advice of Hincmarus; That he had not unjuſtly ſeized upon, and kept thoſe Farms, but they have belonged above 60 Years to the Lands of Paulls; That he had enjoyed them ever ſince the King had reſtored thoſe Lands, ſix months ſince, till Anſgarius had obtain'd them of the King, without any cognizance of the Cauſe, and without examining his Claim. As to the Judges, which, he ſays, were named by him, it is true that the King ordered the Archbiſhop of Rheims to nominate ſome Biſhops who ſhould examine the Affair of thoſe who complained that they were deprived of their Benefices; that Hincmarus having named them, he did appear before them with one Clergyman and Layman of his Church; that Regenard having preferred his complaint firſt, he did ſhew his Reaſons why he deprived him; and whereas, among other things, he had accuſed him of not paying the Service due, the Judges required him to take an Oath that it was ſo, and that Regenard ſhould loſe his Benefice. Whereupon Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon complains, that the Judges regarded Temporal more than Spiritual Cauſes, becauſe being alſo accuſed of ſpoiling the Farms, and having abuſed the Revenues of the Church, they did not condemn him to make any Reſtitution. The ſecond that made his complaint was one Grivon, who being accuſed of ſpoiling a Wood which his Father had planted, he defended himſelf by ſaying, 'Twas not ſo, and that 'twas ſome Peaſant that had waſted it againſt his knowledge; and that Hincmarus had deprived him of his Benefice only becauſe he would not go to Rome; That when Hincmarus maintained the contrary, and produced his Witneſſes, they put off the Judgment of that Affair till next Week. He then confeſſes, that he withdrew himſelf, but ſays 'twas to avoid the Perſecution intended againſt him; That all his Family was baniſhed; That they favoured the Lord Normannus, who was excommunicated both by the Pope and himſelf; That they would not permit him to go to Rome, but had taken away the Revenues that belong to his Church. As to the Conſtitution of the Synod of Touſſi, he ſays, that he received it of Hardwicus Archbiſhop of Beſancon, who was preſent at it; and that it was written by two of his Deacons; and that he remembers well, that 'twas made in that Council; That 'tis true, that he had compoſed another Letter, but finding it too long, he thought it beſt to ſign this which was ſhorter, and, as it were, an abridgment of the other. Laſtly, he enlarges upon the Pope's Decretals; he affirms that they do not contradict one another, and that the Biſhops, who deſire to be judged at Rome, at the firſt examination ought to be ſent thither. He complains of his Archbiſhop, that he had been no Help to him ſince he deſired to be ſent thither, but, on the contrary, oppoſed his Intereſt. This is the Anſwer that Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon gave his Metropolitan; but having no mind to have to do with him, nor thoſe Eccleſiaſtical Judges that he had nominated, he reſolved to requeſt Secular Judges of the King, two months after he retired from Attigni. The King appointed Helmingerius, Hotarius and Urſio who were Court-Officers. Theſe Judges altered, and re-examined the things that had been decided by the Eccleſiaſtical Judges, and were more favourable to Hincmarus of Laon than they had been, for they made the Lord Normannus to leave his Benefice; and others, who had gotten poſſeſſion of the Benefices in conteſt through the flight of Hincmarus, to reſign them to him again. Things being thus ordered, Hincmarus of Laon returned to Court, and never ſpake more of going to Rome.

A new Conteſt between Hincmarus of Laon and the King.

Hincmarus, Archbiſhop of Rheims, was very angry that his Nephew had ſo well acquitted himſelf before the Lay-Judges, contemning the Authority of his See, and the Judges he had appointed; wherefore he wrote to him with a great deal of Paſſion. Nevertheleſs, the Judgment given for him was executed; but not long after, Hincmarus of Laon engaged in a freſh Quarrel with King Charles upon the account of Carloman. This happened thus; Carloman, the Eldeſt Son of King Charles, was baptized in the Church of Rheims, and devoted by his Father to be a Churchman, having been ſhaved, and afterwards received all the Orders, as far as a Deacon, from the Hands of Hildegarius Biſhop of Meaux; but becauſe he was forced to embrace a Profeſſion, which diſpleaſed him, he reſolved to make his eſcape, and being got away, he conſpired againſt his Father. He was accuſed in the Synod of Attigni, and condemned as a Rebel, and thereupon being deprived of his Abbies was put in Priſon. Having appealed to Rome, the Pope wrote in his favour, and a little after he was ſet at Liberty. But in the Year following he began his Quarrel again, took Arms, gathered Troops, and plundered the Country. Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims, in the abſence of the King, who was gone into Burgundy, aſſembled the Biſhops of his Province immediately, and after he had admoniſhed him four times that he ſhould lay down his Arms, he declared him excommunicated, and all his Soldiers, which were the greateſt part of the Province of Rheims, if they did not reform, and do Penance before the 11*th*. of March. Hincmarus ſent this Letter of Excommunication to Remigius Archbiſhop of Lyons, and to the Biſhops of his Province, and wrote on purpoſe to Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon, to require his conſent, under Hand, to this Excommunication, but he gave him no Anſwer to it; wherefore he wrote a ſecond time more earneſtly to him. Then he anſwered, that he would not give his conſent to it, becauſe he had not anſwered his deſire made to him by Heddo, which he ought to have added in that Act. Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims replied, that Heddo had never ſpoke to him about it, and that he had not any thing to add. Nevertheleſs, he deſired him to tell him plainly what he would have added, promiſing that he would do it if it were reaſonable, being always ready to learn of others, follow their advice, and reform any thing that was amiſs. In the reſt of the Letter, he ſpeaks with loftineſs to his Nephew, and ſhews that he is greatly diſpleaſed with his Diſobedience. 'Tis dated Aug. 19.

Of the Conteſt between Hincmarus and his Nephew

On the 5*th*. of May, a Clergyman of Laon called Teutlandus coming to Rheims, the Archbiſhop ordered him to bid his Biſhop to ſend his conſent immediately to the Excommunication of Caroloman. Laſtly, Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon being admoniſhed a 6*th*. time by a Letter from his Metropolitan, anſwered, that he wondred he ſhould deſire his conſent to that Excommunication, ſince he had not taken his Advice in iſſuing it out. He alſo complains, that his Uncle had ſent his Summons by the Clergymen of his own Church, and that he had pronounced a Benediction in the Dioceſs of Laon upon ſome of the Confederates of Caroloman.

Hincmarus of Laon cited to a Synod.

On the 14*th*. of May, Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims cited the Biſhop of Laon to a Synod, which was to be held, that he ſhould anſwer to the complaints and accuſations brought againſt him; but he, inſtead of giving a civil anſwer, wrote a Letter full of Invectives and Affronts, in which he accuſes him of betraying, and delivering him up, when he was apprehended, and of being his Enemy ever ſince he oppoſed him in his putting a Biſhop into Rothadus's place, till he ſhould receive the Pope's pleaſure about that Affair. Nevertheleſs, Adrian wrote two Letters in favour of Caroloman to the King his Father, to the Biſhops of France, and the Lords, in which he forbids the laſt taking Arms againſt Caroloman, and the others to excommunicate him. Theſe Letters bear date July 13*th*. but they did Caroloman no ſervice, as we ſhall ſhew anon. This Pope wrote alſo to Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims, March 25. to call a Synod for the Reformation of Abuſes in his Dioceſs; and under this pretence Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims cited Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon, in the Name of the Pope, and by his Authority, to the Synod which was to be holden at Douzi, Aug. 5. The Act ſays July 5.

Adrian's Letters in favour of Caroloman.

The Council of Douzi.

The Council being aſſembled at Douzi, King Charles preſented a Bill to them containing ſeveral heads of Accuſation againſt Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon; the beginning of it is loſt. In that part which remains, he accuſes him for writing to Rome againſt him, at the ſame time when he acknowledged in France, that he had not meddled with any of the Revenues of the Church; for going out of his Kingdom into Lotharius's; for not coming to him when he had commanded him, and for hindering his Servants to come to him; for writing a ſecond time to Rome againſt him; for flying from Attigni after he had ſworn Allegiance to him: Laſtly, for arming his Servants to hinder the Governor of the Province, that he might not apprehend certain ſuſpicious Perſons which were at his Houſe, to ſend them to the Council, but let them eſcape. When this Bill was read, the King deſired, that ſince the Biſhop of Laon, who had been cited by his Metropolitan to appear before the Council, did not come, they would ſearch what the Canons and Laws decreed concerning thoſe heads of Accuſation brought againſt him; and if he came to the Synod, that the differences between him and his Metropolitan ſhould be judged and determined.

Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims preſented another Petition to the Synod, in which he briefly relates all that had paſſed between him and Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon, the cauſes of complaint he had againſt him, the heads of Accuſation ſation that he charged him with, and the conſequence of the whole matter, ſetting down under every Article the Deciſions of the Popes and Councils, ſhewing wherein the Biſhop of Laon had offended, and the puniſhment he deſerved. He defends himſelf, againſt the Accuſation, that he had betrayed him, and produces three Letters written at the time he was ſeized, to ſhew that he had no hand in his Impriſonment, but had diſapproved it. He alſo juſtifies himſelf againſt the Accuſation, that he had no reſpect to the Judgment of the Holy See, and ſlighted its Authority, and treats of what paſſed at Attigni about that matter. Laſtly, he concludes, that Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon having been ſummon'd three times by the Council and not appearing, ought to be condemned for his Contumacy, notwithſtanding the Appeal he had made to the Holy See, becauſe it is irregular, and he hath not proſecuted it.

The Biſhops of the Council deſiring ſome time to anſwer the King's Requeſt, made a Collection of the Canons, Laws, and Teſtimonies of the Fathers, upon every head of the Accuſation contain'd in that Bill, concerning the falſe Oaths and Perjury, the Sedition and Violence he had uſed, concerning the alienating of the Revenues of his Church, the Calumnies he had written to Rome againſt his Prince, his Diſobedience and Rebellion, and for having made many of the King's Subjects to fly.

This Memoir was read in the Council, and Hincmarus, Biſhop of Laon, ſummoned again to the Council. But he anſwered, that he had appealed to the Holy See. The Biſhop of Soiſſons, who cited him, told him, that he ought to appear at the Synod, and if it were neceſſary for him then to appeal, they would ſuffer him to proſecute it. Hermerardus alſo was cited by the Synod. Theſe Citations having been repeated three times, at laſt Hincmarus appeared before the Council; but Hermerardus would not come. They then read to him the King's Bill, and a Letter from the Pope ſent to him, in which he was ordered to be obedient to his Metropolitan, with an allowance of an Appeal to the Holy See, if there were juſt Cauſe.

The next day, he was ſummoned to the Council, to anſwer to the Accuſations brought againſt him by the King. On the 14*th*. of Auguſt he came; and Hincmarus, Archbiſhop of Rheims, having ordered him to anſwer to the King's Petition, he ſaid, that he was deprived of all his Revenues, and would not anſwer in that Synod: And taking up his Papers, he began to read the Canons concerning Biſhops Appeals. The Council ordered him to anſwer the Accuſations brought againſt him, giving him Liberty afterwards to appeal to the Holy See, if he would. He perſiſted in his firſt Anſwer, that he was deprived of his Revenues, and would not anſwer. They asked him, who had deprived him? He anſwered, his Clergymen knew: And one of them being asked about it, anſwered, that it was the King; who immediately ſaid 'twas falſe, and accuſed Hincmarus of arming his Servants to hinder that his Governor might ſend ſeveral Perſons accuſed of Treachery to the Council, of ſaving them, of flying himſelf, and carrying with him the Sacred Veſſels and Ornaments of the Church of our Lady at Laon, which made him ſo backward to make his Defence: That ſince he came to the Synod, he had prepared him an Houſe where his Servants might lodge, but he choſe rather to abide in his Court near the Church: That he had ordered Bernard to treat him civilly, and take care of his Goods and Papers: That they had brought them to him, with a Golden Croſs ſet with Stones, and ſeveral things belonging to the Church. The King proved the Facts by Witneſſes, though the very Clergy of the Biſhop of Laon owned them. He was accuſed of having taken away and given a Chalice, with a Patten of Gold ſet with Stones, to a Prieſt, to hide for him, which the King had given to the Church of St. Mary at Laon; of having taken away the Relicks and Deeds of the Church of Laon, with a Golden Croſs; ſo not only enriching himſelf with the Goods of the Church of Laon, but ſuffering his Servants to convey them away.

Hincmarus, Archbiſhop of Rheims, having ſummoned him to anſwer theſe Accuſations, he ſaid, he would not anſwer before him, becauſe he had ſomething againſt him, and therefore appealed to the Holy See. Hincmarus anſwered him, that he ought not to decline his Judgment, ſince he had often reproved him, and admoniſhed him, but had not yet judged him, and ſo he could not appeal to Rome; becauſe by the ancient Canons, no Appeals can be made thither, but after Judgment: Wherefore he ought to anſwer, and ſhould be tryed without any Prejudice to the Privileges or Judgment of the Pope, as it is decreed by the Council of Sardica, that he might appeal to Rome after the Judgment of the Provincial Synod. Hincmarus, Biſhop of Laon, ſaid, that he would not anſwer, nor accept his Metropolitan for his Judge, becauſe he had adviſed the King to take him Priſoner. Hincmarus, Archbiſhop of Rheims, having prayed the King to ſpeak the Truth, the King proteſted with an Oath, that he did it without the Conſent of the Archbiſhop of Rheims, and added, that had it not been for the Reſpect he had for him, he would have impriſoned him above two years ago for his Inſolencies; and that if he had not kept his Lords from it, he had been ſet upon in his Palace, and ſtabbed or beaten to death. Hincmarus, Archbiſhop of Rheims alſo prayed Ado and Hildebaldus, who were preſent when the Biſhop of Laon was apprehended, to ſpeak what they knew; who both of them teſtified, as well as two Prieſts and Earls, that it was done without the Privity of the Archbiſhop of Rheims.

Of the Conteſt between Hincmarus and his Nephew

After this, Hincmarus, Archbiſhop of Rheims, read over again the King's Requeſt, and interrogated him about every Article; but he would not anſwer: But all the heads were proved againſt Hincmarus, Biſhop of Laon, either by Writing or Witneſſes; and being required three times to anſwer, the Archbiſhops of Beſancon, Bourdeaux, Bourges, Trives, Rouen, Sens, and the Biſhops of Troyes, Tongres, Meaux, Mets, Chartres, Beauvais, Tournay, Poictiers, Cambray Orleans, Chalons, Soiſſons, Verdun, and Paris, with the Rural Biſhop of Tongres, were of Opinion, that he ought to be depoſed, without Prejudice to the Judgment of the Holy See, ſalvo per omnia Apoſtolicæ Sedis Judicio. Hincmarus, who gave his Opinion laſt, was of the ſame Judgment. This Sentence was ſealed by theſe Prelates and ſome Prieſts. The Name of the Biſhop of Lyons, Remigius, is found among the Subſcriptions; but he was not at this Synod. The Biſhops of the Council wrote a Letter to Pope Adrian, in which they tell him, That they were forced to depoſe Hincmarus, Biſhop of Laon, as he will underſtand by the Acts of the Council, which they ſent him. Beſide the Crimes therein ſet down, they accuſe him of having converted to his own uſe, or given away, ſeveral of the Ornaments of the Church of Laon, to have ſtirred up many Seditions, to have excommunicated and abuſed Amalbertus. They deſire the Pope to confirm their Judgment, or if he thought fit to review it, (which they could not think neceſſary) That he would appoint Judges, either of the ſame or neighbouring Provinces, and if he pleaſed, ſend his Legate to be preſent at the Judgment, as it is appointed in the Council of Sardica; upon condition nevertheleſs, That Hincmarus ſhall not be reſtored to his Dignity, till his Cauſe be examined and tried anew in the Province; becauſe as yet they had not departed from the Rights of the Gallican and Belgick Churches. They declare, That if he reſtores him, and ſends him into France, they'll never trouble themſelves with him, but let him live as he liſt without communicating with him. They recommend, in the laſt place, to him Actardus, who was deſired by the People and Clergy of Tours, that he might be made Biſhop of that Church by his Authority, altho' they could do it themſelves. This Letter is dated Sept. 6. 871.

Hincmarus's Letter to Adrian.

Hincmarus wrote alſo in his own Name to Pope Adrian; He begins his Letter with the buſineſs of Actardus, and after ſpeaks of the Condemnation of the Biſhop of Laon. He excuſes himſelf, that he did not maintain him in the buſineſs with Normannus, becauſe he was injured, and the caſe was not that which he had related to the Pope. He laments that he ever ordain'd him, and ſays, That after he had done all he could to reclaim him, and found him incorrigible, he was forced to leave him, and ſuffer him to be condemned. Laſtly, He gives the Pope an account of the buſineſs of the Prieſt, who was depoſed for endeavouring to kill, and actually wounding with a Spear, another with whom he was travelling in a Journey, after he had made himſelf Drunk with him.

Adrian's Anſwer.

Pope Adrian, having received the Letter of the Biſhops of the Council, returned an Anſwer, That he approved their Election of Actardus for the Biſhoprick of Tours, but he diſapproved the Judgment given againſt Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon, contrary to his Appeal to be judged at Rome; He orders that he ſhould come with his Accuſers thither, and forbids them them putting any other Biſhop in his place, till his Cauſe be examined and tryed anew. This Letter bears Date Dec. 26.

He alſo wrote at the ſame time two Letters to Charles the Bald. In the firſt, which he intended to be publick, he complains, that he had taken his Petitions, which he made to him, ill, and exhorted him to accept them favourably. He orders him to ſend Hincmarus, and his Accuſers, to Rome, aſſuring him, that he would not conſent to his Depoſition till that were done. He approves the Promotion of Actardus to the Archbiſhoprick of Tours, without depriving him, nevertheleſs, of the Right which he hath to the Reverſion of the Dioceſs of Nants. He exhorts the King to ſee, that all the Revenues of the Church of Tours be reſtored that belong to it, as alſo the Monaſteries, which according to the Canons are ſubject to that Biſhop.

The ſecond Letter, which was private and ſecret, was wrote with more mildneſs and aſſurance, but he inſiſts more particularly upon this, That the King had not received his Admonitions with all poſſible ſubjection, and that he had enriched himſelf with the Revenues of the Church. In the reſt, he pretends a great deal of Friendſhip to him, commends his Piety, blames the carriage of Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon, and ſeems to think him faulty, and juſtly condemned; but nevertheleſs, hopes he will ſend him to Rome,

Of the Conteſt between Hincmarus and his Nephew

Rome, that after he hath heard him, he may appoint him Judges, or ſend his Legates to the place to have him judged before them there.

King Charles's Anſwer to the Pope.

King Charles being offended at theſe two Letters of the Pope, as alſo at a former, which the Pope had written to him, full of reproachful Language to his Perſon, which he exhorted him to bear patiently, and take in good part, writ ſharply to him, and ſhewed himſelf angry for being treated in ſuch a manner; and becauſe he had ordered him to ſend Hincmarus immediately to Rome. Hereupon he accuſes him of Worldly Pride, in ambitiouſly claiming a Dominion in the Church; and ſays, That he did not know before, that a King, whoſe Office is to puniſh Evil doers, and revenge Crimes, was obliged to ſend the guilty to Rome, after they were condemned and convicted; That he ſhould know, that the Kings of France are not the Biſhops Vicegerents, but abſolute Maſters of their Country; That he doth not find that the Popes, his Predeceſſors, did ever write in that faſhion to the Kings of France. Then he recites ſeveral expreſſions of the Popes, and ſhews by many Eccleſiaſtical Laws, that no Canon obliged him to ſend Condemned Biſhops to Rome, but on the contrary, that Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes ſhould be judged and determined in the Province where the Matters were acted. Laſtly, He adviſes him not to write to him more in ſuch a ſtrain, nor to the Biſhops and Lords of his Kingdom, unleſs he will have his Letters and Meſſengers ſlighted, which he wrote to him, ſaith he, becauſe of the reſpect he did bear to him, and becauſe of the deſign he had to be ſubject, as he ought, to the Vicar of St Peter, the Prince of the Apoſtles, leſt he ſhould force him, againſt his Will, to do otherwiſe than he intended. In fine, that he knew that he ought to follow, and to hold to that which was approved by the Holy See, when 'tis found agreeable to the Holy Scripture, Tradition, and the Laws of the Church, but rejected the Claim which was grounded upon forged, and ill-compoſed Pieces.

The Execution of the Judgment given againſt Hincmarus.

Nor did the Biſhops of France write with leſs Reſolution to the Pope about that Affair, they boldly rejected the pretences the Pope had, that Hincmarus ſhould come to Rome and be judged; and maintain'd, that the Judgment given againſt that Biſhop ought to be executed: And in effect it was done, and the Church of Laon became vacant de facto & de jure, altho' the Holy See would not confirm the Judgment of the Synod of Douzi. Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon was put in Priſon, and two years after his Eyes were put out, as Caroloman's were; a very uſual puniſhment at that time for ſuch as were found guilty of Rebellion. Charles the Bald being afterwards crowned Emperor by * John VIII. gave him an Account of the Judgment given at the Synod of Douzi, and deſired the confirmation of it from him, which he granted, writing to Hincmarus, that upon the Relation of the Emperor he approved the Judgment, he, and other Biſhops of France, had given againſt Hincmarus of Laon; after whom, Henedulphus was ordained Biſhop of Laon, in purſuance of the Decree of his Election made March 26. and 876.

* This Pope, according to Platina's reckoning, which Conteſt is accounted the trueſt, is between John IX. for John VIII. Hincmarus Pope Joan, of which the rus and Romiſh Church is ſo much his Nephew aſhamed, that they have blotted her out of the Catalogue of their Popes, for though they allow their Popes too many Women, yet they will not endure to hear of a Woman to be a Pope.

After the death of Charles the Bald, Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon was ſet at Liberty, who hearing that Pope John VIII. was retired into France, and held a Council at Troyes, he went thither and preſented a Petition, in which he complained, That being carried to the Council of Douzi by force, deprived of his Goods, accuſed by King Charles, he was condemned by the Archbiſhop of Rheims, although he had appealed to the Holy See; that ſince that time he had been put in Chains, and his Eyes were put out. He begged of the Pope to do him Juſtice, and paſs an equitable Sentence upon that Matter, which was referred to him. He alledged, that the Biſhops of the Synod of Douzi had condemned him very unwillingly, that moſt of them were very much troubled at what they had done by the impulſe of Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims, who adviſed them to it by Writing. Nevertheleſs, by the Acts of the Council, and the Letters written by them, it doth appear, that they condemned Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon with a full conſent and agreement, and never did repent that they had done it.

The Council of Troyes.

Nevertheleſs, the Petition of Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon was approved in the Council of Troyes by ſome Biſhops, and King Ludovicus Balbus did not oppoſe it; But Pope John VIII. judging that it would be a very difficult thing to reverſe the Sentence of the Council of Douzi, ordered that Henedulphus ſhould continue Biſhop of Laon, although he himſelf deſired that he might retreat into a Monaſtery, but allowed Hincmarus liberty to ſing Maſs, and to have a Penſion out of the Revenues of the Biſhoprick of Laon. Whereupon ſome Biſhops took him, and having clothed him with his Epiſcopal Veſtments, they led him to the Church with Singing, and cauſed him to give the Benediction. He died not long after, and his Uncle Hincmarus made Prayers to God for him after his Death.

CHAP. VI.

An Account of ſeveral other Eccleſiaſtical Affairs tranſacted in France, in which Hincmarus was chiefly engaged.

Of other Eccleſiaſtical Affairs in which Hincmarus was chiefly engaged.

HIncmarus, beſides the private Affairs, had alſo a ſhare, as I before intimated, in all the moſt important Affairs both in Church and State, which gave him occaſion to exerciſe his Pen in divers Controverſies. That which made the greateſt noiſe of all, was the Divorce of the Queen Theutberga, and Lotharius III. King of Lorrain; She was the Daughter of Hubert Duke of Outrelemontjou, and allied to Charles the Great. Lotharius being fallen in Love with another Woman, endeavoured to diſſolve his Marriage, and made this the pretence, That Theutberga had committed Inceſt with her own Brother; He forced her to confeſs it, and ſo diſſolved his Marriage by the Advice of ſome Biſhops in an Aſſembly held 860. at Aix la Chapelle. Since theſe Biſhops had given it out that Hincmarus approved of this Divorce, he thought himſelf obliged to teſtify his Deteſtation of it in Writing. This Paper was made in his own, and all the Biſhops Names of the Province of Rheims, and directed to Kings, Biſhops, and all Chriſtians. He firſt gives this reaſon of the Dedication, That altho' the Church of Rome ought principally to be conſulted in matters obſcure and dubious, yet it is convenient to addreſs himſelf to the whole Church, when the ancient Truth is attacked by ſome Novelty; That the Matter about which he treats is of ſo great importance, that Kings and Princes, Magiſtrates and People, ought to give great attention to the Truth of the Judgment, Conſent of the Biſhops, and the Lenity, Patience and Goodneſs of the King. Laſtly, That he addreſſed his Speech to Kings, who ought to be an Example to the People; To the Biſhops, who are obliged to teach what Chriſt hath commanded; And to all the Faithful, who ought neither to approve, nor favour any Man's faults. After this Preface, which he hath adorned with ſeveral paſſages out of the Fathers, to authorize and explain theſe Maxims, he anſwers the Reaſons that are brought to maintain the Divorce of Lotharius and Theutberga; the firſt and chief was the Inceſt, which that Queen was accuſed to have committed with her own Brother, by whom ſhe is ſaid to have conceived, and afterward procured her Abortion. She denied that ſhe was guilty of any ſuch Crime, and ſince no Proof or Witneſſes could be produced for her, it was reſolved by the Lay-Judges, with the Advice of the Biſhops, and Conſent of Lotharius himſelf, that ſhe ſhould name a Man that ſhould undergo the Tryal of hot Water; Acccordingly it was put in Execution, and the Man received no hurt, ſo ſhe was declared Innocent even by the Judgment of the King her Husband. Some time after, this Accuſation was again renewed, and certain Biſhops were ſummoned to the Palace of Aix la Chapelle, of which the chief were Thietgaldus Archbiſhop of Treves, and Gonthierus Archbiſhop of Cologne, (the former the Uncle, and the other the Brother of Waldrada, whoſe Siſter Lotharius deſired to marry;) They made Theutberga to own that ſhe was not fit to continue Lotharius's Wife; She called Gonthierus for a Witneſs, to whom ſhe had confeſſed it, and required him to tell the Reaſon of it before the other Biſhops. Hincmarus, after he hath thus recited the Articles of that buſineſs, ſhews, that the Præmonitions that the Biſhops gave the Queen, that ſhe ſhould not accuſe her ſelf of any Crime ſhe was not guilty of, do evidently prove, that they knew ſhe was to accuſe her ſelf; After which he ſays, that the ſecret Crimes which are diſcovered in Confeſſion ought not to be divulged, nor ought any Perſon to be condemned for his ſecret Crimes. He alſo relates the Declaration of Gonthierus, Jan. 8. who aſſured the Council, that the Queen had confeſſed to him that ſhe had ſuffered an Abuſe, tho' againſt her Conſent; The Judgment of the Biſhops, Adventius and Thietgaldus was, that if this were true ſhe ought not to cohabit with Lotharius; The Counſel of the Abbot Egilus was the ſame; and the Extract of the Acts of the Seſſion of that Synod held Febr. 14. (at which, beſides Gonthierus and Thietgaldus, were Wenilo Archbiſhop of Rouen, Frotarius of Tongres, or Liege, Hatton of Verdun, Hildegarius of Meaux, and Hildninus) which contains a Declaration in writing, which the Queen gave the King her Husband, in which ſhe owns, before God and all his Angels, that her Brother Hubert had abuſed her. 'Tis then ſaid, that the Biſhops did conjure the King to tell them, whether he had obliged her either by force, or threats, to make this Declaration, and he proteſted that he had not, and that he was much troubled at it; Then the Biſhops asked the Queen again whether it were true, and ſhe boldly ſaid it was; whereupon they judged, that ſhe ought to be put to publick Penance, to attone for the Inceſt which was now become publick by her Declaration. Hincmarus ſays, that Pope Leo forbids this ſort of Confeſſion by Writing, as to what reſpects the Church; That Lotharius, who ſeemed to be troubled at this, was inwardly pleaſed, and was the Author of this Stratagem; That the Queen, having accuſed her ſelf in Judgment in the preſence of the King, and his Lay-Judges, ought not to be put to publick Penance; That ſhe was not regularly condemned, and therefore they had the leſs reaſon to divorce her ſo readily from her Husband, and allow him to marry another

Of other Eccleſiaſtical Affairs in which Hincmarus was chiefly engaged.

He then ſhews, that this cauſe was much different from Ebbo's, becauſe he had choſen his Judges, before whom he regularly and judicially owned his Crime; And beſides, that there is a great deal of difference between depoſing a Biſhop and parting Man and Wife, the Union between Husband and Wife being much more near and cloſe than that between a Biſhop and his Church; That if a Biſhop, Prieſt, or Deacon, own their Crime, although it be falſe that they have committed it, they ought to be depoſed according to the Council of Valence, but a Wife cannot be parted from her Husband for the ſame reaſon; That Biſhops may leave their Churches, but a Woman can't depart from her Husband.

It was farther ſaid, that the Archbiſhop of Rheims had conſented to what was done in that Aſſembly, and had conferred about it with Adventius. Hincmarus anſwers, that it was not true; that Adventius had indeed ſpoke to him of it, and invited him to be at the Synod, or ſend thither, but he gave him his Anſwer in writing, before he parted from him, that he could not do it, becauſe he had not conſulted the Biſhops of his Province; and that he wrote to him after ſuch a manner, as did ſhew, that he did not approve of that Divorce. Before he enters upon a particular diſcuſſion of this buſineſs, he produces ſeveral Authorities concerning the manner how a lawful Marriage ought to be contracted; he treats of the Reaſons of a Separation between Man and Wife which are, according to him, the deſire of their Salvation, to live Continently, and Adultery, for which the Lay-Judges part Man and Wife, with the conſent of the Eccleſiaſtick, and the Church puts the Guilty to do publick Penance, if the Crime be known. He adds, That in the Caſe in hand, the Separation was neither for the love of Continence, nor for publick and certain Adultery, but only on mere ſuſpicion, and that this Matter ſhould firſt have been examined by Lay-Judges, and then the Biſhops ſhould have done their Duty, and uſed the Authority of the Church. He brought an Example of a Caſe that happened in the Reign of Lewis the Kind, how a Woman of Quality, named Nothilda, preſented to a General Aſſembly of the State a Petition againſt her Husband Argembert. This Prince bid her apply her ſelf to the Biſhops, who ſhould put her over to the Laymen, that they might judge of that Matter, and enjoined her to follow their Judgment, reſerving to themſelves a Power of putting, either her or him, to Penance, who ſhould be convinced of any Crime.

After the Judgment by hot Water was found favourable to the Princeſs Theutberga, they that accuſed her ſaid that theſe ſort of Proofs were forbidden; Hincmarus endeavours to maintain them by Authority and Uſe, and affirms, That the Man named by the Queen to undergo the Proof of hot Water, not being ſo much as burnt or ſcalded, it was a Miracle that could not be done to authorize a Lye. He adds, That ſince this Judgment was not certain, and they could not accuſe the Perſon ſo cleared, they ought not to make uſe of a ſecret Confeſſion for that end.

It was alſo asked Hincmarus, if it were not poſſible that the Queen might have to do with her Brother, and conceive by him, without loſing her Virginity? He laughs at this Propoſition, and ſays, That if ſhe were a Virgin when ſhe was married, it was fooliſh to accuſe her of being defiled, and imagine that ſhe had conceived before her Marriage. He ſent back this Queſtion to the Lay-Judges with another, viz. Whether if a Woman, who hath not lived honeſtly before Marriage, but after lives honeſtly with her Husband, deſerves to be condemned to Death for her former Lewdneſs, and whether it be not more fit to pardon her?

They alſo asked, whether the King having had to do with another Woman, after he heard that his Wife had committed this Crime, was not guilty of Adultery? He anſwers, that he could not deny but he was guilty, altho' at laſt his Wife were found guilty of the Crime for which he ſuſpected her, becauſe he had done it before the Sentence of Divorce was paſſed. He adds, that tho' a Man be engaged by Oath to live with another Woman beſides his Wife, or a Woman with another Man beſides her Husband, they ought not to obſerve that Oath.

Of other Eccleſiaſtical Affairs in which Hincmarus was chiefly engaged.

They alſo asked him, if it were true that Sorcerers could make a Man and his Wife to hate each other Mortally? He affirms that they can, and proves by ſeveral Relations that there were ſuch Magicians and Sorcerers, and that the Devils could, by the permiſſion of God, poſſeſs Men, make them Mad, and torment them. He owns, that if it were found, that according to the Civil and Eccleſiaſtical Laws, the Marriage of Theutberga were invalid, ſhe might be divorced, and the King marry another; but he maintains, that till his Wife be declared unworthy to be ſo by the Judgment of the Lords, and Advice of the Biſhops, he ought not to think of marrying his Concubine. Laſtly, after he hath confuted ſeveral pretences alledged for the maintenance of the Divorce of Lotharius and Theutberga, he concludes, that the Biſhops ought to oppoſe ſuch diſorderly proceedings, and if they did it not, or did encourage them, they were highly blameable before God.

Notwithſtanding this oppoſition made by Hincmarus, there was a Synod held in 862 at Aix la Chapelle, in which the Biſhops aſſembled allowed Lotharius to marry another Woman; whereupon he immediately married Waldrada. This buſineſs made a great noiſe, and being carried to Rome, Pope Nicholas wrote about it to King Charles, who deſired an opportunity to quarrel with Lotharius, and deprive him of his Kingdom, but Lewis of Germany endeavoured to compoſe the Matter, and Lotharius referred it to the Judgment of the States; then having appealed to the Pope, two Legates were named to hold a Council, where two Biſhops of Lewis's, and two of Charles's Kingdom met them, that they might judge of this Matter: this Council was held at Metz June 863. In it Lotharius went about to confirm his Marriage by the Artifices of Gonthierus and Thietgaldus, and by corrupting the Pope's Legates. Gonthierus and Thietgaldus had the boldneſs to bring the Sentence to Rome, but Pope Nicholas, inſtead of confirming it, called a Council, in which he declared the Judgment of the Synod at Metz null and void, depoſed Gonthierus and Thietgaldus, and declared, that all the Biſhops, which concurred in that Sentence, had incurred the greateſt Puniſhment, which he reſolved to inflict on them, unleſs they changed their Opinion.

Council of Metz.

A Council at Rome.

Gonthierus and Thietgaldus ſtoutly defended themſelves, and ſent a Letter againſt Pope Nicholas's Sentence to all the Biſhops, with a Proteſtation, that they had ſignified it to him, in which they declare him Excommunicate, becauſe he had, as they ſaid, gone contrary to the Canons, favouring perſons excommunicated, and ſeparating himſelf from the Society of other Biſhops meerly through Pride; but the other Prelates of Lotharius's Kingdom excuſed themſelves to the Pope; Thietgaldus alſo begged Pardon, but could not obtain Abſolution ſo long as Pope Nicholas lived; but Gonthierus, Archbiſhop of Cologne, could never be brought to beg Pardon. Lotharius himſelf did all he could to appeaſe the Pope, who deſired, that Waldrada ſhould come to Rome in Perſon, and receive Abſolution; ſhe promiſed him, and went twice into Italy, but repenting as often of her ſubmiſſion, returned back again; wherefore the Pope having called a Synod excommunicated her, and wrote ſeveral ſharp Letters to Lotharius the Younger. Afterward he ſent a Legate into France named Atſenius, who, addreſſing himſelf to Lewis of Germany, called a Synod, in which Lotharius was forced to take his former Wife, but as ſoon as the Legate was gone he began to uſe her ill, and to enter a Proceſs againſt her for Adultery, ſo that ſhe was forced to put her ſelf under the Protection of King Charles; the Pope was very much concerned at it, and excommunicated Waldrada a-new.

At the ſame time, there were two other Matters of like nature debated between Hincmarus, the Biſhops of the Kingdom, and Charles on the one part; and Gonthierus, and the Biſhops of Lotharius's Kingdom on the other. The one was about Judith the Daughter of King Charles, the Widow * of the King of England, who was taken away from Senlis by Earl Baldwin, who was fled into the Kingdom of Lotharius; and the other concerning Ingeltrude the Wife of Boſon, who had left her Husband, and was fled into the Dioceſs of Gonthierus. As to the firſt of theſe, it was ſoon ended by the Interceſſion of Pope Nicholas, for Earl Baldwin, whom he had excommunicated at the Sollicitation of King Charles, coming to Rome with Judith, caſt himſelf at the Pope's feet; at which he was ſo much moved, that he wrote ſeveral Letters to King Charles, his Queen Hermentruda, and the Biſhops, to obtain their Pardon; by which means the King conſented to the Marriage, and ſo it ended.

The Buſineſs of Judith and Baldwin.

Ethelbald whoſe Father Ethelwolfe had had her to Wife before.

As to the Wife of Boſon, Gonthierus wrote about her to Hincmarus, An. 860. propounding the Queſtion thus to him: if this Woman come to me, and tell me that ſhe hath committed Adultery, deſiring that I would protect her from Death, which ſhe is afraid of from her Husband, ought I to put her to publick Penance in my Dioceſs, at a diſtance from her Husband, or ſhall I ſend her again to her Husband, making making him promiſe that he will not put her to Death? Hincmarus anſwers, That he ought not to put another Man's Wife to Penance who belongs to another Dioceſs, nor protect her; That Boſon doth not accuſe her of Adultery, but complains, That ſhe hath left him, and promiſes that he will do her no Harm; So that all you can do upon this Occaſion is this, That the King of the Country, whither ſhe is fled, ſhould make her return to her Husband, but withal, taking ſuch Security of her Husband, as is uſual to be given for thoſe who have put themſelves under the Protection of the Church.

The Buſineſs of Count Raimond.

There was alſo another Buſineſs of the like Nature, in which Hincmarus was engaged; Count Raimond had marry'd a Daughter to a certain Lord named Stephen, who would not live with her as his Wife, under a Pretence that ſhe had had a Carnal Knowledge of one of her near Relations, but would not tell who it was. Earl Raimond wrote a Letter of Complaint about it to the Synod held at Touſſi, 860. whereupon Stephen was ſummoned to the Synod, where he propounded the Buſineſs, and told them, That whereas in his Youth he had had a Carnal Knowledge of one of the near Relations of the Daughter of Earl Raimond, it happened that he deſired to have her in Marriage, and obtained it; but afterward calling to mind what he had formerly done, he went to a Confeſſor to know whether he might not do Penance for his Sin in Private, and marry the Earl's Daughter, as they had agreed? The Confeſſor anſwered, No; and ſhewing him a Book, which he ſaid was a Book of Canons, by which it was decreed, That he that hath had any Carnal Knowledge of the Woman's Relations, whom he would marry, muſt not conſummate the Marriage with her; That afterward falling under the Diſpleaſure of the King his Lord, he was forced to leave the Kingdom, without breaking of the Contract with Raimond's Daughter, or marrying her, ſo that it was put off for ſome time; That afterward he was conſtrained to marry her publickly, but for fear he ſhould damn his Soul, he would not have any Carnal Knowledge of her. This he aſſured the Council, with an Oath, that it was true, and that he did not do it for Intereſt, or becauſe he loved another Woman; declaring, That he was ready to follow the Judgment of the Biſhops, if they could ſatisfy him that his Honour and Salvation might be alike ſecured, in giving Contentment to his Father-in-Law and Wife. The Synod reſolved, that it was neceſſary to call a Council of Biſhops and Lords, at which the King himſelf ſhould be preſent; That the Lords ſhould examine the Buſineſs, and the Biſhops conclude it. Stephen accepted this Condition, and Hincmarus was employed by the Council to ſearch into the Truth of the Matter, by which he was obliged to write to the Archbiſhops of Bourges and Bourdeaux, and the Biſhops of their Provinces. He tells them, That they ought to bring Raimond's Daughter to the Aſſembly, and enquire of her, whether it was true that her Husband had no Carnal Knowledge of her; That it ought to be ſearched into, whether Stephen did not ſay this that he might leave his Wife; That he ought to name the near Relation he had known; That he ought to ſwear it was true; and if it did appear to be true, that he had really done ſo with any of her near Relations, they ſhou'd be parted, and Stephen ſhould be put to publick Penance.

The Council of Rheims, in 842.

In 842. Nov. 1. Hincmarus held a Council at Rheims with the Prieſts of his Dioceſs, in which ſeveral very uſeful Conſultations were made. They decreed and ordered, That all Prieſts ſhould know how to explain the Creed and Lord's Prayer, and be able to repeat by Heart the Preface and Canon of the Maſs, and recite diſtinctly the Pſalms, Hymns, and Athanaſius's Creed; That they ſhould know how to adminiſter Baptiſm, abſolve Penitents, and anoint the Sick; That on every Sunday they ſhould conſecrate Water, and burn Incenſe after the Goſpel and Offertory; That they ſhould diſtribute the Holy Bread to all thoſe that would not communicate; That they ſhould read the 40. Homilies of St. Gregory; That they ſhould know the Kalendar, and how to ſing, and ſhould ſing the Service; That they ſhould take Care of the Poor and Sick; That they ſhould not pawn the Holy Veſſels; That they ſhould not bury any Man in the Church, without Permiſſion from the Biſhop, and ſhould demand nothing for Burials; That they ſhould take no Gifts of Penitents; That when they meet at Feaſts they ſhould be ſober; That when they meet at Conferences they ſhould not make any Feaſts, but be contented with Bread, and two or three Glaſſes of Wine, and no more; That Fraternities ſhould be upheld for Piety-ſake, and none ſhould be ſuffered to promote Feaſting and Revels; And laſtly, That when any Prieſt died, no Man ſhould get Poſſeſſion of his Church without the Biſhop's Order.

He gave alſo, at the ſame time, to the Prebends and Deans that were to viſit his Dioceſs, ſome Articles of Enquiry, viz. What Titles every Prieſt had, and by whom he was ordain'd; What is the Revenue of his Living, and how many Houſes in his Pariſh; In what Condition the Ornaments of his Church are, and how the Relicks are preſerved; If there be a Place to throw the Water in, with which the Veſſels of the Altar and Ornaments are waſhed; If the Holy Oils were kept locked up; If there be a Clergyman that keeps School; In what Caſe the Church is, and whether it be in good Repair; Whether the Tithes be divided into three Parts, and an Account be given of two of them to the Biſhops; Whether there be any Church-Wardens; Whether the Church-Revenues be improved, and no private Advantage made of them; If the Clergy live orderly, and do not familiarly converſe with Women, frequent Ale-Houſes; How thoſe that are vicious ſhould be reproved, and for what Crime they may be condemned and degraded.

Of other Eccleſiaſtical Affairs in which Hincmarus was chiefly engaged.

A Synod of Rheims in 857, and 874.

In 857. which was the 12*th*. Year of Hincmarus's Biſhoprick, June 9. he held another Synod, in which he added ſome other Rules, which ordered, That Publick Sinners ſhould be put to Penance in Publick by the Authority of the Biſhops, to whom the Curates are obliged to ſend them; That if they do not preſent themſelves to receive them, after they have been advertiſed of it by the Prieſts, they ſhall be excommunicated within 15. Days; That they ſhall require nothing for Burials, and no Man ſhall celebrate Maſs but upon a conſecrated Altar or Table. He alſo made ſome other Conſtitutions in 874. in July, commanding, That Prieſts, Curates, and Prebends, ſhould reſide in their Benefices, and not retire into Monaſteries; That they ſhould take nothing to make Church-Wardens, and ſhould allow thoſe that are choſen a Part of their Tithes, to be imploy'd about the Buildings, and Ornaments of the Church; That Prieſts ſhould not be familiar with Women, nor enrich themſelves with the Revenues of the Church; That they ſhould give nothing to Patrons to be nominated to any vacant Church.

The Conſtitutions of Hincmarus in 877.

Theſe are the Conſtitutions which Hincmarus made for the Prieſts, but leſt the Archdeacons, who are to put them in Execution in their Viſits, ſhould not give them in Charge to the Curates, he made, July, 877. an Order, in which he forbids them to go their Viſitations with many Attendants, or Horſes, to require or exact any thing of them, to ſtay long with them; Not to meddle with the Diviſion of Pariſhes, to make the Ancient Churches to be ſtill ſubject to their Pariſhes, in which there have always been Prieſts; to ſuffer no Man to have a Chappel without the Permiſſion of the Archbiſhop; to diſcharge no Penitents through Favour before they have done their Penance, nor to ordain any Perſons not duly qualified, nor to ſettle any Deans without the Authority of the Biſhops.

The Coronations of Kings.

After theſe Conſtitutions follows, in the Works of Hincmarus, a Recital of the Ceremonies and Prayers uſed at the Coronation of Charles the Bald for the Kingdom of Lotharius, celebrated at Metz by Hincmarus, Sept. 8. 869. as alſo at the Coronation of Lewis, Dec. 8. 877. and of Judith the Daughter of Charles, when ſhe was married to Ethelwolfe King of England, An. 856. as alſo of Queen Hermentrude, celebrated at Soiſſons.

Some Inſtructions of Hincmarus to Charles the Bald.

Hincmarus alſo, in a Letter to Charles the Bald, gives various Inſtructions to Princes out of the Fathers, which he lays down as undoubted Truths, viz. That God makes good Kings, and permits bad ones; That a good Prince is the greateſt Happineſs of the People, and a bad one their greateſt Misfortune; That a wiſe Government is the greateſt Proof of great Power; That a King ſhould chooſe wiſe, experienced, and virtuous Men; That nothing is better than for Rulers to know how they ought to rule; That it is moſt profitable, that good Kings have the greateſt Kingdoms; That Neceſſity only ſhould make them make War; That War is lawful, if it be juſt; That God gives the Victory to whom he pleaſes; That they ought to be prayed for that dye in Battles; That Kings ſerve God by making Laws for his Honour; That they are obliged to compel Men to do Good, and puniſh them juſtly; That they may ſometimes ſhew Favour, but they ſhould be careful they do it not unfitly; That they ſhould be continually upon their Guard, that they be not ſurprized by their Favourites or Flatterers; They ſhould have no wicked Men about them, nor pardon their Relations; That they ought to mix Juſtice with Mercy. After he hath thus ſpoken of a Prince, as endued with Kingly Powers, he then lays down the Virtues of a Prince conſidered as a Chriſtian, which is nothing but a Collection of Texts of Scripture, and Sentences of the Fathers, concerning the Duties of a Chriſtian Life. He hath alſo a third Letter to the ſame King, concerning the Nature of the Soul; He holds that it is Spiritual, not confined to a Place, and doth not move locally, altho' it changes its Will and Manners. He alſo moves this Queſtion, Whether we ſhall ſee God, in another World, by the Eyes of our Body, or only by the Eyes of the Soul?

Hincmarus's Advice to Lewis of Germany.

In the Year 858. Lewis, Emperor of Germany, entred Charles's Kingdom to invade him, while he was gone to War againſt the Britains and Normans; Hincmarus, and the other Biſhops of his Dioceſs, whom he had told the States that they muſt ſtay at Rheims, ſent a Remonſtrance to him, in which they tell him plainly, That he was unjuſt to his Brother, in entring into his Kingdom in an Hoſtile Manner, exhorting him to make Peace with him, to turn his Arms againſt the Pagans, to preſerve the Privileges of the Church, and ſuffer no Man to rob it of its Revenues; to reſtore thoſe Monaſteries of the Monks which are in the Poſſeſſion of Laymen, to take Care that the Monks live according to their Rule, and that the Revenues of Hoſpitals ſhould be diſpoſed of rightly by the Overſeers, with the Authority of the Biſhops. He then gives him ſome Directions how he ought to live and reign, and how he ought to govern the General Synod of France.

Hincmarus's Advice to King Charles.

In 859. Charles being ready to march againſt Lewis, Hincmarus wrote to him to hinder the Diſorders and Pillaging which the Soldiers uſed to make. He alſo admoniſhes the Churchmen at Court, by another Letter, to hinder the Soldiers, which were uſed to pillage, to do it again. Laſtly, he admoniſheth the Prieſts of the Dioceſs of Rheims to excommunicate them, who, after Admonition, ſhould continue to pillage any.

A Remonſtrance to Lewis of Germany.

In 875. after the Death of Lewis King of Italy, and Emperor, Charles the Bald being gone into Italy to be crowned Emperor, and poſſeſs himſelf of Italy, Lewis of Germany falls upon France to give him a Diverſion; Hincmarus preſents him with a long Petition full of Quotations of the Fathers, to ſtop him in this Enterprize, and it was effectual.

The Manner of proceeding againſt a Prieſt.

The ſame Year John Biſhop of Cambray was written to by Hincmarus, who gave him Directions how he ſhould deal with the Prieſt Hunoldus, who was ſuſpected of an unlawful Familiarity with a Woman. He ſays, That the Cuſtom of the Province hath been to make Enquiries about the Prieſt who is thus charged and defamed, that their Witneſſes muſt be ſworn, and interrogated concerning his frequent Converſe and Familiarity with Women; That after the Depoſition of 6. Witneſſes, there ought to be a 7*th*. to prove the Fact; That if there be no Witneſſes, but it be only a common Report, the Prieſt muſt clear himſelf by the Oath of 6. of his Neighbouring Prieſts.

The Condemnation of a Prieſt.

Some time after, in 878. he condemned a Prieſt of his Dioceſs himſelf, named Goldbaldus, who was accuſed of converſing with a Woman; the Fact was proved, but the Prieſt fled from Judgment. The Inſtrument of this Prieſt's Depoſition is among Hincmarus's Works. In the ſame Year he excommunicated * Soucherus and Hardoiſa, who married their near Relations, and would not be parted from them.

* Or, Fulcherus.

Hincmarus's Book againſt Anſegiſus's Privilege.

In the Year 876. Pope John VIII. named for his Vicar in France and Germany, Anſegiſus Archbiſhop of Sens. This Privilege being prejudicial to the Church of Rheims, and the Authority of Hincmarus, he wrote a large Treatiſe to defend the Rights of Metropolitans againſt the new Pretences of theſe Vicars; and in particular, glories much in the Rights and Privileges of the Church of Rheims. He cites a Letter of Pope Hormiſdas, in which he makes Remigius his Vicar in France; and a Bull of Benedict, which aſſerts, That all Perſons in the Province of Rheims are ſubject to their Metropolitan, and that no Man can go before any other Judges, without Prejudice to the Right of the Holy See. He adds, That he would not refuſe to meet at a Synod of ſeveral Provinces, provided that it be called either by the Pope, or Emperor, becauſe the firſt General Councils were called by the Emperors; and St. Gregory himſelf bids the Kings of France to aſſemble Synods in their Realms. He obſerves, that Boniface Biſhop of Mayence, whom the Pope had made his Vicar in France and Germany, had never encroached upon the Rights of the Metropolitans; That Drogon Biſhop of Metz, having obtained the ſame Prerogative of Pope Sergius, could not enjoy it, becauſe they, who ſuſtained any Loſs by it, would not acknowledge him.

The Council of Pontegon.

Anſegiſus's Letter of Privilege was brought to the Council held June 19. at Pontegon, where the Pope's Legates were met to repreſent the Pope. The Emperor, who was preſent, asked the Biſhops what they had to ſay againſt the Pope's Bull. They anſwered, They were ready to obey it, ſo far as was conſiſtent with the Rights of their Metropolitans, according to the Canons and Decrees made and confirmed by the Popes, agreeable to the Laws of the Church. The Emperor, and the Pope's Legates, urged them to approve the Privilege granted to Anſegiſus, without any Reſtrictions, but they perſiſted in the Exception, only Frotarius, Archbiſhop of Bourdeaux, anſwered as the Emperor deſired, being willing to be tranſlated to Bourges, becauſe his Country was ravaged: The Emperor inſiſted on it, That the Pope had named Anſegiſus to keep his Place in the Synod, and he had ſet him above all the Biſhops of his Realm, on the ſide of the Pope's Legates. Hincmarus exclaimed againſt it, and publickly complained, That they had done a thing contrary to the Canons of the Church. The Queſtion was revived again in another Seſſion, July 14. in which the Biſhops proteſted, That they would obey the Pope's Letters in the ſame Manner that their Predeceſſors had obeyed his Predeceſſors, according to the Conſtitutions. This Anſwer ſatisfied the Emperor and Pope's Legates ſomewhat more, but the Buſineſs being again debated in the laſt Seſſion, they explained themſelves in the ſame Manner that they had done in the firſt Seſſion; ſo that Anſegiſus could gain nothing more of them.

In the ſame Synod Hincmarus, and the other Archbiſhops, were forced to take an Oath of Fidelity openly to the Emperor. This Action much diſpleaſed Hincmarus, ſo that he made ſeveral Obſervations upon the Terms, in which the Oath was expreſſed; but that which troubled him moſt was, That his Fidelity ſeemed to be queſtioned, in requiring of him a new Oath of Fidelity, who had for ſo many Years ſerved his Prince faithfully. The ſame Year he compoſed a Writing, to ſhew that the Land of Neuills belonged to the Church of Rheims.

Hincmarus's Letter about Appeals.

In the Year 877. Hincmarus wrote a Letter to the Pope in the Name of Charles the Bald, about the Appeals of Prieſts to the Holy See. Several Prieſts juſtly and canonically condemned by their Biſhops went to Rome, and ſurreptitiouſly obtained Letters of Abſolution. This Abuſe freed Criminals from Puniſhment, weakened and diſannulled the Biſhops Authority, and quite deſtroyed the Order and Diſcipline of the Church: So that to ſtop the Courſe of theſe Actions, the Emperor wrote a Letter to the Pope, in which, after a Collection of Canons which reſpected the Judgment of the Biſhops and Prieſts, he prayed him to obſerve them, and conform to the Council of Sardica, in the Appeals of Biſhops; and as to Prieſts, they ought by the Canons to be judged by their Biſhops, and can't appeal from the Judgment of their Biſhop and Metropolitan. In the End, he prays the Pope to admoniſh the Biſhops that they be moderate in their Judgments, and not ſuffer themſelves to be tranſported either with Paſſion or Pride.

His Advice to Lewis Balbus.

Charles the Bald died a little time after, and left for his Succeſſor his Son Lewis Balbus, or the Stammerer, who was crowned by Hincmarus, Dec. 8. 877. Soon after this Archbiſhop ſent him a Paper of Directions how to govern his Realm; He adviſes him to prevent all Diſagreements among his great Men, to aſſemble them, and take their Advice in Government, to put in Execution the Ordinance made by his Father concerning the Honour of Biſhops, and Privileges of Churches, to keep his Subjects in Peace and Unity, to oppoſe the Inroads of the Britains, and hold Friendſhip and Correſpondence with the Kings his Couſins. He exhorts him to pray to God, that he may attain an Heavenly Felicity, adminiſter Juſtice, and live like a Chriſtian.

His Treat upon the Duties of Biſhops.

About the ſame time, upon the Occaſion of the Election of the Biſhop of Beauvais, he wrote a Treatiſe of the Duties of a Biſhop and his Functions, which are to ſing the Publick Service of the Church, conſecrate the Chriſm, to adminiſter Baptiſm according to the Tradition of the Church, and to take Care that the Prieſts alſo baptize; to ordain Prieſts, Deacons, and other Orders of the Clergy, at the Time ſet apart by the Church, to call Synods of Prieſts, to go to Provincial Synods, and to aſſiſt at the Ordination of Biſhops, when he is invited, or to ſend a Prieſt and a Deacon to excuſe him; to govern his Clergy, and furniſh the Church with all Things neceſſary; to have Hoſpitals to receive the Poor and Paſſengers, to have a Care of the Monaſteries in his Dioceſs, and the Country-Pariſhes, to preach the Word of God to the People, to confirm, impoſe Publick Penance, abſolve thoſe that have gone through with it, to have a Care of all the Revenues of his Church, to ſerve the Prince in his Wars for the Defence of his Church, to make a good Uſe of the Church-Revenues, to know and obſerve the Holy Canons.

His Letter to Charles the Groſs.

Lewis the Stammerer dying in 879. left two Sons, Lewis and Caroloman; Theſe two Princes having many Enemies lying upon them, had need of the Emperor's Protection, who was Charles the Groſs. Hincmarus wrote to him, to thank him for the Kindneſs he ſeemed to have for theſe young Princes, and to deſire him to protect the Church, and to appoint theſe Princes ſome Counſellors and Tutors, who might have a Care to educate them well, and to teach them all Virtues neceſſary for Princes.

The Election of the Biſhop of Beauvais.

At the Beginning of the Reign of Lewis III. the Church of Beauvais having been vacant ſome time, Hincmarus, and the Biſhops of his Province of Rheims, being met in St. Mary's Church, proceeded to the Election of a Biſhop, and choſe Odo. The Clergy and People of Beauvais had before choſen two, one after another, but they were rejected as uncapable, by reaſon of their Ignorance and corrupt Manners. The Biſhops, who had choſen Odo, had wrote to the King, to pray him, that he would leave the Election of their Biſhops to their Metropolitan, and the Biſhops of their Province, with the Conſent of the People and Clergy, and after they would preſent the Biſhop choſen to him, that he might put him into the Poſſeſſion of the Revenues of the Church, which was under his Protection; And when this is obtain'd, he ſhall be ordain'd by the Biſhops. The King pretending to name him whom he would have, who was already choſen, refuſed to grant the Biſhops Requeſt, and wrote to Hincmarus, That his Intention was to govern and diſpoſe both Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Matters, and deſired him to be obedient to him, as he had been to his Predeceſſors; And that he would have the Church of Beauvais given to Odacer, in whom the Votes of the People concurred with him. Hincmarus anſwered him, That the Election of Biſhops ought to be left to the Biſhops, Clergy and People; that he ought not to force them to chooſe the Perſon he had named to them; That the Eccleſiaſtical Laws, which give Power of electing Bishops, were revived in the Ordinances of the Kings his Predecessors; That he was not Lord over the Church-Revenues, to dispose of them as he pleased. He puts him in mind of the Profession he made at his Coronation to protect the Church; That as for Odacer, he could never endure that he should be Bishop of Beauvais; and if he put him in Possession of the Church, he would not permit him to execute the Orders of his Priesthood in his Diocess; That he ought not to be ordained, although he was chosen by the Suffrages of the Clergy and People of Beauvais unanimously, because they having elected two unfit Persons successively, the Right of Election was fallen to the Bishops.

King Lewis having again earnestly sollicited Hincmarus by a second Letter to grant his Request, and to approve of the Election of Odacer to the Bishoprick of Beauvais, he answered him with greater Resolution than before; and when Odacer was put in Possession of the Revenues of that Church against his Will, he excommunicated him by a Circular Letter directed to all Priests, and all the Faithful of the Church.

Hincmarus's Advice to Carolo. man.

Lastly, Lewis being dead, and Caroloman only remaining King of France, Hincmarus, according to his Custom, sent an Instruction to him how he ought to govern himself. It is written with Gravity and Authority. He inserts the Duties of the King's Servants, and Counsellors of State.

His Writing against Rapes.

It is not certain to what King Hincmarus dedicated his Letters against Rapes, a Vice common in those Ages; He proves, both by the Ecclesiastical and Civil Laws, That that Crime ought to be punished severely; that Marriages with ravish'd Women are forbidden, and that Kings ought neither to tolerate them, nor compel Fathers to consent to them.

His Tract about Proofs.

He hath also made a Treatise about the Proof by Water, sent to Hildegard Bishop of Meaux, either when Men, to prove their Innocency, are dipped in Scalding Water without burning, or when they cast themselves into cold Water, and yet swim on the Top of the Water; and endeavours to justify this Custom, but the greatest part of his Reasons are meer Sophisms, which are destroyed by the Principle which forbids us to tempt God.

His Absolution by Letter.

He hath also a Letter written to Hildebold Bishop of Soissons, who being sick, had sent him a General Confession of his Sins in Writing, praying him to give him his Letters of Absolution. He writes to him again, That by the Apostolick Authority he absolved him of all his Sins, and prayed God to forgive them to him by the Grace of his Holy Spirit, to deliver him from all Evil, to keep him in perpetual Peace and Safety, and guide him to Eternal Life. These are the Terms in which he gave him Absolution; To which he also added, That not being able to come to him and pronounce it himself, he hoped his Ministers and Priests would do it: And tells him, That he had sent by one of them the Holy Oil, with which being anointed, he shall receive Remission of his Sins. He exhorts him also to make, besides this General Confession, a particular one to God, and a Priest; and adds some Precepts about a true Conversion.

The Form of Episcopal Ordination.

The Form of Episcopal Ordination which he sent to Adventius Bishop of Metz, is very remarkable. He says, That the Bishops of the Province ought to meet the Saturday before the Bishop Elect is to be ordain'd, and there openly read the Decree for his Election, and the Bishops must demand if their Votes are unanimously for him, if he hath all Virtues requisite for a Bishop, and no Man hath any Thing to say against him. Then they ought to ordain him according to a Canon of the Council of Carthage. That on the Lord's-day, the Bishops, Clergy, and People, ought to meet in the Place where the Metropolitan useth to ordain. That the Person elected ought to go out of the Vestry clothed with his Pontifical Vestments, and take the lowest Seat among the Bishops. That the Metropolitan shall begin the Service as far as the Gloria. That after the Gloria, he shall read the Prayer for the Consecration; and when that's ended, he shall exhort the People to pray for him who is to be ordain'd, and for them that ordain him. That taking him by the Hand, he shall kneel down before the Altar with all the Bishops his Associates, while they read the Litany. That when the Agnus Dei is begun to be sung, they shall rise up. That the Metropolitan shall take the Gospels, and lay them upon the Neck and Shoulders of him that is to be ordained; That that Book shall be held by him that consecrates him, and two other Bishops: That all three of them shall lay their Hands upon the Head of the Person to be ordained, and he that consecrates him shall read the Prayer. Then he shall go on with the Service, and when he comes at the Places marked with the Crosses, the Bishop, that consecrates him, shall take the Vessel of Holy Oil in his Left-hand, and taking some of it with his Thumb of his Right-hand, shall make Crosses upon the Crown of the Head of the Person that is to be ordained, reading the Prayers in that place. This being done, and all the Congregation saying Amen, they shall take the Gospels from the Neck of him that is to be ordain'd, put the Agnus upon his Finger, and give him the Pastoral Staff; After which he shall take his Place among the Bishops, viz. The first, if he be a Metropolitan, and the last, if he be a single Bishop. Then they shall read the Place in the Epistle to Timothy, where he speaks of the Qualifications of a Bishop; and when the Service is ended, they shall lead him to the Episcopal Chair, from whence he shall return into the Vestry, and then shall come out again to celebrate the Sacrament. Then they shall give him a Testimonial of his Ordination.——

Of other Ecclesiastical Affairs in which Hincmarus was chiefly engaged.

* Hincmarus opposes the Translation of Bishops in a Writing composed upon that Subject, upon the Occasion of the Translation of Actardus Bishop of Nants to the Archbishoprick of Tours. He proves, that according to the Laws of the Church, and the Tradition of the Apostles, the Translation of Bishops is forbidden, altho' in some Cases these sort of Translations are permitted for the Good of the Church. The only lawful Reasons for Translations, according to him, are these, The Necessity of preaching the Gospel, and the Peoples refusing to accept a Bishop. As for the Persecution of a Bishop in his Diocess, he shews, that it is not a sufficient Reason for Translation; and that according to the Law and Canons, a Bishop persecuted, or driven out of his Diocess, ought only to remain in another in the Quality of a Bishop, but there is no necessity he should be a Titular Bishop in another Church. As to the particular Case of Actardus, that he might have remained in the vacant Church, where the Council permitted him to remain without removing to the Church of Tours, and that 'twas not heard of that he might be Archbishop of Tours, and yet retain the Right which he hath to the Church of Nants. Actardus excused himself, because he had not sufficient Revenues in the Church of Nants to live honourably according to his Quality; but Hincmarus says, That that Pretence is by no means a lawful Excuse, but on the contrary, proves his Covetousness, and so much the more, because he had elsewhere Abbies, and an Estate sufficient for his Maintenance and Expence. There are in this Treatise a great many excellent Citations out of the Fathers, and some very good Precepts against the Covetousness and Ambition of Bishops.

* Hincmarus's Treatise against the Translation of Bishops.

His Tract of the Judgment of Priests.

His Treatise of the Accusations and Judgments of Priests, is a Collection of the Ecclesiastical and Civil Laws upon that Subject; in it he shews, what Persons may accuse Priests, the Quality, and Number of the Witnesses, the Judge before whom they ought to be accused, which is the Bishop; the Judgment from which they may appeal to the Metropolitan, the common Subjects for which they may be accused, the Manner how they ought to clear themselves when there are no Witnesses nor Proofs against them. He confutes the Opinion of some Persons who held, that a Priest, or Bishop, could not be accused by their Inferiors. He shews the Falshood and Impertinence of a Decree taken out of the forged Acts of Pope Silvester. He owns, That for Causes Civil and Pecuniary, a Clergyman may be summoned before a Lay-Judge, and ought to answer before him by his Attorney. Lastly, he is of Opinion, that the Estates of Clergymen, all Ecclesiastical Revenues, and Oblations of the Faithful, do belong to the Church. He orders, That all Bishops Officers should be careful to inform them, whether that Part of the Tenths, which ought to be distributed to the Poor, be appropriated to the Church, and whether they take any Presents of any Man to put them in the Registers of the Church, or require of them any Sort of Service; whether they do not put in their Kindred; and lastly, if they look after the Poor and Infirm of their Parishes.

The Process against Teutfridus

Hincmarus applies the Laws, which he had laid down for the Judgment of Priests, to the particular Fact of a certain Priest called Teutfrid, who had taken away the Ornaments of the Church: He shews, first, That he ought to be judged in his Province, either by his Bishop, or by a Council; That if he hath confessed, or is convicted of having conveyed away the Ornaments, he should be condemned to make Restitution, deposed and excommunicated: If it be found that he hath rejected the Judgment of the Church to have Recourse to the Prince, he ought also to be excommunicated, and deposed, according to the Canons of the Councils at Antioch and Carthage; That if he confesses, or be convicted to have sworn falsly to his Neighbours in his own Behalf, he ought to be condemned as a perjured Person, and that he ought not to be excused, by saying, That he was forced, or by putting another Sense upon his Words, because God can't be deceived by such Equivocations; and that we ought not so much to consider the Words of him that swears, as what is meant by him that imposes the Oath.

The Vision of Bernoldus.

The Relation of the Vision of Bernoldus is worth our Notice, because of the Circumstances of what happened to that Person, who being fallen sick, made his Confession, received Absolution, Unction with the Holy Oil, and the Communion of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ: That afterward he fell into such a Condition, that he could not speak, nor take any thing but a little Water, and when he had remained thus three Days, on the fourth Day about Noon, he became utterly senseless, but coming to himself about Midnight, he called for his Confessor, who being come, and having having made ſuch Prayers as are uſual upon ſuch Occaſions, he told him he had been in another World, and had ſeen 41. Biſhops in a certain Place, among whom were Ebbo, Pardulus, and Æneas, who ſeemed to him to be mangled, and black, as if they had been burnt, quaking ſometimes for Cold, and ſometimes ſcorched with Heat; That Ebbo calling him to him, ſaid to him, Since you have a Permiſſion to go into the other World, we pray thee to do us this Service, as to bid the Prieſts and Laymen of our Dioceſs to pray, and offer Sacrifice, and give Alms for us; That Bernoldus anſwering, That he knew not where to find them, they ordered a Perſon to conduct him, who brought him to a large Palace, where there were a great Number of Biſhops; That returning from this Walk, he came to the firſt Biſhops, whom he found in a better Condition, and more merry than they were the firſt time, who told him, That he had freed them from the evil Guardian they had, and had put them into a State of Reſt; That afterward he ſaw the Emperor Charles in another Place, who charged him to tell Hincmarus that he was in Torments for not following his good Advice, and that he prayed him to help him, and deliver him from thoſe Pains by his Prayers; That after this, he was carried into a Place full of Light, where he ſaw Hincmarus ready to ſing Maſs, and that being diſcharged of his Commiſſion, at his return he found Charles in a light Place, and in a good Condition; That he alſo met with Jeſſe, and ſaw ſeveral poor Souls tormented by the Devils in Lakes of Fire; That he alſo ſaw Earl Atharius, who charged him to bid his Wife pray to God for him; That he was diſmiſſed by a Man of an honeſt Countenance, who exhorted him to abound in good Works, that he might have an happy Station in another World, and promiſed him that he ſhould live 14. Years. That Bernoldus, after he had related theſe Things, received the Communion, and then eat and drank. Hincmarus hearing of this, (and believing it true, becauſe he had read of ſuch like Viſions in St. Gregory's Dialogues, and heard, that the like had happened to a certain Monk named Wetinus, in the Reign of the Emperor Lewis the Kind (or Godly) he took an Occaſion from hence to exhort all the People of his Dioceſs to live well, and recommended it to them to pray for King Charles, and for all others, whom this reſtored Perſon had ſeen, interpreting what they had ſaid in this Senſe, That if they did what they deſired, they ſhould receive the Comfort which they longed for.

A Relation of King Pepin's Repentance

Towards the End of Hincmarus's Works is a Piece added concerning the Repentance of King Pepin; This Prince being delivered by the Lords of Aquitain to his Brother Charles, and confined to the Monaſtery of St. Medard at Soiſſons, An. 852. made his Eſcape out of that Monaſtery, and fled to the Normans, who then ravaged France, but was taken again. Hincmarus conſulting with himſelf how he ought to be dealt with, made this Treatiſe, and in it concludes, that he ought to be exhorted to make a ſincere and general Confeſſion of all his Sins in Secret, and Publickly acknowledge his Fault in leaving his Monaſtery, being perjured, and made no better than an Heathen, and do his publick Penances; that then he may be reconciled, receive the Clerical Tonſure, and put on a Monk's Habit, promiſing to live regularly for the future. And after this he may take the Communion, but muſt be treated civilly and kindly, and left at Liberty in the Monaſtery, yet the Monks ought to obſerve ſtrictly, that he doth not relapſe into the ſame Fault, nor eſcape, as he hath already done from the Monaſtery of St. Medard, and as Carloman had done from the Monaſtery of Corbey.

Several Letters of Hincmarus.

At the End of Hincmarus's Works are ſome Fragments of his Letters taken out of Hodoardus: The firſt is taken out of a Letter written to King Charles the Bald, concerning the Manner how he ought to adminiſter Juſtice to the Biſhops; The ſecond is out of a Letter to Lewis Emperor of Germany, about the Ordination of Bertulphus to the Archbiſhoprick of Treves; This Church had been a long time vacant, and Hincmarus ordained Bertulphus to it. Lewis of Germany was angry at it, as an Encroachment upon the Rights of his Kingdom, and an Intruſion upon a Church that did not belong to him; wherefore Hincmarus wrote to him to excuſe himſelf, and ſays, that he undertook that Ordination for the Good of the Church; that he thought, ſince there were not Biſhops enow in the Province of Treves to ordain a Metropolitan, it belonged to him, who was the next Archbiſhop, to do it; and ſo much the rather, becauſe the Churches of Rheims and Treves were looked upon as Siſters, and the Cuſtom in the Councils was, that the moſt ancient of thoſe two Churches ſhould have the Precedency of the other. That indeed, he had not concerned himſelf with that Ordination, but by the Entreaty of the Church of Treves, by whom Bertulphus was generally approved of; That he was reſolved to maintain what he had done, and to defend the Validity of this Ordination; That ſo long as he lived he would acknowledge Bertulphus Archbiſhop of Treves, unleſs he were Canonically depoſed; That Walto, who had invaded that Church, ſhould never be acknowledged by him for a lawful Biſhop, and if he perſiſted in his Claim they would condemn him.

Of other Eccleſiaſtical Affairs in which Hincmarus was chiefly engaged.

In another Letter written to the Monks of St. Dennis, he forbids them to ſell their Tythes, and convert the Price of them to their own Advantage. In the 4*th*. directed to an Earl, he forbids him taking any Thing for his Nomination to a Church, and tells him, That if a Perſon capable of a Place be preſented to him, he will ordain him, if he will vouch that he hath given nothing for it, if not, he ſhall put in another. He complains, that there was a Perſon put into the Regiſter of the Church who had given a Preſent to have his Name written into it.

In the Fragment of the 5*th*. Letter, he aſſures Hermengardis, Lotharius's Queen, that he never was unfaithful to the Emperor her Husband.

The 6*th*. is an Admonition to the Nuns, about the Election of an Abbeſs [for the Monaſtery of St. Croſſe.] The laſt is a Fragment of a Treatiſe of Hincmarus's, intituled, Ferculum Solomonis, taken out of Durandus Abbot of Troarn, who ſays that this Treatiſe of Hincmarus was in Verſe; That which we have in the End of the firſt Tome of this Author's Works is in Proſe, and ſeems to be a ſecond Part of that Work. The firſt is loſt, and we have not ſpoken of the other, becauſe it contains nothing in it but ſome Myſtical Notions and Meditations.

There are two other Treatiſes of Hincmarus of the ſame Nature, the one upon theſe Words of the Pſalmiſt, Herodii Domus Dux eſt illorum; and the other upon the Myſtical Name which he had given to the Council of Nice, in which he affirms, That it deſerves that Name, becauſe the Number of 318. which was the Number of the Biſhops preſent at it, is a Myſtical Number.

Judgment upon Hincmarus.

By what we have ſaid of the Life, Actions and Writings of Hincmarus, it is plain that he was better verſed in the Canons and Diſcipline of the Church, than in the Studies of Eccleſiaſtical Doctrines; He had read the Writings of the Councils well, and had made Collections of the Paſſages of their Writings, and Canons, upon all Sorts of Subjects; He knew how to uſe them dexterouſly, and convert them eaſily to his own Advantage; He was a great Politician, and knew very well how to uſe the Laws of the Church to bring about his Intentions and Deſigns; The French Church is much beholding to him for his Vigor in defending her Liberties, and the Dignity of her Biſhops and Metropolitans, againſt the Attempts that the Popes had made upon their Rights, yet without depriving the Holy See of the Reſpect and Subjection that was due to it; He found out a Way to oppoſe the unjuſt Pretences of the Court of Rome, without making a Schiſm, or ſlighting the Holy See.

But it was not againſt the Popes only, that he maintained the Rights of the Church, he alſo defended them againſt the Kings, and tho' he was much in Favour, yet he courageouſly defended his Rights, by telling them freely what was their Duty. Some Perſons may, perhaps, blame him for intermeddling ſo much with Affairs of State, but this may be ſufficiently juſtified by the Uſage of France in his Time, where the Biſhops were looked upon not only as the Spiritual Paſtors of the Church, but as the Principal Members of the State.

His Style is fitter a great Deal for Precepts and Inſtructions, than for Works of Doctrine or Eloquence, for 'tis clear and plain, but neither ſmooth nor elegant; the Faults which are to be met withal in reading his Works, are recompenſed by Abundance of excellent Rules and Authorities for the Government of the Church; There is no Author, where we meet with ſuch plenty and ſo well authoriz'd, and from whom we can know the Rights of the Church ſo well; Altho' he doubted of the Fathood of the forged Decretals of the Popes, yet he quotes them often, but 'tis uſually when they are agreeable to the Common Right, for when they diſagree he rejects them, and grounds himſelf chiefly upon the Canons of the General Councils, or other Councils received and approved by the Church, and upon the Decretals of the Popes, which are agreeable to that Diſcipline

A Part of his Works were printed at Mayence, [by the Care of John Buſæus] in 1602. and at Paris in 1615. by Cordeſius, [who added ſeveral Tracts of Hincmarus to the former Edition] but Father Sirmondus put out a much larger Edition in 2. Vol. in Folio, printed at Paris by Cramoiſy in 1645. Since Father Cellot publiſhed in 1658. four little Pieces of his againſt Hincmarus Biſhop of Laon, [with learned Notes of his own, and joined to them the Council of Douzi] which are alſo inſerted in the 8*th*. Tome of the Councils, with ſome new Letters of Hincmarus about the ſame Buſineſs.

CHAP. VII.

The History of the Controversie upon the Eucharist debated in the Ninth Century.

Of the Controversie upon the Eucharist.

THE Famous Controversie of Rome with the Lutherans and Calvinists, upon the Eucharist, has made Men more attentive to all Controversies formerly raised about that Mystery. The Ninth Century affords us one no less important than abstruse. It cannot be deny'd, that there were Great Contests in this Age about the Eucharist, occasioned by the Book of Paschasius Radbertus, Concerning the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ; but the Difficulty is, to know the true State of the Question: And that's the thing which lies now upon me to clear, by giving a Faithful Account of the Authors that have written upon this Subject, as well as of their Writings. I shall begin therefore with Paschasius Radbertus, whose Book has occasioned the Debate upon this Subject.

The Importance of this Controversie.

The Life of Paschasius.

Paschasius was a Native of Soissons, who, being from his Infancy forsaken by his Relations, was brought up by the Charity of the Nuns of our Lady of Soissons, in the outparts of their Abby. He became afterwards a Monk in the Monastery of Corbey, then under the Government of St. Adelardus, Brother of Theodrada the Abbess of our Lady of Soissons, who had taken care of Paschasius in his Youth. He proved a very Studious Man, managed divers Conferences, and writ several Books. In short, having got a great name both by his Learning and Virtue, he was chosen Abbot of Corbey, Anno 844; but would not take upon him the Order of Priesthood, and contented himself with that of Deacon, which he had taken when he was a private Monk. Some Difference happened betwixt him and the Monks, which made him quit his Charge; and he spent the rest of his Life in reading and writing of Books. He died in the year 865.

Paschasius's Treatise concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour.

His Treatise concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour, was written when he was yet a Monk; and that during the Exile of his Abbot, to whom he gives in his Preface the name of Arsenes, and whom he calls another Jeremy. It has been a received Opinion, that it was Adelardus, who was Exiled Anno 814. But it is plain, by the Dialogue made by Paschasius upon the Life and Actions of St. Adelardus, that it was not Adelardus, but Wala, whom he called by the names of Arsenes and Jeremy. Wala was Exiled in the beginning of the Troubles raised by the Division that happened betwixt the Emperor Lewis, sirnamed the Godly, and his Children, of which Paschasius himself takes notice in that Book, which made Father Mabillon conjecture, that this Book of Paschasius was not written till the Year 831; notwithstanding that, in a Manuscript of the Abby of Corbey, it is said, that this Abbot Arsenes is Adelardus, Sanctus Adelardus; which words seem to be foisted in, and are not to be found in other Manuscripts.

This Book Concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour, bore likewise the Title of A Treatise of the Sacrament; for it is not true that Paschasius writ two Books with those two different Titles, but one Book with both Titles, as it appears by some Ancient Manuscripts. By other Manuscripts we find, that it was dedicated to an Abbot named Placidus, which is confirmed to us by the Testimonies of Sigebertus and Trithemius. This Placidus was the Famous Varinus, Abbot of the New Abby of Corbey in Saxony, as it appears by a Letter of Paschasius, to be seen in the beginning of this Treatise, in the Manuscript of Annesy, published by Father Mabillon; who informs us besides, that this Book was composed for the Instruction of the Saxons, who were not as yet well instructed in the Christian Faith. In it, having first prepared their Minds to believe the Ineffable Mystery of the Eucharist, by demonstrating, that God by his Omnipotency may bring to pass many things Supernatural, and to us Incomprehensible, he says, that no Man ought to doubt of its being the Body of Jesus Christ, and that his Flesh and Blood be really there; and shews, that none ought to be ignorant of so great a Mystery, daily celebrated in the Church, and such as ought to be received by the Faithful: Which they cannot do Worthily and Effectually, unless they can discern the Excellency of the Mystical Body and Blood of Jesus Christ from what they perceive by the Taste. That it is called Sacrament, either because under the Species of a Visible Sign, God is pleased to work some secret Thing, or because the Holy Ghost does consecrate the Visible Sign, and under the Veil of Outward Signs does work some Mystical Thing for the Salvation of the Faithful. That all Sacraments in general may be defined to be an Earnest or a Pledge of Salvation, by which, under a Visible Representation, the Holy Ghost works in an invisible manner. That such are in the Church the Sacraments of Baptism, Chrism, and that of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ; therefore called Sacraments, because under the Visible Species the Flesh is consecrated by a Secret and Divine Vertue, so that they are in effect Inwardly, what they are thought to be Outwardly by Faith. That in Baptism we are regenerated by the Holy Ghost, and afterwards, by the Power of Jesus Christ, nourished with his Body and Blood; and that we ought not to wonder, that the Holy Ghost, who has formed our Saviour's Body in the Virgin's Womb, should, by an Invisible Power, change the Bread and Wine, though there appear no Visible Change, because it is done Spiritually and Invisibly. That by the Consecration of this Mystery, the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ are truly created, produced, and sacrificed in a Mystical Manner. That it is not to be deny'd, but that there is some Figure in this Mystery, being 'tis a Mystery, but that the Figure does not hinder the Reality. That what appears outwardly is a Figure, but the inward a Reality, because the Body and Blood of our Saviour are made of the Substance of the Bread and Wine: So that this Mystery is both a Figure and a Verity; a Figure of the hidden Truth, and a Verity, not perceivable indeed by the Senses, but believed by Faith. That the Ancient Figures differed vastly from this, they being but a Shadow and Image of what we really enjoy by Receiving this Mystery, the real Flesh and real Blood of Christ our Saviour. That those who do not dwell in Christ, that is, who remain in Sin, take the Sacramental Elements out of the Priest's hand, but do not eat and drink Spiritually the Body and Blood of Christ. That, in fine, the Church is the Body of Christ, that all the Faithful are Members of his Body, and that the Eucharist is daily consecrated to be the Body of Christ, but that those only, who are his Mystical Members are allowed to receive it. That from this Food some receive Life, others Death; it being Life to such as are Members of Jesus Christ, and Death to such as are Members of the Devil. That we must raise our Mind to God, and believe that after the words of Consecration, 'tis the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, that very Flesh which was born of the Virgin, and died upon the Cross. That Christ himself is upon the Altar, offering, as High-Priest, our Vows and Supplications to the Lord. That the Angels are present at this Sacrifice, in which our Saviour once sacrificed upon the Cross for the Salvation of Mankind, is daily offered in a Mystical Manner for the Attonement of the Sins we daily commit, to discriminate the Good from the Wicked, to dwell Corporally in such as have received Baptism, that they may dwell in him, and to nourish the Faithful: That therefore he is called Bread, because as the Bread nourishes the Body, so the Body of Jesus Christ nourishes the Souls of the Faithful: That he is also called Wine, because as the Wine is made of the Juice of several Grapes, so we are justify'd by the Graces and Spiritual Influences which flow from him, who is the true Vine, of which the Faithful are but Branches. That it is the very Blood which ran out of his Side at his Death and Passion; and that for that Reason it is, that we mingle Water with the Wine, because out of his Side there came both Blood and Water. That others say, Water is mingled with the Wine, to joyn together the Water of Baptism, and the Blood which was the Price of our Salvation. That, whether the Consecrating-Priest be a good or bad Man, we ought to believe, when we receive the Eucharist from his hands, that we equally receive the Truth of the Mystery; because the Consecration is not made by the Merit of him that consecrates, but by the Power of the Creator, and the Vertue of the Holy Ghost; and that it is Jesus Christ who baptizes, as it is he, by whom, through the Vertue of the Holy Ghost, the Eucharist becomes his Flesh and Blood. That the Priest is not the Creator of Christ's Body, but that he prays to God the Father by his Son; that he offers Gifts unto him, before the Consecration, and prays him to accept of them; and that he makes this Offering in the Name of the Church and of the Faithful. That, although this Sacrament has neither

Of the Controversie upon the Eucharist.

[No Man ought to doubt, &c.] Although in this sum of Radbertus's Book de Sacramento Corporis & Sanguinis J. C. there be many Expressions that manifest the Ancient Doctrine of the Spiritual Presence in the Sacrament only; yet it must not be deny'd, but that he speaks very plainly of the Substantial Conversion, and stands up stoutly for it; yet that this was a New Doctrine, and a strange Notion in the Church, appears by the General Opposition made to it by the Learned Men of the same Age, viz. Rabanus, Scotus, Bertram, &c. the sequel of the Controversie will manifest.]

Of the Controverſie upon the Euchariſt.

the Taſte nor Colour of the Fleſh and Blood, yet by the ſtrength of Faith and Reaſon our Soul receives 'em as ſuch; and that as we have received in Baptiſm the Image of our Saviour's Death, ſo we receive in this Sacrament the Likeneſs of his Fleſh and Blood; ſo that there is Truth in this Myſtery: and yet the Heathens cannot reproach us, that we drink the Blood, or eat the Fleſh of a Dead Man.

That, to evidence theſe Truths, either to ſuch as called them in queſtion, or to thoſe who had a tender love for theſe Holy Myſteries, the † Body and Blood of our Saviour have ſometimes viſibly appeared upon the Altar, particularly to a Prieſt who had deſired it ardently. That the Conſecration of this Sacrament is made by the Energy of the words of Jeſus Chriſt. That howſoever this Myſtery be the Fleſh and Blood of Chriſt, it may nevertheleſs be call'd Bread and Wine, by reaſon of the Effects they produce. For as the Terreſtrial Bread is a ſupport to our Temporal Life, ſo this Spiritual Bread yields unto us a Spiritual and Heavenly Life; and as Wine doth rejoyce the Heart of Man, ſo does this Heavenly Drink rejoyce the inward Man. That by receiving the Fleſh of Chriſt we receive his Divinity, and that we receive both his Body and Blood, becauſe they cannot be ſeparated. That, though our Saviour did adminiſter this Sacrament to his Apoſtles after Supper for ſome Myſtical Reaſons, it was nevertheleſs the Practice of the Catholick Church to receive it faſting. That it is not requiſite however to forbear eating till the Euchariſt be digeſted, according to the Injunctions of ſome Apocryphal Books. That, though this Sacrament nouriſhes our Bodies, we ought chiefly to conſider the Spiritual Effects of the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, as nouriſhing our Souls in a Spiritual Manner; ſo that it is frivolous to fear that this Sacrament goes into the draught as our Terreſtrial Food, or that it mingles it ſelf, and is digeſted with it. That we ought not to believe, that Chriſt is to drink Wine during his Reign of a Thouſand years, as ſome have imagined. And laſtly, that, though Good and Bad Men receive the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, yet we muſt believe, that this Sacrament is Salvation to the firſt, and Damnation to the laſt. Thus I have, in few words ſummed up Paſchaſius's Doctrine upon the Euchariſt from his aforeſaid * Treatiſe; to which he adds ſeveral Conſiderations, with Allegorical and Myſtical Reflections, and towards the Concluſion ſome Paſſages out of St. Hilary, St. Auſtine, St. Ambroſe, St. Gregory, St. Leo, St. John Chryſoſtome, and Beda, for the Confirmation of it.

A long time after this Treatiſe was publiſhed (for it was written in 831. before Paſchaſius was Abbot of Corbey, and what we are going to ſay happened but about the latter end of his Life, towards the Year 864.) Fredegardus, or Frudegardus, a Monk of the new Abby of Corbey, for whoſe Monks Paſchaſius had compoſed this Book, having met with ſome Men of a different Opinion, and himſelf entertaining ſome Doubts upon this Subject, did freely write unto him his thoughts upon the Matter. In Anſwer to which Paſchaſius writ him a ‡ Letter, wherein he explained and confirmed what he had laid down in his Treatiſe concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour. There he ſays, that notwithſtanding the Scruples of thoſe Perſons, he had good Reaſon to maintain, that it is the very Fleſh of our Saviour which is given to us in the Euchariſt, the ſame Fleſh that was born of the Virgin, and the ſame Blood that was ſhed upon the Croſs. Otherwiſe, ſays he, how can this Sacrament confer Eternal Life and the Remiſſion of Sins, were it not the Fleſh and Blood of him who is Life and Salvation? Fredegardus did own it to him, that he had been of that Opinion; but that having read in the third Book of the Chriſtian Doctrine, writ by St. Auſtine, that theſe words of our Saviour, This is my Body, This is my Fleſh, are a Figurative Expreſſion, and a Figure more than a Reality, he could not tell how to reconcile that with his former Sentiment. And the rather conſidering what that Holy Father ſeems to ſay, that it were a horrible thing to believe, that Chriſtians eat the ſame Body which was born of the Virgin, and drink the ſame Blood that was ſhed upon the Croſs. To which Paſchaſius anſwers, that it is not inconſiſtent with good Senſe, to ſay, that thoſe words of our Saviour are a Figurative Expreſſion, becauſe there is a Figure in this Myſtery, and that the Real Body and Blood of Chriſt are really found in it, but in a Myſtery and Figure, as our Saviour is called the Character and Figure of his Father, though he is really God. That he has ſufficiently explained it in his Book, by aſſerting, that the Euchariſt is both a Figure and a Real thing. That St. Auſtine himſelf did own it, and that he agrees in that Point with St. Ambroſe, St. Cyprian, and Euſebius Emeſenus, ſome of whoſe Paſſages he quotes. Whence he infers, that it is the Doctrine of the Fathers, though many doubt of it, who cannot apprehend how, the Bread remaining viſibly entire, it can be ſaid, that it is the Body and Blood of Chriſt. But that they would have other Thoughts of it, ſhould they but conſider, how five or ſix Loaves could be multiplyed into an infinite Number; and as thoſe Loaves were multiply'd by the Power of God, ſo Chriſt's Fleſh is multiply'd, and the abundance of his Fleſh and Blood diffuſed in the Sacrament. That we ſay likewiſe, that Chriſt is daily ſacrificed upon our Altars, though he died but once for the Salvation of Mankind, becauſe we believe it to be done Spiritually, but not without the Sacrament: Which is not reiterated, by cauſing Chriſt to die again; but he is Myſtically ſacrificed every day for us, that we may receive in the Bread what was nailed to the Croſs, and drink in the Cup what ran out of our Saviour's Side. For walking by Faith, our Belief ought to be Spiritual, not Carnal. Upon which he quotes a paſſage of St. Gregory, and another of the Council of Epheſus, and then invites Fredegardus to read over his Treatiſe attentively. Not, ſays he, that there is any thing extraordinary in it, being contrived for the meaneſt capacity; but becauſe he heard that Treatiſe had ſtirred up many to apply themſelves to the Knowledge of this Myſtery, teaching them to entertain Notions worthy of our Saviour, whoſe Body is Incorruptible, becauſe Spiritual, and that all things that are done in the Sacrament are alſo Spiritual. He tells him, that 'tis that Spirit who gives Life to thoſe who receive it worthily; and that thoſe who want Faith, or receive it unworthily, eat and drink their own Damnation. To his Letter he ſubjoyns an Abſtract of his Commentary upon the 26*th*. Chapter of St. Matthew's Goſpel, wherein he explains the Words of the Inſtitution of the Euchariſt, and oppoſes thoſe who give them only a Figurative Senſe, as if the Words imported nothing but the Figure and Vertue of the Body and Blood of our Saviour, and not his Real Fleſh and Blood. Then he tells him, that he thought himſelf obliged to explain that paſſage more at large, upon the Information he had received, that ſome People found fault with what he had formerly written upon that Subject: Which Doctrine he confirms by the Teſtimonies of St. Ambroſe, St. Hilary, and the Council of Epheſus, together with ſome Expreſſions in the Canon of the Maſs.

Although Paſchaſius in his Book followed the Doctrine of the Church, it having been the Opinion of all the Orthodox before him, that the Body and Blood of Chriſt were actually preſent in the Euchariſt, and that the Bread and Wine were changed into the Body and Blood of our Saviour. Yet it was not uſual in thoſe Times to ſay poſitively, that the Body of Chriſt in the Euchariſt was the ſame that was born of the Virgin, and to aſſert it ſo plainly. This is the Judgment of Father Mabillon, which he expreſſes in theſe words; Quippe ante Paſchaſii Librum de Corpore & Sanguine Domini confitebantur Catholici omnes Chriſti Domini verum Corpus, verumque Sanguinem revera exiſtere in Euchariſtia; itemque Panem & Vinum in illa converti; at nemo Paſchaſii tempore illud Corpus eſſe idem quod ex Maria Virgine natum eſt tam directè aſſerere auditus fuerat. Theſe Expreſſions, ſays the ſame Author again, are indeed to be found in the Ancient Fathers; but this Age was either ignorant of thoſe Paſſages, or did not take notice of them, Id quidem autem ex Patribus tradiderant non pauci, ſed ignota erant illo ævo, aut certè non obſervata eorum hac de re Teſtimonia. Paſchaſius therefore, adds Father Mabillon, teaching this Doctrine in his Book ſo poſitively, gave occaſion for ſome eminent and learned Men to oppoſe his Opinion. Theſe are his Words, Quapropter cum Paſchaſius in Libro ſuo tam fidenter & aſſeveranter illud docuiſſet, hujus rei Novitate, ut ſibi videbatur, commoti ſunt quidam Viri docti haud incelebres, qui ſcriptis editis hanc ejus ſententiam acriter impugnarunt. Paſchaſius maintained it by a Paſſage of St. Ambroſe, in his Book of Myſteries; whence he concluded, that the Sacrament of the Euchariſt was the very Fleſh of our Saviour, born of the Virgin, crucified, and raiſed again from the Dead: Which Expreſſion, being made publick, was diſliked by Rabanus, Ratramnus, and an Anonymous Author in the time of Paſchaſius, then in the next following Age by Erigenus. They look'd upon Paſchaſius as one that receded from the expreſs Words of St. Auſtine and St. Jerome, who ſaid, our Saviour's Body might be taken in two or three manners, and they could by no means approve of ſuch Expreſſions. Their Controverſie was * not about the real Preſence, which they owned with Paſchaſius, but only about the Expreſſion it ſelf. Paſchaſius maintained, that not only the Body of our Saviour was really in the Euchariſt, but alſo that Chriſtians ought plainly to ſay, that there was no Difference betwixt the one and the other. His Adverſaries on

[† The Body and Blood of our Saviour viſibly appeared.] This Fabulous Apparition Heſpinian de Sacr. l. 4. p. 1 p. 325. tells us, is plainly foiſted into the Original Manuſcript, and doth ſo plainly differ from the Style and Doctrine of the reſt of the Treatiſe, that it is eaſily diſcernable to a moderate Judgment, that the Chapters 38 and 39, wherein it is, are added by the Monk who put it out, or by ſome other, who would promote the Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation by ſuch Legendary Tales.]

[* Not about the Real preſence, but only about the Expreſſion.] Although Tranſubſtantiation be not plainly aſſerted in this Controverſie, for it was not yet come ſo far as to determine how Chriſt's body was preſent in the Sacrament, whether In or Trans, or Sub, or Con; yet this Diſpute laid the Foundation for it, though our Hiſtorian would perſuade us 'twas but a verbal one only: Yet the Oppoſition

of ſuch learned men as appeared againſt Radbertus, do plainly intimate more, who would not fight with Shadows. Theſe Expreſſions had a plain Tendency to a great Error: for though both Parties acknowledged a Real Preſence, yet herein was the difference; Radbertus was for a carnal and bodily Preſence, Bertram, Scotus, &c. were for a ſpiritual and figurative Preſence; according as the Ancient Fathers had always held: which is not leſs real than the other. And if we keep in mind this Diſtinction, Radbertus and Bertram are as far from agreeing as Truth and Error.]

on the other ſide, to whom this Expreſſion appeared too harſh, as if there were no Figure in the Euchariſt, and the outward Species were the very Body of our Saviour, were diſguſted at it. So that the ſtate of their Controverſie was not, whether Chriſt's Body was truly and really in the Euchariſt, but whether we ought to ſay that he was there in the ſame manner as he was born, crucified, and raiſed from the Dead; whether he was there without Veil, or Figure; or whether the outward Signs that appeared to our Senſes were the Body and Blood of Chriſt. 'Tis true, Paſchaſius owned the Figure in the Euchariſt, as they did the real Preſence. But his Adverſaries repreſented him as one that denied the Figure; and he thought his Adverſaries diſowned the real Preſence, or at leaſt that they had ſome Objections againſt it. Thus the whole Controverſie betwixt them was merely about Expreſſions, and for want of a right Underſtanding.

The firſt Author that oppoſed Paſchaſius was Anonymous.

The firſt Author that writ againſt Paſchaſius was a nameleſs Author, whoſe Writings upon this ſubject Father Mabillon found in a Manuſcript of Gemblours, at the end of Erigerus's Treatiſe, with this Title, Dicta cujuſdam ſapientis de corpore & ſanguine Domini adverſus Ratbertum. This Author ſays that, as all the Faithful ought to believe and confeſs that the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt are one and the ſame Fleſh, ſo they ought to believe that of the Bread is made his real Fleſh, and of the Wine his real Blood, by the Conſecration and Vertue of the Holy Ghoſt. Yet he oppoſes Paſchaſius's Expreſſion; viz. Quod non ſit alia caro Chriſti quam quæ nata eſt de Maria, & paſſa in Cruce, & reſurrexit de Sepulchro; and ſays, that the Notion was perfectly new, he never read, or heard of it, and wonders St. Ambroſe ſhould make uſe of it. But he oppoſes St. Auſtine to him, who ſays that our Saviour's Fleſh is not eaten with our Teeth, ſuch as it was upon the Croſs, or as after it roſe from the Dead. And, to reconcile St. Ambroſe with St. Auſtine, he ſays, that our Lord's Body in the Euchariſt does not differ in Nature, but in Species, from his Body born of the Virgin; meaning (as he explains himſelf) that it is really the ſame, though in another ſtate, and under another form, viz. under the Species of the Bread and Wine. So fully convinced was this Author, that Paſchaſius believed our Saviour's Fleſh to be in the ſame manner, and as viſibly in the Euchariſt, as upon the Croſs, that he charged him with this impious Aſſertion, that as often as Maſs is celebrated, our Saviour ſuffers as really as he did upon the Croſs. Father Mabillon affirms, that this anonymous Book is Rabanus's Letter to Egilo; but he brings no certain Proof for it. The Title is different, nor is the Treatiſe made in the form of a Letter; ſo that I am apt to think it another Thing. However, 'tis certain Rabanus has alſo found fault with Paſchaſius's Expreſſions: for, beſides Erigerus's authority, who joyns him with Ratramnus, as one of Paſchaſius's Adverſaries, Rabanus himſelf in his Letter to Heribaldus, ſpeaks on that Subject in theſe Words; Some Men, ſays he, not having true Sentiments upon the Sacrament of the Body and Blood, aſſert, that that very Body and Blood of our Saviour, which was born of the Virgin, and in which our Saviour ſuffered Death upon the Croſs, is the ſame Body we receive at the Altar; which Opinion we have confuted, as much as in us lay, in our Letter to Egilo the Abbot, wherein we teach what ought to be believed concerning Chriſt's Body. 'Tis true, theſe very Words, Idem eſſe quod ſumitur in Altari, are not in the Manuſcript; but Monſieur Baluzius has inſerted them, upon the Credit of Erigerus. And, whatever Additions or Alterations might be made, 'tis plain, Rabanus did by no means approve of Paſchaſius's way of expreſſing himſelf; yet this is no Argument but that he believed Chriſt's real Preſence in the Euchariſt. For in the tenth Chapter of the ſeventh Book of Orders he expreſly ſays, that the Bread is changed into the Body of Chriſt, and the Wine into his Blood, and looks upon this Change as a very great Miracle. Who could believe, ſays he, that the Bread could be changed into the Fleſh of Chriſt, and the Wine into his Blood, if our Saviour himſelf had not ſaid it, by whom both the Bread and Wine were created, and all things made of Nothing? 'Tis much more eaſie for him to make one thing of another, than to make all things of Nothing. In his Book of the Inſtitution of Clerks, he ſays, that the viſible Creatures being ſanctified by the Holy Ghoſt, paſs into the Sacrament of the Divine Body. And in his Manuſcript Commentary upon Joſhua, he ſays, That the Fleſh and Blood of the unſpotted Lamb are offered every day on the Altar, for the Nouriſhment of the Souls of the Faithful who receive the ſame, that the Shadow of the Law being paſt, the Truth of the Goſpel may come to light by Jeſus Chriſt himſelf. Whereby it appears that Rabanus did not in the leaſt oppoſe the real Preſence of Chriſt's Body in the Euchariſt, but only diſproved Paſchaſius's Expreſſion, which he thought ſeemed to ſuſtimate that the outward Signs of the Sacrament of the Euchariſt, which our Eyes ſee, and our Hands feel, are the very Body of our Saviour.

Of the Controverſie upon the Euchariſt.

There is another Anonymous Author, whoſe Work is quoted by Erigerus, and inſerted in the 12*th.* Tome of Dacherius's Spicilegium, who ſpeaks to the ſame purpoſe. As that bears there is nothing (ſays he) but what is true and real in Chriſt, ſo there is nothing in the Myſtery of his Body and Blood, which is conſecrated into what it was not, by vertue of the Bleſſing and the Word of God, that can be falſe or deceitful; and thoſe Gifts being thus conſecrated, are changed by an inviſible Power into what they were not before, as the Water was changed into Wine at Cana, but that this being a ſpiritual Change, is not perceptible but by Faith. Meaning, that the * Species of Bread and Wine remain, and that the inward Change, though real and effective, is not perceived by our bodily Eyes, but by Faith.

Who is the Author of this Book. Ratramus.

[The Species remain, and the inward Change, though real, is not perceiv'd by our Eyes, but by Faith.*] Mr. Du Pin in repreſenting this Controverſie, uſes the words, Species, Accidents and Form, to expreſs the Elements of the Sacraments to us, that he may make the Romiſh Doctrines appear in the Venerable Robes of Antiquity, and ſo deſcribes the Real Change, all along, as if it were Corporeal; but if we attentively obſerve the words of the Author, we ſhall find that Bertram, and thoſe of his Sentiments, allowed no Material, but Sacramental Change in the Elements. Chriſt's Body and Blood were preſent Effectively and Really, but not Bodily and Subſtantially, or Tranſubſtantially, as the Romaniſts hold; and in this Senſe it is, that we Proteſtants, agreeably to all true Antiquity, as Caſaubon ſays, Credimus in Euchariſtiâ præſentiam, non minus quam ipſi Papicola veram.]

But nothing gives us a clearer Inſight into the State of the Queſtion, then under debate, than the Book of the Body and Blood of our Lord, which paſſes commonly under the name of Bertram: But becauſe ſome queſtion whether he be the Author, it will not be improper, before we relate what is ſaid therein to the preſent purpoſe, to examine whoſe Work it is, whether of Ratramnus himſelf, a Monk of Corbey, or of ſome other Author. The Firſt Impreſſion of this Book was at Cologne, Anno 1533, by the Care of the Proteſtants of Germany; which made it the more odious to many Catholicks, who, without a due examination thereof, look'd upon it as a Book that countenanced the Error of the Proteſtants in the point of the Euchariſt. Some there were, as amongſt others, Sixtus Senenſis, and Deſpenſeus Santonenſis, who gave it out for ſpurious: But, ſome Ancient Manuſcripts of it being found, that ſuppoſition ceaſed. Some undertook the Defence of this Treatiſe, others conceived there were many things in it fit to be corrected, and others gave it quite over. But, however Divines were divided in thoſe days, upon the Doctrine of this Book, ſtill they agreed in this, that Bertramus and Ratramnus were the ſame, though Bertramus is the moſt commonly uſed, and to be ſeen both in Sigebertus and Trithemius. Archbiſhop Uſher is the firſt that quoted him under the name of Ratramnus, taking it for an undoubted Truth, that Bertramus and Ratramnus were the ſame. But Mareſius being asked his Opinion concerning this Author, by Father Dacherius, writ to him a Learned Epiſtle, inſerted into the Second Tome of his Spicilegium, that came out in 1657, in which he maintains, That the Book bearing the name of Bertramus, is not Ratramnus's; but that it is the Book of Johannes Scotus Erigena, who did certainly write a Treatiſe on the ſame Subject, in which he ſeemed to oppoſe the Reality of our Saviour's Body in the Euchariſt. This Opinion was followed by Father Paris, a Canon Regular of St. Genoveſa, eminent both for his Learning and Piety, in the Diſcourſe he made upon this Subject, and which he put at the end of the Firſt Tome of his Book, called, The Perpetual Tenour of our Faith: and of late by Father Hardouin, in his Treatiſe of The Sacrament of the Altar. The Principal Reaſons on which they ground their Conjectures are theſe. 1. What Authors have ſaid of the Book of Johannes Scotus, concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour, does agree with the Book that bears the name of Bertramus. Aſſelin tells us, That it was a little Book, wherein he endeavoured to prove, that what is conſecrated upon the Altar, is not really the Body and Blood of Chriſt; for a Proof whereof, he alledged ſeveral places of Scripture, which he explained contrary to the true meaning of them, and quoted, amongſt other things, St. Gregory's Prayer in theſe words, Perficiant in nobis tua, Domine, Sacramenta, &c. to which he added next, Species geruntur iſta, non Veritate. All which agrees with Bertramus's ſmall Book, wherein the Author ſeems to deſign to diſprove the Reality of Chriſt's Body in the Euchariſt. In order to which he alledges ſeveral Paſſages taken out of the Fathers, and, amongſt others, that very Prayer of St. Gregory, with this

Of the Controverſie upon the Euchariſt.

Gloſs, Dicit quod in Specie geruntur iſta, non Veritate. Berengarius, ſpeaking of Scotus's Book, tells us, That it was written by the Order of Carolus Magnus; and Bertramus's Book is thus dedicated, Ad Carolum Magnum. 'Tis own'd, that Charles the Great is the ſame with Charles the Bald: But, ſince the Title of Great was not commonly given to this laſt, 'tis unlikely (ſome think) that two Authors ſhould have dedicated it to him: So that Bertramus's Book muſt be the ſame mention'd by Berengarius. 2. 'Tis alledged, That the Book of Johannes Scotus, and that of Bertramus never appear'd together; and that the Authors who quoted the one, never quoted the other. 3. 'Tis affirm'd, that the Style, Genius, and Character of Bertramus's Book, are the ſame with that of Scotus; that there is the ſame Spirit of Confuſion and Contradiction which appears in his other Works, and the ſame Diſagreement from the Doctrines generally received in the Church. The Arguments are in due form. The Concluſion of Bertramus's Book is very like unto the Preface of Scotus's Book of Predeſtination; and the Concluſion of his Fifth Book of the Diviſion of Nature. Theſe are the Conjectures of Learned Authors, which indeed ſeem very ſtrong, and might have made their Opinion very probable, had not the Learned Father Mabillon brought poſitive Proofs to the contrary, ſuch as are not grounded upon meer Conjectures, but upon Matter of fact: Who, in the firſt place, inſiſts upon the authority of a Manuſcript of the Abby of Lobbes, written above 800 years ſince; wherein is found the Book of the Body and Blood of our Saviour; and, next to that the two Books of Ratramnus, touching Predeſtination. One bearing this Title, Incipit Liber Ratramni de Corpore & Sanguine Domini; Juſſiſti, glorioſe Princeps. The other this, Incipit Liber de Prædeſtinatione Dei, Domino glorioſo atque præcellentiſſimo Regi Carolo, Ratramnus: Which Inſcriptions are confirmed by an Ancient Catalogue of Books of that Library made in 1049, with theſe words in it, Ratramni de Corpore & Sanguine Domini Liber I. Ejuſdem de Prædeſtinatione Dei ad eundem Libri II. It is an unqueſtionable Evidence, that the Book bearing the name of Bertramus is really his; that this Manuſcript which is of the ſame Century, bears his name in the Title, and his Books of Predeſtination are joyned unto that of the Body and Blood of our Saviour, which proves it to come from the ſame Author. The ſame Father does aſſure us beſides in his Travels into Germany, that he ſaw another Manuſcript of above 700 years ſtanding, with the very ſame Superſcriptions.

Secondly, 'Tis worth our Obſervation, that the Anonymous Author of Father Cellot doth attribute to Ratramnus Abbot of Corbey, and to the Author of the two Books concerning Predeſtination, That of the Body and Blood of our Saviour, under the name of Bertramus. And, if that Anonymous Author was Contemporary, his Teſtimony in this Caſe muſt needs be deciſive. Now that Author was Erigerus, Abbot of Lobbes, who ſucceeded Fulcuin in that Dignity, Anno 890, and died in 907, as Father Mabillon proves by an Ancient Manuſcript; wherein the Anonymous Book, publiſhed by Father Cellot, bears the name of Erigerus. And it appears beſides by the Chronicle of Lobbes, that that Abbot had written upon that Subject. This is obſervable moreover, that the ſaid Author, ſpeaking of Ratramnus's Book concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour, ſays, That it was divided into a hundred Chapters, the ſame Diviſion that is found in the foreſaid Ancient Manuſcript of Lobbes: Which makes it a ſtrong Preſumption, that it was the very ſame Manuſcript which Erigerus had.

Thirdly, In two Ancient Manuſcripts of Sigebert, inſtead of Bertramus, we read Ratramus, or Ratramnus. In Trithemius he is called Betramnus, or Ratramnus: Which names do not differ much from that of Ratramnus, afterwards ſmoothed into Bertramus. But that which is the moſt deciſive in this caſe, is, what thoſe Authors do ſay, viz. That the Author of the Book touching the Body and Blood of our Saviour, did alſo write a Book concerning Predeſtination, dedicated to Charles the Bald. Scripſit, ſays Sigebert, Librum de Corpore & Sanguine Domini, & ad Carolum Librum de Prædeſtinatione. Trithemius makes him Author of ſeveral Works, of all which he found (as he ſays) but one Book De Corpore & Sanguine Domini; and another, Ad Carolum de Prædeſtinatione. Now the Book of Predeſtination, written by Johannes Scotus, was not dedicated to Charles, but to Hincmarus and Pardalus; whereas Ratramnus's Book was dedicated to that Emperor. We muſt therefore conclude Ratramnus to be the Author of the Book concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour.

Theſe poſitive Proofs are ſufficient to deſtroy all oppoſite Conjectures, which, how plauſible ſoever they may appear, are not altogether ſolid. For why might not both Ratramnus and Scotus write a Book upon the Euchariſt, as they did upon Predeſtination; And what ſhould hinder both their Works to be much of the ſame length? They might be each of them conſulted by the Emperor Charles the Bald about the Euchariſt, as they were about Predeſtination. Why could they not both be of the ſame Opinion, as Ratramnus and Gotteſchalcus chanced to be of the ſame Judgment about this Expreſſion Trina Deitas? 'Tis not to be wondered at, that both of 'em ſhould have made Collections of Paſſages out of the Fathers, ſeeing it was the common Practice in their Time, and the uſual way of thoſe two Authors. Why is it urged, that they have not both alledged St. Gregory's Prayer, Perficiant tua, Domine, &c. being it was a common Teſtimony? The Gloſs of Ratramnus, upon that Prayer, differs from that of Scotus, who, according to Aſſelin, had written, Specie geruntur iſta, non Veritate. Ratramnus does not ſay ſo; but explaining the words of the Prayer, Dicit (ſays he) quod in Specie geruntur iſta, non Veritate, id eſt per Similitudinem, non per ipſius rei Manifeſtationem: Which words, Specie geruntur iſta, non Veritate, were the Comment Scotus made upon it; whereas here the Words of the Prayer are explained by the next Words, not in the leaſt diſagreeable to the Catholick Faith. As to the Dedication, Why might it not happen that two Authors ſhould be of the ſame Mind, in giving the Title of Great to Charles the Bald? Beſides, that in the Manuſcript of Ratramnus's Book in the Abby of Lobbes, there is no ſuch thing to be found as Præfatio ad Carolum Magnum Imperatorem. And, when this Book was compoſed, Charles was not yet Emperor: So that the Title muſt needs be added afterwards. But there are other Inſtances of this Epithet of Great, given to Charles the Bald. The ſecond Reaſon grounded upon a Pretence, That they who were acquainted with Scotus's Book, knew nothing of Bertramus's, is confuted by what has been already alledg'd, that in the Ninth and Tenth Centuries Ratramnus's Book was tranſcribed under his name, and quoted by Erigerus, that of Scotus by Aldrevadus. In the Eleventh, the Book of Ratramnus was tranſcribed by Sigebert, and Scotus's Book by thoſe who writ againſt Berengarius. To conclude, the laſt Reaſon is a groundleſs Error. So far is it from being true, that Bertramus's Book is of the ſame Style and Character with thoſe of Scotus, that on the contrary it is moſt uniform both in Style and other Circumſtances with Ratramnus's other Works, whereof any Reader may be a competent Judge. Thus much as to what concerns the Author of the Book, that bears the name of Bertramus. Let us now proceed to the Subject Matter of it.

Of the Controverſie upon the Euchariſt.

The Queſtion, upon which Charles the Bald asked his Opinion, is thus ſtated by him. While (ſays he) amongſt the Faithful, ſome ſay there is no Veil or Figure in the Myſtery of the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, which is daily celebrated in the Church, but that it is done by a plain Manifeſtation of naked Verity, and others on the contrary maintain, that the Body and Blood of our Saviour are contained therein under the Figure of the Myſtery, and that what appears to our bodily Senſes differs from what our Faith perceives in it; the Church is divided by theſe different Opinions, and a way made to a kind of Schiſm. So that here is the true State of the Queſtion, Whether or no there is any Figure in the Euchariſt, if it be without any Veil, and whether the Body it ſelf and Blood of our Saviour be perceived by our outward Senſes. Your Majeſty, ſays he, deſires to be ſatisfy'd, whether the Body and Blood of Chriſt be made in a Myſtery or in Truth; that is to ſay, whether it is ſo made, as that there is ſomething ſecret and hidden, not to be perceived but by the eyes of Faith; or whether our outward eyes do outwardly perceive what the inward ſight does perceive inwardly in it, without any Veil of the Myſtery, in ſuch a manner, that the whole of it does manifeſtly and openly appear. Thoſe are the words of the firſt Queſtion. So that the Queſtion is not, Whether the Body and Blood of Chriſt be in the Euchariſt, that being taken for granted; but whether they be there without Veil, ſo as to appear to our outward Eyes. For 'tis in this Senſe the Author takes the Word Verity, and oppoſes it to Figure. 'Tis a naked Verity, without Veil or Myſtery, ſuch as is perceived by our outward Senſes, and doth exclude all manner of Figure.

The Opinion of the Author of the Book that bears Bertramus's Name.

The other Queſtion propoſed to Ratramnus, is Whether that very ſame Body we receive be that which was born of the Virgin Mary, which ſuffer'd, and was put to Death, which was buried, and roſe again from the Dead, then aſcended into Heaven, and now ſits on the Right Hand of the Father Everlaſting: That is to ſay, Whether his Body be in the ſame manner in the Euchariſt, as it was and is in thoſe Places, and whether it be there in as viſible and palpable a manner. For, to prove that it is not ſo, he ſays, That the Body of our Saviour, in its natural ſtate, is under the form of a humane Body, with Bones and Sinews, and all the Lineaments of a Man's Limbs; Whereas in the Euchariſt 'tis under another Form, not ſupported by Bones and Sinews, nor with that Diſtinction of Limbs, in ſuch a ſtate as makes it incapable of proper Motions, or to give any ſign of Life.

To thoſe two Queſtions Ratramnus anſwers diſtinctly, in the two Parts of his Book. But, that his Opinion of the State of the Queſtion may be the better underſtood, he gives firſt the Definitions of what he calls a Figure and a Verity.

Of the Controversie upon the Eucharist.

Verity. A Figure, says he, is when there is some Obscurity, and that under some certain Veils another Thing is exhibited. A Verity, on the contrary, is a manifest Demonstration of the Thing, without the Covering of any Image or Figure. This being granted, he maintains, That if the Mystery of the Body and Blood of our Saviour were made without any Figure, it could not properly be called a Mystery, because that cannot be called a Mystery, wherein there is nothing hidden; nothing but what is perceived by our outward Senses; nothing cover'd with any Veil. That that Bread which is made the Body of Christ, by the Ministry of the Priest, shews outwardly one Thing to the Senses, and, at the same Time, insinuates into the Minds of the Faithful, that there is another Thing inwardly. Outwardly it appears to be Bread, as it was before; we perceive its Form, the Colour, and Taste; but we believe, that inwardly it is something much more precious and excellent, because it is a divine and heavenly Thing, that is to say, the Body of our Saviour which is exhibited therein, which does not fall under our outward Senses, but is by the Eyes of our Souls seen, received and eaten. The same he says of the Wine, and our Saviour's Blood; and concludes, that the Bread and Wine are, by a Figure, the Body of Christ; that is to say, That we do not see any Flesh and Blood, but Bread and Wine, though after the Mystical Consecration it is no more called Bread and Wine, but the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ. To which he adds, that, If there were no Figure, as some maintain'd, and that the whole Truth might be plainly seen, there would be no Room for Faith, and then 'twould be no Mystery, because it hath nothing in it that is secret.

Next he shews, That the Change which is made in the Eucharist is not made visibly, and to our outward Senses. 'For, says he, 'tis not a Change of a Thing that was not, into one that is; Seeing the Bread and Wine were, before they 'were changed into the Body and Blood of our Saviour. 'Nor is it a Change of a Thing that is, into one that is 'not, seeing the Form of the Bread and Wine appears the 'same to our Eyes. Nor lastly, the Change of one Thing 'into another by a Change of Qualities, the Qualities of the 'Bread and Wine remaining still the same. Whence he concludes, That those who believe no Figure in the Eucharist 'cannot explain that Change, and must own that there is 'nothing in it, which was not before. Nevertheless, says he, 'tis something else, for the Bread and Wine are made the 'Body and Blood of our Saviour. And here he charges his 'Adversaries home, asserting, they must either own, that 'the Change which is made in the Eucharist is not an out-'ward Change; or, deny, That it is the Body and Blood 'of our Saviour, Quod nefas est non solùm dicere, sed etiam cogitare, the very Thought of which is criminal. But they 'granting, says he, That the Body and Blood of Christ are 'in the Sacrament, which cannot be without a Change for 'the better, and that Change cannot be made corporally, 'into that which falls under our outward Senses, but spi-'ritually; it necessarily follows, that it must be made in a 'Figure, because under the Veil of the Corporeal Bread 'and Wine, the Spiritual Body and Blood of our Saviour 'are really present, and do conjunctly exist. But we must 'not therefore imagine, that they be two Existences of two 'different Things, viz. Body and Spirit. For, on the con-'trary, 'tis but one and the same Thing, which, in one 'Respect, is the Species of the Bread and Wine; and, in 'another Respect, is the Body and Blood of our Saviour. 'Now this Bread and Wine, as they fall under our out-'ward Senses, are Species of Corporal Creatures. But, if 'consider'd in Relation to the Power which has raised them 'into a Kind of Spiritual Being, they are the Mysteries of 'the Body and Blood of our Saviour. By their outward 'Superficies falling under our Senses, they are Creatures 'subject to Change and Corruption; but, if we look upon 'em with Relation to the Strength, and Effect of the My-'stery, they confer Life and Immortality on those who re-'ceive them.

This he explains by the Simile's of Baptism and the Manna, which indeed are not altogether parallel, but such as may be, in some Sense, apply'd to it. For, as in Baptism, there is an outward Sign that falls under our Senses, and an inward Grace apprehended by Faith, so there are in the Eucharist the Species of Bread and Wine that fall under our Senses, and the invisible Body of our Saviour. And as the inward Grace and Vertue of Baptism for the healing of our Souls is also real and true, so the Body of our Saviour Christ is really and truly present under the Species. As to the Manna, this Author seems to be singular in his Opinion about its Conversion into the Body and Blood of our Saviour, which he affirms in very ardent Terms; but he was forced to do it, the better to adapt his Simile to the Subject in hand; which is a further Proof that he owned a real Change in the Eucharist. Next to that he quotes that Place of Scripture out of St. John's Gospel, Chap. 6. If you do not eat the Flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his Blood. Upon which he makes this Observation, That our Saviour does not say, That, to eat his Flesh, it must be cut in Pieces, such as it was crucified, or that his Blood must be drunk in the same Manner as it was shed upon the Cross; but that the Faithful shall truly receive by this Mystery the Bread and Wine converted into the Substance of the Body and Blood of Christ. Thus is clearly explained the Reality of the Body of Christ, and the Change of the Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of our Saviour. Afterwards he quotes several Passages out of St. Austine and St. Isidorus, upon which he observes, 'That the Bread and Wine are changed into 'the Body and Blood of Christ, not in a visible, but in an 'invisible Manner, by the Operation of the Holy Ghost; 'and that they are therefore called the Body and Blood of 'Christ, because they are not look'd upon by their outward 'Appearance, but as they are made by the Divine Spirit; 'and that by an invisible Power they become quite another 'Thing than they appear to our Eyes. That Part of 'the Eucharist, which is outward and visible, feeds our 'Bodies, whilst the inward and invisible feeds and gives 'Life to our Souls.

Lastly, He concludes this first Part in these Words; 'By 'what hath been said hitherto it plainly appears, That the 'Body and Blood of our Saviour received in the Church 'by the Mouth of the Faithful, are Figures, if consider'd 'by the visible and outward Form of the Bread and Wine: 'But, if consider'd by their Substance, hidden to our Eyes, 'that is, by the Power of the Divine Word, they are in-'deed the Body and Blood of Christ. Therefore, according 'to the visible Creature, they are a Food for our Bodies; 'but, by the Power of a mightier Substance, they nourish 'and sanctifie the Souls of the Faithful.

After this, he comes to the second Question, which he expresses in these Words; Whether the same Body which was born of the Virgin Mary, which suffered, and was buried, and sits on the Right-hand of the Eternal Father, be the same which the Faithful daily receive in the Church by the Mystery of the Sacrament. The first Author he quotes upon this Question is St. Ambrose, a Passage out of whose first Book, De Sacramentis, he sets down; and out of it he draws this Conclusion; That what we receive corporally, that is, what we touch with our Teeth, swallow down, and goes into the Belly, is not the Thing that feeds our Souls; but that it is the living Bread, the Body of Christ, which is perceptible only to our Faith: Which shews, that this Question agrees to the former, and that it does not lie in this, to know, Whether the Body and Blood of our Saviour be received in the Eucharist; but how it is received, and in what Manner it is there, whether without any Figure or Veil, and whether it be that very Thing we feel, or break, &c. And here he repeats his Argument drawn from the Change, which must be inward and invisible, seeing it is not outward and apparent. Thus continuing to alledge Passages out of St. Ambrose, he starts this Objection; Those, says he, who are not of my Opinion, do object and say, That what we see is the very Body of our Saviour; and that which we drink is his Blood; and that we ought not to enquire how it comes to pass, but that 'tis our Duty to believe it to be so. To which he makes this Answer, That this Opinion is reasonable, and that we ought firmly to believe, that it is the Body and Blood of Christ; but that therefore we believe it, because we do not see it; for, could we see it, we should not say I believe, but I see it; that it is not the Eye of the Body but Faith that perceives it; and that what is seen is not in Specie, but in Operation and Effect, the Body and Blood of Christ; that is to say, That the Body of Christ does not appear in it under a Humane Shape. Therefore, adds he, St. Ambrose says, That we ought not to mind the Course of Nature, but the Power of Christ, who changes what seemeth good unto him, and in what Manner he pleases, who created those Things which were not, and changes what he has created into what it was not before. To be vertually the Body of Christ, according to our Author, is to be so really, but not visibly, because under another Form or Appearance. For, as he says afterwards, 'tis Bread in Specie; but, in the Sacrament, the real Body of Christ: In Specie Panis est, in Sacramento verum Christi Corpus. 'Tis the Body and Blood of Christ, but not in a corporal Manner. Corpus Christi, sed non corporaliter; Sanguis Christi, sed non corporaliter.

The Difference he makes betwixt the Body of Christ in which he suffered, and that in the Eucharist is, 'That the 'first was had under no Form, but its own. It was what 'it appeared to be to the Eyes and to the Feeling; what 'the Jews saw upon the Cross, and afterwards in the Grave. 'His Blood, in the like Manner, was visible, not co-'ver'd with any Veil. Whereas his Blood which the Faith-'ful drink, and his Body which they eat, are quite another 'Kind of Thing, both in the Sign and the Thing signify'd. 'The corporal Flesh that was born of the Virgin, and cru-'cify'd, consisted of Bones and Sinews, had Limbs and 'Parts distinct from each other; shewed Signs of Life, and 'had proper Motions. But the Spiritual Flesh wherewith 'the Faithful are fed spiritually, according to the outward 'Form, consists of Grains of Wheat, and is made by a 'Baker's Hands, no Part of it distinct from another. It does 'not appear living, nor animated, is not endued with any 'proper and natural Motion, and its Vertue of conferring 'Life is the Effect of a Spiritual Power, of the invisible

Of the Controversie upon the Eucharist.

'and efficacious Power of God. What it appears outwardly 'to be is quite another Thing from what it is thought to 'be inwardly.' To which he adds, That the Bread of the Eucharist is not only a Figure of our Saviour's Body, but observes by the Bye, that it is also a Figure of the Body of the Faithful, and that the Water mingled with the Wine does likewise represent it in a Spiritual Manner. In fine, to demonstrate it further, that the Species of Bread and Wine are not the Body of our Saviour, he says, That his Body in Heaven is incorruptible, eternal, indivisible; but that the Sacrament is corruptible, and divisible, in its outward and sensible Parts, though incorruptible in that Part of it which is perceptible to Faith. From whence he draws this Conclusion, Therefore what appears outwardly is not the Thing it self, but the Image of it, and what the Soul perceives and apprehends in it is the Truth of the Thing.

All which he proves by several Passages of St. Austine, by the Prayers of the Mass, and other Passages, from which he does still infer, That the Body of Christ in the Eucharist differs from that which was born of the Virgin, that suffered, and rose again from the Dead, yet not in Substance, but in Appearance. Lastly, directing his Speech to the Emperor, he declares, That he has clearly proved by Places of Scripture, and by the Fathers Writings, that the Bread and Wine which are called the Body and Blood of our Saviour are a Figure, because a Mystery; also, that there's a Difference betwixt the Body of Christ in that Mystery, and that which suffer'd Death and was buried. That here it is invisible, not being perceiv'd but by Faith; whereas being unveil'd upon the Cross, it was known, and fully discover'd by the outward Senses. That the Mystery of the Eucharist is likewise a Figure of the Elect People of God. And lastly, that the Bread and Wine called, and being in Effect the Body and Blood of our Saviour, do represent our Lord's Death and Passion. That from some Expressions of his one ought not to infer, That the Faithful do not receive the Body and Blood of Christ in the Mystery of the Sacrament, because Faith does not receive what the Eye perceives, but what is believed by Faith, and that it is a Spiritual Meat and Drink which feeds our Souls in a Spiritual Manner, and yields unto them a Spiritual Life, according to our Saviour's saying, 'Tis the Spirit that quickens, the Flesh profiteth nothing.

Joannes Scotus, as well as Ratramnus, was likewise consulted upon the same Question by Charles the Bald, and writ a Book on the same Subject; in which he argued against the same Expressions opposed by Ratramnus. But 'tis apparent he went farther than he, delivering such Things as were contrary to the Doctrine of the Church upon the real Presence: Which Hincmarus charges him with in the 31*st*. Chapter of his Treatise of Predestination; wherein speaking of him and Prudentius, he says, That they set on Foot new Tenents, contrary to the Faith of the Church; and amongst others, That the Sacraments of the Altar are not the real Body and Blood of our Saviour, but only a Commemoration of his Body and Blood. But this cannot be justly attributed to Prudentius, who never was look'd upon to be guilty of any Error in this Point; but only to Scotus, whose Book was afterwards quoted by Berengarius, and condemned by the Orthodox. Hincmarus wrote this in 859. which shews, that the Consultation of Charles about the Eucharist happened before that Year, and serves to fix the Epocha of Ratramnus and Scotus's Book upon this Subject.

Expressions of other Authors of this Age upon the Eucharist.

Amongst the Authors of the same Century that have but cursorily treated of this Matter, Amalarius, Florus, and Druthmarus speak of it like Ratramnus. But Haimo Bishop of Halberstadt, and Remigius Monks of Auxerre follow Paschasius's way of speaking, and even go beyond his Bounds, denying, after St. John Damascene, that the Eucharist may be called a Figure of the Body and Blood of our Saviour.

About the latter End of this Century, Erigerus Abbot of Lobbes wrote against the same Proposition which Ratramnus had attempted to overthrow; but still maintaining the real Presence in the Eucharist. Sigebert and the Author who continued the Chronicle of Lobbes, speaking of him, observe, That he had collected many Passages out of the Orthodox Fathers against Paschasius Radbertus, touching the Body and Blood of our Saviour. Yet 'tis certain, that Erigerus is so far from contending directly with Paschasius, that he doth in Effect excuse him, and defend his Cause by the Authority of several Fathers, declaring, That he only failed in this, that he did not quote Word for Word the Passage of St. Ambrose, but gave the Sense only. He charges him not with Error, but with Simplicity; and observes, that he did not deny but that there was a Figure in the Eucharist. It appears however, that he favours the Opinion of Ratramnus and Rabanus, and that he does not approve of Paschasius's Expression, viz. That it is the same Flesh which was born of the Virgin that is in the Eucharist, being persuaded, that though it is the same, yet it ought to be consider'd as different, because 'tis in a different State. And for this Reason it is that he makes a Collection of Passages out of the Fathers against Paschasius, wherein Mention is made of two or three Bodies of Christ, by reason of the different States of his Body. The same Expressions are moreover to be found in the Sermons of Alfricus Archbishop of Canterbury, who seems to have copied Ratramnus.

Of the Controversie upon the Eucharist.

This Way of explaining the Mystery of the Eucharist was so far from being condemn'd in the Time of Berengarius, even by his Adversaries, that Lanfrank makes use of it in the Dialogue he made against him. Wherein he owns, that one may say of Christ's Body in the Eucharist, that it is the same which was born of the Virgin, and yet not the same; that it is the same, as to the Substance, Property, and Vertue of its true Nature; and not the same, if we consider the Species of Bread and Wine. After the same Manner Algerus does reconcile the Fathers, who seem to differ in their Opinions on this Matter. The Holy Fathers, says he, have observed this Duplicity, not of Substance, but of Form, when speaking of the Body of our Lord in the Eucharist, they say, that it was the same which was born of the Virgin, and in some Sense not the same; the same in Substance, and not the same in Form. Fulbertus Bishop of Chartres makes the same Distinction in his Epistle to Einardus.

But we ought to observe, that Paschasius's Mode of Expression was not new, as his Adversaries affirmed. Witness * many of the Ancient Fathers, who speak in the same Manner: As amongst the Greeks, St. Ignatius, Athanasius, Chrysostome, Cyril of Jerusalem, Cyril of Alexandria, the Fathers of the Council of Ephesus, Anastasius Sinaita, St. Gregory of Nice, St. John Damascene; and amongst the Latins, St. Hilary, St. Ambrose, and St. Austine himself in his Discourse to the Neophites; besides many others, who deliver Propositions equivalent to that of Paschasius. So that Paschasius cannot justly be charged with Innovation, either in the Thing it self, or the Way of expressing it. And his Adversaries seem to have fall'n upon him undeservedly, the more because he rejected the Conclusions they drew from his Expression, and owned that the Eucharist was both Figure and Reality, and that it contained the Body of Christ under the Veil and Species of the Bread and Wine.

[* Many of the Ancient Fathers speak as Paschasius.] It is confessed, that many of the Ancients did use many Hyperbolical Expressions about the Sacrament, much like Paschasius's, but it was to stir up Reverence to their Holy Mysteries, and convince Men that the Elements were not mere Bread and Wine, not dogmatically to assert a Carnal Presence; for in their Doctrinal Discourses about it, they speak only of a Spiritual and Figurative Presence.]

The Question of Stercoraniism.

Another famous Question about the Eucharist was started in this Age, viz. Whether any Part of the Eucharist be evacuated, as our other Food? They who stood for the Affirmative being called by the odious Name of Stercoranists. To understand clearly the State of this Question, we must remember the Eucharist consists of two Things, one inward and hidden, the other outward and sensible. The first is the Body and Blood of our Saviour, which are present in the Sacrament after an invisible Manner; and the other consists of the Species of Bread and Wine, which appear to our outward Senses. None ever did believe that the invisible Body and Blood of Christ were subject to the same Conditions with our other Nourishment, or produced the same Effects. But because the Species of Bread and Wine under which 'tis contained feed our Bodies, we say without any Scruple, that the Body and Blood of Christ are converted into our Substance, and feed our Body. This Expression was ever used in the Church. And some Fathers have proved the Resurrection of our Bodies, Because it is not to be thought, says St. Irenæus, that our Flesh being fed with the Body and Blood of our Saviour, should remain for ever in a State of Corruption.

But if the Body of Christ has a nourishing Property, 'tis not the Body it self by its own proper Substance; but it is by the outward Signs, the Bread and Wine, which nourish us by the Matter which God hath made as it were a Vehicle to us of the Body and Blood of Christ which in our Faith and Minds took up before the Place of the material Bread and Wine. But notwithstanding that the Church has made no Scruple to say, that the Body and Blood of our Saviour are converted into our Substance, and nourish us by the Species of Bread and Wine, it was ever thought indecent even to think, much more to assert, that it was liable to the same Evacuation as our common Food, and that any Part of it should go into the Draught. The first that seems to have took Notice of this Question is Origen, whose Decision of it is in these Words, that this Food consecrated by Prayers and the Word of God, goes down into the Belly, and so into the Draught, as to the Matter it does consist of, meaning the Species of Bread and Wine, not as to what it is made by Prayer. The Author of the Sermon of the Eucharist, which is in the fifth Volume of the Greek and Latin Works of St. Chrysostome, seems to differ in his Opinion. Is that Bread, says he, which you see with your outward Eyes? Is that Wine? Has that Food the same Fate as other Sorts of Food? God forbid, and let none of you have such Thoughts of it. This Author seems to affirm, That the Body of our Lord is the very Species that we see; and does formally deny deny it to be liable to the same Condition with our common Food. St. John Damascene embraces this Opinion in the 14*th*. Chapter of the 4*th*. Book of the Orthodox Faith; adding however, that the outward Species of the Eucharist is converted into our Substance. Paschasius is of the same Opinion, and says 'tis a Weakness to think that any Part of this Mystery is under the Laws with other Food. Frivolum est ergo, says he Chap. 20. sicut in Apocrypho Libro legitur, in hoc Mysterio cogitare de Stercore, ne commisceatur in alterius cibi digestione. And he asserts, That all passes into our Flesh and Substance, without any Evacuation. Ratramnus indeed does own, that the Spiritual Body of our Saviour is not under the same Condition with other Food, and will not so much as have it said that it feeds our Bodies, seeing it is Food for our Souls. But he affirms, according to his Principles, That the visible and outward Species are under the same Laws with all other Food. This is all that is said by those Authors upon that Question.

Amalarius's Opinion upon the Question of Stercoranism.

But Amalarius treats of it on purpose in his Letter to Gontardus a Monk, who took Exception at his spitting presently after his receiving the Eucharist, supposing he might then spit out some Part of our Saviour's Body, the Fear of which kept other Priests from spitting at such a Time. To which Amalarius answers, That being a phlegmatick Man, he could not long forbear spitting, and that he hoped, that for his Infirmity sake God will not deprive him of the Body of Christ his Saviour as the Nourishment of his Soul, if it be but pure and humble before him, and that what he must needs eject for the Health of his Body, will be no Prejudice to his Soul. These are his Words, Et quod exeundum est propter Sanitatem Corporis, faciat exire sine dispendio Animæ. To justifie himself more at large, he thoroughly handles the Question, and makes this Observation, That the Body of Christ is upon Earth as often as he pleases; that nothing but an ill Disposition of the Mind can make the Body incapable of receiving it; so that tho' any Part of Christ's Body should come out of his Mouth, unknown to him, one ought not therefore to think him irreligious, or that he despised the Body of our Saviour, nor think that his Body went to any Place where God would not have it; that our Saviour's Body quickens our Souls; or rather, is the Life of our Souls; and therefore we do not take its Life away, tho' we part with it. To conclude, he says, 'Tis needless to enquire, 'whether our Saviour's Body, after it is received with an 'upright Intention, be invisibly raised up into Heaven, or 'kept in our Body till its Burial; whether it be exhaled in-'to the Air, or issues out of the Body with the Blood, or 'through the Pores, the Lord saying, that whatever comes 'into the Mouth goes down into the Belly, and from thence 'into the Draught; but the chief Thing that we ought to 'mind is, that we do not receive it Judas-like, with a 'treacherous Heart, that we do not slight it, but distinguish 'it (as we ought) from common Food.' Thus Amalarius propounds the Question, without deciding it, and does not declare his Opinion in the Matter.

Rabanus's Opinion about the Question of Stercoranism.

Heribaldus Bishop of Auxerre having propounded the same Question to Rabanus Archbishop of Mentz, the Archbishop returned him this Answer; 'As to your Question concer-'ning the Eucharist, Whether being consumed and voided 'out of the Body as other Sorts of Food are, it re-assumes 'the Nature it had before its Consecration upon the Altar? 'This Question, says he, seems to me superfluous, because 'our Saviour himself says in the Gospel, That whatever 'comes into the Mouth goes down into the Belly, and 'from thence into the Draught. The Sacrament of the 'Body and Blood of our Saviour is made of Things visible 'and corporeal; but it works Sanctification and the invi-'sible Salvation both of the Body and Soul. There is no 'Ground to think, that what is digested in the Stomach 'should return into its former State, a Thing avouched by 'no Man as yet.' Here Rabanus supposes, that the Species of Bread and Wine in the Eucharist, are under the same Laws and Contingencies with our common Food, and that they do not re-assume their proper Nature which they had before the Consecration. For it is plain, that he does not speak of our Saviour's Body, but of the outward Species of Bread and Wine.

The Sentiment of a nameless Author upon the Question of Stercoranism.

Some Authors that were more scrupulous, fancied this Opinion unsuitable to the Dignity of the Mystery, and that it was more decent to think, either that the Species are annihilated, or that they have a perpetual Being, or else are changed into Flesh and Blood, and not into Humours or Excrements to be voided. 'Tis the Opinion of an Anonymous Author, quoted by Erigerus under the Character of a certain learned Man, whose Work is inserted in the second Volume of Dacherius's Spicilegium. 'This Author di-'stinguishes two Things in the Eucharist, viz. the invisible 'Body of our Saviour, which is Spiritual Food to the Soul; 'and the outward Food, which nourishes the Body: And 'telling us what becomes of this, he opposes two contrary 'Places of Scripture; one of our Saviour, teaching us, that 'whatever goes into the Mouth goes down into the Belly, 'and thence into the Draught; and the other of the Apostle, 'that makes a great Difference betwixt the Eucharist and 'other Sorts of Food. The first Place makes no Exception 'at all of the Sacrament; but the second teaches us to di-'stinguish it from our usual Food. That indeed it is eaten 'and swallowed down in the same Manner as our usual 'Food, putting it in our Mouths, and conveying it down 'into the Belly; but when 'tis come thither, none but the 'Lord knows how he disposes of it. For we know, says 'he, that it may be consumed by a Spiritual Power, that 'it may be kept for ever from Corruption, because God 'may do what he pleases with his Sacrament. But God for-'bid it should be subject to be conveyed into the Draught, 'or capable of being digested, corrupted or consumed by 'Heat, or altered by any other Cause, &c.

Erigerus's Opinion upon the Question of Stercoranism.

Erigerus makes a more strong Opposition against the Opinion of Rabanus, and says, 'twas a scandalous Thing for Heribaldus to propose such a Question to him, but more scandalous for Rabanus to have minded it, and most scandalous to have solved it as he has done. He declares himself against him, affirming that the Symbols of Bread and Wine are not voided out of our Bodies, nor changed into useless Humours or Excrements, but into our Flesh and Blood, to be raised again from the Dead.

Guitmondus and Algerus their Opinions upon the Question of Stercoranism.

Guitmondus was of the same Opinion with Erigerus; affirming, That, though a Man may be nourished by the Species of the Eucharist, yet no Part of it is turned into Excrements. That they are never putrify'd, corrupted, nor any Way alter'd, whatever they seem to be, either to try the Faith of the Elect, or to punish the Neglect of those who keep 'em too long. That no Vermin can gnaw 'em, no Beast eat 'em; and, if such a Thing happen, the Sacrament is, by Miracle, convey'd to some other Place. Now, to obviate this Objection, That if a Priest should consecrate one great Loaf, or several Loaves, a Man might live upon it, and shall void his Excrements in the usual Manner, he declares, that in this Case the Sacrament is also miraculously convey'd away, and an unconsecrated Loaf substituted in the Room of it by the Angels, or by the Evil Spirits, to cheat the Hereticks. Algerus speaks much to the same Purpose, and holds, That the Species do not come out of our Bodies by Excrements, but are annihilated. He utterly denies, that Excrements can arise from the Species eaten, and will not allow them to be corrupted or putrify'd, burnt, or alter'd in the least, though they seem so to be. Lastly, He taxes the Greeks with an erroneous Belief, That the Eucharist is liable to the same Laws and Contingencies with other Sorts of Food, because they say, That the Fast ordained by the Church is broken by the Communion; and calls 'em therefore by the infamous Name of Stercoranists: Which Accusation he got from Cardinal Humbertus, who lays the same Thing to the Charge of Nicetas Pectoratus. But he fathers upon him that Opinion, as a Consequence of his Assertion, that the Fast was broken by the Eucharist, and not as a Doctrine formally asserted by him. The Truth is, there is nothing of that in the Writings of Nicetas, who blaming the Latins for celebrating the Mass in Lent upon other Days than Saturday and Sunday, says, Their Practice is not well-timed, because celebrating the Mass at the third Hour, which is the Time appointed to offer this Sacrifice, they cannot keep the Fast till the ninth Hour. Afterwards he quotes some Canons, to prove the Unreasonableness of this Custom, and justifie the Practice of the Greeks, who offer this Sacrifice on Saturdays and Sundays only at the third Hour, and communicate on other Days at the ninth Hour, upon the prefanctify'd Elements. So that Nicetas does not say positively, That the Fast is broken by the Eucharist; and, though he should say so, it would not follow, that he believ'd it subject to the same Laws and Contingencies as our usual Food, for that one might believe, that to ease one from the trouble of Fasting, and feed the Body in any Manner of Way, is ipso Facto to break the Fast; which is not the Thing insisted on by Nicetas, or the Greeks: Who believed, the Celebration of the Sacrifice broke the Fast, for that it is an Action full of Joy and Solemnity. This is the Reason given for it by Balsamon, upon the fourth Canon of the Council of Laodicea. 'To offer, says he, 'the Sacrifice, is to celebrate a Feast, and express the so-'lemn Joy of the Church; and to do this, is not to weep 'or fast.' Besides, Nicetas does suppose, that presently after the Celebration of the Mass it is lawful to eat; and consequently that the Latins having finished in the Morning that Celebration of the Mass, broke the Fast presently after. In which Particular he errs; for the Latins did not celebrate Mass in Lent at the third Hour, but in the Evening, and so broke their Fast but late. However, neither Nicetas nor the Greeks did ever say, That the Body and Blood of Christ were under the same Laws as common Food; nay, 'tis probable, they did not believe, that the Species of Bread and Wine went into the Draught, their great Doctor St. John Damascene having taught the contrary. As for Algerus, he accused them of Stercoranism, only upon the Credit of Humbertus, whose Words he does but transcribe. And Humbertus charges Nicetas with it by a Consequence that has failed, and which does not necessarily follow. It does not appear, that there has been, since that Time, any farther Contest with them upon this Point; and amongst the Errors which the Latins after-afterwards condemned in Michael Cerularius, there is no Mention made of this, therefore this Error can by no Means be proved upon the Greeks.

Of the Controversie upon the Eucharist.

Now, to come back to the Latins, we have sufficiently proved, that there was no Difference amongst them about the Flesh and Blood of our Saviour contained under the Species, that none was so much infatuated as to think, that that Mystical Flesh and Blood were subject to the same Laws and Contingencies with our usual Food; but that they had debated amongst them this Scholastical Question, what becomes of the Species of Bread and Wine? and that many of them being of Opinion, that it was indecent to conceive, that they were subject to the same Laws and Contingencies with our common Food, would not have it thought, that any part of it was converted into Excrements, or voided out of the Body, and therefore conceived that they were either annihilated, or converted into the Substance of our Flesh, to be raised again from the Dead. This Opinion, which had the Vogue in this and the following Centuries, has been since rejected by our Schoolmen, who doubt not but that the Species of the Eucharist may be corrupted and converted into another Substance, God by his Infinite Power producing another * Matter instead of that which is converted into the Body and Blood of our Saviour.

The State of the Question among the Latins.

[* Another Matter.] What a many Transubstantiations must follow upon the first Forgery. Transubstantiation on the Altar creates another in the Belly, lest Christ's Body should be subject to indecent Evacuations. So necessary it is to fall into many Absurdities to maintain one wilful Error.

Of the Controversie upon the Eucharist.

[To what is said in Page 84. Paschasius is of the same Opinion, and says, 'Tis a weakness to think, that any part of this 'Mystery is under the same Laws with other Food, this Note the Author hath added at the end of the Book, viz. This is not without difficulty, for Paschasius says well, Frivolum est ergo, sicut in Apocrypho libro legitur, in hoc mysterio cogitare de stercore. But this will bear two Interpretations; That it is a frivolous opinion to believe, That the Essential part of the Eucharist passes or returns; or, It is a frivolous question to trouble our selves about, whether it passes or not; since we need not to fear its mingling with other Aliments. I rather think that Paschasius is of the latter opinion; for though he asserts, that the Eucharist nourishes our Bodies, he does not intend that we should, by that word, understand a Carnal Nourishment of our Bodies, but a Spiritual Nutriture of our Souls. See the entire Passage in Paschasius's Treatise, Chap. 20. and the 80*th. Page* of this work.

CHAP. VIII.

The History of the Controversie about the Manner in which the Virgin Mary brought forth Christ.

Of the Controversy about the Manner of our Saviour's Birth.

Paschasius and Ratramnus had another Controversie about the Manner in which our Saviour came out of the Virgin's Womb. Ratramnus being informed, there were some in Germany that maintained, our Saviour did not come out of the Virgin's Womb, per virginalis januam vulvæ, sed monstruose de secreto ventris incerto trimite; he thought such an Opinion dangerous, conceiving it followed from thence, that Christ was not truly born, but issued from the Virgin, quod non est nasci, sed erumpi. He therefore opposed it in a small Treatise, [Intituled, De partu Virginis] published by Father Dacherius, in the second Volume of his Spicilegium; wherein he owns it as an undoubted Truth, that Mary lived all her life-time a Virgin, ante partum, in partu, & post partum; but confutes those who believed, that our Saviour came not into the World per Semitam Vulvæ, but some other Way. He brings in against them several Places of Scripture, and Passages of the Fathers, which prove, that Christ came out of the Virgin's Womb; yet he owns withal, that he came out per Valvam clausam, as he came into the Place where his Disciples were met, through the Door, and not through the Wall, yet without opening the Door.

Ratramnus's Opinion about it.

Paschasius Ratbertus, who had been Abbot of Corbey, and who was then but one of the Private Monks (as appears by the Title he assumes in his Epistle Dedicatory) thinking that Ratramnus, heretofore his Monk, but who perhaps had, before this, quitted that Abby, had deliver'd, in his Treatise, such things as seemed prejudicial to the perpetual Virginity of Mary; and that he had disposed Men to believe, that she had brought forth our Saviour into the World in the same manner as other Women bring forth Children, aperta scilicet Vulva; did put out a Book of our Saviour's Birth against that of Ratramnus, wherein he confutes him, without naming of him, and charges him with the aforesaid Error; rejecting withal that Error of Ratramnus's Adversaries, quod Christus non fuisset natus. Therein he chiefly answers to St. Ambrose and St. Jerome's Passages, which might breed some Difficulty. This Book is dedicated to the Abbess and Nuns of Soissons. And whereas he calls the Abbess Matrona Christi, that gives us to understand, it was Theodrada, and not Emma that succeeded in 846. because, as is observed by Father Mabillon, that Title was only bestowed upon Abbesses that had lived in a married State.

Paschasius's Opinion of our Saviour's Birth.

This Answer of Paschasius proving ineffectual with the Followers of Ratramnus's Opinion, so as to convince them of their Error, who affirmed on the contrary, that they had done no Injury to the perpetual Virginity of Mary; He wrote another Book upon the same Subject, of which we have but a Fragment left. These are the two Treatises published by Feu-ardentius, (a) under the Name Ildephonsus of Toledo, which Father Dacherius has restored to their true Author upon the credit of several Manuscripts, and caused them to be printed in the 12*th.* Volume of his Spicilegium.

Ratramnus had another Controversie with a Monk of the same Abby of Corbey, who had asserted, that all Men were of one Substance, and had but one Soul. This Opinion was grounded upon a place of St. Austine's Treatise, of the Quantity of the Soul; but he held it immediately from one Macarius, the * Scot, i. e. an Irish-Man. Ratramnus sent him a Letter, to make him quit that Opinion. But this Monk, in his Answer, persisting still in the same, Odo, Bishop of Beauvais, who had been Abbot of Corbey, ordered Ratramnus to confute that Monk's Book, which he did; and made it appear, in Writing to Odo, that Macarius's Opinion was unwarrantable. This Treatise has not yet appeared in Print: but Father Mabillon, from whom we have this Information, saw it in a Manuscript of the Monastery of St. Eligius near Noyon.

Of the Controversy about the Manner of our Saviour's Birth.

A Question upon the Nature of the Soul.

[* The Scot, i. e. an Irish-man.] In this Age, the Country, that we now call Ireland, was called Scotland, and consequently the Irish were Scoti, as our Author rightly interprets Scotus in this place. Scotland was at this time called Albany, and took the present name from the Irish-Scots, who having a long time infested the Picts, at last incorporated about the year 1101. with them, and gave that Country the name, as the two most Learned Prelates, Dr. Usher, and Lloyd, have fully proved, in their Books de Prim. P. 734. and an Hist. Account, &c. P. 7.]

Ratramnus had yet another Controversie about the Expression of Trina Deitas, and writ a Book against Hincmarus, to justifie it; which Book is lost. Lastly, he attempted to confute the Objections of the Greeks against the Latin Church; his Treatise upon this Subject is yet extant, and we shall speak of it in its proper place. He lived till towards the latter end of this Century, and got himself such a Name, that there was no Question debated in his Time, but Ratramnus was desired to write upon it.

A Judgment upon Ratramnus.

His Book of the Body and Blood of our Saviour was printed the first time at Cologne, in 1532. under the Name of Bertramnus; and afterwards at Basil in 1550. They that were employed in the Censure of Books, in Execution of a Decree of the Council of Trent, did put it amongst the prohibited Books. Afterward Sixtus Senensis, Despensæus, and Genebrardus Santonensis, look'd upon it as a Book forged by Oecolampadius. Pope Clement the VIII. did likewise reject it as an Heretical Book; wherein he was followed by Bellarmine, Quiroga, Sandaval, and Alanus. Yet notwithstanding, the Divines of Louain making, in the year 1571, an Index Expurgatorius for Flanders, did not absolutely prohibit it, but only till it were corrected. This Opinion was followed by Possevin, and some others. Cardinal Perron did not think it spurious, though he was no Friend to

The Fortune of Ratramnus's Book concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour.

(a) By Feu-ardentius.] The first Treatise of Paschasius is the second Treatise of Ildephonsus, beginning with these words, Quamvis omnium Ecclesiarum Virginitas, &c. But from Page 54, where these words are in the Margent, hic aliquid desideratur, you must go to Page the 424. Line 13*th.* where the Remainder of this Treatise is found; though Feu-ardentius has published it as another Discourse. This second Treatise of Paschasius is the Sermon which begins Page 47. Inter Sanctarum, &c. The end of the first Treatise may be part of this; being of the same Style, upon the same Subject, and likewise dedicated to the Nuns. But the other Sermons attributed to Ildefons, upon the Assumption, the Nativity and Purification of the Blessed Virgin, belong to another Author of later date than Paschasius, being either of the Twelfth, or the Thirteenth Century.

the Doctrine of it. In 1657. Monsieur de Marca laboured very hard to make it pass for Scotus's Book, in the Letter annexed to the second Volume of the Spicilegium: Which, in process of time, became a common Opinion, defended by Father Paris, in his Dissertation at the end of the first Part of his Book of Perpetuity, &c. Yet it does not appear, that the Author of this Book was altogether of that Opinion, or that he offer'd to decide who was the Author of that Treatise. But he made a Discourse upon that Author's Opinion; wherein he plainly shews, that he did not directly oppose the real Presence; though at the same time he owns, there are some Passages apt to make one believe, that he was no Favourer of it. Father Paris's Opinion in this case soon became the most prevalent amongst the Roman Catholicks, whilst the Protestants maintain'd firmly, that that Book was Ratramnus's. But in 1680, Father Mabillon did clearly convince the Roman Catholicks of their Prejudice in this case, by proving in his Preface to the second Volume of the fourth Age of Benedictine Writers, that the Book was Ratramnus's; and defended withal his Doctrine as Orthodox: Which Book was afterwards (viz. Anno 1672.) printed at Paris, according to the Manuscript of Lobbes, with a Translation into French, by a Doctor of the Sorbon, who writ the History of the Fortune of this Book, and defended its Doctrine in his Preface. Father Mabillon having thus both by stress of Argument, and the Authority of the Manuscripts by him quoted, reclaimed the best part of the Roman Communion from their Mistaken Opinion of Monsieur de Marca, and Father Paris, yet Father Hardouin stood it out against him; and in his Book of the Sacrament of the Altar, printed in 1689, endeavour'd to prove, he had a design of destroying the real Presence. The Protestants took care to have this little Book of Ratramnus, at divers times, printed and translated. There are extant some old Translations of it, printed in 1558, and 1560; and a new one, published in 1653. [But the the best of these is that which was printed at London 1686, with an excellent Preface, vindicating Bertram from all Popish Objections, with much Reason and Learning.]

The other Treatises of Ratramnus have not been so well known, nor so often publish'd, and have not appear'd in publick before this Century. His two Books concerning Predestination were printed in the Collection made by Father Mauguin of the Authors of the Ninth Century upon Grace, published in 1650. [Tom. I. p. 29. and are since put in the Biblioth. Patrum, Tom. XV.] and his two other Works, viz. That of our Saviour's Birth of the Virgin Mary, and the four Books against the Greeks, were put out by Father Dacherius. That of our Saviour's Birth, in the fourth Tome of his Spicilegium, which came out Anno 1655; and the four Books against the Greeks, in the second Tome of the same Collection, were printed in 1657.

The Editions of the other Books of Ratramnus.

Joannes Scotus Erigena.

Joannes (b) sirnamed Scotus, or Erigena, from Ireland his Native Country, had likewise a great share in the Contests about the Eucharist and Grace. He came into France about the beginning of the Reign of Charles the Bald. (c) And being a Man of Parts and Learning, a good Peripatetick, and well skilled in the Greek Language, which few People were then well acquainted with in these Parts, (d) he got himself a good Fame, and was accordingly regarded by the King, who had a particular respect for learned Men. But, having introduc'd some Errors, for which he was cited by Pope Nicholas I. who writ to Charles the Bald to send him to Rome, or to expel him from the University of Paris, in which he made a good Figure, he took a dislike to France, and (e) withdrew into England about the year 864, where he died (f) about the year 874. (g) He seems not to be the same with Joannes Scotus Abbot of Etheling, who was Grimbaldus's Companion, and Master to Alfred.

John Scot's Book concerning the Body and Blood of Christ.

One of the Principal Works of Joannes Scotus Erigena, was his Treatise concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour: Which Book is lost, unless it were that which bears the Name of Ratramnus, the Improbability whereof we have sufficiently proved. In that Treatise he asserted, that the Sacraments of the Altar were not the real Body and Blood of Christ, but only a Remembrance of both. This Doctrine he did not fully explain: But if we may give credit to Asselin, that was the Drift of it. The Book was

(b) Sirnamed Scotus, or Erigena, from Ireland his Country.] All the Ancients assure us, that this Author was a Scot. Hincmarus speaking of him, L. 1. de Prædest. c. 31. has these words, Auctor factitatur à multis Joannes Scotigena. Anastasius the Library-keeper, Joannem inde Scotigenam. And Pope Nicholas, in a Letter to Charles the Bald, Quidam ut Joannes genere Scotus. The other Authors of that Time that wrote against him, call him John Scot, or simply Scot. And, 'tis well known, that in those Times Ireland, not Scotland, was called by the name of Scotia. Trithemius gives him the name of Erigena, or Eringena, which imports the same with Scot; Ireland, in the Language of his Country, being called Eri, or Erin.

(c) He came into France in the beginning of the Reign of Charles the Bald.] In 851. he had already raised his Reputation so high, that he was consulted about the Question of Predestination, as we have already observed; which is an Argument, that he was some hither before that Time, that is, about the beginning of Charles's Reign. But 'tis not likely that he did come with Alcuinus to found the University of Paris, or that he was a Disciple of Beda, as some Authors have pretended, because he died not till about the year 870.

(d) He became in a little time very eminent.] Pope Nicholas says of him, That he was a noted Man in the University of Paris. These are his words, Aut certè Parisiis in Studio cujus jam olim capital fuisse perhibetur. Certain it is, that Charles had a singular esteem for him, by whom he was consulted about the Question of the Eucharist; as he was by Hincmarus and Pardulus, about the Doctrine of Predestination, &c.

(e) Withdrew (or fled) into England.] Quidam & Haereticus putatus est, says Simeon Dunelmensis, cujus Opinionis particeps fuisse dignoscitur Nicolaus Papa, qui ait in Epistolâ ad Carolum, Illaesum est Apostolatui nostro, &c. Propter hanc ergo Infamiam reduit suus Francia, &c. Matthew of Westminster, and William of Malmesbury speak much to the same purpose. Pope Nicholas II being dead in 868. if Scot was forced by his Letter to return into England, he must have gone thither towards the year 864. which however does not agree with the Testimony of those Authors, who affirm, that he was called thither by King Alfred, who did not begin to addict himself to Learning till after the year 880, and that he was Companion to Grimbaldus, who quitted France not till after that year; it appearing by a Charter, that he was yet residing in his Abby, Anno 886.

(f) About the year 874.] Anastasius the Library Keeper, in a Letter to Charles the Bald, dated the 16th. of the Calends of April, Anno 875. speaks of him as of a dead Man: Which is another Argument against those Men's Opinion, who make this Scotus a Tutor to King Alfred, and Companion to Grimbaldus. What Death he died, is a Thing very uncertain. The forementioned Historians, and many others say, That he suffered Martyrdom; and that he was slain by Children, that stabbed him to Death with Pen-knives. But William of Malmesbury, the first who related this Story, which was conveyed from him to the rest, speaks dubiously of it. 'Tis true, he relates certain Verses made in honour of John the Sophister, written upon a Monument of Malmesbury Church, where it is said, that he died a Martyr; but there is no certainty, whether that John the Sophister be the person we speak of, or another Man. But this is certain, that neither Berengarius, nor his Scholars, who have so much magnified John Scot, ever contended for his Martyrdom: Nor does it appear, that those Authors who were contemporary with him, or that writ soon after his death, did ever give him the Title of a Martyr. 'Tis possible, the Abbot of Etheling's death, who was stabb'd by some Assassins employ'd by his Monks, might be apply'd to John Scot; so that, by disguising the Story in some measure, he might be supposed to be the Man who was with Pen-knives stabbed by Scholars. And, by dating his Martyrdom on the 4th. of the Ides of November, the day on which another John Scot, a Bishop, was killed, Anno 1060, three distinct Johns will be blended into one, with the Epithet of Sophista proper to our Scot; that of Martyr proper to the Abbot of Etheling, and the day of the Bishop's Death. However we read in the Book of English-Martyrs, and also in a Roman-Martyrology printed at Antwerp in 1586, these words, Eodem die (speaking of the fourth day of the Ides of November) Sancti Joannis Scoti, qui Graphiis Puerorum confossus Martyrii Coronam adeptus est. But there's no such thing to be found in all the other Roman Martyrologies. The Reason why I date not his death before the year 874. is, because in some Greek and Latin Verses, written upon an ancient Glossary, bearing the name of John at the head of it, he speaks of Pope John, who was not raised to the Papal See till towards the end of the year 872. And if those Verses be his, 'tis like he was then come back into France.

(g) He seems not to be the same with Joannes Scotus Abbot of Etheling.] The Reasons which induce me to believe, that our John Scot was not the Abbot of Etheling, are these: First, that the Abbot of Etheling was an East-Saxon, a Saxon of Germany, or at least of Essex, and John Scot an Irish-man. Secondly, The first was called into England by Alfred, and came thither with Grimbaldus after the year 880; whereas John Scot withdrew from France into England upon a disgust, and died before the year 875. Thirdly, The Abbot of Etheling was both Priest and Monk, which we do not read any where of John Scot; and he was himself so far from owning it, that he calls himself only Servus, or extremus Servorum, or extremus Sophia Studentium. But 'tis certain that he lived at Court, as appears by the Epistle sent him by Pardulus, and by his Preface to the Book of Predestination. Fourthly, The Abbot of Etheling was slain by some Assassins in his Abby Church towards the year 895, being then a strong Man, and one that could defend himself, as Asserius avers it, who relates his death, and says, that he stood in his own defence, quòd bellicosæ Artis non expers esset; whereas our Scot was dead long before: but put the case he had lived till then, he could not then be a strong Man, or able to make any defence. Fifthly, William of Malmesbury makes a distinction of those two Johns; but he mistakes in his Supposition, that they were both called into England by Alfred. Asserius, a Contemporary Author, makes mention but of one Scot called into England by Alfred.

dedicated to Charles the Bald, who had commanded him to write on this Subject. And Berengarius quoted this Author, as one that had taught the Doctrine he had ſtood for, wherein his Adverſaries did not contradict him. But they condemned the Book of John Scot, as containing Berengarius's Error; and it was attainted for that reaſon by the Synods of Vercelli, Paris and Rome, by which means it might come to be loſt. It was written againſt by Aldrevaldus, a Monk of the Abby of Fleury, who muſtered againſt it a Collection of Paſſages out of the Fathers, inſerted into the 12*th*. Volume of the Spicilegium.

Of the Controverſy about the Manner of our Saviour's Birth.

John Scot writ moreover two Books about Predeſtination; five Books of Natures, or about the Diviſion of Natures, and a Book of Viſion. We have already ſpoken of his Books of Predeſtination. The five Books of Natures are written by way of Dialogue, and in the ſame Style, that is, after a Scholaſtick Abſtruſe Manner. The Natures he divides into four Kinds, one that creates, and is uncreated; another that creates, and is created; a third that does not create, and is created; and a fourth which neither creates, nor is created. In the three firſt Books he treats of the three firſt Kinds of Nature; and in the fourth and fifth he explains the return of the created Natures into the Nature uncreated. In the ſecond Book he handles the Controverſie betwixt the Greek and Latin Churches, about the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt. He tells us, That God has created in his Son, from all Eternity, the Primogenial Cauſes of all Things, the Goodneſs by himſelf, Eſſence by himſelf, &c. That the World was created after Man had ſinned; and that, if Man and Angels had not ſinned, God would have created no Senſible and Material World. He aſſerts, That our Saviour's Manhood was perfectly changed into his Godhead, after his Reſurrection. That the Malice and Puniſhments of the Infernal Spirits ſhall ceaſe one Day, and come to a Period. That, after their Fall, they were clothed with Aereal Bodies. That the Damned ſhall enjoy all Natural Comforts. That all Creatures whatſoever ſhall be at laſt transformed into the Humane Nature. That our Bodies ſhall be turned into our Souls at the Day of Reſurrection. And laſtly, That all Things ſhall be converted into their Primogenial Cauſes, and return into God: So that, as before the World was created, there was no Being but God, and the Cauſes of all Things in God; ſo after the End of the World, there will be no Being but God, and the Cauſes of all Things in Him.

The Books of Natures by John Scot.

Theſe Books, which are in Manuſcript in the Library of St. Germain des Prez, were printed at Oxford in 1681. The Book of Viſion doth ſtill remain a Manuſcript. Father Mabillon has found one in a Monaſtery near St. Omer; and ſays, That John Scot argues in that Book about the very ſame Queſtion which is debated in the 30*th*. Letter of Lupus Abbot of Ferrara.

John Scot tranſlated into Latin the Works fathered upon St. Denys, the Tranſlation whereof he dedicated to Charles the Bald. Pope Nicholas I. wrote to that Prince about it, and deſired it of him. Anaſtaſius the Library-Keeper having peruſed it, found he had followed his Author too cloſe, and that he had not taken a ſufficient Care to ſhun Obſcurity. This Work, with Anaſtaſius's Letter, is in a Manuſcript of the Library of the Jeſuits-College at Bourges [and Part of it has been printed with St. Denys's Works, at Cologne, in 1536.] Scot has alſo tranſlated ſome Comments of Maximus upon the Books of St. Denys; and his Tranſlation of Maximus's Comments upon St. Gregory Nazianzen was printed at Oxford in 1681. Trithemius makes mention of a Commentary upon St. Matthew's Goſpel, and of a Book of Offices compoſed by John Scot.

What we have hitherto ſaid of John Scot, is a ſufficient Proof, that he had ſome Tincture of Learning, and that he was ſkilled in Logicks and Metaphyſicks. But it is plain on the other ſide, that he had a thwarting Diſpoſition, that he was but a weak Arguer, and a ſorry Divine.

Paſchaſius's Works.

To conclude, what relates to the Subject Matter of this and the foregoing Chapter, all we have to do is to ſpeak of the Works of Paſchaſius Ratbertus, upon which we have been hitherto ſilent.

He attempted a Commentary upon St. Matthew's Goſpel, when he was yet a Monk, that is, before the Year 844. being choſen Abbot, the Duties of his Place made him diſcontinue it. Yet he began the fifth Book, where he had left off, and proceeded as far as the ninth, while he was yet Abbot. Having eaſed himſelf from the Burden of that Station, he went on with the reſt more undiſturbed. However he ſuſpended it yet a while, his Time being taken up with other Works. And then it was he wrote a Commentary upon the Lamentations of Jeremy, and an Explication of the 44*th*. Pſalm. But he took in hand the eleventh Book again, at the latter End of his Life, ſo that the Letter to Fridegardus was not written by Paſchaſius till about that Time.

Of the Controverſy about the Manner of our Saviour's Birth.

Paſchaſius's Commentary upon St. Matthew's Goſpel is very large. In it having explained the General Senſe of every particular Place, he makes long Moral Reflections, taken for the moſt Part out of the Works of the Holy Fathers. The firſt four Books are dedicated to Gontlandus a Monk of St. Riquier; and the laſt, to the whole Body of Monks in that Abby.

The Explication of the * 44*th*. Pſalm is dedicated to the Nuns of our Lady of Soiſſons, in Acknowledgment of the Benefits he had received from them. The ſame is divided into three Parts. The firſt is upon the Title of the Pſalm, as in the Septuagint, For the Beloved; and in the Hebrew, For the Lilies, or For the Flowers: Whence he takes Occaſion to enlarge upon the Praiſe of Virgins. In the ſecond Part, he expounds that Part of this Pſalm, which exalts the Beauty of the Bridegroom, and applies it to Chriſt. In the third, he applies to the Church what is there ſaid of the Bride. To expound the Letter, he makes uſe of the Commentary attributed to St. Jerome; often comparing together the Hebrew Text, Symmachus's Verſion, and that of the Septuagint.

* 'Tis with us the 45th.

His Commentary upon the Lamentations of Jeremy is much more Allegorical than the former. Here you will find Myſteries upon the Hebrew Characters, the Uſe of which is only for Diſtinction. 'Tis a tedious Work, divided into five Books, and dedicated to a Monk called Odilmannus Severus. Therein he deplores the Vices and Licentiouſneſs of his Age; as, amongſt others, Simony, the Covetouſneſs of ſeveral Prieſts, the corrupt Lives both of the Regular and Secular Clergy, who minded too much the Concerns of this World, the Uſurpation of Church-Lands, and Grinding of the Poor. With Grief does he mention likewiſe, in the fourth Book, an Invaſion made by Pirates, who had committed great Depredations to the very Gates of Paris: Which ought to be underſtood of the Normans, who, in the Year 856, or 857. burnt the Church of St. Germain in the Fields.

Theſe are Paſchaſius's Works, which have been collected and publiſhed by Father Sirmondus, and printed at Paris in 1618. Since which Time Father Dacherius has publiſhed in the 12*th*. Volume of his Spicilegium a Treatiſe of our Saviour's Nativity, dedicated to Theodrada, Abbeſs of the Abby of our Lady of Soiſſons, who died in 846. In which he aſſerts, That our Saviour coming into the World, came out of the Virgin's Womb, by penetrating her Subſtance, and without any Opening.

To conclude, Father Mabillon has put out two Books of Paſchaſius, containing the Life of St. Wala, Abbot of Corbey. The firſt he compoſed when he was a Monk, towards the Year 856; And the ſecond, after the Deceaſe of his Friend Severus, about the Year 859. By this we learn ſeveral Particulars of the unjuſt Depoſing of Lewis, ſirnamed the Godly, and the State of the Church of France. The Life of Adelardus is alſo attributed to him.

Paſchaſius was a Man of great Piety and Learning. He writes in a clear, neat and elegant Style. He was well read both in Eccleſiaſtick and Prophane Authors. He had withal pretty good Parts of his own; only it may be ſaid perhaps, that he was a little too myſtical. His Book upon the Euchariſt is an accurate and elaborate Piece. His Encomium was made in Verſe by Engemoldus, and is to be ſeen in the Beginning of his Works. He died upon St. Riquier's Day towards the Year 860.

CHAP. IX.

The Hiſtory of the Conteſt betwixt Photius and Ignatius, about the Patriarchal See of Conſtantinople.

Of the Conteſt betwixt Photius and Ignatius.

IGNATIUS was Son of Michael Curopalata the Emperor, ſirnamed Rangabis, and of Procopia, Daughter of Nicephorus the Emperor. Michael, who ſucceeded his Father-in-Law, Anno 811. had not ſat full two Years upon the Throne, when he was forced to reſign the Empire into the Hands of Leo the Armenian. He had three Sons, Theophilactus, Stauratius, and Nicetas. The firſt two he had admitted to govern with him; but Stauratius happened to die, before he had quitted the Empire. Theophilactus was ſhaven, and turned, with his Father, into a Monaſtery, and ſo was Nicetas, his youngeſt Brother, then but fourteen Years of Age. Theophilactus, upon his Coming into the Monaſtery, had his Name changed into Euſtratius; and Nicetas, into that of Ignatius, the Prince we now ſpeak of. Leo the Armenian, being reſolved to ſecure unto himſelf the Empire he had got by Treachery, baniſhed Michael, his Wife and Children, and ſent them into ſeveral Iſlands, parting them from one another, and keeping them under a ſtrict Guard;

Guard; and his two Children he made incapable of raising Issue to the Family, to which the Imperial Crown did of Right belong. He declared against the Use of Images, and turned Nicephorus the Patriarch out of his See of Constantinople, to make Room for Theodosius, an Enemy of Images. Leo having quietly enjoy'd the Empire some Months above seven Years, was slain by Michael, sirnamed Balbus, or the Stammerer, who raised to the See of Constantinople, after the Death of Theodosius, Anthony, sirnamed Byrsodepsa, who was Metropolitan of Perga. Theophilus, Son of Michael the Stammerer, succeeded his Father, Anno 819. and raised John Iconomachus to the See of Constantinople, in the Room of Anthony. At last Theophilus dying in the Year 841. the Government fell into the Hands of Theodora, as the Guardian of Michael, Son to Theophilus. This Princess expelled John from his See of Constantinople, and caused Methodius to be ordained again, who was four Years possessed of that See. After his Death, Ignatius, who, till that Time, had lived a Monastick Life in the Isles of Hiatres, and Terebintus, by him peopled with Monks, was raised to that Dignity in 847. He had been ordained Priest by Basil, Bishop of Peræa. At that Time there was a Brother of Theodorus, Uncle to Michael, called Bardas, who had a great Share in the Government. This Man was desperately in Love with his Daughter-in-Law, with whom he held a secret Commerce. Ignatius offended at so great a Lewdness, rebuked him for it, with a Freedom suitable to his Character. And observing Bardas still persisting in his wicked Course, he refused to give him the Sacrament upon the Twelfth-day. Bardas, a mighty Man, and of a cruel Temper, incensed at his Refusal, took his Time to break out into an open Resentment of it. Not long after this, designing to rid himself of Theodora, who shared the Empire with him, he persuaded Michael, That it was Time for him to reign by himself; and advised him to send away his Mother and Sisters into some Monastery. The Emperor, following his Advice, commanded the Patriarch to see that Business done, who refused to obey that Order: Which Refusal made Way for Bardas to accuse him as an Abettor of the Rebellion of a certain Person, who pretended to be a Son of Theodora by another Husband. Michael, in the mean Time, caused his own Mothers and Sisters to be shaven, and shut up into a Nunnery; afterwards turns out Ignatius, and banishes him into the Isle of Terebinthus, requiring him several Times to resign; but although he could not obtain it from him, yet he put Photius in his Place.

Photius's Character.

This Photius was descended from a noble Family of Constantinople, and Nephew of Tarasius the Patriarch. He was raised to the chief Dignities of the Empire, being made Principal Secretary of State, Captain of the Guards, and Senator. He was both a refined Statesman, and a Person of profound Learning. So great a Grammarian he was, and so well versed in Poesy, Philosophy, Physick, and other Sciences; and (as the Author of the Life of the holy Patriarch Ignatius observes it) so great a Master of Eloquence, that he might pass, without Contradiction, for the greatest Man of his Age in Point of Learning, and might even be compared with the Ancients. In short, he had all the Parts requisite for an able Man; a happy Genius agreeable to a studious Life, and a good Estate to get him a good Library of Books; but, above all, so great a Desire to raise his Reputation, that it made him pass whole Nights in the Course of his Studies: And, whereas he aimed at the Patriarchal Dignity, he diligently apply'd himself to the reading of such Ecclesiastical Writings as might fit him for it.

His Ordination.

He was yet but a Layman, when he was chosen Patriarch. But, that he might be, as it were, gradually raised to that Dignity, he was made Monk the first Day, Reader the next, and the following Days Subdeacon, Deacon and Priest. So that in the Space of six Days, he attained to that Dignity, which fell out on Christmas-day, Anno 858. He was ordained by Gregory Asbestas, formerly Bishop of Syracuse, but degraded at Rome, whereupon he withdrew into Constantinople. Ignatius, unwilling that he should assist at his Ordination, had forewarned him not to appear in the Ceremony, and signify'd unto him his Desire, that his Affair should be examined, and Judgment passed upon it, before he held any Correspondence with him: Which Gregory being much offended at, he, from that Time, declared himself Ignatius's Enemy, and separated from the Church, with Peter Bishop of Sardis, Eulampius of Apamea, and some others of the Clergy: Whom therefore Ignatius the Patriarch cited before him, and caused to be excommunicated. They writ against him to the Pope, who required of Ignatius, that he would send some Person to Rome to give him a full Information of that Affair. Ignatius did accordingly send one Lazarus; and the Point being duly examined by the Direction of Pope Benedictus, the next Successor to Leo, Ignatius's Sentence was approved of by the Holy See. The Schism however continued during the eleven Years Ignatius was in the Bishoprick of Constantinople, who could not reduce Gregory, nor those of his Party, to their Duty; because he had so great an Interest amongst the Grandees, and with Photius in particular.

The Metropolitans, subject to the Patriarchal See of Constantinople, acknowledged Photius; but they extorted from him a Promise in Writing, that he should respect Ignatius as his Father, and should by no Means persecute him. Yet, notwithstanding this Promise, two Months after Photius was raised to that See, Ignatius's Friends were secured, and himself accused of a Conspiracy against the Government. He brought an Information against him, and removing him from the Isle of Terebinthus, whither he had withdrawn himself, he was convey'd to another Island called Hiera, from thence to Berneta, and afterwards to Numeta, where he was very ill used, bound with Chains, and cast into Prison: From thence he was carried to Mitylene; and, whilst he was there, Photius having called a Council together, pronounced his Deposition, and an Anathema against his Person.

Of the Contest betwixt Photius and Ignatius.

Ignatius expell'd and depos'd.

Photius having thus secured himself in his Patriarchal Dignity, was not fully satisfied; but being desirous to get this Sentence confirmed by the Bishop of Rome, sent two Bishops to Pope Nicholas: Whom he pray'd to send two Legates to Constantinople, to re-establish the Church-Discipline, and utterly extirpate the Residue of the Sect that opposed Image-worship, being resolved to compel them to approve of Ignatius's Deposition. For he did not formally desire of the Pope the Approbation of it, but he gave him to understand, that Ignatius had voluntarily quitted the Patriarchal See, by reason of his Age and Craziness, and had withdrawn himself into a Monastery belonging to a certain Island, and that he was in great Esteem both with the Princes and People. Upon this Request, Pope Nicholas sent two Bishops to Constantinople, viz. Zachary and Radoaldus, with the Character of Legates a latere, with full Power to regulate the Business of the Iconoclasts, and to inform themselves so far only of Ignatius's Deposition, as to make the Report thereof to the Holy See. At the same time he wrote both to Michael the Emperor, and to Photius himself, about the Deposition of Ignatius. In his Letter to the Emperor, he expresses his Dislike, that Ignatius had been deposed without consulting the Holy See about it, and that a Layman was put into his Place, contrary to the Canons of the Church, and the Decrees of the Popes. He therefore declares to him, That he cannot give his Assent to Photius's Ordination, before he is fully informed by his Legates of the whole Matter of Fact; That he desired, Ignatius should be cited before them and the Council, to ask him the Reason, Why he left his Flock; and to enquire whether his Deposition was made canonically; And that, when he should have a true Account of Things, he would decide the Matter by an Apostolick Decree, according to the true Merit of the Cause. Next, he recommends the Worship of the Images of Jesus Christ, the Virgin Mary, and Saints, proving the Lawfulness of it by the Tradition of the Church, and some Instances out of the Old Testament. To which he adds, That as Altars are sanctify'd by Benediction, and as the Bread, after Consecration, is in Reality the Body of Christ, and the Wine becomes his Blood; so the Wood, whereof a Cross is made, is but common Wood, before 'tis brought into the Form of a Cross; but when it has once receiv'd that Form, it becomes holy, and the Horrour of Devils, by reason of our Saviour's Figure upon it. He exhorts the Emperor, to restore to the Pope the Authority he formerly had, by his Vicar the Bishop of Thessalonica, over the old and new Epirus, over Illyria, Macedon, Thessaly, Achaia, the two Dacia's, Mœsia, Dardania, and Prevalitania. And, to assert it as his Right, he sent to the Emperor some Letters of his Predecessors. He farther requires the Restitution of the Papal Patrimonies in Calabria and Sicily; and that the Archbishop of Syracuse might be ordained by the Holy See. Lastly, he tells him, that he sends him, as Legates, Radoaldus Bishop of Porto, and Zachary of Agnania; whom he desires him to receive with a Respect suitable to their Character; to give them frequent and favourable Audiences, to give Credit to their Informations; not to suffer 'em to be ill-intreated, and to send them back under a safe Guard. These are, in short, the Contents of Pope Nicholas's Letter to the Emperor. That to Photius is shorter; wherein he expressed, how joyful he was to understand by his Letters the Stedfastness of his Faith, but that he was grieved on the other side, to see such Violations made of the Canons of the Church, in the Business of his Promotion, being as it were, all at once raised from a Layman, to the Dignity of a Patriarch; wherein he had transgressed the Canons, and the Decrees of the Popes, so that he could not approve of his Ordination, before he were fully informed by his Legates he had sent to Constantinople of his Morals, Conduct, and Affection to the Doctrine of the Church; And that, when he should be fully satisfy'd about it, he would honour him according to his Station, and give him real Proofs of his Brotherly Love. These two Letters, dated Sept. 25*th.* 860. being this Pope's second and third Letters, were given to his Legates, upon their Departure for Constantinople.

Pope Nicholas's Letter upon the Ordination of Photius.

Whilst an Answer was expecting from Rome, Ignatius was remanded to the Isle of Terebinthus, where he suffered much from the Emperor's Officers, and by an Inroad the Scythians made into it, who plunder'd the Iſland and all the Monaſteries; ſo that he was conſtrained to withdraw himſelf into a private Houſe at Conſtantinople.

The Council of Conſtantinople againſt Ignatius.

The Pope's two Legates being come to Conſtantinople, the Emperor called a Council thither in 861. which conſiſted of 318. Biſhops, the Pope's Legates aſſiſting at it. Ignatius was cited to appear at this Council by the Commiſſioners, to anſwer to the Charge exhibited againſt him. He demanded of thoſe Officers that came to cite him, Whether he muſt appear in a Biſhop, Prieſt, or Monk's Habit? They being ſtartled at it, could give him no Anſwer, But that he ſhould hear from them about it the next Day; when they came back to him, and cited him a ſecond Time, in the Names of Zachary, and Radoaldus the Pope's Legates, to appear before the Synod in the Habit which he thought in his Conſcience moſt proper for him. Upon which he put on his Patriarchal Veſtments, and marched forth, attended by Biſhops, Clerks, Monks, and a world of People, towards the Church, wherein the Aſſembly was. Being come over againſt St. Gregory's Church, at a Place where a great Croſs ſtood upon a Marble-Pillar, in the middle of the Street, a Nobleman, ſent by the Emperor, came to tell him, That if he did not appear in a plain Monk's Habit, 'twould go near to coſt him his Life. Laurentius the Prieſt, and the two Stephens, did likewiſe forewarn him, not to come in his Pontifical Habit. Ignatius forced to obey, was dragged alone into the Synod, habited like a Monk. He was no ſooner come in, but the Emperor fell upon him with opprobrious and virulent Language; but after a while, being a little cooler, he commanded him to ſit down on a Wooden Bench. He begged Leave to ſalute Radoaldus and Zachary, which was granted him. He asked them who they were, and what their Commiſſion was? To which they anſwer'd, That they were Legates from Pope Nicholas, to take Cognizance of his Affair. He farther asked them, Whether they had any Letter from his Holineſs for him? They anſwered, They had none: Suppoſing they had not to do with a Patriarch, but with a Man depoſed in a Provincial Synod. Then he charged them to expel the Adulterer, who had, by Force, poſſeſſed himſelf of his See; declaring withal, That if they had not Power to do it, they had none to be his Judges. They anſwer'd, That they had Power from the Emperor to be Judges in his Affair. Whereupon Ignatius was preſſed by the Courtiers to make his Reſignation, by which the Metropolitans were awed that ſollicited his Reſtoration. Thus was the firſt Day ſpent in Heats and Conteſts, ſo that the Aſſembly was adjourned to another Day. Mean while Ignatius was preſſed very hard to a Reſignation, which he would never yield unto. Being cited again to appear before the Council, he anſwer'd, He would not appear, and that he would never own for his Judges Men that appeared ſo viſibly prepoſſeſſed againſt him; who were ſo far from expelling Photius, that they did daily eat at his Table, and to whom he had ſent Preſents before their Arrival. That he appealed to the Pope, and was willing to ſubmit himſelf to his Judgment. Thoſe who ſtood for him required the ſame Thing. To make out the Juſtice of his Demand, he alledged Innocent's Letter to Chryſoſtome, and the Canon of the Council of Sardis, touching the Review of the Biſhop's Cauſes: Which notwithſtanding, being preſſed to appear in the Council, he urged, That thoſe who had cauſed him to be ſummoned thither did not underſtand the Canons, nor the Practice of the Church, that a Biſhop muſt be cited by two Biſhops, not (as he was) by two Perſons, one a Layman, the other a Deacon. But his Arguments not being able to prevail againſt Violence, he was forced into the Council; wherein appeared againſt him ſeveral Witneſſes, depoſing, That his Ordination was invalid, becauſe he was choſen by Favour: He rejected thoſe Witneſſes, as produced by the Emperor; adding, That if he were not Archbiſhop, the Emperor was no Emperor, nor any of thoſe Biſhops truly ſo, for that they had been all conſecrated by him. He ſaid further, That Photius being an Adulterer, was no Member of the Church; and that he could not ſet himſelf up to rule, and feed Chriſt's Flock. Firſt, Becauſe he was one of thoſe that were condemned and excommunicated. Secondly, Becauſe of a Layman he was made a Patriarch ſo ſuddenly. Thirdly, Becauſe he owed his Ordination to an excommunicated and depoſed Biſhop. Fourthly, Becauſe having given a Promiſe in Writing, That he would never moleſt him, he had broken his Oath within 40. Days after his Intruſion. To which no Anſwer was given; but inſtead of it he was preſſed again to reſign, which he conſtantly refuſed. So that the Aſſembly broke up this ſecond time, as the firſt, re infectâ. In the following Seſſions, the Emperor cauſed no leſs than 72. Witneſſes to be heard; who depoſed, That he was not raiſed to the Patriarchal See according to the Canons; but, with much Bribery, and by the Emperor's Favour. Whereupon was read the thirteenth of the Apoſtles Canons, which ordains, That if any one becomes a Biſhop by the Secular Power, he ought to be depoſed. In fine, after a long Deliberation, the Council pronounced his Depoſition; and bringing him before them, his Pontifical Habit was put on, and he was preſently diveſted of the ſame.

Of the Conteſt betwixt Photius and Ignatius.

Image-worſhip was another Thing debated in, and confirmed by this Council; the Acts whereof were accordingly divided into two Parts, one about Images, and the other about Ignatius's Depoſition. Therefore perhaps the Greeks call it, The firſt and ſecond Synod; or, if we rather give Credit to Zonaras, and Balſamon, 'twas becauſe the Reſolutions taken at the firſt Seſſion being not ſet down in Writing, by reaſon of ſome Troubles, another Sitting was appointed, in which the Determinations of both were reduced into Writing. Theſe two Authors give us an Account of XVII. Canons made in this Aſſembly.

The Canons of the Council of Conſtantinople.

The 1ſt. is, To prevent an Abuſe in the Foundation of Monaſteries. For many of the Founders retained the Property thereof, and diſpoſed of Monaſteries as of their other Eſtates. To prevent which Diſorder, 'tis ordained by this Canon, That no Monaſtery ſhall be erected, but with the Biſhop's Advice and Conſent, who is to conſecrate it; That an Inventory ſhall be made of the Situation, and Appurtenances of the Monaſtery, and all that belongs to it, which ſhall be kept in the Archives of the Biſhoprick; and that it ſhall not be lawful for the Founder to make himſelf Superior of it, or to make any other that he thinks fit, without the Biſhop's Concurrence.

The 2d. Canon is levelled againſt thoſe who put on a Monk's Habit, without obſerving the Rules and Conſtitutions of a Monaſtick Life. To redreſs which Grievance, 'tis ordained by this Canon, That a Monk ſhall do nothing but by the Superior's Direction, to whoſe Rules he is ſubject, and in whoſe Monaſtery he ſhall be bound to live.

The 3d. enjoyns the Superiors to make an Enquiry after ſuch Monks as have left their Monaſteries, and to ſhut them up again.

The 4th. prohibits the Monks to quit their Monaſteries, either to retire themſelves into Secular Houſes, or to change Monaſteries; leaving the Biſhops a full Power to remove them, if they think it neceſſary.

The 5th. imports, That the Monks Habit ſhall be given only to ſuch as have been proved three Years, except in Caſe of Diſeaſes, which may allow of a ſhorter Time; or when ſuch as are admitted, have formerly led a Kind of Monaſtick Life in the World, it is ſufficient, in this Caſe, to keep them in the State of Novices ſix Months.

The 6th. Canon declares, That Monks ought to have nothing of their own; that, before they turn Monks, they may freely diſpoſe of their Eſtates; but after they are entered, the Monaſtery has the ſole and entire Property of all they have, and they are diſabled from uſing, or diſpoſing of it as their own. That in caſe it be diſcovered, that any of them has retained an Inheritance to his own proper Uſe, it ought to be ſold, and the Money given to the Poor. All which Regulations extend, by Act of the Council, not only to Monks, but in like Manner to Nuns.

The 7th. forbids all Biſhops to found Monaſteries at the Charge of their Dioceſs: Which was to prevent the Ruine of Biſhopricks, the Biſhops in thoſe Times being apt to beſtow all their Cares and the Incomes of their Biſhopricks, upon erecting and founding of Monaſteries.

The 8th. is againſt ſuch as voluntarily aſſumed to themſelves the Office of Biſhop, or cauſed themſelves to be made ſuch, without an urgent Neceſſity, as in caſe of Diſeaſe. And ſuch it condemns to be depoſed, if Clergymen; and if Laymen, to be excommunicated.

The 9th. is againſt thoſe who ſtrike and abuſe others.

The 10th. ordains, That thoſe ſhall be depoſed who ſhall take upon them to convert into prophane Uſes, Veſſels, or Sacred Veſtments, made uſe of at the Altar.

The 11th. forbids all Clergymen to take upon them Secular Employs, or Offices.

The 12th. forbids to celebrate, or adminiſter the Sacraments in private Chappels, without the Biſhop's Conſent.

The 13th. prohibits all inferior Clergymen to ſeparate from their Biſhop, before he be try'd and condemn'd by his Judges.

The 14th. contains the ſame Prohibition to Biſhops, in Relation to their Metropolitan.

By the 15th. the ſame Thing is ordered to be obſerved, in Relation to the Patriarch; except in Caſe of Hereſie, if the Patriarch do publickly teach it. In which Caſe thoſe that forſake his Communion, before the Judgment of the Synod, ought not only not to be depoſed, but are worthy of Praiſe for ſo doing: Which ought to be underſtood of a manifeſt and condemned Hereſie.

The 16th. enjoyns, That no Biſhop ſhall be ordained in a Church, the Biſhop whereof is ſtill living, unleſs he has voluntarily reſigned his Biſhoprick, or has been depoſed in due Form. But, if a Biſhop do forſake his Flock, and abſents himſelf ſix Months from his Church, without a lawful Occaſion, he ought to be depoſed, and another put in his Place.

The 17th. forbids to raiſe a Layman or a Monk immediately to the Epiſcopal Dignity.

Theſe are the Canons ſaid to be made by this Council. The firſt appear to have been made indirectly againſt Ignatius; but the two laſt do plainly condemn the Conduct of Photius: Which might ſuggeſt a Belief, that they were made made by another Synod, but that 'tis usual with Men to appear most severe against those Disorders they themselves have been guilty of.

The Persecution of Ignatius.

Photius was not satisfy'd in deposing Ignatius, and stripping him unhandsomely of his Sacerdotal Habit; but to extort a Resignation from him, he caused him to be shut up in a close narrow Prison, where he received very ill Usage. And there he was forced to make a Cross over a Writing, the Contents of which were, that he owned himself unworthy of being a Bishop, and that he had not been duely raised to the Patriarchal Dignity, but with Bribing and Favour; and that he was not the lawful Possessor of it, but an Usurper. This Signature being thus extorted from him, he was left undisturbed in the Palace of Pose. Mean while he drew a Petition, by way of Appeal, to the Pope; wherein having represented his Case to his Holiness, as it is related here, he begs of him that he will commiserate him, and lend him his helping Hand, in imitation of his Predecessors Fabian, Julius, Innocent, Leo, and all those that have laboured for the Propagation of the Faith and Truth.

But Ignatius's Adversaries, not contented with his forced Resignation, persuaded the Emperor, that it was fit he should publickly read it himself in the Church, and anathematize himself. In order to which, upon a Whitsunday, his House was beset with Guards: Which Ignatius perceiving, made his Escape in a Country-man's habit, with Baskets, and got over into the Islands, where he absconded, shifting frequently his Habitation, for fear of being discover'd. In August following there happened an Earthquake at Constantinople, which the People attributed to the Persecution of Ignatius. For which reason, the Princes were forced to promise, that he should no more be molested, nor any Harm done him for having concealed himself, nor to any Person or Persons that had concealed him: Which Promise being made publick, Ignatius discovered himself, and was sent back into his Monastery, there to live in quiet. Whereupon the Earthquake ceased, and the Bulgarians were converted.

Zachary and Radoaldus being returned to Rome, declared only to the Pope, by word of Mouth, that Ignatius had been deposed, and Photius raised in his stead to the See of Constantinople, but concealed from him the share they had in it.

Two days after came an Ambassador, named Leo, from the Emperor, with two Volumes, containing the Acts of the Council at Constantinople; one concerning Ignatius's Deposition, and the other about Images. He also brought a Letter from the Emperor to the Pope, wherein he desired his Assent, under his own Hand, to the Deposition of Ignatius, and the Promotion of Photius. At the same time a Monk, by Name Theognostus, came to Rome from Ignatius in a Layman's Habit, who informed the Pope of what had passed. The Pope, far from doing what the Emperor desired of him, wrote immediately a Letter to all the Patriarchs, wherein he declared his Dislike of Ignatius's Deposition, and Photius's Intrusion. He wrote likewise to Michael the Emperor, that he would never yield his Consent to the Deposition of Ignatius, nor the Ordination of Photius. And, whereas, to justifie this last, Nectarius and St. Ambrose were alledged as two Precedents, being made of Laymen Bishops; he makes it out, that they had a particular Calling, and that they had not been ordained to thrust a Bishop out of his See. He answers farther to the same Instances, and that of Tarasius, in the Letter he writ at the same time to Photius, that it is for the Good of the Church, through Necessity, or by a particular Inspiration of God, that the Laws of the Church have been dispensed with upon such Occasions; but that none of those Reasons could take place in his Ordination. He complains, that Photius refuses to own or observe the Pope's Decretals, because they condemn his Ordination. He does acknowledge, that some Churches may have particular Customs different from those of Rome. But he maintains withal, that this Way of ordaining a Layman Bishop, contrary to the Canons, and the General Laws of the Church, ought not to be tolerated. His farther Complaints are, That his Legates were not used with that Respect he expected; that they had been detained a long time without the Freedom of speaking to any one, and that they had been forced by Threats to consent to the Deposition of Ignatius, and the Intrusion of Photius. These three Letters are under the same Date, viz. March 18*th*. 862.

Pope Nicholas's Letters upon the Deposition of Ignatius.

A Council held at Rome upon the Ordination of Photius.

The Pope having sent them to Constantinople, and other parts of the World, a Council was called by His Holiness at Rome, in order to have this Business thoroughly examined. The Pope knew not at first how much his own Legates had contributed to the Deposition of Ignatius, and thought they had been forced to it. But, hearing that they had been corrupted by Photius, and that they themselves had deposed Ignatius, and owned Photius, he thought himself bound, for the Vindication and Honour of the Holy See, to call this Synod. Radoaldus did not appear, but Zachary did; who being convicted to have had a hand in the Deposition of Ignatius, and to have acknowledged Photius as the lawful Patriarch, he was deposed and excommunicated. He afterwards did acknowledge his Fault, declaring, that he had acted contrary to the Orders he had received from the Holy See, by consenting to the Deposition of Ignatius. Radoaldus being absent, his Condemnation was put off till another time.

Of the Contest between Photius and Ignatius.

This Council did also take into their Consideration the Difference betwixt Ignatius and Photius, and confirmed Image-worship, as may be seen by the six Articles inserted into the seventh Letter of Pope Nicholas.

The first declares, that Photius being a Layman ordained a Patriarch by Gregory of Syracuse, for having invaded the See of Constantinople, and thrust out Ignatius the lawful Possessor thereof; for having held Communion with Persons excommunicated by the Holy See; having corrupted the Pope's Legates; having banished and persecuted the Bishops who would not acknowledge him, is therefore degraded from his Sacerdotal Office, and all Orders Ecclesiastical, by the Authority of God, of the Princes of the Apostles, St. Peter and St. Paul, of all the Saints, of the six General Councils, and by the Judgment of the Holy Ghost; and if, after this Judgment, he continues in possession of that See, he is excommunicated, with all such as shall abet him, or hold Communion with him.

The second contains the like Sentence of Deposition against Gregory of Syracuse, and a Commination against him, if he continues to raise Troubles against Ignatius; and such as hold Communion with him are hereby declared excommunicated.

In the third Article, all such as Photius has promoted to Orders, and have held Communion with him, after his Instruction, are declared to have been unlawfully ordained, and their Orders to be void accordingly.

The fourth enjoyns the Restoration of Ignatius, though he never was truly deposed, nor justly condemned or degraded; and declares, that all Persons that shall hinder him from assuming again his Sacerdotal Habit, from performing the Duties of his Place, or from the peaceable Enjoyment of his See, shall be deposed and excommunicated.

The fifth enjoyns, that all Persons exiled upon this account, be restored to their several Stations; and declares, all that shall obstruct it to be excommunicated.

The sixth confirms what had been decreed by the Popes touching the Images of Jesus Christ, the Holy Virgin, and the Saints; and pronounces an Anathema against John of Constantinople and his Followers, who taught, that they ought to be broken, and trampled under our feet.

To these six Articles, Pope Nicholas adds two Decisions, made in a former Synod, against those who held, that our Saviour's Godhead had suffered upon the Cross. By the first it is determined, that our Saviour indeed suffered in his Flesh, but that his Godhead remained Impassible. And the second pronounces an Anathema against those who shall say, that our Saviour suffered in his Godhead.

Radoaldus, whose Judgment was put off, being returned into Italy from France, the Pope sent some Bishops, to summon him to appear at the Synod. But he concealed himself so well, that they could find him no where. Anno 863. he came suddenly into Rome, where he combined for some time with the Pope's Enemies; but durst not stay till the Synod sat, which was put off by reason of the Troubles. He fled from Rome, spoiled his Church, and took Sanctuary in another Diocess. But in the Year 864. he was deposed and excommunicated in the Synod which then sat, with Threats of Anathema, if he held Communion with Photius.

Pope Nicholas's Letter to Michael the Emperor.

Michael the Emperor having received the Pope's Letter, sent him a very sharp Answer, expressing his Discontent. To which the Pope made a long Reply, confuting, Article by Article, what the Emperor had written: Who complaining as if he had been ill used by the Holy See, tho' since the sixth Council, no Emperor of the Greeks had honoured the Holy See so much as he had: The Pope makes him this Return, that he has not abused him in any manner, but only warned and rebuked him, as Bishops ought to do; and that, if his Predecessors did not bear the Honour that was due to the Holy See, 'twas because most of them were Hereticks, when those that were good Catholicks had always a Veneration and Respect for the Holy See. The Emperor, speaking of the Legates, he desired the Pope to send him, had used the word to Command: Which hard Expression the Pope could not digest, and therefore brought in several Instances of Emperors, who writing to the Popes, had used the words to Pray, or to Desire; and says, that in the Letter sent him by Michael, he himself had used the word to earnestly Intreat, Obsecramus. Nor does he pass by the Epithet of Barbarous, given by the Emperor to the Latin Tongue; but tells him very seriously, that he ought to have spoken better of a Language made by God himself, made use of in the Inscriptions of the Cross, and in which God is worshipped amongst the Latins. To which he adds, that he who glories in being the Emperor of the Romans, should not despise the Roman Tongue. The Emperor had signify'd in his Letter, that he had not required the Legates to be Judges a second time in the Cause of Ignatius. And the Pope makes him this Return, that the Event is a Proof, that was his Design; that, for his part, he had given them no Power but to get an Information of the Matter, and make him the Report thereof, but not to give Judgment in the Caſe. That thoſe who had condemned Ignatius, were his Enemies, or Excommunicate Perſons either ſuſpected, or accuſed, and ſo could not be his Judges; and that they were all inferior to him, having conſequently no Power to ſit upon, much leſs to depoſe him. Upon which laſt Head he does much enlarge, endeavouring to prove by Inſtances, as well as by the Authority of the Popes and Councils, that the Patriarchs of Conſtantinople can be brought to no Judgment but the Pope's. He maintains, that the Emperor could not call a Synod, and much leſs bring his Officers thither.

Of the Conteſt between Photius and Ignatius.

The Emperor had ſent him Word, That the Council by which Ignatius was depoſed, was as numerous as the Nicene Council. To which the Pope anſwers; That it is not the Number, but the Merit and Worth of the Biſhops aſſembled in Council, which ought to be regarded; That no Patriarch was preſent at this, and all the Biſhops were Suffragans of Conſtantinople; That the ſmall Number ought to be no Prejudice, provided they act from a Pious Principle; and a great Number availeth nothing, if Ungodlineſs be at the bottom of their Proceedings. That on the contrary, the greater the Number of the Wicked is, the more eaſily they may compaſs their wicked Deſigns. The Emperor had writ, That he deſired Legates only upon the account of Images. And the Pope makes him this Return, That he made it only his Pretence, and that his Aim was to make uſe of them againſt Ignatius. But he declines an Anſwer to what the Emperor had alledged againſt the Privileges of Rome, and contents himſelf to ſay, That they are Divine and Perpetual; That they may be aſſaulted, but not overthrown; that they were not granted by Councils, but owned and reſpected. The Emperor had demanded of him Theognoſtus, and ſome other Monks of Ignatius's Party, who had taken Sanctuary at Rome. But the Pope refuſed to deliver them up. He affirms and proves, by the Example of St. Athanaſius, and the Teſtimony of Pope Julius, that he had a Power to cite both Photius and Ignatius to Rome and to be Judge of their Difference. Yet he is willing, if they cannot come in Perſon, to receive their Deputies. He wiſhes that Photius ſhould ſend him, on his part, the Biſhop of Syracuſe, with others left to his Choice; and names the Deputies that ſhall appear in behalf of Ignatius. He conſents that the Emperor ſhall ſend thither Officers from him, and ſays, the Buſineſs ſhall be judged at Rome by his Council.

In another Letter written to the ſame Emperor, Nov. 13. 866. and ſent him by Legates, he exhorts him to yeild to his Reaſons. He gives him an Account, how Zachary and Radoaldus were depoſed, for having exceeded their Power, in condemning Ignatius. He complains, that the firſt Letter he had written had been counterfeited, and makes it appear, that the Council held againſt Ignatius had not proceeded in a Legal Manner: and that he ſhould have been reinſtated before his Cauſe was judged. He requires from the Emperor, that he would cauſe that injurious Letter he had ſent him, to be burnt, and threatens with Excommunication the Inditers of it.

Other Letters of Pope Nicholas about the Affair of Ignatius.

At the ſame time he ſent to the Clergy of Conſtantinople an Account in Writing of what had paſſed at Rome about the Concern of Photius and Ignatius; Photius in particular he charges with ſeveral Things, in a Letter directed to him. In another to Prince Bardas he expreſſes the Diſſatisfaction he lies under, to ſee thoſe Hopes fruſtrated which he had entertained of him; and adviſes him to recollect himſelf, and to protect Ignatius: Whom he informs on the other ſide of what he had done for him; and comforts him in his Condition. Theodora the Empreſs he praiſes in another Letter, exhorting her to Patience, and aſſuring her that he would do his utmoſt to reſtore Ignatius. He intreats Eudoxia to protect him, and deſires the ſame of the Senators of Conſtantinople. Thus you have the Subſtance of the ſixteen firſt Letters of Pope Nicholas, collected by himſelf, and ſent into all Parts, to inform the whole World of this Affair, and of his Conduct in it.

Ill Treatments made to Ignatius.

But whilſt Pope Nicholas laboured hard to reinſtate Ignatius in his See, Photius and Bardas were no leſs active and induſtrious to bring him to a fatal End. Photius ſuborned a Man, and cauſed him to be intercepted with two Counterfeit Letters; one to the Pope, ſubſcribed by Ignatius, and the other under the Pope's Name to Photius. Whence he took occaſion to impeach Ignatius for keeping Correſpondence in the Weſt, and writing thither againſt the Emperor. Whereupon Ignatius was apprehended, who remained in Cuſtody, till the Letter-bearer was manifeſtly proved to be an Ill Man, and an Impoſtor. After this he had ſome Reſpite; till Bardas, frighted by a Dream, in which he ſaw the Patriarch imploring the Pope's Aſſiſtance againſt him, kept him under ſo ſtrict a Guard, that he could not ſo much as ſay Maſs, or ſpeak to any Man. At laſt Bardas was ſlain, in April, Anno 866. by the Emperor's Order, who ſet up Baſilius Cæſar in his Place the 26*th*. following, being Whitſunday.

Photius, reſolved to be revenged of the Pope, exaſperated as much as in him lay the Emperor againſt him, and perſuaded him to call a Council, in order to condemn the Pope, as the Pope had condemned him. He ſummoned to Conſtantinople all the Biſhops of his Patriarchate, and ſet up others, who pretended themſelves to be ſent as Deputies from the other Patriarchs. Pope Nicholas was accuſed before this Council, his Depoſition pronounced, and his Perſon excommunicated. This done, Photius ſollicited the Emperor Lewis King of Italy, and the Princeſs Ingelberg, to declare themſelves againſt the Pope, promiſing to procure him the Imperial Crown of the Eaſt, ſhould they but expel that Pope from his See. The Acts of this Council he ſent into the Weſt by Zachary. But, ſoon after this, Michael the Emperor was ſlain by Baſilius's Order, who thereupon was declared Emperor, Sept. 23*d*. 867.

Of the Conteſt between Photius and Ignatius.

The Council of Photius againſt the Pope.

The firſt Thing Baſilius did, after he had ſettled himſelf upon the Throne, was the Expulſion of Photius, and Reſtoration of Ignatius. He ſent Orders for Zachary to return, baniſhed Photius into a Monaſtery, ſent for Ignatius to Conſtantinople, and reinſtated him in his See, Novemb. 23*d*. in the ſame Year.

Ignatius reinſtated.

This is obſervable in the Life of this Patriarch, that he came now into his Church, whilſt the Prieſt offering the Sacrifice, was ſinging theſe Words in the Quire, Giving Thanks unto the Lord. Ignatius being in Poſſeſſion of his See, excommunicated preſently Photius, thoſe that had been ordained by him, all his Followers, and ſuch as held Communion with him. He likewiſe begged of the Emperor, that he would ſummon a General Council to remedy thoſe Evils the Church did lie under. And ſeveral Deputies were immediately diſpatched to the Pope at Rome; John, Biſhop of Pergos, from Ignatius; Peter of Sardis from Photius; and an Officer, named Baſilius, from the Emperor. Peter of Sardis periſhed by a Ship-wrack, in the Gulf of Dalmatia; the other two had better Luck, and came ſafe to Rome; where they found Pope Nicholas dead, and Adrian raiſed into his Place, who received them very graciouſly. They ſhewed him the Acts of the Councils held by Photius againſt Ignatius, and Pope Nicholas I. Adrian called a Synod, which condemned them to be burnt, and excommunicated Photius a ſecond time. Next he preſented to them two Biſhops, by name Donatus and Stephen, for his Legates, to act in his Name in the Council to be held at Conſtantinople.

The Council of Conſtantine Ind. 3. Anno 869. of the Common Account. They ſtantinople being 8*th*. General Council.

This Council was ſummoned by Baſilius the Emperor in the third Year of his Reign, and the ſecond of that of met in the Church of St. Sophia, on the right ſide, where the Catechumeni were commonly inſtructed. In the midſt of the Aſſembly were placed the Holy Goſpels, with a Croſs. It began the fifth of October, and ended the laſt day of February following. During which time they had ten diſtinct Seſſions. As to the Number of Biſhops aſſiſting thereat, it vary'd very much. At firſt it conſiſted only of the Pope's Legates, viz. Donatus Biſhop of Oſtia, Stephen Biſhop of Nepi, and Marinus a Deacon, Thomas Archbiſhop of Tyre repreſenting the Patriarch of Jeruſalem, and Ignatius Patriarch of Conſtantinople. With them did 12 Biſhops ſit, by their Order, who had firmly adhered to Ignatius's Cauſe and Intereſt. In the ſecond Seſſion they admitted ten Biſhops, who begged Pardon for having ſided with Photius. The third conſiſted only of 23 Biſhops, and the fourth of 21. In the fifth there were two Metropolitans, to wit, of Epheſus and Cyzicum, who had not been in the former; but on the other ſide ſome of the Biſhops that had been in the former, did not appear in this. The ſixth conſiſted of thirty ſeven Biſhops, their Number increaſing as the Biſhops that had ſtood for Photius came in and ſubſcribed a Writing, whereby they rejected him, and owned Ignatius. The next two were not more numerous. But the ninth, at which Joſeph was preſent, as a Deputy from the Patriarch of Alexandria, was compoſed of above 60 Biſhops; and the laſt of above 100 who all ſubſcribed to the Deciſions of the Council. At all their Sittings there were Senators, Noblemen, and Officers of the Emperor, with Bahanes at the Head of them, who ſpoke to the Biſhops in the Name of all. The Emperor was there in Perſon at the ſixth, ſeventh and eighth Seſſions. Conſtantine came thither with him at the ninth, at which were preſent alſo Anaſtaſius the Library-Keeper, and Eberard, as Ambaſſadors from Lewis Emperor of Italy, beſides two Ambaſſadors from the King of Bulgaria. Almoſt all the Biſhops were of Aſia, Thracia and Greece.

The firſt time they ſat was October the 5*th*. The Pope's Legates, Ignatius Patriarch of Conſtantinople, a Deputy from the Patriarch of Jeruſalem, Thomas, Metropolitan of Tyre, repreſenting the Patriarch of Antioch, that See being then vacant; and the Noblemen being met, they ſent for the Biſhops in, who had been perſecuted for the Cauſe of of Ignatius, being 12 in Number, viz. Five Metropolitans of Greece, and Seven Biſhops, who accordingly took their Places in the Council. Then Bahanes, the Chief of the Noblemen, read aloud the Emperor's Exhortation to the Council; wherein he declared, that having purpoſed to put an End to the Differences that troubled the Peace of the Church,

Of the Conteſt between Photius and Ignatius.

Church, he had ſent for Legates from the Biſhop of Rome, and Deputies from the other Patriarchs, to hold an Oecumenical Council; that he exhorted the Biſhops to come with a Spirit of Peace, and to ſeek out Remedies for the preſent Evils. Whereupon Bahanes, turning to the Pope's Legates, deſired them, in the Biſhop's Name, to declare unto them whence they came, and what Power they had. They anſwered, that it was never done before in any Synod, to examine the Power of the Pope's Legates. To which Bahanes reply'd, that what he did was not for want of Reſpect to the Holy Apoſtolick See; but becauſe the late Legates Radoaldus and Zachary had deceived them, by abuſing their Power. This Reaſon being allowed of, they preſented the Pope's Letter to the Emperor; which was read in Latin by Marinus the Deacon, one of the Legates, and turned into Greek by Damian a Clergyman, the Emperor's Interpreter. In this Letter Adrian, having congratulated Baſilius, concerning his Elevation to the Imperial Throne, commends his Deſign of reſtoring Peace to the Church, and his Application to the Holy See to find out a Remedy for the Evils the Church of Conſtantinople did lie under: He approves of what he had done in the behalf of Ignatius, and againſt Photius; and returns him his Thanks for his proceeding in that Matter, according to the Judgment of the Holy See, and the Modern Biſhops. As to thoſe Biſhops, and other Perſons, that had troubled the Peace of the Church, and continued to hold Communion with Photius, after his Condemnation, he ſays, they ought to be differently uſed according to the Difference of their Faults, which he leaves to the Judgment of his Legates and Ignatius. And, whereas the Emperor had deſired, they ſhould not be proceeded againſt to the utmoſt Rigour; he tells the Emperor, that he is very much concerned at it, becauſe not only by the Judgment of Nicholas his Predeceſſor, which he has ſubſcribed to, but alſo by the Laws of the Church, they ought to be moſt ſeverely puniſhed, without any hopes of their Reſtoration. However, for Peace-ſake, and to ſave a great many Men, his Opinion was that Moderation might be uſed, and ſome Favour may be ſhewed them, as has been practiſed on the like occaſions by the Pope's Predeceſſors, of which he gives ſome particular Inſtances. That therefore he deſires the Meeting of a Council, wherein his Legates ſhall preſide; who, upon their Knowledge of the Perſons and their Faults, may be competent Judges thereof. That a Declaration of Abhorrency ſhall be made againſt the Council held againſt the Holy See, and all the Acts thereof ſhall be burnt.

He likewiſe exhorts the Emperor to make all the Biſhops ſubſcribe to the Decrees made in the Synod of Rome againſt Photius, and for Ignatius. In concluſion, he prays him to ſend him back four Monks, fled from Italy into Conſtantinople; and recommends unto him his Legates, together with John Biſhop of Silea, Ignatius his Deputy, and Baſilius his Envoy. He prays him to excuſe their long Tarrying, as being none of their Fault; for he could not poſſibly diſpatch them ſooner, having upon him the Care of ſo many Churches.

This Letter being read, the Deputies of the other Patriarchs were likewiſe deſired to read their Letters, that Information might be had both of their Qualities and Power. Elias, Deputy of the Patriarch of Jeruſalem, ſaid, they could not be ignorant who they were, and that they might know it by the Emperor's Exhortation; However, to ſatisfie the Deſire of the Aſſembly, he declared, that Thomas Biſhop of Tyre repreſented the Patriarch of Antioch, during the Vacancy of that See, being the firſt Metropolitan of that Patriarchate, and conſequently had no occaſion to bring Recommendatory Letters; and that he ſpoke for him, becauſe he could not ſpeak Greek without ſome Difficulty. As for himſelf, that he had a Letter from Theodoſius his Patriarch to Ignatius, which had been already read, and might be read again. The Contents of which Letter were, that he durſt not before write unto him, or ſend any body to him, for fear of incurring the Suſpicion and Perſecution of the Prince of the Saracens, whom Jeruſalem was then ſubject to, and who treated the Chriſtians with a great deal of Humanity, ſuffering them to build Churches, and to have a free Exerciſe of their Religion, without any Violence or Hardſhip put upon them; but, that having receiv'd his Orders to write to him, he ſends him Elias to repreſent his Perſon, a Man of eminent Parts, able to give a ſound Judgment of things under debate; that the Prince of the Saracens appointed Thomas Biſhop of Tyre to bear him Company; and that he deſires him to obtain from the Emperor the Liberty of ſome Saracens who were his Priſoners, whereby the Saracens Anger might be appeaſed, who otherwiſe threatned the Chriſtians.

Then was read the Paper ſent by the Pope to be ſubſcribed by all the Biſhops, containing an Excommunication of all Hereticks, particularly of Photius, and all the Oppoſers of Image-worſhip, with a general Approbation of all the Proceedings againſt Photius, and Gregory Biſhop of Syracuſe, by the Popes Nicholas and Adrian, a Condemnation of all that had been done by Photius againſt the Holy See; and laſtly, an Acknowledgment of Ignatius as the lawful Patriarch. This Form was approved of by all the Biſhops, and the Deputies from the Eaſt. Thomas and Elias ſaid, they agreed to it, and deſired to hear it read. The like Form was drawn up at Conſtantinople, before the Legates came thither, and contained ſix Articles. In the firſt, they acknowledge Ignatius as the lawful Patriarch. In the ſecond they declare, that all the Biſhops who had ſtood by Ignatius, and therefore depoſed by Photius, ought to be reſtored to their reſpective Sees. In the third, they give it, as their Opinion, that all Prieſts, or other Clerks ordained by Methodius, or Photius, who joyned with Photius, and are returned into the Church ſince his Expulſion, may be admitted and reſtored, after they have performed ſuch Penances as ſhall be laid upon them. In the fourth, they declare Photius degraded from his Sacerdotal Office, and incapable of Reſtoration, and do farther anathematize him, in caſe he do not ſubmit to the Pope's and their Judgment. In the fifth, they declare Gregory, Biſhop of Syracuſe, condemned and depoſed, and all that have been ordained by Photius unworthy of the Sacerdotal Office. In the laſt, they recommend the Execution of theſe Things, declaring they have, in all Points, conformed themſelves to the Judgment of Pope Nicholas, and excommunicating all Perſons that do not ſubmit to his and their Judgment: Which Articles were approv'd of by the Pope's Legates, and the whole Aſſembly in Council. Whereupon the Pope's Legates, and the Deputies from the Patriarchs of the Eaſt, being asked by the Commiſſioners, why they had condemned Photius in his Abſence; they gave their Reaſons why they refuſed either to ſee or hear him, together with the Reaſons which had induced them to own Ignatius, whom all the Patriarchal Churches had acknowledged to be the Right Patriarch. This done, the Seſſion concluded with Acclamations for the Emperor, the Empreſs, and the Patriarchs.

Of the Conteſt between Photius and Ignatius.

In the ſecond Seſſion, the Pope's Legates, Thomas of Tyre, Elias the Deputy from Jeruſalem, and the twelve Biſhops that had firmly adhered to Ignatius, being met with the Emperor's Commiſſioners, Paul, the Keeper of the Records of the Church of Conſtantinople, ſaid, that the Biſhops that had ſtood for Photius pray'd to be admitted: Which being granted, they declared, that they had been ordained by Methodius, or by Ignatius; acknowledged their Error in ſiding with Photius, begged Pardon for the ſame, and preſented a Petition, the Subſtance whereof is as followeth. That having been drawn in by the Artifices of Photius, or prevailed upon by the Fear of Perſecution, and the Puniſhments he had threatned them with, and inflicted upon Ignatius's Friends, they had been forced to own and ſupport him; that they acknowledged their Fault, and begged Pardon for it; proteſting, they ſhould never adhere to Photius, or any of his Party, as long as they ſhould continue in their Obſtinacy. This Petition of theirs being preſented, the Pope's Legates declared, that they received them. The Form was read unto them; who, having approved of, and ſubſcribed unto it, their Petition being laid upon the Goſpel and the Croſs, they preſented it to Ignatius the Patriarch, who reſtored unto them their Pontifical Habit, and then they took their Places in the Council: Though the Number of the Biſhops be not expreſly mention'd, yet ten of them are named in this Seſſion.

The Prieſts ordained by Methodius and Ignatius, who had ſided with Photius, were likewiſe admitted; who, having preſented a Petition to the ſame purpoſe as the former, and ſubſcribed to the Form, were alſo reſtored. The ſame was done with the Deacons, Subdeacons, and other Clerks, theſe Penances being inflicted upon them all. That they that eat Fleſh, ſhould forbear it, together with Eggs and Cheeſe; and they that eat no Fleſh, ſhould abſtain from Eggs, Cheeſe, and Fiſh, on Wedneſdays and Fridays, and eat nothing but Pulſe with Oyl, and a little Wine; to fall upon their Knees fifty times a day; to ſay a hundred times Kyrie eleiſon, My God, I have ſinned, forgive my Sin, O Lord; to repeat the ſixth, thirty ſixth, and fiftieth Pſalms, until Chriſtmas-day; and to forbear, till that day, all Sacerdotal Function. Thus ended this Seſſion, with the uſual Acclamations.

In the third Seſſion, which was held on the 11*th*. of October, the Pope's Legates, the Deputies from the Eaſt, the Commiſſioners, and 23 Biſhops being met together, the Archbiſhops of Ancyra and Nice, who had been ordained by Ignatius and Methodius, and had favoured Photius, were ſummoned to ſubſcribe unto the Form, in order to be reſtored. But they declared, that having ſufficiently ſuffered for having formerly ſubſcribed, whether to good or ill purpoſe, they were reſolved to ſubſcribe only to the Profeſſion of Faith they had ſubſcribed unto when they were ordained, and pray'd the Council to be ſatisfy'd with their Reſolution. After this, the Emperor's Letter to Pope Nicholas was read, wherein he ſignify'd unto him the Depoſing of Photius, and intreated him to let him know, how he ſhould deal with thoſe who had eſpouſed his Quarrel, or had been ordained by him, expreſſing his Deſire, that they ſhould be pardoned who came in firſt to acknowledge their Fault. He gave him Notice withal, that he ſent Deputies from Ignatius and Photius, with Baſilius one of his Gentlemen-Uſhers, that he may order Things in their Preſence as he ſhall think moſt expedient, or ſend them back with Commiſſioners from him, that he may know his clear Intention.

This Letter was followed by another from Ignatius to the ſame Pope; in which, having extolled the Holy Apoſtolick See, and commended the Emperor's Zeal, he ſays, that he ſends him a Metropolitan and a Biſhop, to expreſs his thankful Acknowledgment, to give him a faithful Account of all Paſſages, and know of him what Meaſures he muſt take in the preſent Juncture, concerning the Biſhops of Photius's Faction; whom he divides into two Claſſes, viz. thoſe ordained by himſelf, and thoſe ordained by Photius. He puts amongſt theſe Paul Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia, who oppoſed him at firſt, but afterwards returned to his Duty. With this Letter was read Pope Adrian's Anſwer, in which this Pope having promiſed Ignatius the Patriarch, that his Affection for him ſhall not fall ſhort of his Predeceſſor's, and praiſed God for his Reſtoration; he gives him, for a Standard, the Decree given by Pope Nicholas againſt Photius and Gregory; and, confirming the ſame, declares them degraded of all Sacerdotal Offices, and not to be regarded as Biſhops, no more than Gregory and Photius, who took upon him a Power he had not; Gregorium Syracuſanum & Photium Tyrannum, & eos quos idem Photius in Gradu quolibet ordinaſſe putatus eſt, ab Epiſcoporum numero, vel dignitate, quam uſurpative ac ficte iedit, merito ſequeſtrantes. To prove Photius's Ordinations to be void, he gives thoſe following Reaſons. Firſt, becauſe Photius was like Maximus, and his Ordination, or rather Intruſion, in all points like unto his. Secondly, becauſe Pope Nicholas his Predeceſſor had ſo decreed it. Thirdly, becauſe Photius being a Great Man, a Courtier, a Novice, an Intruder, an Adulterer, Excommunicated, having no lawful Power, could not conſequently confer it upon his Followers. A Maxim which he afterwards confirms, as owned by Photius, and thoſe of his Party. He therefore requires that the ſame Rigour be uſed, with relation to thoſe who had been ordained by Photius, and even to Paul himſelf, who was recommended unto him by Ignatius, who (ſays he) muſt expect an everlaſting Reward for the Perſecution he had ſuffer'd, beſides the temporal Rewards of the Church, and the Honour he has acquired by his Sufferings. As to thoſe who had been ordained by Methodius, or Ignatius, he commends the Zeal of thoſe who had withſtood Photius, and ſuffer'd conſtantly for the Cauſe of Ignatius; but, for the reſt, who ſubmitted to Photius, either of their own accord, or by Force, he declares, that, provided they come in, and ſign the Form he ſends by his Legates, they ought to be pardon'd, and left in Poſſeſſion of their Church-Dignities, notwithſtanding their Oppoſition againſt the Patriarchal Dignity, and the Holy Catholick See. Yet he declares withal, that thoſe who aſſiſted at the Illegal Council held at Conſtantinople againſt the Holy See, ſhould be incapable of Pardon, were not the Compaſſion of the Holy See invaded by them as great as their Demerit. He exhorts Ignatius to ſee the Articles drawn up at Rome, againſt Photius and his Council ſubſcribed unto. Laſtly, he commends John of Silea's Charity and Zeal for Ignatius. This Letter being read, was highly commended by all the Biſhops, and ſo this Seſſion ended with the uſual Acclamations.

The fourth Seſſion was held Octob. 13*th.* In which two Biſhops were accuſed, Theophilus and Zachary by Name, who were both ordained by Methodius, and continued obſtinate in Photius's Party. Theſe Biſhops being called into the Council, required that the other Biſhops that ſtood it out for Photius, ſhould alſo be called in. There was ſome Time a Debate upon the Matter, whether or no they ſhould be admitted. But the Pope's Legates did at laſt conſent, that three of them ſhould be called in, in the Name of the reſt, to hear the Sentence paſſed againſt them. When they were to be called in, they had all withdrawn themſelves, except Theophilus and Zachary, who being come before the Council, maintained, that Pope Nicholas had communicated with them. The Legates convinced them of Falſhood, by Nicholas's Letter againſt Photius, which they cauſed to be read. Thomas and Elias made it appear likewiſe, that they had never owned Photius for a Patriarch. Which appearing undeniable, Theophilus and Zachary were preſſed upon to ſubſcribe to the Form againſt Photius. But they would not ſo much as hear of it, and ſo were turned out of the Council. This is the Sum of what paſſed in this Seſſion.

In the fifth, held Octob. 20*th.* Paul, the Emperor's Charter-Keeper, had ordered Photius to be brought before the Council. Some Laymen being ſent to know of him, Whether he was willing to appear? He anſwer'd, that he came not willingly, but was carry'd by Force. The Biſhops however order'd, that he ſhould come in. He proteſted againſt it, refuſed to anſwer the Queſtions made unto him, and would, by no means, acknowledge his Fault. Pope Nicholas's Letters, containing the Sentence paſſed againſt him, were read, and the Deputy of the Church of Jeruſalem proteſted again, that the Patriarchs of the Eaſt had never owned him, exhorting him to do Penance. This done, the Pope's Legates declared him excommunicated; and the Council did approve of it. He was exhorted to do Penance, and to acknowledge his Fault, there being no Refuge left for him, now that Rome and the Eaſt had declared againſt him. To which he anſwer'd, that his Plea was not of this World. He was again warned to think ſeriouſly of his Caſe, and had Time given him for it.

Of the Conteſt between Photius and Ignatius.

The Emperor himſelf was preſent at the ſixth Seſſion, which was held Octob. 25*th.* Metrophanes, Metropolitan of Syria, made him a Compliment. After which a Memoir of the Pope's Legates was read, containing the Subſtance of what had paſſed againſt Photius. Then were called in the Biſhops ordained by Photius, and Pope Nicholas's Letter to Michael the Emperor was read. Upon which the Council told them, that they ought to forſake Photius, and ſubmit to their Judgment, who had declared his Ordinations void. They endeavour'd to defend Photius's Ordination, and their own, againſt the Decree of Pope Nicholas, by ſome Inſtances of Biſhops condemned or rejected by the Popes, who, notwithſtanding, were owned to be lawful. To which the Emperor himſelf gave this Anſwer; that thoſe Biſhops had been owned and defended by other Patriarchal Sees, whereas Photius was forſaken by all; that he pitied their Caſe, and exhorted them to ſubmit themſelves to the Mercy of the Council. The Pope's Legates told them, that if they would ſubſcribe to the Form, and do Penance, they ſhould be received into the Church-Communion; and, at the ſame time, anſwered to the Inſtances by them alledged, to ſhew, that the Pope's Deciſions concerning condemned Perſons, had not been always followed. After this, the Emperor cauſed a long Exhortation to be read, directed to thoſe who were of Photius's Faction, whereby they were exhorted to ſubmit themſelves, and had ſeven days time to conſider of it.

The ſeventh Seſſion was held Octob. 29*th.* in the Preſence of the Emperor. The Time allowed to Photius, to conſider what he would do, being elapſed, he was called in, with Gregory Biſhop of Syracuſe. Marinus the Deacon, one of the Legates, cauſed his Croſier to be taken away from him; and the reſt of them adviſed him to ſubſcribe unto the Form, that he might be received as a Layman, into the Church-Communion. Inſtead of returning them an Anſwer, he directed his Speech to the Emperor, wiſhed him a long Life, and declared he had no Anſwer to give to the Legates. Being asked by Babanes, Whether he had any thing elſe to ſay? He anſwer'd, that Queſtion might have been ſpared, had they but minded what he had told them a few days ſince, and that he exhorted them to do Penance themſelves. The Council was incenſed at this Anſwer of Photius; whereupon the Biſhops ordained by him, or who adhered ſtill to him, were immediately called in, and the Form brought from Rome offered unto them to ſet their Hands to it. But all the Arguments which the Biſhops and the Emperor himſelf did make, to induce them to it, proved inſignificant. Pope Nicholas's Letter to the Biſhops of the Patriarchate of Conſtantinople, and the Clergy of that City, containing the Sentence paſſed againſt Photius and his Adherents, was read unto them; together with Adrian's Letters to the Emperor, to Ignatius the Patriarch, and the Acts of the Synod held at Rome, under that Pope againſt Photius, in the Preſence of the Deputies ſent from Conſtantinople. Which Acts begin with three Diſcourſes of the Pope to the Council; the firſt containing a compendious Hiſtory of the Intruſion and Attempts of Photius. In the ſecond, the Pope requires the Condemnation of the Acts of the pretended Council of Photius againſt the Holy See. And the third contains a Complaint of his Preſumption, in paſſing a Judgment againſt the Pope, whom he pretends to be liable to the Judgment of no Man, which he proves by the Inſtance of Symmachus: And, in Anſwer to the Example of Honorius, who was anathematiz'd by the Eaſtern Biſhops after his Death; He ſays, That he was accuſed of Hereſy; for which Cauſe only 'tis lawful for Inferiors to reſiſt their Superiors, and forſake their Errors; and that neither the Patriarchs, nor Biſhops, could have ſet up for his Judges, if the then Biſhop of Rome, as firſt Biſhop, had not himſelf conſented to it. To which he adds, that the Council of Epheſus had cenſured and condemned John of Antioch, for his attempting to paſs Judgment againſt St. Cyril Patriarch of Alexandria, whoſe See precedes that of Antioch. Which Maxim was approved of, and confirmed by this Council, praying the Pope to pardon thoſe who ſhould acknowledge their Fault, and return to their Duty, and to regulate that Matter in the Preſence of the Deputies ſent from Conſtantinople. Upon which the Pope declared, that all the Acts of the Council held by Photius againſt the Authority of the Holy See, ought to be utterly deſtroyed, and thrown into the Fire; that all the Aſſemblies he held againſt Ignatius ought likewiſe to be had in deteſtation; that he reiterates and confirms the Sentence paſſed againſt him by his Predeceſſor, yet willing to admit him, as a Layman, into the Church-Communion, if he will but conſent to all the Proceedings of the Holy See againſt him, and condemn his own own againſt his Predeceſſor; That he grants Communion to all ſuch as have given their Conſent or Approbation to that Council, provided they approve of what was done by the Holy See. And, whereas the Name of Baſilius the Emperor is put into the Acts, he declares, That it was falſly put in, being aſſured, that Prince had always had a great Reſpect for the Holy See; for which Reaſon he declares him a moſt Orthodox and Religious Prince. Laſtly, That he excommunicates all Perſons that ſhall in time to come adhere to, or approve of the Acts of that Council, and that ſhall not approve of the Decrees of the Holy See: This Judgment was ſigned by more than thirty Biſhops of Italy, nine Cardinal-Prieſts, the Archdeacon of Rome, and four Deacons.

Theſe Acts of the Roman Synod being read over in the Council of Conſtantinople, Nicetas ſaid, That, ſeeing Photius refuſed to ſubmit, he thought it fit that the Excommunication pronounced againſt him ſhould be reiterated. Ignatius the Patriarch having made a Speech thereupon to the Council, Stephen, Deacon and Notary, pronounced ſeveral times the Anathema againſt Photius, and made ſeveral Acclamations to the Proſperity of the Emperor, the Empreſs, the Pope, and the Patriarchs Deputies.

The eighth Seſſion was held upon the 8*th.* day of November; the Acts of the Council of Photius againſt Pope Nicholas being firſt burnt by the Emperor's Order. There appeared three Perſons bearing ſuch Names as Photius had given to the pretended Deputies from the Pope and the Patriarchs, who declared, That they had not ſubſcribed to thoſe Acts, and knew not what they were about. Being preſſed to pronounce an Anathema againſt thoſe that had ſubſcribed thereunto, they did it. This done, one Theodorus Erithinius, an Iconoclaſt, being ſummoned to appear at the Council, was called in. The Emperor preſſing him to own the Lawfulneſs of Image-worſhip, to convince him thereof, asked him, Whether he honoured his Image upon a Medal? He proteſted, That he had for it all the Reſpect and Veneration which he ought to have. If then, ſaid the Emperor, you reſpect the Image of a Mortal Man, much more ought you to honour the Image of Chriſt, of the Virgin, and the Saints. Theodorus being puzzled with this Objection, deſired Time, but he was preſſed to declare. The Decree of Pope Nicholas, relating to Images, was read to him, yet he refuſed to yield. Three others, Iconoclaſts, acknowledged their Error, and pronounced an Anathema againſt all ſuch Perſons as ſhould refuſe to honour Images. Theodorus, and all other Iconoclaſts, were anathematized by the Council, which repeated again their Excommunication againſt Photius and Gregory. And ſo ended this Seſſion, with the uſual Acclamations.

The ninth Seſſion was held Feb. 12*th.* in the Year following. There was admitted a Deputy from the Patriarch of Alexandria, who brought a Credential Letter from him to the Emperor; in which he ſignify'd, that he could not give his Judgment in the Difference betwixt the two Patriarchs of Conſtantinople, becauſe by Reaſon of his Remoteneſs he had no certain Information of it; that the Biſhops, and other Clergymen, under that Patriarchate, were the more proper Judges; that there were formerly two Patriarchs of Alexandria, when Narciſſus having withdrawn himſelf into the Wilderneſs, another Patriarch was ordained in his Place; that Narciſſus being returned, he ruled ſome Time with him, after whoſe Deceaſe, Alexander Biſhop of Jeruſalem, was choſen to govern together with Narciſſus the Church of Alexandria. After the Reading of this Letter, this Deputy (named Joſeph) was admitted as Vicar of the Patriarch of Alexandria; and was asked, Whether he was informed of what related to the Ordination of Ignatius, and the Depoſition of Photius? His Anſwer was, That he was not only informed of the Matter, but had himſelf examined all Paſſages relating to it, and approved of the ſame; and, to aſſure the Council of it, he tendered a Writing, which was read in full Council; whereby he formerly declared his Opinion in the Thing. Next, the Witneſſes were called in, who had appeared againſt Ignatius in the Synod held before Zachary and Radoaldus. One of them, called Theodorus, was examined firſt of all; who confeſſed, That he had been forced by an expreſs Order of Michael the Emperor, to ſwear falſly, and to depoſe againſt the Ordination of Ignatius; that he had confeſſed his Fault to an Abbot, who had therefore impoſed upon him a Penance, which he had performed. But being ask'd, Whether the Party who had laid that Penance upon him was a Prieſt, or not? He anſwer'd, He knew nothing on't; but that he was an Abbot, and had great Confidence in him. In ſhort, he owned this Council to be lawful. Another Witneſs, named Leo, did alſo averr, That he had falſly depoſed againſt the Ordination of Ignatius. Being asked, Whether he had done Penance for his Fault? He anſwered, He had not; but, if any were laid upon him, he would ſubmit to it; Declaring, That he owned this Council to be lawful. But being ask'd, Whether he did anathematize Photius, and all thoſe againſt whom the Council had pronounced an Anathema? Who am I, ſays he, to pronounce an Anathema? This is only done, adds he, in Caſe of Hereſie, whereas Photius is Orthodox. Wherefore, ſays he, ſhould I then anathematize him? The Patriarchs Legates anſwer'd, That his Actions were worſe than Hereſie it ſelf. Upon which Leo did anathematize him, and all thoſe whom the Council had anathematiz'd, when he ſaw that it might be done for other Cauſes than Hereſie. Eleven Witneſſes more were examin'd, who all confeſſed, They had been compelled to bear falſe Witneſs againſt Ignatius. Some of them had done Penance for it, and thoſe who had not, received it from the Council. As to the other Falſe Witneſſes then abſent, they had a general Penance laid upon them, To be two Years out of the Church, two Years with the Hearers without receiving the Communion, and to abſtain from Fleſh and Wine during theſe four Years, except Sundays and Holy-days; to ſtand up three Years with the Faithful, performing three times a Week the like Abſtinence; and were declared excommunicated, unleſs they came to acknowledge their Fault, and ſubmit to that Penance. 'Tis true, the Council left it to Ignatius the Patriarch, to moderate, as he ſhould think fit, the Rigour of the Penance.

After this another Buſineſs was brought in before the Council, relating to ſome Officers of Michael the Emperor, who had took upon them to wear the Sacerdotal Habit, and to perform the Office of a Prieſt; one named Theophilus, the Emperor's Maſter of Horſe, having laid the Goſpels upon their Heads, and ſaid Prayers in Deriſion of Ordination. Theophilus was dead; but three of thoſe Officers were found guilty of this Sacrilege: Who being brought before the Council, the Patriarchs Legates obliged them to confeſs their Crime, the Enormity whereof they expoſed unto them; and they freely ſubmitted to what Penance ſhould be laid upon them. Laſtly, The falſe Deputies of the Patriarchs, whoſe Names Photius had put in the Acts of his Council, were examined before the Deputy of the Patriarch of Alexandria.

In the tenth Seſſion, at which aſſiſted both the Emperors, the laſt day of February, the Canons were read that were to be authorized by this Council.

The 1*ſt.* confirms the Canons and Rules ſet down by the Apoſtles, by the general and particular Councils, and by the Holy Fathers and Doctors of the Church.

The ſecond exacts a due Obſervation and Execution of what had been decreed by the Popes Nicholas and Adrian, upon Pain of Depoſition of Clerks, Delinquents, and Excommunication of Laymen.

The 3*d.* requires the ſame Adoration to our Saviour's Image, as to the Book of the Goſpels; becauſe, as our Salvation is obtained by the Words contained in that Holy Book; ſo in Images, we learn by the Features and Colours, what the Scripture teaches by the Letters; and therefore they ought to be honoured according to ancient Tradition, with Worſhip relating to the Original; and as we honour the Goſpel, and the Figure of the Croſs, ſo ought we to honour the Virgin Mary's, and the Saints Images. This Canon ends with an Anathema againſt ſuch as ſhall not do it.

In the 4*th.* Canon, the Council condemns Photius, and declares, That he never was a Biſhop; That thoſe ordained, or raiſed to any Church-Dignity by him, ſhall be degraded; that the Churches conſecrated by him, or thoſe whom he had ordained, ſhall be conſecrated anew; and that all the former Acts of his Sacerdotal Functions ſhall be null.

By the 5*th.* 'tis prohibited to ordain a Man, who leaves the World and turns Monk, in order to become a Biſhop, or Patriarch, though he has continued ſome conſiderable Time in each Degree of the Orders. And as to thoſe who left the Secular Life without any ſuch Ambition, it is ordained, That none ſhall be raiſed to that Dignity, till they have been Readers the Space of one Year, Subdeacons two Years, Deacons three, and Prieſts four Years. A Time not requiſite to obſerve, in reſpect of thoſe that have been, from the very firſt, Clerks or Monks.

The 6*th.* pronounces an Anathema againſt Photius, for having intruded falſe Deputies, and againſt all thoſe who ſhall hereafter impoſe thus upon the Publick.

By the 7*th.* it is prohibited to ſuffer any Perſon, condemned by this Council, to paint Images, or teach in the Churches.

The 8*th.* contains a Prohibition to the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, to exact Declaratory Subſcriptions from Biſhops, that they ſhall own him for their Patriarch.

By the 9*th.* it is determined, That thoſe who have thus ſubſcribed for Photius, are not bound to ſtand to it.

By the 10*th.* it is prohibited to ſeparate from the Patriarch's Communion, or to refuſe to name him in the Celebration of the Holy Myſteries, before he has been condemned in a Council, how conſpicuous ſoever be his Crimes: Which extends likewiſe to Biſhops, in relation to their Metropolitans, as it does to theſe in relation to their Patriarch.

The 11*th.* pronounces an Anathema againſt ſuch as hold, That Man has two Souls.

The 12*th.* doth enjoyn the Depoſition of Biſhops, that ſhall prove to have been choſen by the Intrigues or Violence of Princes.

Of the Conteſt betwixt Photius and Ignatius.

By the 13*th*. 'tis order'd, That the principal Dignities of the Church of Conſtantinople ſhall be conferred upon ſuch Clerks of that Church, as have ſerved in leſſer Offices, and not to Strangers, or Perſons having Secular Employments.

The 14*th*. provides for the Honour of Epiſcopacy, by enjoyning the Biſhops not to meet great Men and Princes at a Diſtance from their Churches, or to light when they meet them, or to proſtrate themſelves before them.

The 15*th*. prohibits all Biſhops, upon Pain of being depoſed, to ſell, or alienate what belongs to their Churches, and pronounces an Anathema againſt the Purchaſers or Retainers thereof. If a Biſhop erects a Monaſtery out of his Church-Revenues, he ought to leave it to the Church. But if it be out of his own Revenues, he may diſpoſe of it; provided nevertheleſs, that it ſhall not become a Place of Habitation for Laymen.

The 16*th*. is to prevent the Impiety of ſuch as take upon them, in Deriſion, the Prieſtly Habit: Which Sacrilege is ſtrictly forbidden by this Council, enjoyning, That if any Emperor, or Prince, ſhould attempt for the Future to do any ſuch Thing, he ſhall be therefore liable to a Penance, and anathematized, if he refuſe to ſubmit to it: And if the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, or his Suffragan Biſhops, ſhould wink at it, they ſhall be depoſed; and that all thoſe who ſhall prove to have been any ways inſtrumental in ſuch an Impiety, ſhall do Penance, and be excluded during the Space of three Years, from the Communion of the Church, viz. one Year in each Degree of publick Penance.

The 17*th*. renewing the ſixth Canon of the Nicene Council, concerning the Rights and Prerogatives of the Patriarchs, declares, That both at Rome, and in the Patriarchates of Antioch and Jeruſalem, the Patriarchs ſhall be impowered to ſummon to their Councils all the Metropolitans whom they ordain or confirm, by giving them the Pallium, and likewiſe to reprove and correct them. That it ſhall be no lawful Excuſe for the Metropolitans to alledge, That their Princes will not give them Leave to go out of their Dominions, or that they are bound to hold a Synod twice a Year, becauſe they ought to perform the Good of a whole Dioceſs, that is, of ſeveral Provinces, procured by a Patriarchal Synod before that of one Province. That it is needleſs for Princes to be preſent at thoſe Synods, becauſe it does not appear, that they have aſſiſted at any but General Councils. It is therefore ordered by this Council, That the Metropolitans which are ſummoned by their Patriarch, and ſhall not appear two Months after his Summons, ſhall be excluded from Church-Communion, and depoſed, in Caſe they continue a whole Year in their Obſtinacy.

The 18*th*. doth pronounce an Anathema againſt all thoſe that ſhall take away from any Church her Rights or Privileges, obtained by the Grant of Princes, or enjoy'd during thirty Years.

The 19*th*. prohibits all Metropolitans to remove from their own into other Dioceſes, abuſing their Authority, to conſume the Revenues of the Churches of their Suffragan Biſhops. Yet it enjoyns, That Hoſpitality ſhall be uſed towards them, when they ſhall be obliged to go through any Dioceſs; but that they ſhall be provided only of ſuch Things as ſhall be found there; that they ſhall proceed on their Way, without making any long Stay, or exacting any Thing, either from the Biſhop, or Church. For, if all Biſhops be bound to uſe their Revenues with Parſimony, and not ſpend them for their own Uſe: How great is their Fault, who impoveriſh, or burden the Churches of other Biſhops?

The 20*th*. enjoyns, That thoſe who are in Poſſeſſion of Church-Lands, paying Rent for the ſame, ſhall not be turned out by Force, and without a due Courſe of Law, for want of Payment, but ſhall be ſummon'd; and, if in three Years Time they pay not what they owe, Application ſhall be made to the Judges, that by Vertue of a Judgment, the Church may be put into Poſſeſſion of her Land.

The 21*ſt*. declares, That all due Reſpect muſt be ſhewed to Patriarchs, and all Attempts to turn them out of their Sees are unlawful: That the Pope of Old Rome ought to be honoured and reſpected in the firſt Place, and next to him the Patriarchs of Conſtantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, and Jeruſalem. That none ought to attempt to write againſt the Pope, under Pretence of ſome Crimes, which they falſely impute to him, as Photius, and, before him, Dioſcorus, have done; that all thoſe, who, in Imitation of them, ſhall caſt any Obloquy, by Word of Mouth, or in Writing, againſt St. Peter's Holy See, the Prince of the Apoſtles, ſhall be condemned, as thoſe two Hereticks are; and that if any Prince attempt to depoſe him, he ſhall be excommunicated. But if a General Council being met, there happens any Difference with the Biſhop of Rome, he ought to be conferred with about the Matter, and his Anſwers be had, to make the beſt of it on either ſide, and no raſh Judgment to be paſſed againſt the Supreme Biſhop.

By the 22*d*. it is ordered, That Princes and great Men ſhall have no Hand in the Election of Patriarchs, Metropolitans, or Biſhops, but ſhall receive him whom the Biſhops have choſen. Yet if any Layman be invited to join his Aſſiſtance in the Election, he may lawfully do it.

The 23*d*. charges the Biſhops not to give away what belongs to other Churches; nor to ordain thoſe Men Prieſts or Clerks in Churches, that have no Dependency upon them, nor to perform their Functions in any other Dioceſs, without the Leave of the Biſhop of the Place.

Of the Conteſt betwixt Photius and Ignatius.

The 24*th*. is againſt the Metropolitans, that ſend for their Suffragan Biſhops to perform their Functions, while they are taken up with Secular Employs. The Patriarch is ordered to puniſh them; and, if they perſiſt in their Delinquency, to depoſe them.

The 25*th*. declares, That all Biſhops and Prieſts, Deacons and Subdeacons, ordained by Ignatius, or Methodius, who ſtill adhere to Photius, ſhall be depoſed, and made incapable for ever of all Sacerdotal Functions; but, if they repent hereafter, they ſhall be received into the Church-Communion, but not reſtored to their Dignity.

The 26*th*. allows the Freedom to any Prieſt or Deacon, depoſed by his Biſhop, to appeal to his Metropolitan; who ſhall ſend for the Biſhop, and examine the Clerk's Caſe in a Synod, in order to confirm or annul the Judgment given againſt him. It gives likewiſe to Biſhops, judged by their Metropolitans, the Liberty of a Recourſe to the Patriarch, as the Judge of the Cauſes of the Metropolitans within his Patriarchate; and excludes both the Provincial Biſhops and the Neighbouring Metropolitans, from taking any Cognizance thereof.

The 27*th*. being the laſt of all, enjoyns all Biſhops to make uſe of their Pallium at proper Times and Places; and not to abuſe it through Pride or Ambition, by wearing it at all Times, and uſing it in all their Functions; and that all ſuch as have been Monks ſhall keep ſome Marks of their Profeſſion.

Theſe Canons being read, the Legates propoſed, That the Definition of the Council ſhould be read, which contained a Confeſſion of Faith, or a Symbol of a pretty large Extent; an Acknowledgment of the ſeven firſt General Councils; the Condemnation of ſome Hereticks therein condemned; the Condemnation of Photius, and the Approbation of what had been enacted in this Council. This Definition being unanimouſly approved of by all the Biſhops, the Emperor asked, Whether any one amongſt them had any thing to ſay againſt the Canons and Decrees of this eighth General Council, becauſe whoever ſhould oppoſe them, after the Breaking up of the Aſſembly, ſhould be condemned to Baniſhment. At the ſame Time he exhorted the Biſhops to give wholſome Inſtructions to their Flocks, and all Clergymen to keep Peace amongſt them, and not to depart from the Council's Deciſions. The Laymen he charged to forbear diſputing about Church Matters, the Cognizance whereof belongs to the Patriarchs, Biſhops, and Doctors of the Church: Which Exhortations were approved of by all the Biſhops. Laſtly, The Pope's Legates propoſed, That the Acts of this Council ſhould be ſubſcribed unto, and invited the Emperors to do it in the firſt Place. But Baſilius anſwer'd, That he ought not to ſubſcribe, but after the Biſhops, in Imitation of Conſtantine; yet, ſeeing they did him that Honour, he was willing to ſign next to the Deputies of the Patriarchs. So Donatus Biſhop of Oſtia ſigned firſt; next to him the other Deputies from Rome, then the Deputies of Alexandria, Antioch, Jeruſalem, and Conſtantinople; and next to theſe the Emperors Baſilius, Conſtantine, and Leo; and laſtly, all the Biſhops, every one according to his Rank. Five ſeveral Copies were ſubſcribed unto. The Officers and Noblemen who had aſſiſted at this Council, declared their Abhorrency of all the Actings of Photius againſt Pope Nicholas and Ignatius the Patriarch; and that they freely ſubmitted to the Deciſions of the Council: Which was accordingly recorded by the Regiſters; and ſo the Council broke up, with the uſual Acclamations.

The Pope's Legates did not ſubſcribe, till after a Review made of all the Acts, by Anaſtaſius the Library-Keeper, who was well skill'd in the Greek Tongue; who, having obſerved, that the Commendations given in Pope Adrian's Letter, to the Emperor of the Weſt, were razed out, they made a Scruple to ſubſcribe, and complained of it. The Greeks, unwilling to own the Emperor of the Weſt, refuſed to have them inſerted; and, to palliate the Matter, alledged, That in a Council, God's Praiſe only, not the Commendations of Princes, ought to be mentioned. A Pretence not very taking from Perſons that continually repeated their Acclamations in Honour of the Emperors. This Debate however obliged the Legates, fearful to do any Thing that might diſpleaſe the Pope, to ſubſcribe, with this Reſtriction, that they gave their Conſent to the Acts of this Council.

The Council afterwards cauſed Circular Letters to be drawn, to acquaint the whole World with the Condemnation of Photius, and the Reſtoration of Ignatius. One was particularly directed to Pope Adrian, full of Thanks and Approbation of the whole Proceedings of the Holy See in this Matter. The Emperors writ likewiſe two Letters about this Council; one to the Patriarchs, to let them know the Succeſs of their Meeting; and the other to the Pope, full of Thanks and Commendations.

Ignatius

Of the Conteſt betwixt Photius and Ignatius.

Conteſtations upon Bulgaria.

Ignatius the Patriarch writ in particular a Letter to Pope Adrian, wherein he prays him to conſent, That the Readers ordain'd by Photius might be admitted into Holy Orders, and deſired Favour for Paul, the Keeper of the Records of the Church of Conſtantinople, and for Theodorus Metropolitan of Caria.

The Council being ended, ſome Biſhops of the Patriarchate of Conſtantinople went to wait upon the Emperor, and complained, The Church of Conſtantinople was made too much ſubject to the Church of Rome; adding, That the Uncertainty that was obſerved in the Legates Subſcriptions, might give Occaſion to alter what was paſſed, and that they could not recover their Liberty, if they did not recover the Forms they were fain to ſubſcribe unto. Whereupon thoſe Forms were taken out of the Hands of thoſe to whom the Legates had committed the Care of them; and they found it exceeding difficult to recover them, though they made uſe of the Intereſt of the Ambaſſadors of the Weſtern Empire, who preſſed it ſo hard upon the Emperor, that he found himſelf obliged to get them returned into their Hands. Three days after this, the Emperor ſent for the Pope's Legates into a Place where Ignatius the Patriarch, and the Deputies of the other Patriarchs were met together. An Envoy of Bulgaria, Peter by Name, was called in; who acquainted the Aſſembly, That the Prince of Bulgaria was very joyful to learn, that they had met in Council for the Good of the Church; and, that he thanked the Legates of the Holy See of Rome for having writ to him in their Way hither. After theſe Compliments, he asked the Patriarchs Vicars, in the Name of the Bulgarians, What Church they muſt be ſubject to? To which the Pope's Legates anſwer'd immediately, That the Bulgarians had been firſt inſtructed in the Chriſtian Faith by the Church of Rome, which had ſent unto them Biſhops, and Prieſts, according to their Deſire. The Envoy owned, That it was true, the Bulgarians had firſt apply'd themſelves to the Church of Rome, which they had owned hitherto; but that this was the Time to decide with the Patriarchs Legates, to which of the two Churches it was moſt reaſonable they ſhould ſubmit themſelves, the Church of Rome, or that of Conſtantinople. The Pope's Legates anſwer'd, They had made an End of thoſe Things they were ſent for; and that they could not regulate any Thing farther, or conſent to any Regulation prejudicial to the Church of Rome, concerning ſuch Matters as they had no Power to treat of: But, the whole Country of Bulgaria being full of Latin Prieſts, their Opinion was, That they ought to ſubmit themſelves to no Church but that of Rome.

The Deputies of the Patriarchs of the Eaſt asked the Bulgarians, Whoſe Country Bulgaria was, when conquer'd by them? Whether they had, at that Time, Greek or Latin Prieſts? To which they anſwer'd, That they conquer'd it from the Greeks, amongſt whom they found Greek Biſhops. Whence the Patriarchs Deputies inferred, That thoſe Biſhops were ordained by the Patriarch of Conſtantinople. But it was reply'd by the Pope's Legates, That, though they were Greeks, it did not follow, that they were ordained by the Patriarch of Conſtantinople; that the Difference between Laymen did not make any Confuſion in the Eccleſiaſtical Order; and that the Latin Church had Greeks in ſeveral Places who were ſubject to her. The Deputies of the Patriarchs retorted, They cou'd not deny but that Bulgaria was a Member of the Greek Empire, which the Legates granted; but affirmed withal, That the Diviſion of the Church does not agree therein with that of the Empire. Being asked, Upon what they grounded the Right of the Church of Rome, they anſwer'd, Firſt, That it was plain by the Decretals of the Biſhops of Rome, that the two Epyrus's, Theſſaly, and Dardania, to which the Bulgarians gave the Name of Bulgaria, had formerly belonged to the Church of Rome. Secondly, That the Bulgarians had voluntarily ſubmitted themſelves to the Holy See. Thirdly, That the Holy See had ſent unto them Latin Prieſts and Biſhops, and that they had yet actually a Latin Biſhop. That the Right of the Church of Rome being ſo well grounded, and her Poſſeſſion ſo long, ſhe ought not to be deprived of it. The Deputies of the Patriarchs asked them, Upon which of thoſe Pretences they grounded themſelves. To which they anſwer'd, They did not own them for Judges, who were under the Holy See, and that they had no Power to treat of this Matter. Notwithſtanding which Proteſtation, the Deputies of the Patriarchs made this Deciſion; That it was unreaſonable for the Romans, who diſowned the Greek Empire, and were confederated with the French, to pretend to a Right of Ordination in their Emperor's Dominions; and therefore their Judgment was, That that Part of Bulgaria which formerly belonged to the Empire, and had received Greek Prieſts and Biſhops, ſhould be reſtored to the Church of Conſtantinople. The Pope's Legates on the other ſide declared, That they made void that pretended Judgment given by the Deputies of the Eaſt, and conjured Ignatius the Patriarch to forbear ſending Prieſts or Biſhops into Bulgaria; and preſented to him, at the ſame Time, a Letter from Pope Adrian upon that Subject: Which being read by Ignatius, not without ſome Reluctancy, he anſwer'd in general Terms, That he would not engage himſelf in that Affair.

Of the Conteſt betwixt Photius and Ignatius.

The Pope's Legates taken by the Sclavonians.

The Emperor, although he was provoked by the Oppoſition of the Pope's Legates, concealed, for ſome Time, his Reſentment. Having treated them ſumptuouſly, he diſmiſſed them with rich Preſents; but took no Care to provide for their Safety, and ſent them away without a Convoy. So that they were intercepted by the Sclavonians, who ſeized upon all they had, and, amongſt other Things, of the Authentick Acts of the Council. In ſhort, they were very ill treated, and kept ſome Time in Captivity: But, being at laſt releaſed, upon preſſing Letters from the Pope, and the Weſtern Emperor, they returned to Rome at the latter End of the Year. They gave the Pope an Account of their Voyage, and deliver'd unto him Ignatius's Letter, and ſome Writings they had recover'd from the Bulgarians, with thoſe they had put into the Hands of Sippo, Miniſter of State, and Anaſtaſius the Library-keeper, which fell not into the ſame Danger, but preſerved, and brought the Acts of the Council entire to Rome.

Pope Adrian's Letter.

Pope Adrian was very well pleaſed with the Tranſactions of the late Council, but no leſs diſſatisfied with what had paſſed ſince, as he expreſſed it in the Letter he writ to the Emperor, dated Nov. 10. 871. In which, having praiſed their Piety and Zeal, he makes great Complaints of their Neglect of his Legates, as to their Safety, being left without a Convoy, to the Mercy of Barbarians, by whom they were ſtript, made Captives, and very ill uſed. But that which touches him moſt to the Quick, is the Buſineſs of Bulgaria, complaining of the Attempt made to extort it from the Juriſdiction of the Holy See, and that Ignatius has had the Confidence to ordain a Biſhop, in order to ſend him thither. To which he adds, That, if they continue in that Reſolution, he muſt vindicate his Right, and make void the Ordination of all ſuch as ſhall perform any Epiſcopal or Eccleſiaſtick Functions in that Country by the Miſſion of the Biſhop of Conſtantinople. As to Ignatius's Requeſts to him, he declares, That he cannot alter any Thing in that Matter, nor derogate from the Ordinances of his Predeceſſors, or the Council; for, it was not the Practice of the Popes to abuſe, according to their Fancy, the Decrees of their Fathers, as did ſome Greeks, who uſed the Pope's Decrees as long as they favoured their Deſigns, but laid them aſide, when they found them contrary.

New Troubles upon the Account of Bulgaria.

This however hindred not the Greeks from taking Poſſeſſion of Bulgaria, and turning out of it the Latin Prieſts and Biſhops. But the Popes did not loſe all Hopes to recover it. In order to which, John VIII. next Succeſſor to Adrian, ſent in the Year 878. two Legates to Conſtantinople, viz. Peter and Eugenius; the firſt, Biſhop of Ancona, this of Oſtia. The Pretence was, To bring the Church of Conſtantinople into a peaceable Temper, then ſtill divided by the Faction of Photius. But he charged them to go to the Prince of Bulgaria, and writ, at the ſame Time, a very poſitive Letter to Ignatius the Patriarch, the Subſtance of which was, That he now warned him the third Time to yield up Bulgaria to the Holy See of Rome, and thirty days after the Receipt of this Letter, to call from thence all Biſhops, Prieſts, and other Eccleſiaſticks by him ordained. If not, he would exclude him from the Communion of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, as long as he perſiſted to keep that Country under his Juriſdiction; and, if he continued in his Obſtinacy, he would declare him deprived and fallen from the Patriarchal Dignity, wherein he had been kept by the Favour of the Holy See. At the ſame Time the Pope writ two Letters to Michael King of the Bulgarians, exhorting him to ſubmit to the Church of Rome; and required of Count Peter, that he would uſe his utmoſt Endeavours to perſuade that Prince to it. Laſtly, he commanded all Greek Prieſts and Biſhops, then in Bulgaria, to withdraw themſelves within the Space of thirty days, declaring them deprived of their Functions, if they refuſed to do it within that Time.

Photius returns into Conſtantinople and is reſtor'd.

Photius, relying upon this Diviſion between the Pope and Ignatius, attempted his Reſtoration; and, having by his Artifices procured the Emperor's Favour, with the Aſſiſtance of Theodorus Santarabenus, he returned to Conſtantinople, Ignatius yet living. 'Tis ſaid, This Patriarch offer'd him to write in his Behalf to all the Biſhops under his Patriarchate, and procure, that he ſhould have his Abſolution, provided, he would forbear all Sacerdotal Functions; but Photius refuſed it, being reſolved to attempt his Reſtoration to the Patriarchal Dignity. Thus, inſtead of reconciling himſelf with Ignatius, he declared againſt him, and ordained in Magnaurus's Palace, Ignatius yet living. But this Patriarch dying, Octob. 23*d.* 878. Photius went into St. Sophia's Church with armed Men; forcing a great many Biſhops, Clerks and Monks, to communicate with him, and to own him as their Patriarch; depoſing, and perſecuting all that refuſed; turning out all that had been ordained by Ignatius, and reſtoring them to their reſpective Stations, after he had re-ordained them. At the ſame Time he took Care to confer the principal Dignities of the Church upon his own Creatures. And, to prevent all Oppoſition on the Papal ſide, with Threats and Preſents he prevailed with the two Legates, to tell publickly, both the Clergy and People, That they were come to depoſe Ignatius, and to declare Photius their Patriarch.

Of the Conteſt betwixt Photius and Ignatius.

Pope John the VIII. gives his Conſent to Photius's Reſtoration

To bring the Holy See to conſent to Photius's Reſtoration, Baſilius the Emperor ſent Ambaſſadors to Pope John the VIII. to deſire of him, That he would receive Photius into his Communion, and own him as Patriarch. Three Monks were alſo ſent to deſire the ſame Thing, in the Name of the Patriarch of Jeruſalem; and Photius ſent Theodorus Santarabenus, to bring about this Accommodation; who were all well received, and had a favourable Audience from the Pope. The Eaſtern Emperor, whoſe Forces began then to be conſiderable in Italy, promiſed him to ſecure the Coaſt of Campania from the Irruptions of the Saracens, and to yield him up Bulgaria. To juſtifie the Reſtoration of Photius, the Neceſſity of it was urged, for the Good of the Peace, and the Re-union of Mens Minds. To which his Partiſans added, That Ignatius himſelf was for it; and a Paper was produced, under his Name, whereby he deſired the Pope's Conſent to it.

The Pope, in Anſwer to the Emperor, ſent him Word, That Ignatius of happy Memory being dead, he conſented, by Reaſon of the preſent Neceſſity, and for the Good of the Peace, that Photius ſhould be owned as Patriarch, provided that he gave Satisfaction, and begged Pardon before a Council; That he declared him abſolved, with all the Churchmen of his Party, from all Cenſures and Condemnations againſt them; and that he thought it convenient, to have him re-inſtated in the See of Conſtantinople; but that he expected, no Layman or Courtier ſhould, for the Future, be raiſed to the Patriarchal Dignity of Conſtantinople; and that Cardinal-Prieſts, or Deacons of that Church, ſhould be choſen for that See. To which he added, That he granted this, but on Condition that Bulgaria ſhould be reſigned up to him, and that the Patriarch of Conſtantinople ſhould make no Claim to it. Laſtly, He exhorted the Emperor to own, and bear Reſpect to the Patriarch, and to endeavour the Re-union of the Biſhops, and the whole Clergy with Photius; declaring all thoſe excommunicated, That ſhould refuſe to hold Communion with him, after three ſeveral Notices. This Letter, bearing Date the 16*th*. of Auguſt, 879. was carried by one Peter, a Prieſt, who was ſent to Conſtantinople, with the Deputies come from thence. He had alſo, under his Care, a private Letter to Photius, wherein the Pope expreſſed unto him the Joy he received by the Reunion and Peace of the Church of Conſtantinople, and his Conſent to his Reſtoration, provided that he begged Pardon in a Synod, and reſtored Bulgaria to the Holy See. Other Letters he was charged with, one directed to the Clergy of Conſtantinople; another to the Patriarchs of the Eaſt, upon the ſame Subject; and a third, directed to thoſe who ſhould refuſe to hold Communion with Photius, wherein he warned them to acknowledge him as their Patriarch; if not, that he had charged his Legate to excommunicate them.

He writ in particular to the two Legates he had ſent to Conſtantinople, and let them know he was not ſatisfy'd with their raſh Approving of Photius, without his Order or Knowledge; that however he joyned unto them Peter, Cardinal-Prieſt, that they might labour together for the Peace of the Church, according to the Letters and Inſtructions he had given him. By which Inſtructions, they were to make their firſt Viſit to the Emperor, and deliver him the Letter they had for him; the next day to viſit Photius, and give him his Letter, with Salutations from him, and a Declaration of the Command they had received from him, to own him for Peace-ſake, as Patriarch, and to make all the Churches own him, provided he received all thoſe that ſhould be willing to hold Communion with him, though his Adverſaries before. That a Council ſhould be called, in which they ſhould preſide with the Patriarch, and the Deputies of the Patriarchs of the Eaſt, and wherein ſhould be preſent the Metropolitans and Biſhops of the Patriarchate of Conſtantinople. In it he order'd, That there ſhould be read his Letter to the Emperor, and the Biſhops be asked, Whether they approved of it; which done, they ſhould declare, That the Holy Father having the Care of all the Churches, and being deſirous to procure Peace amongſt them, had ſent them thither to make up their Breaches, to reconcile thoſe that were at Variance, and raiſe up them that are fallen; That they might all with one Accord glorifie the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt. Then they were to propoſe the following Canons, viz. That after Photius's Deceaſe, no Layman ſhould be raiſed to the Patriarchal Dignity; that Photius ſhould ſend no Pallium into Bulgaria, nor make any Ordination there. 'Tis very probable, the Pope had enjoyned Photius to beg Pardon of the Council, as is mention'd in the Pope's true Letters. But this Article is not found in the Memoir which we have only from Photius, nor in the Letters of Pope John the VIII. which he cauſed to be read in the Council, and out of which he had razed this Article with ſome others, as he had added unto it an Article againſt the eighth Council, to be found alſo in this Memoir, falſify'd by Photius in the like Manner. All this was done by the Pope in a Synod held at Rome, conſiſting of 17. Biſhops of Italy, 4. Cardinal-Prieſts, and 2. Deacons, whoſe Hands are to be found at the End of this Memoir.

Of the Conteſt betwixt Photius and Ignatius.

The Council confirms the Reſtoration of Photius.

Peter being arrived at Conſtantinople in 879. Photius ſummon'd thither a full Council, to which he gave the Name of the VIII. Oecumenical Council; which, by his Account, conſiſted of 383. Biſhops. The firſt Thing he declared, at the Opening of the Aſſembly, was, That Pope John the VIII. had received him into his Communion; firſt, by his two firſt Legates, Paul and Eugenius; next by Peter the Prieſt, whom he had ſent purpoſely for it. Whereupon John, Biſhop of Heraclea, complained, That the Church of Rome had occaſioned all the Troubles befallen to the Church of Conſtantinople, blaming the Conduct of the Popes Nicholas and Adrian, and exalting that of John the VIII.

In the ſecond Seſſion, held the 16*th*. of November, the Pope's Letters to the Emperor and to Photius were read: But ſo falſify'd, that what concerned Ignatius was razed out, as were alſo the Injunction to Photius, to beg Pardon before the Council, ſome advantageous Expreſſions about the Holy See, and what related to the Reſtitution of Bulgaria: Which was ſupply'd with high Commendations of the Emperor and Photius, and the Condemnation of the eighth Council. Theſe Letters being read, Photius extolled his Kindneſs which he pretended himſelf to have to Ignatius the Patriarch, and promiſed that he would honour his Memory. After this, a Letter from Michael the Patriarch of Antioch, upon this Subject, was read; wherein he required alſo the Condemnation of the eighth Council. Then was called in Thomas, Archbiſhop of Cæſarea, the only Deputy from the Eaſt, that had aſſiſted at the eighth Council. Photius cauſed him to renounce what he had both ſaid and done in that Council. The Letters from the Patriarchs of Jeruſalem and Antioch to Photius, were likewiſe read; wherein they gave him very high Commendations, and owned him as Patriarch. This Seſſion ended with the reading of a Letter from Abramius Archbiſhop of Amydus, who writ very ſharply againſt the eighth Council.

In the third Seſſion, held Nov. the 18*th*. the Letters from Pope John the VIII. to the Church of Conſtantinople, to the Biſhops of that Patriarchate, and to the Patriarchs of the Eaſt, were read. In which, expreſſing his Deſire to procure the Peace of their Church, the Biſhops of that Patriarchate declared thereupon, that they had Peace amongſt them, before the Coming of that Letter; and ſome Mention being made of Bulgaria, they judged it reaſonable that Affair ſhould be referred to the Emperor, the Bounds of the Empire being concerned therein. A Letter from the Patriarch of Jeruſalem to the Emperor was likewiſe read, wherein having deplored the Miſeries and Calamities of his Church, he prayed that Prince to aſſiſt it with his Princely Charity. Laſtly, The Pope's Inſtructions to his Legates, an Abſtract whereof we have already made, came alſo to be read.

In the fourth Seſſion there appeared a Deputy from the Patriarch of Antioch, who brought ſome Letters from that Patriarch, and that of Jeruſalem, both written in the Behalf of Photius. Wherein they declared, That the Deputies, who had aſſiſted at the eighth Council, in the Name of their reſpective Churches, had been ſent by the Saracens. Theſe Letters being read, the Noblemen came in who had aſſiſted at the ſaid Council, and expreſſed their Sorrow for what they had done, being (as they pretended) impoſed upon by the falſe Deputies of the Patriarchs. Five Articles were read, which were propoſed in the Name of the Pope's Legates. The firſt, about the Reſtitution of Bulgaria to the See of Rome: The ſecond, that for the Future no Layman ſhould be elected Patriarch of Conſtantinople: The third, that no Clerk of another Church ſhould be choſen: The fourth, to abrogate the Council held againſt Photius: And the fifth, that thoſe ſhould be excommunicated who refuſed to hold Communion with Photius. All which Articles, except the firſt about Bulgaria, were approved of by the Council.

In the fifth Seſſion, held Jan. the 26*th*. 880. Photius complained, That the Church of Rome ſeemed unwilling to receive the ſeventh General Council. But the Pope's Legates having ſatisfy'd the Council in that Matter, it was decreed unanimouſly, That that Council ſhould ſtand for the ſeventh Oecumenical.

After this, Metrophanes, Metropolitan of Syria, was ſummoned to appear, for refuſing to hold Communion with Photius. Whereupon the Pope's Legates required a Canon to be made, diſabling Photius from receiving ſuch as had been excommunicated or depoſed by the Biſhop of Rome, and the Biſhop of Rome from receiving thoſe that had been condemned or excommunicated by Photius: This was the firſt Canon. The ſecond was made upon the Remonſtrance of Photius, and order'd, that Biſhops that turned Monks, ſhould not retain their Biſhopricks, and diſabled them from the Recovery thereof. A third Canon was added, againſt ſuch as ſhould impriſon, or abuſe Biſhops. This done, the Acts of the Council were ſigned by the Legates, and all the Biſhops.

May the 10*th*. they met together in the Emperor's Palace, in whoſe Preſence was read the Symbol, or Creed of the Council

Of the Conteſt between Photius and Ignatius.

Council of Conſtantinople, with a Prohibition to add any thing to it; which was againſt the Latin Creed, to which was added the Filioque. Baſilius the Emperor with the Princes his Sons, ſubſcribed to this, and diſapproved, by his Subſcription, all that had been tranſacted againſt Photius.

May the 13*th*. the Biſhops met again in the Great Church, to whom was read the Creed agreed upon in the laſt Meeting, and repeated Anathema's pronounced againſt all Perſons that ſhould either add to, or take any Thing from it. Thus you have an Abſtract of the Acts of this Council, publiſhed by Baronius, and taken out of the Acts themſelves, the Manuſcripts whereof are to be found in the Vatican Library, and that of the Colonni's.

The Pope's Legates returned to Rome, with Letters from the Emperor and Photius to the Pope; to whom they made their Report of Photius's Reſtoration, and of the peaceable State wherein they left the Churches of Conſtantinople. The Pope, in his Anſwer, congratulated the Emperor for it, and returned him his Thanks, at the ſame time, for his Care in ſending Galleys for the Defence of the Territory of Rome againſt the Saracens; for his reſtoring to the Church of Rome St. Sergius's Monaſtery in the Neighbourhood of Conſtantinople; and, laſtly, for having reſtored Bulgaria to the See of Rome. He prays him to continue his Good Will to that See; and adds, at the End of the Letter, that he allows of the Acts of the Council at Conſtantinople for the Reſtoration of Photius; but, if his Legates had any way treſpaſſed upon his Orders, he diſowns all ſuch Actings, and declares them void. This Letter bore Date, Auguſt the thirteenth, 880.

Pope John diſowns what his Legates had done.

He alſo congratulated Photius upon his Reſtoration, for which he told him he was obliged to the Holy See; but blamed him for refuſing to make a Publick Acknowledgment of his Fault, and beg the Council's Pardon. He enjoyns him to ſubmit himſelf, and the Faithful to the Holy See; and ends his Letter with the ſame Clauſe contained in that to the Emperor: Which ſhews, that he was not, as yet, fully informed of all thoſe Things the Legates had conſented to. And indeed, when he underſtood how they had been ſurpriſed, he went up to the Choir of his Church, from whence he fulminated his Excommunication againſt all Perſons that ſhould not receive the Condemnation of Photius; and, having depoſed his Legates, he ſent Marinus, who had been twice already Legate in the Eaſt, to repair the Miſchief done by the late Legates. Marinus being arrived at Conſtantinople, did ſtrenuouſly maintain what had been done under Pope Nicholas, and in the eighth Council againſt Photius, refuſing to conſent to the Abrogation of the Acts of that Council. The Emperor incenſed at his Preſumption, in diſannulling what the other had ratified, cauſed him to be caſt into Priſon; and having kept him there the Space of thirty days, thinking that Mortification would make him change his Mind, he ſent him back to Rome, where his Conſtancy was ſoon requited. For Pope John dying in the Beginning of the Year 882, he was choſen to be his next Succeſſor on the firſt of February.

The following Popes are againſt the Reſtoration of Photius.

Being raiſed to that High Station, the firſt Thing that he did was, to condemn Photius again; to declare void all the Epiſcopal Functions he had took upon him; and to abrogate all the Acts of the falſe Council of Photius. His Pontificate having laſted but one year and odd days, he had for his Succeſſor Adrian, the third of that Name, to whom Baſilius the Emperor made preſent Applications, to get him to own Photius. But this Pope, on the contrary, did openly declare againſt him, and confirmed what his Predeceſſor had done. Baſilius, provoked by this Denial, writ Adrian a Letter full of Invectives againſt the Biſhops of Rome, but chiefly againſt Marinus; affirming; that he could not legally be choſen Biſhop of Rome, becauſe of his being Biſhop of another Church. This Letter was deliver'd to Pope Stephen the V*th*. who ſucceeded Adrian in 885. Stephen made a ſober, but ſmart Anſwer to the Emperor; in which he tells him, that he wonders how he could write in ſo violent a Style to his Predeceſſor; for he could not be ignorant, that the Sacerdotal Dignity was not any way ſubject to the Regal Power; That, though the Emperor repreſented Chriſt upon Earth, 'tis only in reſpect to Civil and Temporal Things; And that, as God has given him a Supreme Power over the Things of this World, ſo has he given, by St. Peter, to his Succeſſors, a Supreme Authority over Spiritual Things. That it was the Emperor's Part to deſtroy with the Sword the Impiety and Barbarity of Tyrants; to do Juſtice to his Subjects; to make Laws; and to have Armies both by Sea and Land; but that the Care of Chriſt's Flock is committed to the High-Prieſts; a Dignity as much above that of Kings, as Heavenly Things are above Spiritual. He exhorts him to follow the Pope's Decrees, and to reſpect their Dignity. He charges with Blaſphemy all that have offer'd to calumniate his Predeceſſor Marinus, and ſharply rebukes him for his giving Credit to ſuch Calumnies. He asks him, by whom he was conſtituted a Judge of the Holy High-Prieſts? And how he knows that Marinus was not a Biſhop? He excuſes his being tranſlated, by ſeveral Inſtances. Moreover, he affirms, that the Pope is not liable to any Man's Judgment; and ſays, that Pope Sylveſter cauſed a Declaration of it to be made by his Legates in the Nicene Council: A Fact that cannot be proved. He juſtifies all the Proceedings of Marinus and his Predeceſſors againſt Photius, exhorts the Emperor to put him out of his See, and to fill his Place by another Patriarch. He complains of the ill Uſage Marinus had at his Court. Laſtly, He commends the Emperor for deſigning one of his Sons for the Sacerdotal Office; and requires his Aſſiſtance for the Defence of Rome and all Italy, both by Sea and Land, againſt the Deſcents and Inroads of the Barbarians.

Of the Conteſt between Photius and Ignatius.

This Letter came to Conſtantinople after Baſilius's Deceaſe, and was delivered to his Son Leo, who ſucceeded him in 886. This Prince was an Enemy to Photius, upon a Jealouſie he had that Photius had made uſe of Santarabenus to put him out of his Father's Favour, who had forced him to a private Life. Glad therefore of this Opportunity, at his Acceſſion to the Imperial Throne, to be revenged of his Enemies, he preſently turn'd out Photius, and baniſhed him into a Monaſtery in Armenia; cauſed Santarabenus's Eyes to be put out, ſent him into Exile to Athens, and cauſed Stephen, his own Brother, to be choſen Patriarch of Conſtantinople: Which Election was approved of by Stylianus Biſhop of Neocæſarea, and by the other Biſhops that were Photius's Adverſaries: who in their own Names, and the Names of the Clergy of Conſtantinople, together with the Abbots and Monks of the Empire, ſent a Letter to Pope Stephen. In which having related all that had paſſed from the Beginning, in Photius's Caſe, and how Leo the Emperor had no ſooner aſcended the Throne of his Father, but he preſently turn'd him out, and by that means delivered them from the Miſeries they groaned under for not ſubmitting to him; they earneſtly intreat him to pardon thoſe who had held Communion with Photius a ſecond time: by which Indulgence, he would ſave a World of People, proving that it had been practiſed by the Church upon ſeveral Occaſions. However they acquaint him, that they would not ſuffer the Biſhops of Photius's Faction to perform any Sacerdotal Functions, whatever Permiſſion they pretended to have from the Holy See, till they had a certain Account of the Pope's Pleaſure in it; and that the reſt who had ſubmitted to Photius, and were compelled to do it, were the more excuſable. The Emperor writ alſo to the Pope; but only acquainted him by his Letters, that Photius had withdrawn himſelf of his own accord, and had embraced a private Life.

Photius returned out again.

Letters from Pope Stephen to the Greek Biſhops.

Pope Stephen, in his Anſwer to the Biſhops that had writ to him, told them, they had juſt Cauſe to turn out Photius, as by their Letters he was informed they had done; but that the Emperor having ſignified unto him, that he had withdrawn himſelf, he was perplexed what Anſwer to give. That there was a vaſt Difference betwixt being turned out, and quitting a Dignity of his own accord. Therefore not being able to paſs his Judgment upon the Matter without a full Information, he had put it off; and thought it neceſſary that Biſhops ſhould be ſent on both ſides, that all things being duely examined, and the Truth found out, he might order that which ſhould be moſt acceptable unto God.

The Biſhops Anſwer to Pope Stephen.

The Biſhops anſwered Pope Stephen, that the Difference found in their Letter and that of the Emperor, came from hence, that Photius's Friends, who acknowledged him for Patriarch, were obliged to give it out, that he had voluntarily quitted his Patriarchate: Which they did not, who followed the Judgment of the Popes Nicholas and Adrian, and their Legates; for they look'd upon him only as a Layman, and ſaid, he would never have voluntarily left it. They wondered, that having ſaid in the Beginning of his Letter, that Photius had been rejected, he ſhould ſay at the latter End, that he muſt be brought into Judgment, as if it were doubtful whether he is a Biſhop or not: That, if he were brought again into Judgment, he would be found ſtill more guilty; and to paſs by other Matters, they did not think it convenient to pardon what the World knew he had done againſt Marinus. Laſtly, They repeat their former Entreaties in behalf of thoſe whom Photius had forced into his Communion, and pray him to ſend Circular Letters to the Patriarchs of the Eaſt, that they may approve of, and confirm the Condeſcenſion which he had uſed towards thoſe Perſons. To which they add, that it was the Emperor's Deſire, who by rejecting of Photius had delivered them from his Perſecution; and that it was no way repugnant to the Canons, Photius being rejected, to admit to Penance ſuch as had been compelled to hold Communion with him. This Letter was delivered to Pope Formoſus, who ſucceeded Stephen, Anno 891.

Formoſus's Reply to the Biſhops Letter to Pope Stephen.

This Pope anſwered to Stylianus, that he was not plain enough in his Letter; that he deſired Favour, without telling the Manner, or for whom, whether for Laymen or Biſhops. If for Laymen, he was willing to grant it; but if for Biſhops, and that they might remain in their Dignity, he ought to obſerve, that Photius could not confer an Epiſcopal Dignity which he had not; that he could confer Nothing but the Condemnation he had received; that praying ing in Behalf of thoſe he had ordained, was to countenance him, who had ordained them; that on the contrary, the Church of Rome ought to inflict ſevere Penalties upon ſuch Perſons, to purge thoroughly by that means the Church of Conſtantinople; that however his Clemency and Lenity inclined him to the Toleration of ſome Things, but that there were others that could not be diſpenſed with; that he had appointed Landulphus Biſhop of Capua, and Romanus his Legate à Latere, with whom they ſhould conſult about Matters, joyning with them Theophilactus Biſhop of Ancyra, and Peter in whom he repoſed a great Truſt, provided nevertheleſs that the Condemnation of Photius ſhould ſtand; and as to thoſe whom he had ordained, they might be received as Laymen into the Church-Communion, if they acknowledged their Fault in Writing, and begged to be admitted to Penance; that done, he might do in conjunction with his Legates what he ſhould think moſt expedient, theſe two Articles remaining untouch'd.

But, whereas the Number of Biſhops, Prieſts, and other Clerks ordained by Photius was ſo great, that all the Churches almoſt had been left deſtitute, if the Clergy ordained by him had been made Laymen, therefore this Regulation could not be put in Execution in the Eaſt: So that Stylianus and others were forced at laſt to tolerate them, and hold Communion with them; but ſince they ſhould have been better ſatisfied if they could get the Conſent of the Holy See to it, Stylianus endeavoured ſeven Years after to get it, and writ to the Pope for it. Then was John IX. raiſed to the Papal See, who declined to return an Anſwer himſelf, but ordered one to be ſent him in his Name, to this purpoſe, that he thanked him for his firm Adherency to the Church of Rome, that he hoped at laſt the Obſtinate would ſubmit, that Peace would be reſtored to the Church, and an End put to a Schiſm that had continued the Space of 40 Years. That he expected his Predeceſſors Decrees ſhould be inviolably obſerved; that he had the ſame Sentiments of Ignatius, Photius, Stephen, and Anthony, as his Predeceſſors Nicholas, John, Stephen, and the whole Roman Church; that he would deal with them, and look'd upon them as they had done, and received into the Church-Communion all thoſe he had ordained, upon the ſame Conditions they had preſcribed. This was the laſt Anſwer of the Popes upon this Matter, whoſe Judgment the Greeks did not follow, for they left in their reſpective Stations not only ſuch as had ſided with Photius, but alſo thoſe whom he had ordained. From which Time the Latin and Greek Churches held no good Intelligence, though it ſeems they did not break off Communion altogether. For both the Emperor, and the Patriarchs of Conſtantinople, uſed to write to the Pope, and the Pope to return Anſwer; who alſo ſent his Legates into the Eaſt, as in the Buſineſs of Nicholas the Patriarch upon the fourth Marriage of Leo the Emperor; who, having loſt three Wives without Iſſue, reſolved to marry again. But meeting with ſtrong Oppoſition againſt it from the Patriarch, he in the Year 901. deſired Legates from Pope John IX. and made them approve of his fourth Marriage. Whereupon he turned out Nicholas the Patriarch, and put Euthymius in his Place. This Buſineſs renewed the Troubles of the Church of Conſtantinople: For, after Leo's Death, Nicholas was reſtored to his See in 912, and writ a Letter to the Pope concerning it, praying him to puniſh thoſe who had ſtirred up thoſe Troubles againſt him. Some time after, having reconciled the Minds of Men, and reſtored Peace to the Church of Conſtantinople, he deſir'd Pope John X. by another Letter, to endeavour a Re-union of their reſpective Churches, the Peace whereof ſeemed to have been for ſome time interrupted, and to re-ſettle a ſincere Correſpondence betwixt them by ſending Legates on both ſides, and declaring with one Accord that fourth Marriages are unlawful, and therefore prohibited. It does not appear that the Pope made any Anſwer to it; but an Aſſembly was held at Conſtantinople in 921. which abſolutely prohibited ſuch Matches for the future, and excommunicated all Perſons ſo contracted, till ſuch time as they were parted. As for third Marriages, they were not abſolutely forbidden; but a Penance was ordered for five Years to all Perſons that ſhould marry three times after forty Years of Age, or even before that Age, provided they had had Children by the firſt Marriage. We find that John XIII. ſent Legates in 968. to Nicephorus the Eaſtern Emperor, to treat of a Match with his Daughter-in-law, and Otho the Weſtern Emperor; but thoſe Legates were ſlighted and abuſed by the Greeks, as was alſo Luitprandus, Otho's Ambaſſador. In ſhort, 'tis very plain, that there was in thoſe Times no good Correſpondence betwixt the Latins and the Greeks; that the Latins were hated and ſlighted by the Greeks, and theſe but little regarded by the Latins. But as little Friendſhip as there was amongſt them, yet they did not openly condemn each other, nor did their Enmity break out openly till the Time of Michael Cerularius, as will appear in its proper Place.

The laſt Anſwers of the Popes to the Greeks.

Broils of the Church of Rome with the Greek Churches.

Before we conclude this Chapter, it will not be improper to ſpeak of the Works of Photius.

The moſt conſiderable Fruit of Photius's Studies and Labours, is his Library intitled Myriobiblon, compoſed by him at the Requeſt of Taraſius his Brother, being yet a Layman, and Ambaſſador in Aſſyria. It contains the Argument or Abſtracts of 279 or 280 Volumes of many Authors, upon various Subjects. Wherein we find Grammarians, Criticks, Poets, Orators, ſacred and prophane Hiſtorians, Phyſicians, Philoſophers, Divines, &c. not ranked according to their ſeveral Arts or Profeſſions, but brought in confuſedly, and as they came firſt into his Memory. As he goes forward in this Work, he ſeems to increaſe his Labour by the Length of his Abſtracts. For in the Beginning he ſets down in a few Words the general Argument of the Works he ſpeaks of, and delivers his Cenſure upon them. Then he attempts a larger Account of the Matters therein contained; and towards the End he makes long Abſtracts thereof, without Choice or Reflections. Thus, as his Work ſwells, he falls ſhort in his Exactneſs; and his Spirits being wearied with the Length of the Work, he grows careleſs and negligent, producing Nothing of his own, but contenting himſelf to tranſcribe faithfully what comes in his Way. And indeed the End of his Work is ſo unlike the Beginning, that ſome eminent Scholars have thought it could not be Photius's. There is Nothing to be ſeen of that Exquiſiteneſs, of that fine critical Wit, of that free and impartial Judgment upon the Character and Style of the Authors, or of that inimitable Exactneſs which appears in the Beginning. Yet it is very probable, the Wearineſs and Negligence of Photius were the Reaſon why he was not ſo accurate towards the End as he was in the Beginning. For the Number of Works mentioned in the Preliminary Letter being only found compleat at the End, 'tis not credible that what Photius had done ſhould be taken out, to ſubſtitute in Lieu of it the Productions of any others. Nay, it ſeems that Photius had purpoſely altered his Method, thinking it more uſeful to give larger Abſtracts of the Works he went upon, than barely to tell the Subject. For there are ſome Authors of which he ſpeaks but ſuccinctly in the Beginning, and ſpeaks of 'em again towards the End, to give larger Abſtracts of their Works. But whatever Reaſon induced him ſo to do, whether it was to make his Work leſs tedious or more uſeful, it cannot be denied but that it had been more proper to joyn the general Argument and the Cenſure to be given upon each Work, to Abſtracts of particular Places worth taking Notice of. 'Twere to be wiſhed, that Photius had performed both the one and the other in all the Parts of his Work, and that he had not contented himſelf to do one of them only. The World however is very much indebted to him, and his Work a very rich Treaſure nevertheleſs, including what is moſt curious in every Science, and preſerving to us both the Memory of Authors, and ſome Fragments of Abundance of Works, which had been unknown to us, and Nothing whereof had remain'd with us, had it not been for this learned Man's Work.

Of the Conteſt between Photius and Ignatius.

Photius's Library.

This ſo uſeful a Work was found out by the Jeſuit Andrew Schot, who cauſed it to be tranſcribed from a Manuſcript of Cardinal Sirlet's Library, and to be compared with a Copy thereof in the Vatican, taken out of a Manuſcript at Venice, written by the Hand of Cardinal Beſſarion. He communicated this Copy to David Hoeſchelius, a Printer of Ausburg, who cauſed it to be printed in 1601; being firſt compared with three other Copies, one in the Duke of Bavaria's Library, and the two other being procured for him by Marcunius, and the Son of Henry Stephen, who had a Copy written by his Father's own Hand and reviſed by an Ancient Manuſcript. Andrew Schot, a Man extraordinary well skilled in the Greek Tongue, conſidering the Uſefulneſs of this Work, undertook to tranſlate it into Latin; and having happily compaſſed his Deſign, cauſed his Tranſlation to be printed alone at Ausburg, Anno 1606. Afterwards, both the Text and the Tranſlation were printed together at Geneva in 1611; and laſtly, in the Year 1653, this Work was re-printed at Rouen by the Berthelins. This Edition is the largeſt and faireſt.

The Nomocanon of Photius.

Photius's Nomocanon is another Proof of this Author's great Ability. 'Tis a Collection digeſted in an excellent Method, and brought under 14 different Titles, of the Canons of the Councils and Canonical Epiſtles, and of the Emperor's Laws about Eccleſiaſtical Matters. Balſamon has made Comments upon this Work, and with theſe Comments it appeared in publick by the care of Monſieur Juſtel, being printed at Paris in Greek, with a Latin Verſion at the End, in 1615; the Verſion being firſt printed both at Paris and Baſil, in 1561. This Work is alſo found amongſt Balſamon's Works (printed at Paris in 1620.) and in the Pandects of the Canons of England, [put out by Juſtellus at Paris, in 1662.]

Photius's Letters.

The Delicateneſs of Photius's Style, and Fineneſs of his Wit, as well as his Learning, and his particular Knowledge of Holy Scripture, are in a ſpecial Manner conſpicuous in his Letters, which appeared firſt long after his Works before-mentioned. They were publiſh'd from a Manuſcript brought brought from the East into England, translated by Richard Montague Bishop of Norwich, and printed at London, Anno 1651. They are in Number 248.

Of the Contest between Photius and Ignatius.

The first, written to Michael King of Bulgaria, is an Instruction directed to that Prince. To whom he proposes the Creed in the first place, as the Foundation of our Christian Faith; after which, he brings in the Decisions of the seven General Councils, of which he makes a Compendious History. He tells him, We cannot depart from the Purity of the Doctrine settled by those Councils, without indangering our Salvation. He exhorts him firmly to adhere to the Faith, and to joyn Virtues and Good Works to a lively true Faith. In short, he lays before him the chief Duties of a Christian Prince, the Virtues that are most necessary for him, and the Manner how he ought to govern himself. 'Tis one of the best and compleatest Instructions that were ever given to a Prince; and, 'twould be a hard Matter to find a larger, exacter, or more solid Collection of Precepts.

The second is the Circular Letter which he sent to all the Patriarchs of the East against the Roman Church in 866. Wherein he takes Occasion to reproach her with what had passed in Bulgaria, which was but newly converted to the Christian Faith, where some Persons were found come from the West, who spread such Doctrines as were repugnant to the Purity of the Faith. First, by making the Bulgarians fast on Saturdays, against the Laws of the Church which forbid it. Which might occasion a Contempt of the Doctrine; because when Men take upon them to slight Tradition, even in the least Things, they are easily prevail'd with to slight the Doctrine it self. Secondly, by distinguishing the first Week in Lent from the rest, and permitting them to eat in that Week, Milk, Butter, Cheese, &c. Thirdly, by detecting married Priests. Fourthly, by causing them to be anointed again with the Chrism, that had been already anointed with it by the Priests; affirming, that Unction ought not to be made by Priests. He exclaims against the Prohibition, affirming, that there is no Law reserving that Unction to the Bishop, or prohibiting the same to the Priests. Lastly, he charges the Latin Church with Breach of Faith, and falsifying of the Creed; by teaching, that the Holy Ghost does not only proceed from the Father, but from the Father and the Son. Upon this Article he doth enlarge very much, and alledges many Objections against the Procession of the Holy Ghost from the Father and the Son. Then he breaks out against those who had taught the Bulgarians this Doctrine, and does excommunicate them, by Vertue of the Canons, about the Saturdays Fast, and the Celibacy of Priests. He exhorts the Patriarchs to joyn with him in banishing that Doctrine, to send Bishops to Constantinople, to have those new Tenents exploded, and put a Stop to those Evils, that the Bulgarians may receive the true Faith. He acquaints them, that he has received a Letter from Italy, against the Tyranny of the Church of Rome. He admonishes them to receive, and cause to be received, in all the Churches of their Patriarchates, the seventh General Council, in the same Manner, and with the same Authority as the first six.

In the third Letter, which is to Bardas, he complains of what he was to suffer in the Place where he was, and seems to speak much like a Christian.

In the following Letters he also makes his Complaints of the Wrongs done him.

In the 18*th*. he writes to Michael the Emperor, about the Death of Bardas. He owns he deserved it, if he had actually conspired to make himself sole Master of the Empire, as he could not doubt of it upon the Account of the Letters Michael had sent him. But he laments his Death, because he had not Time to do Penance for his Sins. He very much flatters Michael, and expresses to him the great Desire he has to see him again shortly at Constantinople. The same Thing he insinuates, but in more flattering and pathetick Terms, in the next Letter.

In the 20*th*. he congratulates a Monk, for having brought over a Bishop to his Party.

In the 27*th*. he writes against certain Monks, who had took upon them to depose their Abbot, and observes, that Monks ought not to set up themselves as Judges of their own Abbots, but they ought to refer their Cause to their Superiors.

In the 30*th*. he proves the Perpetual Virginity of the Blessed Virgin; and explains that Place of Scripture, where it is said, That she knew not Joseph till she had brought forth her first-born; observing, that the Particle Donec (till) doth not always imply, that the contrary to that which had not happened before, doth happen afterwards.

In the 31*st*. directed to Tarasius a Nobleman, whom he calls his Brother, he treats of Providence; and shews, why Good Men suffer in this Life, whilst the Wicked wallow in Prosperity.

In th 32*d*. and the seven next following, directed to Theoctistus the Abbot, he explains, in short, the Faith of the Mysterious Trinity, and of the Incarnation, against Hereticks. He also speaks smartly therein against the Iconoclasts.

The next ten consist of Moral Exhortations to several Persons.

The 50*th*. is upon the Covenants of the Law and Gospel.

The next three consist of Reprimands to a Collector of Taxes, for his Covetousness.

In the 54*th*. he proves, that the Holy Mysteries ought not to be given to Infidels, or Hereticks, nor to Ill-Livers, but only to Orthodox Persons, who live according to the Rules of Christianity.

The 55*th*. is against a Liar.

In the 63*d*. he gives the Reasons for the Darkness of Prophecies.

In the 64*th*. he confutes the Iconoclasts, and answers to some of their Objections.

In the 72*d*. he shews, how contemptible our Temporal Life is.

In the 74*th*. he pretends, that Abraham made his Servant swear, by putting his Hand under his Thigh, in Honour to the Circumcision, and as a Figure of the Messias to come out of his Seed.

The 97*th*. was written to Basilius the Emperor, after he had turned him out of his See of Constantinople. He complains, in this Letter, of the ill Treatment he had received, and particularly, that his Books were taken from him. He gives a very pathetick Account of the Persecution he suffer'd, and writes smartly to the Emperor.

In the next Letters he continues to deplore his Misfortunes, and speaks of the Earthquake that happen'd at Constantinople upon his Expulsion.

In the 102*d*. he examines, how St. Paul could be both a Roman of Tarsis, and a Jew.

The 111*th*. is directed to Gregory of Syracuse, his old and constant Friend. Wherein he exhorts him to stand firm under his present ill Circumstances, and not to discontinue his Episcopal Functions.

In the 115*th*. he says, that the Council, which he calls Heretical, and which was made up of the Enemies to Image-worship, has excommunicated him, to raise a Man to the See of Constantinople, who lay under an Anathema. He speaks of the eighth Council.

In the next Letters, he writes against that Council, but chiefly in the 118*th*.

In the 125*th*. he gives Mystical Reasons for the Tearing of the Veil of the Temple, when our Saviour died.

In the 127*th*. he explains that Place of Scripture, where it is said, That the Sin against the Holy Ghost shall never be pardon'd.

In the following Letters, he expounds some other Places of Scripture, for which he brings Mystical Reasons, well invented, and happily apply'd.

In the 137*th*. he affirms, that what is said in St. Luke's Gospel, that our Saviour sweated Drops of Blood, is not to be understood literally; but that it is a Proverbial Expression, to signifie, that the Pains he felt were so very violent, that he sweated great Drops. To which he adds, that this History of the Gospel has been left out of the Gospel by some, and particularly by some Syrians; but his Opinion is, that it ought to be received as Canonical, and to be put amongst the Scriptures of Divine Inspiration.

In the 139*th*. he shews, that it is not impossible, as some pretended, to look upon a Woman, without sinful Thoughts.

The 144*th*. is against Eusebius of Cæsarea, whom he charges with Arianism.

In the 147*th*. Photius examines what it is to take God's Name in vain; and says, that among the Jews, Taking of God's Name in vain, was to give it to the Idols, or make use of it for a false Oath, or prophane it in idle Discourses. That among Christians, those take God's Name in vain, who swear against that which is established by Law, or who attribute God's Name to Creatures, as a Being which they believe created, as also, those who confound Images with Idols, and all Hereticks who abuse that Name.

In the 152*d*. he expounds, as the Pelagians do, that Place of St. Paul's Epistle, where it is said, in which all have sinned; pretending, after Theodoret, that it ought not to be thus translated, but whereas all have sinned.

In the following Letters, he treats of divers Critical Questions.

In the 162*d*. he treats of the Names of God; and shews, by several Instances, that the Name of God is sometimes given to Creatures, with relation to their Excellency, Justice, or Power. He observes, the Jews were forbidden to name God by his proper Name, and that none but the High-Priest bore it, which he did in his Forehead, written in extraordinary and strange Letters. He adds, that the Hebrews pronounce it Aia, and the Samaritans, Jabe; that it is written with these four Letters, Joth, Aleph, Vau, He, signifying That is, viz. He that is, and endures for ever.

In the next Letter, he demonstrates, how it was not absolutely forbidden among the Jews, to hear or pronounce that Name, seeing Moses heard it, and taught it the High-Priests, who wore it written upon Plates of Gold; but that they were forbidden, upon pain of Death, to pronounce it before Strangers.

In the 164*th*, he examines what may be the Sense of the 13*th* Verse, Chap I. of St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans.

Of the Conteſt betwixt Photius and Ignatius.

The 165*th*. contains a fine Encomium of St. Paul's Wiſdom and Eloquence.

In the 166*th*. he explains ſeveral Places of St. Paul's Epiſtles ſomething dark, by reaſon of their Hyperbata, or Ellipſis, i. e. Tranſpoſitions, or Defects of Words uſual in them.

The 174*th*. contains Photius's Apology againſt one of his former Friends, who now inveighed againſt him for his Contradictious Humour, charged him with betraying the Catholick Church, and violating her Laws. Photius to vindicate himſelf from his Aſperſions, maintains, that he has not undertaken, done, ſaid, or writ any Thing that might give any juſt Ground to that Accuſation; and that he could be reproached with Nothing but the Hardſhips he had endured, and the Miſery he was reduced to by the Perſecution of his Enemies: Which he gives an Account of in the moſt ſenſible Manner; affirming, that his Misfortunes had neither diſpirited, nor made him ſlight the Divine Truth. His Adverſary pretended, that it was ill done of him, to draw that Perſecution on himſelf for Things of ſmall Conſequence. But Photius, to juſtifie himſelf, affirms, that his Enemies are our Saviour's Enemies, who rendred contemptible (as far as in them lay) the Blood of his Covenant, prophaned his Altars, and ridiculed the Holy Chriſm, or rather the Holy Ghoſt, who had conſecrated it. He proteſts, he will never hold Communion with ſuch Men, nor with thoſe who ſhall receive them. Next, he deplores the Miſeries of thoſe who ſuffer Perſecution for his ſake; and complains, that he is abandon'd almoſt by all the World. He concludes, ſaying, that he ever offers Sacrifices and Prayers to God for his Prince.

In the 176*th*. Letter, he recites the different Expoſitions of this Place of Scripture given by the Fathers, viz. My Father is greater than I.

In the 177*th*. ſpeaking of St. Peter's Fall, he owns his Primacy.

In the 180*th*. and the two next, he explains ſome Places of the Goſpel.

In the 182*d*. he deplores his Misfortunes.

In the 187*th*. he defends ſtrongly, and rationally againſt Julian's Railleries, our Saviour's Advice, to ſell a Man's Subſtance to give it to the Poor.

In the 188*th*. he congratulates himſelf for his Sufferings.

In the 192*d*. he obſerves upon the Word Ephod, that it ſignifies, 1. A Prieſtly Habit. 2. A Habit like unto that worn by Laymen. 3. The Habits of the Prieſts of the Heathen Gods, who imitated the Ceremonies of the Prieſts of the True God.

The 201*ſt*. is a Letter of Comfort to George of Nicomedia, upon the Death of a Clerk ordained a Prieſt by him. He ſays, that his Soul is in Abraham's Boſom, where it enjoys the Heavenly Glory.

In the 211*th*. he expounds a difficult Place of Geneſis, about the Sacrifices of Cain and Abel.

The 223*d*. and the three next, are likewiſe upon ſome difficult Places of Scripture.

In the 228*th*. he expounds that Place in the Goſpel, ſo frequently objected by the Arians, that none but the Father knows the Day of Judgment.

The 234*th*. is a long Epiſtle, no leſs Chriſtian than Eloquent, directed to Taraſius's Brother, to comfort him upon the Death of his Daughter.

In the 240*th*. he handles two Critical Queſtions upon Scripture. The firſt, who was Ethan the Zeraite. The ſecond, concerning David's Two Unctions. The third, about Samuel's ſerving Saul.

The 243*d*. and 244*th*. conſiſt of ingenious Reproofs to Friend of his, who forſook him through Timorouſneſs.

The 245*th*. is a Piece of Comfort directed to a Nun, upon the Death of her Siſter. Wherein he ſuppoſes her Soul to be in the Company of Angels.

The 246*th*, and 247*th*. are upon the Birth-place of St. Paul.

In the 248*th*. he diſcovers the Myſtical Reaſons of the Circumciſion.

Monſieur Cotelerius has publiſhed in the Second Tome of the Monuments of the Greek Church, [Page 104.] a ſhort Letter of Photius to Smaracus, Governor of the Iſle of Cyprus, againſt that Miniſter's Avarice and Extortions; with a compendious Diſcourſe of the ſame Photius, ſhewing, that we ought to take care but of one Thing in this Life, that is, to forbear Sin; and, as we ought not to regard the Caſualties and Misfortunes of this Life, nor look upon them as Evils; ſo Honour, Riches, Power, Eloquence, and other Advantages, either of Nature or Fortune, ought not to be regarded as a real Good.

Photius's Letter to the Patriarch of Aquileia, is much beyond the former. Baronius has inſerted a Tranſlation of it in his Annals [ad An. 883.] but it came out ſince in Greek by the Care of Father Combefis, in the laſt Addition to the Bibliotheca Patrum [at Paris, 1673.] In this Letter, having firſt highly extolled that Archbiſhop, and complimented him about the Deputy he had ſent unto him, he argues againſt the Doctrine of the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt from the Son, as an Error contrary to Tradition. He ſays, that the Popes, Leo the I. and Leo the III. have rejected that Doctrine. The firſt, by ſaying in his Letter, againſt Neſtorius and Eutyches, that the Holy Ghoſt doth proceed from the Father; and the laſt, by diſproving thoſe that had added the Filioque to the Creed, and cauſing it to be engraven on Plates without that Addition. He afterwards brings many Arguments, grounded upon ſome Places of Scripture, againſt the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt from the Son. He anſwers to the Place alledged by the Latins, The Holy Ghoſt ſhall receive from me, and will declare it to you. He objects to himſelf, that St. Ambroſe, St. Auſtine, St. Jerome, and ſome other Fathers have ſaid, that the Holy Ghoſt proceeds from the Son. He owns it to have been their Opinion, and that they ought not therefore to be called Hereticks. But he pretends, their Authority muſt not be preferred before that of a greater Number, who ſpoke according to the Councils and the Holy Writ. He adds, that ſome Fathers of the Church may have ſwerved from the Truth; but, whatever Reſpect we have for their Perſons we ought not to follow their Errors. As for Inſtance, though Dionyſius of Alexandria be ranked amongſt the Fathers, the Arian Expreſſions he uſed are not to be approved; as well as ſome Tenents of Methodius, St. Irenæus, and Papias. Laſtly, he dares affirm, that if all the Men in the World ſhould oppoſe us, we ought ſtill to adhere to our Saviour's Words, and thoſe of the Goſpel; and, if we do ſeek after Proofs, next to our Saviour, we have the Suffrages of Oecumenical Councils, the greateſt Number of the Fathers, the Biſhops of Rome, and amongſt theſe St. Leo, and Adrian the I. That the Legates themſelves of the Holy See, which lately have been in the Eaſt three ſeveral Times, have alledged nothing contrary to that Doctrine; and that in the Council held by him, the Legates of Pope John had ſubſcribed unto, and approved of the Creed, without that Addition. Thus much is alledged by Photius in his Letter, to make good his Opinion.

Of the Conteſt betwixt Photius and Ignatius.

His Work containing a compendious Hiſtory of the firſt ſeven General Councils, which has been ſeveral Times publiſhed ſeparately, is Nothing but Part of the firſt Letter directed to Michael King of the Bulgarians.

Photius's Sermons.

But, as Photius had Skill in Compoſition, ſo he was no leſs verſed in Preaching. We have many Manuſcript Homilies of his, whereof Father Combefis has printed the Titles and Beginnings in the laſt Addition to the Biblioth. Patrum. But there are only two whole ones extant: One upon the Virgin's Nativity, inſerted by the ſame Author into his firſt Continuation of the Biblioth. Patrum, and written with much Eloquence and Politeneſs. The other containing the Deſcription and Encomium of a new Church in the Emperor's Palace at Conſtantinople, publiſhed by Codinus and Combefis in their Collections.

Photius's Treatiſe concerning the Wills of Chriſt.

In fine, Photius had joyned all the Subtlety of the moſt refined Schoolmen to his other ſorts of Learning. In Caniſius's Collection we have ſome ſmall Treatiſes of his in Latin, which are a convincing Proof of his great Ability in School-Learning. The principal of which, is that of our Saviour's Wills, which are called Gnomical; found in the Tome added by Steuart to Caniſius's Collection. It was in Greek in the Emperor and the Duke of Bavaria's Libraries, out of which Turrian took it, and put it into Latin. The State of the Queſtion is to know, whether our Saviour had, beſides a general Will to do a Thing, a particular Will to do it in ſuch and ſuch a Manner, whether he has choſen and affected the one more than the other. Photius in the firſt place ſays, that this Queſtion, having been but ſlightly handled by the Fathers, is the more difficult to ſolve; but that 'tis an eaſie Matter to find out all that has been written upon it, St. Maximus being the only Father that he found treating of this Queſtion. And, to expound him, he diſtinguiſhes many ſorts of Wills. The firſt, a Natural Will, which he calls Φύσικον, being Nothing but a Deſire of doing a Thing, without any Reaſon for it. The ſecond, a General Will, by him called Βούλησις, being an Effect of Reaſon. The third, called Γνώμη, is an Inclination to one Thing rather than another. The fourth, is the Choice one makes of one Thing rather than another. The fifth is the Determination of the Will to do this or that Thing. And laſtly, the Execution. The Matter being thus ſtated, he ſays, that our Saviour had unqueſtionably a general Will attended with Reaſoning, but that he has not a Will of Choice, nor of Deliberation or Deſign to do one Thing rather than another, becauſe having a perfect Knowledge of all Things by his Nature by reaſon of the Hypoſtatical Union, and his Humane Will being wholly ſubject to the Divine Will, he cannot deliberate upon what he muſt do, nor will any Thing but what pleaſes the Divine Will. That there being two Natures in Chriſt, there ought to be likewiſe two Wills, that is to ſay, two Faculties; but by reaſon there is but one Hypoſtaſis, or but one Perſon that wills, he therefore wills but one Thing, and has but one general Will, that is, but one ſole Affection, becauſe the Humane Will does in all Things concur with the Divine Will. This is the Opinion of Photius in this Matter, which he backs with many Reaſons; and gives ſhrewd Anſwers to all Objections againſt it.

In

Of the Contest between Photius and Ignatius.

In the fifth Tome of Canisius we find moreover, seven short Dissertations of Photius, upon several Scholastick Questions. In the first he puts this Question, How God is every where? and answers the Objections made against his Omnipresence. He shews, that God is not in the World as created Beings are, but in a more sublime Manner; that he is in every Thing, and above all Things; that he is in all Things by his Operation, but that his Act being his Substance, one may truly say that he is both in Act and Substance every where; that he is every where, without being of the same Substance with the Things in which he is; that he makes no Part of them, not being tied, mingled, confounded, or any way changed by them.

Photius's Theological Treatises.

In the second Dissertation he shews how we know God in this Life; and says, that we cannot perfectly define, or know him, but that he is known to us by a small Beam of his Majesty shining upon his Creatures, and by way of Negation, that is, by denying that he is any of those Things we see. That all Men naturally know, that there is a God; because there ought to be an Eternal Being, a Soveraign Lord of all Things, and a Supreme Good by his own proper Substance.

In the third Dissertation he explains the Terms proper to the Divine Nature, both in Common, and such as are proper to each Person.

In the fourth he shews how we may say, that God is one, and that there are three Persons in the God-head.

In the fifth he treats of the Mystery of the Incarnation, and shews, that though the Word be every where, yet 'tis united hypostatically only to the Humane Nature he took upon him.

In the sixth he brings in the Reasons, why it was expedient the Word should become Man. The first is, That Men being led by their Senses, might be raised by the Sight of his Humane Nature to the Knowledge of a Deity. The second, Because our Saviour had not overcome the Devil, had he not been in a Condition to suffer. The third is, Because when a Man does both preach and give good Example, it is more effectual than using the Ministry of others; and that it is easier to imitate the Virtues we see practised, than those the Practice whereof is required, without giving a Model of them. Thus it was requisite, that God should assume our Nature, to preach unto us himself the true saving Doctrine, and by teaching us by his own Example the Practice of Virtues, to set himself up for a Model thereof.

Manuscripts of Photius.

In the Libraries of Ausburg, the Vatican, and of Monsieur Colbert, there are Manuscripts of a Treatise of Photius, intituled Amphilochia, from the Name of Amphilochius Bishop of Cizycus, who had proposed unto him a hundred Questions, which he solves in this Answer. [Some Fragments of this Treatise are extant at the End of Amphilochius's Works, printed by Father Combefis at Paris in 1644. and in his Auctuar. Tom. I. and by Turrian and others.] This Book was never yet in Print, nor these following Works of Photius, viz. his Commentary upon St. Paul's Epistles, of which there is a Manuscript extant in the Publick Library of Cambridge [but defective;] his Notes upon the Prophets, to be found in the Vatican Library; a Treatise against an Heretick, called Leontius, Bishop of Antioch, and quoted by Suidas [in the Word Leontius.] To which add a Treatise against the Latins; [a Fragment of which is extant in Bishop Usher, de Symbolis, p. 257.] a Collection upon the Rights of the Metropolitans and Bishops, with a Lexicon; a Commentary upon Aristotle's Categories; and some other Works, which never yet saw Light.

Of the Contest between Photius and Ignatius.

We have Nothing to add to what has been already said, concerning the Learning, the happy Genius, and sublime Qualifications of Photius. Had he made use of 'em for the Good of the Church, and not corrupted them by his unjust Attempts, by unheard-of Violences, by Tricks and Artifices unworthy of an honest Man, he might have been happy. But his excessive Love of Glory, and his unbounded Ambition, prompted him to those Excesses, which have blasted all his Endowments. 'Tis needless to repeat what we have already said of the various Editions of his Works: But it were to be wished, that we had a new Edition larger, and more correct.

A Censure upon the Genius and Qualifications of Photius.

Having spoken hitherto of Photius's Writings, I shall add a Word of Theodorus Abucara, supposed to be that Metropolitan of the Province of Caria, who was ordained by Methodius: Who, having sided with Photius, acknowledged his Fault in the eighth Council, at their second Session; and was received with the other Bishops ordained by Methodius, who left Photius to submit to Ignatius. We have, under his Name, many small Doctrinal Treatises, published both in Greek and Latin by Gretzerus, and printed at Ingolstadt in 1606. together with a Treatise of Anastasius Sinaita, [intituled, Ὁδηγός; or, A Guide to the Right Way. As also in Auctuario Duceano, at Paris, 1624. Tom. 1. p. 367.]

Theodorus Abucara.

The Works of this Author are almost all composed by Way of Dialogues; wherein he brings in a Christian speaking with Infidels, Saracens, Jews and Nestorians, whom he teaches the Truths of our Christian Faith, and answers their Objections. Therein he handles several Scholastick Questions upon the Mysteries of the Christian Religion, and expounds the Meaning of the Philosophers Terms, which they made use of to explain them. He insists particularly upon the Trinity, and the Incarnation. Having, by Natural Reasons proved God's Existence, he endeavours to prove the Trinity after the same Manner. He shews, That Christ is the Messias; tells the Infidels, That he is God; and demonstrates Mahomet to be an Impostor. He proves the Necessity, and explains the Effects of the Incarnation; confutes the Errors of the Nestorians, Eutychians, Jacobites, and Theopaschites in that Point; and proves, that there is in Christ but one Hypostasis, and two Natures. In his Answer to the Saracens Question upon the Eucharist, he says, in plain Terms, That the Bread and Wine set by the Priest upon the Holy Table, are changed by the Descent of the Holy Ghost into the Body and Blood of our Saviour. He confutes the Error of the Origenists, as to the Duration of the Pains inflicted upon the Damned. He shews, against the Saracens, that it is more decent and rational to have but one Wife, than many. He shews, That God is by no Means the Author of Evil. He affirms, That the Blessed Virgin never died. Lastly, he treats of several of the most subtle Questions of Divinity.

CHAP. X.

An Account of the Controversies raised by Photius, with the Church of Rome.

Controversies raised by Photius with the Church of Rome.

PHotius was not satisfy'd with having divided the Greek Church by his Ambition, and laid the Foundations of a Division between the Greek and Latin Church, but he also opposed the latter about several Points of Doctrine and Discipline, contain'd in a Letter which he writ against it. Pope Nicholas the I. seeing himself so vigorously attack'd, desir'd the Assistance of the Bishops and Clergy of France, to answer the Objections of Photius; and sent to Hincmarus, and the other Archbishops of Charles's Kingdom, the ten chief Heads objected against the Latin Church; that when they had examin'd them, they might furnish him with suitable Answers. Odo, Bishop of Beauvais, was pitch'd upon by the Bishops of the Province of Rheims, to make a Collection of the Answers which they thought sufficient to obviate the Objections of the Greeks. Æneas, Bishop of Paris, was chosen for the same Matter by the Bishops of the Province of Sens. We have the Treatise of the last; Odo's is lost; unless some will say, That 'tis the Treatise of Ratramnus, which Odo put out in his Name. But, there is more Likelihood, that the Bishops also order'd Ratramnus to write on that Subject; for, he ends his Work with these Words; We have treated as well as we could on those Matters, contain'd in the Writings you sent to us. If our Answer please you, we give God Thanks; and, if it displease you, we submit it to your Censure and Correction: Which Words were, in all Probability, addressed to the Bishops, who had given him Orders to write on this Subject.

The Charge of the Greeks consisted of ten Articles, which Ratramnus and Æneas answer in their Works.

Controversies raised by Photius with the Church of Rome.

Ratramnus's Preface is very short: He says, That the Objections made by the Emperors, Michael and Basil, against the Roman Church, are either False, Heretical, Superstitious, or Irreligious; and ought to be contemn'd, were it not, that they give an Offence to the Weak. Æneas's Preface is a great deal longer. He begins it with an Encomium of the Church, which is always victorious over her Enemies; and then he laments the Division which was growing up between the Churches; for the Greeks had begun to attack the Roman Church in the Reign of Lewis the Godly. He adds, That almost all the Heresies were hatch'd in Greece; that oftentimes the Eastern Patriarchs were Hereticks; but, that the Roman Church was so happy, as never to have had an Author of Heresie for its Bishop: That indeed Liberius yielded to the Violence of the Arians, but did not altogether forsake the Faith of the Church. That the Objections which the Greeks make at present, are unjust; that they start unnecessary Questions, which are like to be the Occasion of Trouble and Scandal; that he is oblig'd to prepare to answer and refute 'em.

Answers to the Heads of Accusation of the Greeks.

The first chief Objection of the Greeks is concerning the Procession of the Holy Ghost. The Greeks ask the Romans, Why they hold that he proceeds from the Father and the Son, and not from the Father alone? As this is the principal Head, and a Fundamental Point, Ratramnus treats of it it very fully; and, of the four Books which compleat his Work, three are entirely written on this Subject. In the firſt he proves the Doctrine of the Romans, by ſeveral Texts of Scripture; and, in the two other, he urges ſome Paſſages of the Fathers. Æneas only collects thoſe Paſſages of the Fathers, which confirm the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt from the Father and from the Son.

Controverſies raiſed by Photius with the Church of Rome.

Ratramnus obſerves, in the Beginning of his fourth Book, that the other Heads of the Exceptions, made by the Greeks, don't at all concern Matters of Faith, but merely the Ceremonies and Uſages of the Church, inſomuch, that it had been better not to have mention'd 'em; ſince no Man is either oblig'd to approve of 'em, or reject them; for, the Ceremonies of the Churches may be different; which he proves by the Practices of the Primitive Church, which made uſe of others, than what have been ſince practiſed, and by the various Cuſtoms of the Churches among themſelves, concerning which he cites the Paſſage of Socrates: Whence he concludes, that it is without Cauſe, that the Greeks inveigh againſt the Ceremonies of the Latins, for differing from theirs; obſerving, that this Exception cou'd not proceed from a Motive of Piety, but from Envy or Pride. After this general Obſervation, which Æneas has not made, he examines diſtinctly the Exceptions of the Greeks, againſt every Article of Diſcipline.

The firſt, in Ratramnus, which is the ſecond in Æneas, is concerning the Faſt on Saturdays. Ratramnus obſerves, That all the Weſtern Churches do not agree with the Church of Rome in this Article; and that the Number of thoſe Churches, who do not faſt on Saturdays, is greater than of thoſe, who keep this Faſt: Beſides, that all the Eaſtern Churches do not abſtain from Faſting; ſince, in the Church of Alexandria, they dine not on this day, no more than in the Church of Rome. He ſays, That the Cuſtom of Faſting on Saturdays is of long ſtanding in the Church of Rome; and he deduces the Original of it from St. Peter and St. Paul, who, 'tis ſaid, faſted on this day, before they undertook the Diſpute with Simon Magus; whence, 'tis thought, this Cuſtom among the Romans came. He grounds this Aſſertion on a Paſſage in the Life of St. Sylveſter, of which he will have Euſebius to be the Author: But this Apocryphal Work does not ſo well juſtifie the Practice of the Roman Church, as the Paſſages in St. Auguſtine about this Faſt, and the Reflections that he makes on the Liberty which the Churches ought to have of following their Ancient Cuſtoms. Æneas juſtifies the Practice of the Church of Rome by the Teſtimonies of Pope Innocent the I. of St. Hierome and St. Iſidore.

The ſecond Article of Diſcipline, which is of like Nature with this, is concerning the Length of the Lent-Faſt. The Greeks were offended, that the Latins did not faſt eight whole Weeks, during which they were to abſtain from eating Fleſh, and, during ſeven Weeks, from Eggs and Cheeſe. Ratramnus anſwers, That there is a great deal of Difference, as well in the Eaſtern, as the Weſtern Churches, about the Number of Weeks in Lent; that ſome begin it ſix, ſome ſeven, others eight, and others even nine Weeks before Eaſter: That if the Faſt were to be kept exactly forty days, thoſe who faſt all the other days, except Sundays, muſt faſt alſo four days of the ſeventh Week: That they who faſt not on Saturdays, or Sundays, ought to begin their Faſt the eighth Week; and that thoſe who likewiſe, except Thurſdays, ought to begin nine Weeks before Eaſter, to make up the Number of forty days; and, in fine, that the Roman Church begins a Kind of Faſt nine Weeks before Eaſter, as well as the Greek Church, in that they leave off ſinging of Hallelujah nine Weeks before Eaſter: But, after all, though there are ſome Weſtern Churches that faſt no more than ſix Weeks before Eaſter, except Sundays, and in which, by Conſequence, there are but thirty ſix days of Faſting; nevertheleſs, for the moſt Part, there are added four days of Faſting in the ſeventh Week before Eaſter, and that thus they faſt more exactly than the Greeks, who keep but half a Faſt in the firſt Week, ſince they do not abſtain from Things made of Milk; and in the ſeven others are three Days in each Week without Faſting, ſo that thus they faſt but 36 Days. Æneas ſays the ſame in his Anſwer; but he obſerves farther, that this Kind of Abſtinence is various in different Churches; that in Egypt and Paleſtine they faſt nine Weeks before Eaſter; that in ſeveral Parts of Italy, three days in a Week they abſtain from eating any boil'd, bak'd, or roaſted Meat, their Meals being only of Fruits, Herbs and Pulſe; that in Germany they don't uſually abſtain from Milk, Butter, Cheeſe, and Eggs; that ſome do not faſt on Holy Thurſday; and that the Roman Church ſeems more reaſonable in faſting ſix Weeks together, except Sundays, and in adding four days to compleat the Number of forty days of Faſting.

The fourth Objection made by the Greeks is of very little Conſequence, as Ratramnus obſerves. They are offended that the Prieſts ſhave their Beards. Ratramnus makes this appear to be a Matter of no Moment, which wholly depends upon Cuſtom: That ſome do not ſhave their Beards, but cut the Hair of their Heads; That others ſhave their Beards, and the Crowns of their Heads, letting the Hair grow that is about their Temples, and the under-part of their Heads; That others ſhave off one Part of their Hair, and keep on the other: In fine, That the Cuſtom of the Clergy is not uniform in this Matter, but different; and that there had never been any Diſpute on this Occaſion; that the Apoſtle St. Paul ſeems to condemn thoſe Men, who, in ſhaving their Heads, put themſelves under a Neceſſity of covering them with a Veil: That nevertheleſs they are not to be blam'd, who do it out of Humility: That he does not accuſe the Greeks, nor ſhould they find Fault with the Cuſtom of the Latins, who imitate the Nazarites, in ſhaving their Beards, and cutting their Hair. Æneas makes uſe of this Example, and of ſome Paſſages in the Fathers that ſpeak of it, to juſtifie the Cuſtom of the Romans; and adds, That it might more reaſonably be objected to the Greeks as a Fault, that they ſuffer their Hair to grow, & ſic comam nutriant, againſt the Prohibition made by the Apoſtle and the Church.

Controverſies raiſed by Photius with the Church of Rome.

The fifth Article is concerning the Celibacy of Prieſts. Ratramnus ſays, That if the Greeks ſeem'd ſuperſtitious in the other Objections, they are either very blind, or were worthy of Compaſſion in this; blind, if they do not ſee that Continency is very much to be commended in Miniſters of the Altar; and, worthy of Compaſſion, if, knowing it, they condemn what they are ſenſible in their own Conſciences deſerves to be prais'd. He makes it appear, that the Latins do not by this condemn Marriage; but that they prefer Continency, and eſteem it more becoming Prieſts, who ought only to be taken up with Divine Service. Then he quotes ſome Canons, which oblige Biſhops and Prieſts to Continence. Æneas, after he has alledg'd the Texts of St. Paul, in Praiſe of Celibacy, cites the Canons of Councils, Decretals of Popes, and Paſſages of Fathers, in Favour of Celibacy.

The ſixth Article is touching the Prohibition to Prieſts of the Roman Church, to anoint the Foreheads of thoſe that are baptiz'd with Chriſm. Ratramnus ſays, That there is no better Ground for this Objection, than for the other; ſince the Greeks have no other Reaſon for doing it, beſides the Cuſtom of their Church, and no Law at all. On the contrary he maintains, that the Cuſtom of the Romans is grounded upon the Goſpel, and the Acts of the Apoſtles, where the Impoſition of Hands, for beſtowing of the Holy Ghoſt, is reſerv'd to the Apoſtles, and conſequently to Biſhops, who are much above Prieſts, and who have particular Offices, as conferring Holy Orders, conſecrating the Holy Chriſm, Holy Oils, &c. He adds, That it was upon the Account of their Dignity, that it was forbidden to Prieſts to anoint the Forehead of the Baptized with Holy Chriſm. He affirms, That this was eſtabliſh'd by St. Sylveſter, as it is written in the Pontifical, and quotes a Paſſage of Pope Innocent on this Subject. Theſe two Authorities are likewiſe urg'd by Æneas, with a Paſſage of Gelaſius.

The ſeventh Objection which the Greeks make againſt the Latins, is falſe in Matter of Fact; They charge 'em with ordaining Biſhops and Deacons, without conferring on them the Order of Prieſthood. Ratramnus denies that this is practis'd in the Weſt. He owns, that their Deacons are choſen in order to be made Biſhops; but, he makes it appear, that this is not contrary to the Canons of the Church; whereas the Greeks violate 'em, in chooſing Laymen to make 'em Biſhops. Æneas does not abſolutely deny, that there are ſome among the Latins who allow of this Ordination; but he excuſes their Practice upon this Account, that it ſeems that he, who receives the Pontifical Benediction, is likewiſe honour'd with the other Benedictions, and that (it may be) they believ'd, according to St. Jerome, that the Miniſtry of a Prieſt makes Part of a Biſhop, on which he quotes the Paſſage in St. Jerome on the Epiſtle of Titus.

The eighth Objection of the Greeks is againſt the Primacy of the Patriarch of Rome, to whom they wou'd prefer, or at leaſt equalize the Patriarch of Conſtantinople; becauſe that City was then equal, if not ſuperior to Rome. Ratramnus aſſerts this Primacy, becauſe Jeſus Chriſt, who is the Head of the whole Church, ſaid to St. Peter, Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock will I build my Church: And St. Paul tells us, That he was among the Gentiles, as St. Peter among the Jews: That theſe two Apoſtles having receiv'd of Jeſus Chriſt the Supremacy of the Church, Quos ambos Eccleſiæ Principatum à Chriſto poſitos, were ſent to Rome, as appears both by undoubted Hiſtory, and by the Monuments of their Martyrdom: That it was reaſonable, that the Prince of the Apoſtles ſhould be ſent to the chief City of the World, to the end, that as it had ſubdued all the World to its Empire, it ſhould likewiſe preſide over all the Kingdoms of the World, by its Primacy of Religion, and the Dignity of Apoſtleſhip. He alledges ſome Paſſages of Councils and Popes to eſtabliſh this Preheminence of the Church of Rome. He affirms, That the Popes were always Preſidents at General Councils by their Legates. He makes it appear, that the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, is neither to be preferred, nor nor equalled with that of Rome; and that he ought to be satisfied with the second Place, which was allowed him by the Council of Constantinople, without entrenching on the Rights of other Churches, and the Determination made by the Council of Nice. Æneas makes a Collection of the Canons of some Councils, and the Decretals of Popes about the Prerogatives and Dignity of the Church of Rome: He quotes some spurious Tracts attributed to St. Sylvester, as also the Donation of Constantine, and ends his Treatise with an Invective against the Condemnation of Ignatius, and the Advancement of Photius to the Patriarchate of the Church of Constantinople.

The Greeks made two more Objections against the Latins, which these two Authors think not worth their Answering, because they plainly appear to be false; however, they ought not to be forgotten. The first is, that they made use of River-Water to make the Chrism. The second is, that they offer'd a Lamb at Easter with the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, according to the Custom of the Jews. Walafridus Strabo relates, that there were some particular Persons, who consecrated and offer'd a Lamb at Easter. An Example of this Usage is found in the Life of St. Uldarick, and a Prayer is to be seen in the Roman Order, for the Benediction of the Lamb on Easter-day; but this was not a general Custom, nor authoriz'd by all the Latin Churches. There is much more of Argument in Ratramnus's Work than in Æneas's, which is little else but a Collection of Passages on the Questions propos'd.

CHAP. XI.

Several Constitutions made in Ecclesiastical Assemblies, about the Discipline of the Church.

Several Constitutions, &c.

NO Princes and Bishops were ever so careful in making Rules for the Discipline of the Church, nor have so frequently renew'd and confirm'd them, as the Kings and Bishops of France in the ninth Century. These Rules were made by them in several Assemblies, of which here follows a particular Account.

Several Constitutions, &c.

The Council of Aix la Chapelle, held in 809.

of Aix la Chapelle.

IN this Council the Question about the Procession of the Holy Ghost was debated, which was started by a Monk of Jerusalem, called John; and, it was there determin'd, That he proceeded from the Father and the Son: And, to confirm this Determination, Charles the Great wrote a Letter to Pope Leo the Third, in which he confirms this Doctrine by many Passages out of the Fathers. He also sent Bernarius, Bishop of Wormes, Jesse, Bishop of Amiens, and Adelardus Abbot of Corbey, to that Pope, to oblige him to confirm this Definition, and to allow that the Creed might be sung with the Addition of the Filioque. A Part of the Conference, which these Deputies had with Leo on that Subject, is yet extant; by which it is evident, that this Pope did allow of their Definition; but that he was not pleas'd with this Addition made to the Creed, or that it should be sung with it. It was also propos'd in this Council, to make some Orders concerning the Discipline of the Church, and the Lives of the Clergy, but it was not put in Execution.

The Sixth Council of Arles, in the Year 813.

of Arles.

IN the Year 813, Charles the Great assembled several Councils for the Reformation of the Church, design'd in the Council of Aix la Chapelle; Eginard speaks of five; one held at Mentz, another at Rheims, a third at Tours, the fourth at Chalons, and the last at Arles: In this Order these Councils are reckon'd by this Author and Reginon. Nevertheless, that of Arles, and that of Rheims, are dated in the Month of May; and that of Mentz not till June; and, the two others have no Date at all. We follow the Order in which they are found in the Collection of Councils, among which the Council of Arles is the first. The Bishops met in St. Stephen's Church at Arles, on the 10*th*. of May, and after they had taken their Places, according to the Time of their Ordination, and prayed for the Emperor Charles, who had assembled them; John, Archbishop of Arles, and Hebridius, Archbishop of Narbonne, who were the Emperor's Deputies, told them, That his Majesty earnestly pray'd and desir'd them to instruct the Churches that were committed to their Charge, with Saving Doctrines, and to be exemplary to them for the Sanctity of their Lives and Manners. They added, That in Acknowledgment of the King's Kindness and Favours, it was fit that Prayers should be order'd to be daily made in the Church for the Health and Prosperity of his Majesty. The next day the Bishops being met again, began their Constitutions with a Profession of Faith: Then they order'd, that Prayers should be made for the Emperor, which were the two first Articles of this Council. In the third, the Metropolitans were order'd to take Care, that their Suffragans should be well instructed in Sacred Things; that they should understand what belonged to Baptism, the Holy Scripture, and the Canons, that they might be able to teach, preach to, and edify all the World by their Knowledge and Piety. In the fourth, the Laity is forbidden to turn the Priests out of their Churches, without the Bishop's Sentence, who ought not to prefer them to any Churches, unless he be well assur'd of their Capacity. The fifth forbids the Laity to take Bribes of Priests for presenting them to Churches. The sixth enjoyns Bishops to regulate the Lives of Monks and Canons. The seventh says, That none but Persons of known Honesty, and of considerable Age, shall have Leave to come into Nunneries; and that those who shall come in there to celebrate Divine Service, shall withdraw as soon as it is over; That neither young Clerks, nor Monks, shall be permitted to come thither, unless it be to see some of their Relations. The eighth ordains, That no Monastery shall receive a greater Number of Maids than it can maintain. The ninth, That Tithes shall be paid: The tenth, That the Rectors and Vicars shall take Care to preach to and instruct their Congregations. The eleventh forbids Marriages between Relations. The twelfth recommends Peace and Unity. The thirteenth, Obedience to the Bishops, and Concord between Priests and the Civil Magistracy. The fourteenth regards the Relief of the Poor in Time of Famine. The fifteenth is against false Measures. The sixteenth forbids keeping Markets on Sundays, and working in servile Employments. The seventeenth enjoyns Bishops to visit their Dioceses every Year, and to hinder Oppression and Violence. The eighteenth commands, that Priests shall keep the Holy Chrism under Lock and Key; that they shall give none of it to any Person as a Medicine, or for any other Reason whatever; because it is a Kind of Sacrament which ought not to be touch'd but by the Priests. The nineteenth recommends to Fathers and Godfathers Care of the Instruction and Education of their Children, both Natural and Spiritual. The twentieth declares, that the Churches shall not be depriv'd of their Tythes, nor of the Goods belonging to them. The one and twentieth forbids Burials in Churches. The two and twentieth ordains, that no Pleadings nor Assemblies shall be held in Churches, or in the Porches of Churches. The twenty third is to prevent the Frauds and Cheats that are us'd in the Sale of the Goods of the Poor. The twenty fourth forbids Bishops to permit any strange or fugitive Priests in their Dioceses, and enjoyns 'em to send 'em back to their own Bishops. The twenty fifth orders, that those who hold any Benefices, or have Goods belonging to Churches, shall be obliged to contribute to the Repairing of those Churches. The twenty sixth, that Publick Sinners shall do Publick Penance.

of Arles.

The Council of Mentz, in the ſame Year.

The Council of Mentz.

THis Council was more famous and numerous than the preceding, and made more Canons: It was holden in St. Alban's Church, the 8*th*. of June, in the Year 813. There were four Deputies from the Emperor preſent at it, Hildebaud, Riculphus, Arnoldus, and Bernarius. The Aſſembly divided themſelves into three Claſſes: The Biſhops made up the firſt, who had before them the Holy Scripture, the Canons, and the Paſtoral of St. Gregory: The ſecond conſiſted of Abbots and Monks, who examined the Rule of St. Benedict. The laſt was compoſed of Noblemen and Judges, who conſider'd what concern'd the Civil Government. After a Faſt of three days, they made fifty ſix Canons. In the three firſt they ſpeak of the three Virtues, Faith, Hope and Charity. In the fourth it is ordain'd, That Baptiſm ſhould be adminiſtred, according to the Roman Ritual, and that it ſhall not be adminiſtred, but at Eaſter, or Whitſuntide, unleſs there be a Neceſſity for it. The three following Canons are for ſettling Peace, and to prevent the taking away another Man's Goods unjuſtly. The eighth grants to the Biſhop the Diſpoſal of the Revenues belonging to the Church. The ninth, and the following, contain ſeveral Orders concerning the Lives of Prebendaries and Monks, to whom they prohibit Worldly Pleaſures, and the Secular Employment. The Prebendaries or Canons are there diſtinguiſh'd from the Monks, and the Canoneſſes from the Nuns, who are of the Order of St. Benedict. The two and twentieth is againſt Vagabond Clerks. The three and twentieth ſets at Liberty the Clerks and Monks who have been ſhav'd, and cloyſter'd by Force. The twenty fifth enjoyns Biſhops to appoint ſome others to preach in their Stead, when they can't perform this Duty. The twenty eighth commands Prieſts to wear Stoles always as Badges of the Sacerdotal Office. The thirty ſecond and thirty third recommend the Obſervation of Litanies, or of Rogations. The thirty fifth that of Ember-weeks. The thirty ſixth the Celebration of High Holy-days, which are Eaſter-day, and all the Week, Aſcenſion-day, Whitſuntide, the Feaſts, of St. Peter and St. Paul, the Nativity of St. John, the Aſſumption of the Virgin Mary, the Dedication of St. Michael, the Holy-days of St. Remigius, St. Martin, and St. Andrew; Four days at Chriſtmas, and the Octave of Chriſtmasday, the Epiphany, the Purification, with the Holy-days of Martyrs and Confeſſors, in each Dioceſs, where the Body of any one of them lies, and the Day of the Dedication of the Church. The fortieth maintains the ancient Right of Churches, in being made Sanctuaries, and forbids that thoſe ſhall be deliver'd up, who come thither for Refuge, till their Lives are ſecur'd. The three and fortieth declares, that one Prieſt cannot ſing Maſs alone. The four and fortieth reminds the People, that they ought to make frequent Offerings in the Church, and to give one another Pax. The five and fortieth exhorts the Faithful to be careful in the Inſtruction of their Children. The ſix and fortieth threatens thoſe with Excommunication, who ſhall not refrain from Drunkenneſs. The eight and fortieth forbids the ſinging any lewd or immodeſt Songs, in going round any Churches. The fiftieth appoints the Titles of the Vidames, and Defenders, or other Officers of Biſhops, Abbots, or their Clergymen. The one and fiftieth forbids the Tranſlation of Reliques without Leave. The four and fiftieth orders, that Relations in the fourth Degree ſhall not be allow'd to join in Matrimony. The five and fiftieth forbids Parents preſenting their own Children at the Font, or marrying one's God-daughter, or one's Partner in the Suretyſhip at a Child's Baptiſm, or even the Perſon, whoſe Son or Daughter one has brought to be confirm'd. I have omitted ſome Canons that are mention'd in the foregoing Council.

The Council of Rheims, in the ſame Year.

of Rheims

AFter a Profeſſion of Faith had been drawn up in this Council, and the Clergy had been admoniſh'd to do their Duty, the Goſpel was read. The Manner of celebrating the Divine Service, and of adminiſtring Baptiſm, was explain'd. The Canons, the Rule preſcribed by St. Benedict, the Book written by St. Gregory, concerning the Duty of Paſtors, and ſome Sentences out of the Fathers were read. What relates to Penance was examin'd, that the Prieſts might know how they were to hear Confeſſions, and what Penances they were to enjoyn. Eight of the chief Vices were alſo diſcours'd of in this Council; and the Biſhops were told what they ought to ſtudy, and how they ſhould preach. They were directed to lead a chaſte, ſober, and modeſt Life, and to do Juſtice. As for Prieſts, they were enjoyn'd not to remove from a meaner Benefice to one that was greater; and it was order'd, that ſuch as ſhould obtain any by Preſents, or Money, ſhould be depos'd. Several Canons were made concerning the Lives of Clergymen and Monks, as alſo concerning the Preſervation of the Goods of the Church, and the Keeping the Sabbath-day holy. This is all that is contain'd in the four and forty Articles, or Canons of this Council, which are nothing but the Summary or Abridgment of the Matters that were tranſacted there.

The third Council of Tours, in the ſame Year.

Of Tours.

THE Prelates of the Province of Tours took no leſs Care than the other Biſhops to reform the Lives of the Clergy, and the Diſcipline of the Church. In a Council that was conven'd in that Town, in the ſame Year 813. they made fifty one Canons upon the ſame Subjects. The Biſhops are charg'd by them, to inſtruct themſelves and others; to lead a ſober, modeſt Life; to abſtain from Games, Shows, and Hunting; to take Care of the Poor, &c. The ſame is enjoyn'd the Prieſts, and other Clergymen. 'Tis forbidden to beſtow the Order of Knighthood on any Man, before he be thirty Years of Age. In ſhort, moſt of the Canons mention'd in the foregoing Councils are treated of in this.

of Tours.

The ſecond Council of Chalons, in the ſame Year.

Of Chalons.

THis Council is the beſt of the five, held that Year by Charles the Great's Order, for reforming the Church, and particularly the Clergy; but it is the moſt conſiderable for the Number of Canons, and for the Matters of which it treats. In the firſt Canon, it condemns, with a great Deal of Strictneſs, the Avarice, ſordid Gain, and Exactions of the Biſhops, and other Clergymen. Among other Things, it enjoyns the Biſhops not to be a Charge to the Rectors of Pariſhes in their Viſitations; and their Archdeacons not to demand of them any Fees, or any Thing for the Holy Chriſm. It will not have them to oblige the Clerks, whom they ordain, to ſwear that they are worthy, nor that they will never do any Thing contrary to the Canons, and will be obedient to their Ordinaries. It does not preſcribe many Things to the Monks, becauſe it obſerves, that thoſe of that Province are to follow St. Bennet's Rule, and conſequently need but keep exactly to their Rule to live as they ought. It requires the Re-eſtabliſhing of Publick Penance, for Publick Sins. To ſtop, or prevent the Differences that happen among Heirs, concerning the Right of Patronage of a Church, it orders, that it ſhall not be divided, and that none of the Clergy, nam'd by different Heirs, ſhall be ſuffer'd to perform their Function there, till they are agreed together, and have elected one and no more. Some Perſons were ſo devout as to be confirm'd many Times; this Council forbids this Abuſe in the 27*th*. Canon. In the 30*th*. it is forbidden to diſſolve the Marriages of Slaves. Some Women, with a Deſign of being divorc'd from their Husbands, brought their Children, at the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm, or Confirmation: Now, this Council orders, that theſe Women ſhall be oblig'd to do Penance, and not be divorc'd. The 32*d*. intimates, that we ought not to make Confeſſion of our Corporeal Sins only, but alſo of the Spiritual. Theſe are the Words of the 33*d*. Some ſay, That we ought to confeſs our Sins to God alone; others affirm, That they ought to be confeſs'd to Prieſts: Both are done with great Benefit in the Holy Church; ſo that we confeſs our Sins to God, who does forgive them; and, according to the Apoſtle's Inſtitution, we confeſs them to each other, and pray for each other, that we may be ſav'd. So the Confeſſion which is made to God purges from Sin; and that which is made to the Prieſt, informs us, how we ought to be purged from them: For, God is the Author of our Salvation, and grants it us, ſometimes in an inviſible Manner, by his Omnipotence, and ſometimes by the Operation of Phyſicians. Which Canon only proves, that the Confeſſion which is made to Prieſts ought to be attended with with an humble Confeſſion of Sins to God; or, it is to be only underſtood of Venial Sins; it being certain, that it is neceſſary, that Mortal Sins be confeſs'd to Prieſts, that we may obtain a Forgiveneſs of thoſe Sins. This Council, in the next Canon, exhorts the Prieſts to act like Phyſicians, and like Judges, and to enjoyn Salutary and Suitable Penances to Sinners. It lets Penitents know, after this, that Repentance, if it be true, ought to be attended with a Change, both in the Heart, and Courſe of Life. It enjoyns all Confeſſors to take their Meaſures, concerning the Injunction of Penances, from the Holy Writ, and the Canons, or from the Cuſtom of the Church; and, to reject ſuch Penitential Books, the Errors of which are unqueſtionable, and their Authors uncertain, which have occaſion'd the Death of many, becauſe they only enjoyn ſlight Penances for great Sins. In the nine and thirtieth Canon it is order'd, that Prayers be ſaid for the Dead at every Maſs. The fortieth orders, that ſuch Clergymen as have been, or ſhall be degraded for their Crimes, be ſhut up in Monaſteries, that they may lead there a Penitent Life. The one and fortieth is againſt ſuch Prieſts as change their Church. The two and fortieth is againſt thoſe who give Churches to Prieſts, or take Churches from them, without the Conſent of the Biſhops. The three and fortieth is againſt certain Iriſh men, who giving themſelves out to be Biſhops, did ordain Prieſts and Deacons, without the Conſent of the Ordinaries: Their Ordinations are here declared to be void. The four and fortieth is againſt thoſe Prieſts, that follow ſuch Trades as are forbidden them. The five and fortieth is againſt thoſe who go in Pilgrimage to Rome or Tours, thinking, by this means, to obtain more eaſily the Remiſſion of their Sins; and who, in hopes of this, the more freely commit them: But the Council approves the Piety of thoſe, who, having firſt confeſs'd their Sins at the Place of their Abode, and there done Penance, and begun a new Courſe of Life, go afterwards in Pilgrimage, by a Motive of real Devotion, and with a ſincere Deſign of expiating their Sins. The ſix and fortieth imports, that a great Deal of Caution ought to be us'd in what relates to the Receiving of the Body and Blood of Chriſt. That 'tis to be fear'd on one ſide, if it be too long put off, this Delay ſhould occaſion the Loſs of the Soul; but that on the other ſide, if 'tis receiv'd unworthily, not conſidering the Lord's Body, thoſe that receive, are like to eat and drink their own Damnation. So that all Perſons ought to try, and examine themſelves before, abſtaining, for ſome time, from Carnal Works, and cleanſing the Body and the Soul. The ſeven and fortieth orders, that all Chriſtians ſhall receive the Euchariſt on Holy Thurſday, except thoſe to whom it is forbidden to take it, on the account of the great Crimes which they have committed. The eight and fortieth recommends the Anointing of the Sick, which ought to be perform'd by Prieſts, with an Oil conſecrated by the Biſhop; adding, that a Remedy ſo fit to cure the Infirmities of the Soul and the Body, ought not to be neglected. The nine and fortieth renews the Inhibition made by the Council of Laodicea, to celebrate the Sacrament in private Houſes. The fiftieth orders the keeping of the Lord's Day Holy. The one and fiftieth recommends Charity between Superiors and Inferiors. The two and fiftieth commands the Abbeſſes to rule the Nuns committed to their Charge, with Holineſs and Piety, and to be themſelves a good Example to them. The following Canons are ſome Directions for Abbeſſes and Nunneries. There are, in all, ſixty ſix Canons of this Council.

The ſecond Council of Chalons.

The ſecond Council of Chalons.

The Council of Aix la Chapelle, in the Year 816.

Of Aix la Chapelle.

Of Aix la Chapelle.

Lewis the Godly having conven'd a numerous Council at Aix la Chapelle, in the Year 816, cauſed two Rules to be drawn up there, by Amalarius, out of the Writings of the Holy Fathers, the one for the Canons, and the other for the Canoneſſes. They were read and approv'd in this Council; which order'd, they ſhould be follow'd and practis'd by all Canons and Canoneſſes. The Emperor confirm'd them with his own Authority, and ſent Copies of them to the Biſhops, that they might take Care to have them put in Execution. I do not here give the Abridgment of thoſe two Rules, becauſe they wholly conſiſt of ſome Extracts of the Canons of the Councils, and of the Writings of the Latin Fathers.

The Council of Celichith in England, in the ſame Year.

Of Celichith.

Of Celichith.

'TWas not the French alone that were endeavouring to reform the Diſcipline of the Church; the Engliſh, mov'd by their Example, did the like. Kenwolfe, King of the Mercians, caus'd a Council to meet in the ſame Year 816; The Archbiſhop of Canterbury preſided in it, and twelve Biſhops of the different Kingdoms in England were preſent; eleven Canons were made in it: In the firſt, the Biſhops declare, that they will preſerve the Faith and Orthodox Doctrine in their Purity, which they receiv'd from their Fathers. In the ſecond they ſay, that when a Church is built, it ought to be conſecrated by the Biſhop of the Dioceſs; that afterwards the Euchariſt ought to be ſet there, with Relicks in a Cheſt; and that 'tis requiſite the Figure of the Saint to whom it is dedicated, be placed in ſome Part of it. The third is an Exhortation to Concord and Unity among the Biſhops. The fourth gives a Biſhop Power to elect an Abbot, or Abbeſs, yet with the Advice and Conſent of the Society. The fifth enjoyns that no Iriſh-men be ſuffer'd to diſcharge any Eccleſiaſtical Function out of their own Country. The ſixth confirms the Ancient Canons, and all Acts ratified and confirmed with the Sign of the Croſs. The ſeventh is to prevent the Alienation of the Goods of the Church. The eighth charges Laicks, or Secular Perſons, not to take Poſſeſſion of Monaſteries, or alter their Inſtitution. The ninth directs each Biſhop to have a Regiſter, in which the Orders of the Synods, which he is to obſerve, are to be ſet down, with the Name of the Archbiſhop, on whom he depends, and of the other Biſhops in the Province. The tenth imports, that after the Death of a Biſhop, the tenth Part of his Eſtate ſhall be diſtributed to the Poor, or to pious Uſes; and that Prayers ſhall be ſaid for him throughout his whole Dioceſs, that he may obtain the Kingdom of Heaven, and dwell with the Saints. The eleventh orders the Biſhops to do Nothing in the Dioceſes of their Brethren without their Leave. The Archbiſhop is excepted, becauſe he is the Head of the Biſhops. It charges the Prieſts not to perform any other Functions than ſuch as are left to them by the Biſhops, as that of baptizing, and giving the Extreme Unction. It eſtabliſhes ſome Penalties againſt thoſe that did neglect to adminiſter Baptiſm; and finally it orders, that this Sacrament ſhall not be perform'd by ſprinkling, but by dipping.

The Council of Aix la Chapelle, in the Year 817.

Of Aix la Chapelle.

Of Aix la Chapelle.

IN the following Year Lewis the Godly held an Aſſembly of Abbots and Monks at Aix la Chapelle, and cauſed ſome Conſtitutions for Monks to be prepar'd by Benedict of Aniane, charging that Abbot to ſee them kept. Theſe Conſtitutions are eighty in all. An Account of Abbies, and of what they were to pay to the Crown was alſo drawn up in that Aſſembly.

The Council of Thionville.

Of Thionville.

Of Thionville.

IN the Year 821, there was an Aſſembly at Thionville, which made ſome Laws againſt thoſe who ſhould offer to miſuſe or beat a Clerk, and the Time for their Penance is fixed. Theſe Eccleſiaſtical Laws were confirm'd by an Edict of Lewis the Godly, which is at the End of them.

The Capitularies, or Sanctions of Lewis the Godly.

The Capitularies, or Sanctions of Lewis the Godly.

Lewis the Godly following his Father's pious Example, made ſeveral Laws, and wrote ſome Letters about Eccleſiaſtical Matters.

In the firſt Year of his Empire he paſs'd an Edict in Favour of the Spaniards who fled into France from the Perſecution of the Saracens. Another Edict made in his third Year, on the ſame Subject, is extant.

In the Year 816, he confirmed the Conſtitutions that were made at the Council of Aix la Chapelle, and gave Orders, that they ſhould be follow'd by Letters to Magnus, Archbiſhop of Sens; to Frotarius, Archbiſhop of Bourdeaux; to Arnoldus, Archbiſhop of Salsburgh, and to other Metropolitans. In the ſame Year he alſo made twenty nine Capitularies on the Diſcipline of the Church. In the firſt he takes Care to ſecure to the Church thoſe Revenues that belong to it. In the ſecond, he leaves to the Clergy and the People the Liberty of chooſing their own Biſhops. In the third he confirms the Rules of Prebendaries. In the fourth he orders, that a good Uſe be made of the Oblations given at Church. In the fifth, he leaves to the Monks the Power of chuſing their own Abbots. In the ſixth, he forbids the conferring Holy Orders on Slaves. In the ſeventh, he enjoyns the Clergy not to receive ſuch Oblations, as might cauſe the Children, or Relations of thoſe that make them, to be depriv'd of their Inheritance. In the eighth, the Prieſts are forbidden to give the Tonſure to any Perſon, with a Deſign to get a Part of his Eſtate. In the ninth, the Laity are charg'd not to turn the Prieſts out of their Churches, or inſtall any there without the Biſhop's Conſent. In the tenth, he orders, that every Church have a Piece of Ground belonging to it, and that no Prieſts apply their Revenues but to the Service of the Church. In the eleventh, that every Church have its Prieſt: In the twelfth That the New Villages, where New Churches ſhall be built, pay Tythes to thoſe Churches. The thirteenth forbids to pawn the Holy Veſſels, unleſs it be for the Redemption of Captives. The ſixteenth is againſt the Simoniacal Exactions, that were practis'd by ſome Biſhops of Italy. The ſeventeenth renews the Canon which forbids Prieſts to dwell with Women. In the eighteenth, 'tis ordered, that the Biſhop ſhall ſend the Chriſm to ſuch Rectors of Pariſhes as are remote, by one of thoſe in their Neighbourhood; but that all thoſe who dwell but a League, or a League and a half out of Town, ſhall come to fetch it as uſually. In the nineteenth, the Biſhops are exhorted not to be a Charge to the People, when they go either to preach, or to confirm. In the twentieth 'tis decreed, that none preſume to make young Maids, Nuns; or Boys, Monks; i. e. without the Conſent of their Relations. The one and twentieth obliges Widows not to take the Veil, till thirty days after their Husbands Deceaſe. The three following Canons are concerning Raviſhers. The five and twentieth renews Gelaſius's Canon, againſt thoſe that either debauched any of the Virgins who had been conſecrated to God, or ran away with them. In the ſix and twentieth 'tis enjoyn'd, that no Maid ſhall receive the Veil before ſhe be five and twenty Years of Age, according to the Canons of Africa. The ſeven and twentieth forbids the Tryal by the Croſs. In the eight and twentieth, the Biſhops are charg'd to inſtruct the People of their Dioceſs. The laſt forbids Marriages between Relations, and the Sharing of Churches between Co-heirs, and promiſes to take Care to prevent this and many other Things.

In the Year 817, this Emperor publiſhed ſome Conſtitutions for the Monks; which Orders were drawn up at Aix la Chapelle by Benedict of Aniane.

Some mention an Edict of Confirmation made by Lewis the Godly, which, they ſay, he confirmed in Favour of Pope Paſchal II. the pretended Donations made by his Father to the Roman Church; but that Piece plainly appears to be ſuppoſititious, and does not deſerve the leaſt Credit.

The Capitularies of the Year 819, are almoſt all of them Civil Laws. Some of them, nevertheleſs, relate to the Church; particularly the laſt Capitulary, publiſhed by Baluzius, page 619.

The Capitularies, or Sanctions of Lewis the Godly.

In the Year 821, he wrote a Letter to the Monks of Aniane, to exhort them to follow the Rules that had been eſtabliſhed in their Monaſtery by their Abbot Bennet. He promiſes them his Protection on the account of the Love he had for him, and confirms their Abby in a Free Tenure, and the Liberty they had of chuſing their Abbot.

In the Year 822, at the Requeſt of the Biſhops conven'd at Thionville, he made ſome Laws, by which he enjoyned very ſevere Puniſhments for thoſe, who calumniate, revile, miſuſe, or put to Death any Clergyman.

In the ſame Year he made a Capitulary in Favour of the Nuns of St. Croſſe at Poictiers.

In the Year 824, he cauſed ſome Inſtructions to be compoſed for Jeremiah, Archbiſhop of Sens, and Jonas, Biſhop of Orleans, his Deputies at Rome, in the Affair of Images, according to the Preſcription of the Council of Paris; and he wrote a Letter to Pope Eugenius the Second on that Subject.

In the Year 826, there was an Aſſembly at Ingbilheim, where ſome Laws were publiſh'd againſt thoſe that ſhould offer any Violence to Perſons conſecrated to God.

In the Year 828, he appointed four Councils, viz. at Mentz, Paris, Lyons, and Tholouſe; commanded a Solemn Faſt, and ſent Deputies to theſe Councils, to whom he gave ſome Inſtructions; and, on this Occaſion, he wrote two Letters, which were addreſs'd to the People.

In the Year 829, he caus'd the Decrees of theſe four Councils to be examin'd in an Aſſembly held at Wormes, and extracted ſome Capitularies out of them.

In the Year 832, he made an Edict, to confirm the Reeſtabliſhment of the Monaſtick Rule in the Abby of St. Denys, which Monaſtery was originally made up of Benedictine Monks. The Monks had taken the Habit and Way of Living of Canons, except ſome of them, who had retir'd within a Houſe that belong'd to the Abby, by the Advice of Benedict and Arnoldus, who, being come to reform that Abby, had not been able to effect it; and had adviſ'd thoſe who had a mind to follow St. Bennet's Rule, to withdraw from the reſt. After this, Hilduin having demanded, that the Rule ſhould be re-eſtabliſh'd in that Abby, a Council held at Paris deputed Aldricus, Archbiſhop of Sens, and Ebbon, Archbiſhop of Rheims, to do it. Now when theſe were come to the Abby, they found three ſorts of Religious Men there; ſome of them ſaid, they never profeſs'd a Monaſtick Life, and that they deſir'd ſtill to live like Canons; Some others confeſſing, they had profeſs'd a Monaſtick Life, were ſorry that they had left it, took again the Habit of Monks, and led a Life conformable to its Rules; and a third ſort had always lived like Monks in a ſeparate Houſe. Theſe two Archbiſhops ſettled again the Monaſtick Order in the Abby of St. Denys. But, afterwards, many of thoſe who had reſum'd the Monaſtick Habit and Way of Living, repented the doing it, proteſted againſt it, and preſented their Petition to the Emperor againſt Hilduin, and againſt Aldricus and Ebbon; but, it being rejected, they reſolv'd to return to their Duty, and made three Charters, by which they bound themſelves to follow St. Bennet's Rule; one of which was preſented to Lewis the Godly, who confirmed it by the Edict of which we are now treating.

In the Year 834, he made the City of Hamburgh an Archbiſhoprick, as ſoon as Anſcharius ſhould be ordained Biſhop of it; and he aſſign'd him all the People in the North of the Elbe, by his Declaration of the 12*th*. of March in the ſame Year.

The Sixth Council of Paris, held in the Year 829.

Of Paris.

Lewis the Godly imitating his Father Charles the Great's Piety and Zeal, cauſ'd four Councils to be conven'd in the Year 829, to reform all the Churches in France. Theſe Councils met at Mentz, at Lyons, at Tholouſe, and at Paris; but we have Nothing left of them all, but the Conſtitutions of that at Paris, which are excellent and very well written. The Biſhops begin with an Expoſition of the true Faith, in which they ſhew, that Good Works ought to be joyn'd with Faith, that it may become Saving. They add, that it muſt be acknowledg'd, that the Church is but one Body, which is divided into two principal Parts, the Sacerdotal and the Regal. On this Point they quote the Paſſage in St. Gelaſius, and St. Fulgentius. Then they enlarge on the Learning and Virtues that are requiſite in a Miniſter of the Church. They order, that unleſs Neceſſity require it, none ſhall be baptized at any other Times but thoſe preſcribed by the Canons; and that the God-fathers ſhall take Care to inſtruct their God-children in the Faith. They renew the Inhibition made, to hinder ſuch as are baptized out of the Solemn Times, being ſick, from entering into Holy Orders. They exhort all Chriſtians to remember the Promiſes they have made at their Baptiſm. They enlarge upon the Qualities and Virtues which thoſe ought to have that enter into Holy Orders. They enjoyn the Biſhops not to alienate the Revenues of the Church, and preſcribe to them the Uſe they ought to make of them. They alſo order, that they recite the Canonical Hours with their Clergy, and hold Spiritual Conferences. They forbid them to prefer to any Church ſuch Clergymen as are preſented to them by Laicks, unleſs they find them duly qualified, and of ſound Morals. They exhort them to do their Duty towards the Flock that is committed mitted to their Charge, and not use it as their own, but as belonging to Christ, and to assist it corporally and spiritually. They complain, that Provincial Councils were not still holden every Year; and shew, how beneficial that Practice was to the Church. They reprove the Attempts of the Suffragan Bishops. They condemn the Priests that become either Farmers, or Men of Business, and wandring Clergymen and Monks. They charge the Bishops not to send to several distinct Parts such Priests as belong to some particular Church. They recommend Residence to the Priests, and a constant Attendance to instruct their Flocks. They charge the Bishops not to put their Clergy to Expence in their Visitations. They condemn several Penitentials to be burnt, and charge the Priests to fulfil, as they ought, the Ministry of the Keys. They order the Bishops not to give the Sacrament of Confirmation, after they have eaten, and believe that Sacraments ought to be administred fasting, unless on extraordinary Occasions. They would not have them bestow the Holy Ghost by Imposition of Hands, which is the Sacrament of Confirmation, at any other Times than at Easter, and on Whitsunday. They renew the Ancient Canons against the Crimes of Uncleanness. They will have degraded Priests put into a State of Penance. They forbid the Admission of Foreign Clergymen. They advise the Abbots to be an Example to their respective Societies. They exhort the Clergy to behave themselves modestly, decently, and honestly. They will not have such Women as have newly left a Worldly State to be Superiors [i. e. Abbesses] of Nuns. The Priests are forbidden giving the Veil to Widows without the Bishops Consent, and also consecrating Virgins; and the Abbesses are forbidden giving the Veil to Widows or Maids. They will not have the Veil to be given to Widows, till some Time after the Death of their Husbands. They do not permit Women to touch the Sacred Vessels, nor to give the Sacerdotal Habits to the Priests, and much less to give the Eucharist, as, through a great Abuse, they did in some Places. They charge all Priests and Canons not to go into any Nunnery, nor will they have Mass said in any other Place than publick and consecrated Churches, saying, That 'tis better not to hear Mass, than to hear it where it ought not to be said. Priests are order'd not to say Mass when they are alone. They order, that, as there is a Bishop in each City [or Town] there ought to be a Priest in each Church; and they forbid one Priest Officiating at several Churches. After they have spoken of keeping the Lord's-Day Holy, according to the Ecclesiastical Laws, they resolve that an Address be made to the Prince, to desire, that he may command, that no Pleadings, nor Markets be kept on that Day; and that neither Husbandmen, nor Day-labourers work on that Day in the Country. They forbid all Vexations and Usury. Finally, they will not allow those Penitents, who are not yet reconciled to the Church, to stand God-fathers to Children. This is what is handled in the first Part of this Council, so far as it relates to the Clergy, and to the Priestly Office. The second concerns Princes, and the Laity. The Bishops give some very good Instructions to Kings concerning their Duties. They recommend to them Justice, Moderation, Clemency, and other Royal Virtues. They declare to their Subjects, that they ought to obey them, and revere their Power which comes from God. They exhort the Faithful to come to Church, to joyn in the Prayers, and admonish them to behave themselves reverently there. Finally, they charge those who cannot come to Church, nevertheless to pray to God, and perform the Duties which they owe him. These Articles being fram'd, they sent them to the Emperor Lewis, and added twenty seven Chapters to them, which they pray'd His Majesty to enact, and cause them to be put in Execution, that the aforesaid Articles might continue and be in Force.

The sixth Council of Paris.

The Council of Aix la Chapelle, in the Year 836.

Of Aix la Chapelle.

IN the Year 836, in the Month of February, there was an Assembly of Bishops at Aix la Chapelle, in which some Constitutions were made, which are divided into three Parts. The first is concerning the Virtue of Bishops: The second, touching the Learning, Manners, and Doctrine of other Clergy; And the third, of the Virtues and Duties of the Emperor, and his Children, principally in what relates to Church-Affairs. A Remonstrance was prepar'd afterwards by the said Council, address'd to King Pepin, and the Great Men of His Kingdom, on the Occasion of their having seiz'd, to their own Use, the Goods of the Church; and, that the said Remonstrance might be more effectual, it was attended with three Books, that contain'd the Examples and Passages in the Old and New Testament; as also, some Ecclesiastical Laws, which make it appear, that 'tis a Crime to take away by Force, those Goods that are consecrated to God and the Church. Eginard tells us, that this Remonstrance wrought the desir'd Effect, and that Pepin yielded to these Advices which were given him by his Father and the Bishops; so that he caused the Goods which had been taken from the Churches, to be restor'd.

The Council of Thionville.

Of Thionville.

IN the Year 844, Lewis the Godly's three Sons met at Thionville, and held there an Assembly of Bishops, of which Drouc, Bishop of Metz, was President. They exhorted these Princes, First, To keep a peaceable, and friendly Correspondence with each other. Secondly, to name Bishops to the Vacant Churches. Thirdly, to restore to some Monks the Places and Revenues that ought to belong to them. Fourthly, to hinder the Laity from taking into their Possession the Goods of the Church. Fifthly, that if some Reasons of State obliged them to give some Abbies, or Houses of Canons, or Nuns, in Commendam; at least they should give Order, that the Bishop, with some Abbot, might take Care of those Monasteries and Religious Houses. Sixthly, to restore to the Whole Ecclesiastical Order, the Authority which they had, to cause the Discipline of the Church to be put in Execution, and oblige Sinners to do Penance.

The Council of Verneuil.

Of Verneuil.

IN the same Year 844, a Council was held at Verneuil, in which, Ebron, Bishop of Poictiers was President, with Wenilo, Archbishop of Sens, Hincmarus, Archbishop of Rheims, and the Abbot of St. Denys, who assisted at it, bore the Character of the King's Commissioners. The Council addresses their Constitutions to King Charles. First of all they exhort him to mix Severity with Mercy, and govern his People with Justice. They pray him to send his Commissioners to apprehend, and punish those disorderly Clergymen, who contemn Apostolick Discipline, and break the Holy Canons, to hinder several Monks, that they abandon not their Profession, to compel certain wandring Monks, and Clergymen to return to their Monasteries and Churches, to nominate a Bishop for the Church of Rheims, and confirm the Ordination of Agius to the Church of Autun; to adjourn the Debate about the Preference granted to Drouc the Bishop of Metz, to a more Numerous Council out of France and Germany; and lastly, to cause those Revenues of the Church to be restored, which Laymen have unjustly possessed themselves of.

Of Beauvais.

IN 845, Wenilo, Archbishop of Sens, Erchanraus, and nine Bishops, or Archbishops of Charles's Kingdom, with Hincmarus, Archbishop Elect of Rheims, met in April at Beauvais, and composed eight Canons, which they presented to that Prince, to require of him a Restitution of the Revenues and Privileges of the Church. In this Synod Hincmarus was ordain'd

The Council of Meaux, in 845. and Paris, in 846.

Of Meaux.

THE Bishops of France being very earnest to perfect the Reformation of Discipline, which they had begun, met in May 845, at Meaux; and in February following at Paris, where they composed 80 Canons for that end. The six first were Decrees made at Coulaine, near Mons, concerning the Honour of the Church, and Peace of the State, which had the Approbation of the King, and Bishops. Those that follow, to the 13*th*. are the Canons made at the Synod at Thionville. The four next are taken out of the Council held at Lorris in Anjou, about the Authority of the King. To these are added the Decrees of the Council of Beauvais, concerning the Revenues of the Church.

The Councils of Meaux and Paris.

Church. The rest were made either at Meaux, or Paris. In them the Bishops declare, that their Mansion-Houses ought to be Holy, and not frequented by Secular Men, or Women. And for this Reason it is, that they desire the King, that when he takes up his Lodgings in them, in his Journies, that he would not bring any Women into them. They also earnestly beg of him, that he would not suffer his Retinue, or Guards, to pillage the Towns they pass through, or take what they please of the People without paying for it: They exhort him to maintain the Bishops in their Right of doing their Office, without Molestation, and executing the Holy Canons. They condemn the Custom of certain Bishops, who very seldom, or never visit their Dioceses. They revive the Ancient Laws concerning the Translation of Bishops, the Honour due to Metropolitans, holding Provincial Councils, and Residence, &c. They forbid taking Oaths about Things Sacred. They demand a Restitution of the Ancient Hospitals, and the Freedom of Monasteries. They condemn them that are Simoniacally ordain'd. They forbid the Suffragan Bishops to execute the Functions of Bishops. They command the Bishops to consecrate the Chrism upon Holy Thursday only, and not to take any Thing for the Distribution of it. They forbid Laymen making themselves Masters of Ecclesiastical Revenues, or choosing a Steward of them without the Consent of the Bishop, to whom the Disposal of them doth properly belong. They strictly prohibit any Priests to administer Baptism in any other Places than in the Churches where the Fonts stand; and that Clergymen should be employed in any other Business besides what belongs to the Church. They ordain, that the Priests, or Clergy of another Diocese shall not be received without Letters Dimissory. They forbid, that any Strangers shall be admitted into Holy Orders, till they have continued one Year in the Communion of some Church; or Monastery, or in the City, and declare themselves against all Ordinations without a Title. They require all Prebendaries to live in one House together, and to have the same Hall, and Dormitory. They order the Bishops to have special Care of the Cardinal-Titles established in the Cities, or their Suburbs. They forbid Usury to all Christians. They order, that a Bishop shall excommunicate no Man, but for a publick and certain Crime, and then shall not pronounce that Anathema against any Man, but with the Consent of his Metropolitan; and after he hath given the Admonitions commanded in the Gospel. They charge the Monks to abide in the Monasteries, and not to meddle with Secular Affairs. They petition the King not to entertain any Prebendaries in his Service, though they present themselves to him, unless the Consent of their Bishop be first had; and desire, that he may be the Person that ordains them. They forbid, that a Monk should be put out of his Monastery, till his Bishop be consulted about it, or be either himself, or Deputy present. They repeat the Laws against those that invade the Revenues of the Church, as also against Ravishers, and such Nuns as live a disorderly Life. They revive the Ancient Laws against the Jews. They forbid Burying the Dead in the Church, as by an Hereditary Right. They agreed, that the Bishop should sue to the King for a Commission, engaging the Judges to obey them in every Thing that respected the Ministry. They exhort the Great Men not to suffer any Disorders in their Houses, and to be particularly careful that the Priests of their Chappels should live pious Lives. They testifie their earnest Desires, that the King would bestow those Chappels only upon such Priests as would exact the Tythes that belong to them, leaving the Parish-Churches to a Curate, with a Charge to uphold the Chappels, and celebrate Divine Service in them. And they add, that if the King gives them to Laymen, they ought not to receive the Tythes, but they ought to be given to the Curates, who officiate in those Chappels. They pray him to give Order, that no Pleas be held in any Court, during Lent, or Easter-week. Lastly, they desire him to confirm the Constitutions of Charles the Great, and Lewis the Godly.

The Councils of Meaux and Paris.

These Constitutions being presented to King Charles, then at Epernay, and the Nobles opposing some of them, the King having commanded the Bishops to retire, till he consulted about them, confirmed only nineteen of them, which ought to be understood of the last of those Constitutions, which were made in the Councils of Meaux, and Paris. For the Canons of the Councils of Coueline and Thionville, were confirmed, and published by his Authority before, and are met with at the Head of his Capitularies.

The Capitularies of King Charles the Bald.

The Capitularies of King Charles the Bald.

AFter the Constitutions before-mention'd, there follow nine made at Tholouse, An. 843. upon the Complaints of certain Priests, who were overcharged by their Bishop.

In the first of them the Emperor orders, that the Bishop should do Nothing against the Priests, by way of Revenge, because they have complained against them.

In the 2*d.* he commands, that the Bishops should exact no more every Year of the Priests, than a Maid of Wheat, and as much Barley; † a Maid of Wine, with a Pig of six Pence, or two Sols-value, which was before determined by the Councils of Toledo, and Bragues.

† A Maid is a large French Measure, for Corn, containing five Seam and five Bushels of London Measure; and, for Wine, it contains 38 Gallons.

The 3*d.* obliges them that dwell within one League, or a League and half of the City, to send this Present by their Servants; but in all Places at greater Distances, the Bishop shall appoint a Place in every Deanery to have them brought to. He exhorts the Bishops not to suffer those Officers, whom they shall appoint to receive those Presents, to exact them with Force, but they should kindly accept what the Priests shall bring of their own accord.

The 4*th.* advises the Bishops, in their Visitations, not to stay at every small Church, but to make choice of some of the principal Churches, where the Curates of the lesser shall meet them, and bring their People to be instructed and confirmed. So that they shall visit but one Church in five, and the Curates of the other four shall come to them, with their People, and bring with them every one ten Loaves, a Rundlet of Wine of 16 Gallons, a good Quantity of Oats, a fat sucking Pig, two Pullets, and some Eggs for the Maintenance of the Bishop, and his Attendants. That the Person where the Bishop lodges shall accommodate him with Nothing, but Wood, and Houshold Utensils; and that the Bishop shall be careful that his Servants do his Host no Damage, either in his House or Gardens.

In the 5*th.* he confines the Bishops, that they shall not visit above once in the Year; and, if they do it oftner, they shall be no Charge to their Curates in their other Visits.

In the 6*th.* he orders, that if the Bishops do not visit in Person, they shall not exact any Thing of their Curates for it, nor oblige them to be at any Expence to entertain others; and that they shall not carry along with them a great Number of Servants.

The 7*th.* exhorts the Bishops not to multiply Parishes without Necessity.

The Capitularies of King Charles the Bald.

The 8*th.* declares, that the Bishops shall have no Power to decline the Observation of the Orders, under a Pretence that it belongs to them to make and explain Canons; that they ought to explain them in their genuine Sense, and not elude them by corrupt Glosses; and, if they do otherwise, he will teach them, by the Judgment of a Synod, and his own Royal Authority, how they shall explain them aright.

The 9*th.* says, that the Bishops shall oblige the Priests not to come to above two Synods a Year, at the set-times for them, appointed by the Canons of the Church, and that they shall judge Priests with Justice.

King Charles published also, at the same Place, another Constitution in Favour of the Spaniards and Goths, who were then fled into Catalonia.——He likewise published at Epernay the 19 Canons made at the Councils of Meaux and Paris, in 846.

In 853. he confirmed the Canons of the Council of Soissons, and made several Constitutions for the better Support of Ecclesiastical Discipline, of which I shall speak afterwards: Which were published and confirmed at the Synod held at Verbery the same Year; which made some other Canons also, confirmed by Charles's Authority.——In December, the same Year, he nominated several Ecclesiastical and Lay-Commissioners, in all the Provinces of France, and gave them several Heads of Instruction to act by in their Office; among which the second concerns the Honour of the Church.

There are also one or two about the Revenues of the Churches and Monasteries in the Constitutions made at Attigny, in 854.——In his Letters-Patents of the same Year, given at Verbery, Aug. 23*d.* King Charles confirms to the Prebendaries of the Church of Tournay, the Property of the Revenue she was possess'd of, and limits the Number of them to 30.

In an Assembly of Bishops and Lords, held Anno 856. at Bonneuil, they petition the King to put the Monasteries in Order, and to execute the Constitutions made at Coulaine, Beauvais, Thionville, Verneuil and Soissons, and declare all those things Null, that shall be made in Prejudice to those Laws. They threaten him with God's Judgments, if he doth not perform their Desires.

In 857. King Charles made two Constitutions at Quierzy, which he sent to the Commissioners of his Realm; by which he gave them Power to bring all Offenders to Civil or Ecclesiastical Punishments, and particularly Ravishers.

In

The Capitularies of King Charles the Bald.

In 862. he put out a ſevere Edict at Piſta againſt Robberies, and other publick Diſorders, very common at that Time, in which the Biſhops join with the King, and condemn thoſe Malefactors to Canonical Puniſhment, which the King condemned to Civil. In 866. there was a Conſtitution made at Compeigne, about the Liberties and Priviſleges of Churches, and the Authority of Biſhops.

But, above all, his Edict of 869. made at Piſta upon the Seine, is the moſt conſiderable of all that he made about Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline. In it he declares himſelf the Defender of the Biſhops Authority, and Liberty of the Churches. He orders all his Miniſters to reſpect their Power, execute their Commands, and preſerve the Churches in the Enjoyment of their Privileges. He requires all Earls, great Lords and Judges, to give the Biſhops their due Subjection; and, on the other ſide, that the Biſhops ſhould not encroach upon the Rights of the Earls, Lords and Judges. He commands the Biſhops to do no Injuſtice, either to the Clergy or Laity, under their Juriſdiction; and that their Curates ſhould give the Lords of their Pariſhes the Reſpect due to them. He enjoyns the Biſhops not to reject thoſe Clergymen that are preſented to them by Abbots, Abbeſſes, or Lords, to ſerve in their Churches, if they are not worthy of Blame for their Converſation, or Doctrine. He renews the Conſtitution, which forbids the Lords requiring any Thing of the Clerks they preſent. He forbids them excommunicating any Perſons, who were not fully convicted of the Faults they were accuſed of; and, who after Admonition to amend and repent, have not obſtinately refuſed to ſubmit. He recommends Peace, Union and Friendſhip among his Civil Magiſtrates, Biſhops and Clergy. He orders his Biſhops to defend the Privileges granted to their Churches by the Church of Rome, and by the Charters of his Royal Progenitors, and that they be careful to have the Rents paid that are due to them.

The King having received Intelligence at Piſta, that Lotharius was dead, went immediately to Lorrain to be crown'd King of it. And being arrived there in Sept. 869. after Adventius, Biſhop of that City, had declared in the Name of all the Biſhops and People, that they all accepted him for their King, he took an Oath to preſerve the Honour and Privileges of their Churches, to do Juſtice impartially to every Man, according to the Laws, and protect that Kingdom. After this Hincmarus, who performed the Ceremony of the Coronation, and ordain'd ſome Biſhops, being admoniſh'd by Adventius, and other Biſhops, which belonged to the Province of Treves, that this Action would prejudice the Rights of their Metropolis, made a Declaration, That it would be no Prejudice to the Rights of the Province of Treves, becauſe that Province, and that of Rheims were like Siſters, ſo firmly united, that they made, but as it were one Province; ſince the Biſhops of both met at one Synod, obſerved the ſame Cations, and among the Archbiſhops of Treves and Rheims, the moſt aged always took Place: But yet, were it not ſo, he ought not to be accuſed for medling with the Juriſdiction of another Province, by his own Authority, or of putting his Sickle into the Harveſt that did not belong to him, ſince he had not concerned himſelf with that Province, but at the Requeſt of the Biſhop, and out of Charity. Laſtly, That they ought to look upon it, as a ſpecial Favour of God, that Charles was crowned King at Metz, becauſe heretofore his Father Lewis the Godly, who was deſcended of Clovis the French King, who was converted by St. Remigius, and baptized in the Church of Rheims, where he was anointed and conſecrated King, by a Chriſm ſent down from Heaven, which they ſtill have at Rheims: That Lewis the Godly was crowned Emperor in that City, and after he was depoſed from his Imperial Throne by the Conſpiracies of his Enemies, he was reſtored, and was crowned again in the ſame City, and in St. Stephen's Church, whoſe Name was a good Omen, becauſe it ſignifies a Crown. After this Declaration, he ask'd the People, if the Coronation ſhould be celebrated before the Altar, and whether that Prince ſhould be conſecrated by the Holy Unction. The People having teſtified their Approbation by their Acclamations, they ſang Te Deum, and the King was crowned by the Prieſtly Benediction of the Biſhops. This Conſtitution is very remarkable.

In the Year 874. Charles judged ſome Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes at Attigny, at the Requeſt of the Biſhop of Barcelona. The firſt was about a Complaint made to him, That one Thyrſus, a Prieſt of Cordoba, had called the People together at a Church of Barcelona, and had taken away from him almoſt two Thirds of his People; That he celebrated Maſs, and adminiſtred Baptiſm without his Permiſſion. That he cauſed thoſe People to go to his Church on the Feaſts of Nativity and Eaſter, which ought to be at his Cathedral, and gave them the Sacrament. The King recited the Canons, which condemned the Practice of that Prieſt. The ſecond Complaint, made by the Biſhop of Barcelona, was, That another Prieſt had engaged the Inhabitants of the Caſtle of Terracine, not to ſubmit to his Juriſdiction. The King order'd, that the Canons in that Caſe ſhould be obſerved. The third was againſt two private Perſons, who having intercepted the King's Letters, had poſſeſſed themſelves, the one of St. Stephen's Church, and the other of certain Lands belonging to the Church of St. Eulalia. The King commanded, that if this cou'd be prov'd, his Commiſſioners ſhould give an Account what Letters had been intercepted, that being reported to the Council, it might be examined by them.

Lewis, the Emperor of Italy, being dead, Aug. 8. 875. Charles was crowned Emperor at Rome on Chriſtmas-day of the ſame Year, by Pope John VIII. and at his Return, received the Crown of Lombardy at Pavia, and the Confirmation of his Imperial Crown in an Aſſembly of the Nobles and Biſhops of that Country, held Feb. 876. at which the Pope was preſent in Perſon. After this, to acknowledge the Obligations he had to the Pope, he made a Conſtitution, in which he decreed, That all Perſons ſhould pay a ſpecial Veneration to the Holy Roman Church, the Head of all other Churches; that no Man ſhould dare to attempt any Thing in Violation of her Power and Privileges; but ſhe ſhould enjoy her full Authority, and exerciſe her Paſtoral Care over all the Church; that they ſhould particularly honour the Supreme Biſhop, and Univerſal Pope John; that his Decrees ſhould be received, with all due Regard, and Obedience be given him in all Things he hath Right to: He forbids all Perſons encroaching upon the Lands and Revenues of the Church of Rome. He then commands, that due Reſpect be paid to the Sacerdotal Authority and Clergy; that all ſhould ſubmit to the Imperial Authority, and none ſhould be ſo bold as to reſiſt his Orders. That Biſhops ſhould freely exerciſe their Function, and puniſh Offenders; that they be careful to preach. He enjoyns the Laymen which dwell in the Cities, to be preſent at the Aſſemblies of the Church on Feſtival-days, and forbids them having Private Chappels in their Houſes. He requires, that Biſhops ſhould have Colleges for their Prebendaries near the Church; that Prebendaries ſhould live according to the Canonical Rules, and be ſubject to their Biſhop. He forbids Clergymen dwelling, or converſing with Women, as alſo Hunting. He provides for the Preſervation of the Church-Revenues, and Payment of Tythes. He commends Friendſhip between the Nobility and Clergy. This was publiſhed and received at Pontigon in July 876.

Laſtly, Charles the Bald held an Aſſembly of his Nobles at Quiercy, June 877. in which he made ſeveral Conſtitutions by his own Authority, and propounded others to his Nobles for their Advice. The Conſtitutions now made about Diſcipline, are theſe: The 1*ſt.* was about the Honour and Liberty of Churches, ſo often repeated. By the 2*d.* he confirms the Privileges of the Abby of St. Mary of Compeigne, granted by the Pope, received by the Biſhops, and authorized by the King's Letters. The 8*th.* ſecures the Revenues of vacant Archbiſhopricks, and Biſhoprieks. In the 12*th.* he nominates ſeveral Biſhops, Abbots and Earls to diſpoſe of his Alms, which he ſhould give by Will, after his Death. The reſt contain ſeveral Directions for doing what is neceſſary for the Good of his Kingdom and Children after his Deceaſe. Two days after he renewed again the Conſtitution about the Honour of Churches, and Authority of Biſhops; he confirmed ſeveral Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Laws, and promiſed to put them in Execution. He provides for the Preſervation of the Eſtate of an Earl lately deceaſed, till his Son was in Poſſeſſion of it; and for the Security of thoſe Churches who have loſt their Biſhop, Abbot, or Superior, till they have a Succeſſor. Theſe are the laſt Conſtitutions of Charles the Bald, who died Auguſt the 28*th.* following at Francfort, in the 70*th.* Year of his Age, and 59*th.* from his firſt Coronation. He was a Lover of Juſtice, Religion, and of the Church, and was the neareſt of any Prince of his Race, to Charles the Great, in his good Qualities and Virtues.

The Council of Mentz, held Anno 847.

of Mentz.

This Council was held under Rabanus, An. 847. It was made up of 12 Biſhops, ſome Suffragans, ſeveral Abbots, Monks, Prieſts, and others of the Clergy. The Biſhops and Clergy made one Body, and had the Goſpels, Canons, and Fathers laid before them; The Monks the Rule of St. Benedict, that they might unanimouſly endeavour a Reformation of the Clergy, and the Monaſtick Life. —Firſt, They particularly recommended to the Biſhops, that they ſhould take Care that the People be well inſtructed in the Fundamentals of Religion; and, for that End, certain Homilies ſhould be compoſed in the Vulgar Tongue. Secondly, That Baptiſm ſhould be adminiſtred according to the Rites of the Church of Rome, and at the Times appointed by the Pope's Decretals.

They exhort all Men to Peace; and order, That not only thoſe Men ſhould be excommunicated, who attempt any Thing againſt the King or State; but thoſe, who, by Surprize, contrary to his good Affection to Religion, obtain of him the Lands and Revenues that belong to the Church. The Council of Mentz.

They leave the whole Diſpoſal of the Church's Revenues in the Power of the Biſhops, and forbid the Clergy to make Uſe of them, to augment their own Eſtates, or diſpoſe of them. They ſecure their Tythes, and other Rights, to the Churches. They revive the Canons concerning ſuch Employments as are forbid Clergymen and Monks.

They forbid Monks to have any Poſſeſſions of their own, to covet the Enjoyment of Worldly Things, which they have renounced, and to take on them any Cure of Souls, without the Conſent of the Biſhop.

They forbid Abbeſſes to go out of their Monaſteries without great Neceſſity, and without the Leave of the Biſhop.

They revive the ancient Canons of the Council of Ancyra againſt Manſlayers. They declare, touching the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments to the Sick, that the Prieſts ought to require of them a ſincere Confeſſion, without impoſing on them any rigorous Penance, but only to bring their Sins to Remembrance, and comfort them under them, by the Prayers of their Friends, and by their Alms, and ſo abſolve them, upon Condition nevertheleſs, that if they recover their Health, they ſhall undergo what Penance ſhall be impoſed on them; after which they may adminiſter the Unction, and then the Communion, as their Viaticum. The Council of Mentz.

They are not afraid to grant ſuch Malefactors, as ſuffer for their Crimes, if they confeſs their Sins, and are penitent, the Honour of a Chriſtian Burial; and that their Offerings be received, and Maſſes ſaid for them.

Laſtly, After they have forbidden all Contracts of Marriages, either Inceſtuous, or within the Degrees of Conſanguinity, prohibited by the Laws; they command, that Penances, proportionable to Mens Crimes, ſhall be impoſed upon them; that Publick Sinners ſhall do Publick Penance; and they, whoſe Sins are Secret, ſhall undergo Private Penance.

This is almoſt all that is contained in the one and thirty Canons of this Council. We ſhall not here ſpeak of the Council of Mentz held the next Year, againſt Gotteſchalcus, nor of thoſe that concern his Affair, nor Ebbo's, becauſe we have ſpoken of them at large in another Place.

The Council of Pavia.

THE Emperor Lotharius, and his Son Lewis, held an Aſſembly at Pavia, Anno 850. in which the Biſhops made 25 Articles, or Conſtitutions. Of Pavia.

In the 1ſt. they order, that the Biſhops ſhould have ſome Prieſts, or other Clergymen Witneſſes of their moſt ſecret Actions.

In the 2d. that they ſhould not neglect not only to celebrate Maſs publickly on Sundays and Feſtivals, but, if it be poſſible, offer that Sacrifice every day in private.

In the 3d. they order, that their Meals ſhould be temperate, and that they ſhould entertain Pilgrims and Strangers at them; whom they ſhould entertain with pious Diſcourſes and Exhortations.

In the 4th. they forbid the Pleaſures and Luxury of the World.

In the 5th. they adviſe them to ſtudy the Holy Scripture; to explain it to their Clergy, and to preach upon it to the People.

The 6th. imports, that the Biſhops ſhould be careful that the Prieſts diſcharge their Duties well in the Government which is entruſted to them: That the Archprieſts ſhould go to the Heads of Families, to exhort Publick Offenders to do Publick Penance: That in difficult Caſes they ſhould apply themſelves to the Biſhops, and the Biſhops ſhould conſult their Brethren.

The 7th. orders, that the Prieſts ſhould examine whether the Penitents perform the Works of Penance; That the Abſolution of Publick Penitents is reſerved to the Biſhops, and that no Prieſt ſhall abſolve them but in the Abſence of the Biſhop, and with his Allowance, becauſe the Impoſition of Hands was reſerved to the Apoſtles.

The 8th. engages them to inſtruct the People in the ſaving Nature of the Sacrament of Unction, of which the Apoſtle St. James ſpeaks [Chap. 5. 14.] and make them ſenſible, that they can hope to receive the wiſhed-for Effects of that Myſtery, viz. Remiſſion of Sins, and Health, only when they deſire it with a ſound and full Faith. That becauſe it often happens, that ſick Perſons know not the Force of that Sacrament, or think their Diſtempers inconſiderable; or forget to deſire it, becauſe their Minds are taken up with the Pains of their Sickneſs; the Prieſt of the Place ought to put them in mind of receiving it, and invite the Prieſts of his Neighbourhood to be preſent at the Adminiſtration. But if the ſick Perſon be in a State of Penance, he ought not to beſtow it on him, till he be reconciled to the Church; becauſe he that is not allowed to receive the other Sacraments, is not in a Capacity of receiving this.

The 9th. adviſes Fathers of Families to marry their Daughters aſſoon as they are of Age, and condemns them to Penance, if they happen to be debauch'd, either by their Negligence, or Conniyance; and forbids, that the Benediction be given them, who marry after they are deflowered. It alſo ſays, that Marriage is forbidden thoſe, who are in a Courſe of Publick Penance.

The 10th. is againſt Raviſhers, and declares, that they cannot lawfully marry the Perſons they have forced; and allows ſuch Perſons no Abſolution, but juſt at the Point of Death.

The 11th. orders, that they who commit a Publick Crime in any Place, ſhall be excluded from Communion by the Biſhop of that Place, and put to Penance, and not be received to Communion by any other.

The 12th. declares, that they who are deprived of Communion, and put to Penance for their Crimes, may not exerciſe any publick Offices, but can't be prohibited from taking Care of their Domeſtick Affairs. That ſuch Perſons as refuſe to do Penance, ought to be excommunicated and anathematized, after all proper Means are uſed to make them ſubmit to their Duty. Yet this is not to be done without the Judgment of the Metropolitan, and Biſhops of the Province. Of Pavia.

The 13th. orders the Biſhops to commit the Care of Prieſts of ſmaller Pariſhes to the Archprieſts.

The 14th. commands thoſe Biſhops who have ſuffered the Monaſteries of their Dioceſes to be demoliſhed, to have them immediately repaired and re-built.

The 15th. imports, that ſuch Hoſpitals, as are ſubject to Biſhops, ſhall be govern'd according to the Orders of their Founders: That thoſe that are under the Protection of the Church, ſhall be govern'd by the Heirs of the Founders, according to the Rules of their Inſtitution, who ſhall hinder all Embezelling the Revenues, and Miſ-employment of them.

The 16th. reſolves, that they will repreſent to the Prince the Miſdemeanour of thoſe Hoſpitals, that are under their Protection.

The 17th. orders, that all Chriſtians ſhould pay their Tythes, which ſhall be employed for the Maintenance of the Clergy, and the Neceſſities of the Church, according to the Diſpoſal of the Biſhop.

The 18th. importeth, that they will not ſuffer any of thoſe Prieſts, or Clergymen, who are called Acephali, not under the Diſcipline of any Biſhop; and that thoſe Prieſts, that celebrate Divine Service in Noblemens Chappels, ſhall be ſuch as are approved by the Biſhop; or if they be out of other Biſhopricks, ſhall have Commendatory Letters from their own Biſhop: That they will not ſuffer wandring Clerks, nor any other Perſons without a Miſſion.

The 19th. forbids putting Clergymen upon Secular Employments.

The 20th. imports, that they ſhall be excommunicated, who ſuffer Jews to be either the Judges, or Receivers of Tribute.

The 21ſt. forbids Uſury, and obliges ſuch, as have made Advantage by it, to Reſtitution.

The 22d. imports, that they who neglect the Care of Orphans and Widows committed to their Charge, ſhall be admoniſhed of it, and exhorted to be very diligent and watchful for them; but if they will not do it, they ſhall petition the King to appoint them other Guardians.

The 23d. is againſt thoſe Clergymen and Monks, who, going up and down the Cities, ſtir up unprofitable Queſtions, and diſperſe Errors. They order, that ſuch Men ſhall be apprehended by the Biſhop of the Place, and carried to the Metropolitan; and if it be found that they have vented ſuch Doctrines through Ambition, and not for the Inſtruction, or Edification of the Faithful, they ſhall be puniſhed, as the Diſturbers of the Church's Peace.

The 24th. forbids the ill Practices of certain Peaſants, who married their Sons very young to full grown Women, to be abuſed by them, and prohibits ſuch Marriages.

The laſt condemns certain Magicians to very ſevere Penance, and deprives them of Abſolution till the Point of Death, who boaſted, they could make Perſons love, or hate one another by their Art; and, whom they ſuſpected of having killed ſome Men by it.

I The

The Council of Soissons, Anno 853.

The Council of Soissons.

THis Council hath three Parts. 1. Some Canons. 2. The Acts of eight Sessions, about the Affair of Ebbo, and the Clerks ordained by him. 3. Some Constitutions published by the Emperor. What is contained in the Acts of this Council, we have related in the History of Hincmarus. So that there remain only the Canons and Imperial Constitutions.

The 1st. is Nothing else but an Abridgment of the Judgment given against Ebbo.

The 2d. is concerning Heriman, Bishop of Nevers; who, being a Man of a weak Judgment, had committed several Misdemeanours in his Office; and, notwithstanding that, desired to continue in his Function. They order Wenilo, Archbishop of Sens, his Metropolitan, to go to Nevers, to put that Church in Order, and bring away Heriman to Sens along with him, till the Summer, in which he was worst in his Mind, was over, and send him again when he was grown something better.

In the 3d. they reform what had passed in the Business of the Bishop of Chartres. They question'd the Validity of his Election, and maintain, that he is not fit to be a Bishop. It was order'd, that he should either justifie himself, or retire; and they charged Hincmarus, Pardulus, and Agius, to certifie him of their Resolution. He thinking himself innocent, and being confirmed in that Opinion by the Testimony of the Clergy and Laity of Chartres who were present, he thought it his best Time to appear, which he accordingly did, and said, That it would be a great Piece of Pride in him to assert himself worthy of so great a Dignity, but if any Person accused him of any Crime, he was ready to defend himself. No Man appearing, the Council order'd, that certain Commissioners chosen by Wenilo, should be sent to Chartres, to examine the Ordination of Burchard, give in their Report, and ordain him Bishop.

In the 4th. they relate, that the Bishop of Mans being troubled with the Palsie, wrote to the Council to be excused for not coming to it, and to desire the Bishops to pray for him, both so long as he lived, and after his Death. That the Bishops promised to do their Duty, and gave Order to Amaricus, Archbishop of Tours, his Metropolitan, to go to the City of Mans, and to do what he saw convenient for the Advantage of that Church in this Juncture.

In the 5th. they declare, that they had deposed and banished into remote Monasteries, those Monks and Priests of the Abby of St. Medard, who had conspired to secure Pepin, Charles's Nephew, who was shaved and shut up in that Abby.

The 6th. is against a Deacon of the Church of Rheims, who was accused of putting out Edicts in the Emperor's Name, they debarr him going to any Synod, and confine him within the Diocels of Rheims, till he should clear himself.

The Council of Soissons.

The other Canons are some Propositions, which they intended to make to the King; That he would send Commissioners to set up Divine Service in the Monasteries. That he would permit the Churches to enjoy their ancient Privileges. That he would pay to the Church the ninth and tenth Part of those Revenues, which belonged to it of old. That he would not hold any Courts in any Place consecrated to the Service of God. That none should protect those, whom the Bishop would punish by the Laws of the Church. That on the contrary, incestuous Persons, and others guilty of like Crimes, should be referr'd to the Bishops by the Civil Judges. Lastly, That there should be no Exchanges made of the Churches Lands or Revenues, without the Consent of the King. In Answer to these Demands, the Emperor made twelve Constitutions, in which he granted them more than they had desired of him. For in the first, he orders that his Commissioners shall make Enquiry, with the Bishop of the Place, and in the Presence of him who hath Charge of the Monastery, concerning the Life and Behaviour of those that dwell in it; that he will regulate the Discipline, and cause them to make the Repairs carefully. That the Churches shall be adorned, and furnished with Tapers and Books, &c. That he will compose a verbal Process, in which he will put the Name of the Abbot, or Superior of each Monastery, the Time of his Enjoyment of it; the Number of the Canons and Monks, or Religious Persons, to increase or diminish it, &c. That they should enquire, whether the Heirs of such as founded the Monastery, did not detain the Revenues their Ancestors had given them. That they should inform themselves of the Revenues of Chappels, and several Monasteries farmed out;—and if they had a Care to keep up the Buildings, and provide all Things necessary for Divine Service. That they should inform themselves of such Estates of the Church, as are given in Fee-simple; and of those Persons which pay Ninths and Tenths: That they shall forbid, that any Pleading be had in Church Porches, Quires, or any other Places, or in Lent. That they shall declare, that those that study to revenge them whom the Bishops have chastised for their Faults, shall be excommunicated, and pay a large Fine. That they shall order the Judges to assist the Bishop in his Visits, and constrain the Excommunicated to do their Penance. That they shall declare, that he will give no Letters to set to Farm the Church-Revenues. Lastly, That they shall forbid making any Exchange of the Church Lands, or Slaves, without the Consent of the King.

The Council of Verbery, Anno 853.

Of Verbery.

THE same Bishops that were convened in the Council of Soissons in Feb. met at Verbery in August the same Year, where they wrote a Letter, in which they declare, that they would settle Heriman in his Bishoprick of Nevers, and that he was not deprived of it for any Fault he had committed, but only for the Infirmity of which he was cured. They prevented the giving by a precarious Title, an Abby and Farm which belonged to the Abby of St. Denys. Lotharius, in this Assembly, caused the Constitutions which had been made at Soissons, to be read over and received.

Of Verbery.

The Council of Rome, under Leo the IV.

Of Rome.

IN 853. Pope Leo IV. called a Council at Rome in December, in which he confirmed the Canons of a Synod held under Sergius II. in 826. and made some Additions to them. He also composed some new Canons, and deposed Anastasius a Priest of the Church of St. Marcellus, who having left his Church, fled out of the Country, and would not return after several Admonitions given him, nor justifie himself before the Council. There are thirty eight Canons made by the Synod held by Sergius. The six first concern the Lives, Knowledge, and Manners of the Bishops. The eight following contain some Constitutions about the Life of Priests. The fifteenth forbids all Familiarity of Clergymen and Bishops with Women, and chiefly any Woman with whom they are suspected to deal carnally. The sixteenth forbids alienating the Church-Revenues. The seventeenth prohibits, that the Offerings of Sinners be accepted. The eighteenth orders, that no Letters Dimissory be given to any Clergymen, but such only as are desired by some other Bishop. The nineteenth and twenty first are about the Advocates, who ought to have Bishops to patronize their Causes. The twentieth enjoyns the Founder of a Monastery or Chappel, to name a Priest approved by the Bishop to it. The two following Canons concern the Administrations and Usage of the Church's Revenues. The twenty fourth orders, that Divine Service be settled again in the Churches, where it had been discontinued. The twenty fifth commands that sacred Places be built again. The twenty sixth forbids the Bishops exacting any Thing against Law. The twenty seventh imports, that they should choose Abbots fit to govern the Monasteries. The twenty eighth enjoyns Bishops to take Care, that those that profess themselves Monks, should live regularly. The twenty ninth commands, that young Women who have taken on them a Religious Life, should not marry. The thirtieth and thirty first concern the Sanctification of the Sunday. The thirty second commands, that such as are shut up in the Monasteries for their Crimes, should not be suffered to go out. The thirty third says, that 'tis not allowable for Laymen, to place themselves with the Priests or Clergy, at Divine Service. The thirty fourth says, that there shall be in all Cathedral Churches and other Places where 'tis necessary, Masters and Tutors to teach the Liberal Sciences. The thirty fifth forbids Balls, Dancing, and other Sports upon the Feasts of the Martyrs. The thirty sixth prohibits Men putting away their Wives and marrying others, unless in Case of Adultery, and orders, that if a Man and his Wife are willing to part, to embrace a Religious Life, they must do it with the Consent of the Bishop, who shall examine both the Man and his Wife, whether they do both indeed consent to it. The thirty seventh forbids Polygamy. The thirty eighth is against Marriage within the Degrees of Consanguinity forbidden.

Of Rome.

The Council of Rome.

Leo IV. made ſome Additions to theſe Canons, which were Nothing elſe but Explications of them, or ſome Clauſes to confirm them. But he added four new Canons. The firſt imports, that no greater Number of Prieſts or Clergymen be ordained in every Church, than is juſt neceſſary. The ſecond, that Prieſts ſhould preſent themſelves at the Council of their Biſhops. The third orders, that Laymen who retain Prieſts that are Strangers, and employ them againſt the Conſent of their Biſhop, ſhall be themſelves excommunicated, and the Prieſts depoſed; if upon Admonition, they will not return to their Dioceſs. The fourth ſays, that no Man ſhall ſettle Prieſts in the Churches, but he that hath Right to ordain in thoſe Churches, and puniſh thoſe that are in it, i. e. none but the Biſhop of the Dioceſs.

The Council of Rome.

The third Council of Valence.

Of Valence

IN January 855. the Emperor Lotharius called a Synod at Valence, of fourteen Biſhops belonging to the Provinces of Lyons, Vienna, and Arles, over whom their Metropolitans preſided, and Ebbo Biſhop of Grenoble, to judge the Biſhop of Valence, who was accuſed of ſeveral Crimes. In this Council, the Deciſions about Grace above mentioned, were made, which make up the firſt ſix Canons of this Council. The ſeventh is about the Election of Biſhops. They declare in it, that to prevent, that ignorant and unfit Perſons be not preferr'd to Biſhopricks, they would petition the King, that the Biſhop of every Dioceſs ſhall be choſen by the Clergy and People who ſhall be obliged to chooſe a Perſon out of the ſame, or a neighbouring Church, fit to fill the See, and that if the Emperor ſhall ſend any of his Officers to be Biſhop, they ſhall examine his Life and Doctrine carefully, that the Metropolitan ſhall have a Care, that the Biſhop who is ordained, be a Perſon fit for that Charge. The eighth is againſt thoſe who invade the Revenues of the Church. The ninth is againſt thoſe that take the Revenues of Chappels. The tenth orders, that they pay the Ninth and Tenth of the Revenues of alienated Churches, and condemns Uſury. The eleventh forbids taking the Oaths of both Parties in Juſtice, and excommunicates him that doth the contrary. The twelfth forbids the Combates, which were in Uſe to prove Mens Innocence. The thirteenth imports, that ſuch as are diſobedient to their Biſhops, ſhall do Penance, and ſuch as are excommunicated in one Church, ſhall not be received in another. The fourteenth forbids all vexatious Troubles, and commends Union and Love in Clergymen. The fifteenth enjoyns the Biſhops to live an Exemplary Life. The ſixteenth orders them to preach to, and inſtruct their People. The ſeventeenth commands them to viſit their Dioceſs, without being a Charge to any Man. The eighteenth requires, that Schools be ſet up for Learning and Singing. The nineteenth imports, that the Metropolitans and Biſhops ſhould take Care that the Clergy live orderly. The twentieth enjoyns, that the Ornaments of Churches be preſerved, and uſed only according to the Canons. The twenty firſt ſays, that Church-Revenues ſhall not be alienated. The twenty ſecond ſays, that a Biſhop ſhall not receive the Rights of the Viſitation, when he doth not viſit. The twenty third is in Favour of the Archdeacon of the Church of Vienna, whom they had redeemed from Slavery. They aſſert he was not a Slave, and threaten Excommunication to them, who ſhall perſecute him upon that Account.

The Council of Quiercy.

Of Quiercy

IN November, 858. the Biſhops of the Province of Rheims and Roüen being aſſembled at Quiercy, compoſed a Letter directed to Lewis King of Germany, who had poſſeſſed himſelf of the Kingdom of Charles, ſurrendred to him at Attigny, by Wenilo, Archbiſhop of Sens, and Ercanrant Biſhop of Chalons. After they had excuſed themſelves for not being preſent, according to the Orders they had received at the Aſſembly held at Rheims, becauſe they had not ſufficient Warning to provide for their Journey, and get Leave of their Metropolitans, they paſſionately repreſent to that Prince the Diſorders of the People of his Realm, and the lamentable State the Church was in. They exhort him to maintain the Rights and Privileges of the Churches, the Authority of the Biſhops, and Honour of the Prieſts; to put in Execution the Canons and Conſtitutions, which concerned the Liberty of the Church; to reſtore their Revenues to the Church and Clergy; to put the Monaſteries and Abbies of the Monks and Nuns into their ancient Condition; and to take them from the Laymen, to whom his Brother was forced to grant them. They give him many Inſtructions about his own Carriage, and how he ought to govern his Kingdom. They let him know, that they thought he had no Right to mind the King his Brother's Countries; and, at laſt, proteſt, that they could not take the Oath he deſired of them; nor ſubject their Churches to him, or their Revenues, as if they were Temporal Eſtates. This Letter is written with much Elegance and Freedom. In it they threaten that Prince with the Judgments of God, and terrifie him with repreſenting to him his ſad Condition at the Hour of Death. They give him ſeveral Inſtructions and Precepts about Civil Matters, and ſpeak to him in a Majeſtick Style. They relate to him a fabulous Story of the Damnation of Charles Martel, for having taken away Church-goods. There is ſome Probability that Hincmarus compoſed this Letter; for which Reaſon 'tis printed among his Works.

The Council of Metz.

Of Metz.

LEWIS of Germany being obliged to retire in 859. the Council aſſembled at Metz ſent nine Prelates to him, to exhort that Prince to beg Peace of his Brother, to acknowledge and confeſs his Fault, oblige him to promiſe to live peaceably for the Future, and never hereafter to cauſe Schiſm, or Diviſion, to puniſh them who were the Authors of this War, to engage himſelf to maintain the Rights of the Churches, and procure a Reformation: That if he did theſe Things, although his Faults deſerved a long Penance, they could abſolve him, although they did not joyn with him. Theſe Meſſengers, who had for their Leaders, Hincmarus, Archbiſhop of Rheims, and Wenilo, Archbiſhop of Roüen, finding Lewis of Germany at Worms, June the 4*th*. the Prince ſpake to them firſt, and being deſirous to appeaſe them, ſaid to them, That if he had offended them, he begged their Pardon. Hincmarus, who ſtood the firſt on his Left-hand, anſwered, That he came to offer him what he deſired; that, as to his own Particular, he had Nothing againſt him; that he pardon'd him what he had done; and as for the Miſchief he had done his Church, he adviſed him, as he tender'd his own Salvation, to make it up. Guntharius, Archbiſhop of Cologne, who was alſo one of the Meſſengers, told him what Satisfaction they demanded of him, and read the Inſtructions to him they had given them. Lewis of Germany was diſpleaſed with them, and told them for Anſwer, That they came provided with full Inſtructions, that they might ſurpriſe him: That the Biſhops of his Kingdom not being preſent, he could do Nothing in that Affair without conſulting them. So that this Embaſſage had not that good Effect which they hoped for by it.

The Council of Savonieres.

Of Savonieres.

IN June, the ſame Year 859. the Biſhops of both Kingdoms met at Savonieres, near Toul, where they made up a Peace and Agreement between the Kings. In it alſo they regulated ſeveral other Affairs. Tortoldus Deacon of Sens, who had taken upon him to exerciſe the Epiſcopal Functions at Bayeux, was left to the Judgment of Wenilo, Archbiſhop of Sens, and three other Biſhops. They ordained, that the Subdeacon Anſcharius, who had poſſeſſed himſelf of the Church of Langres, ſhould make Oath, that he would not attempt the like for the Future. King Charles accuſed Wenilo, Archbiſhop of Sens, as the Cauſe of his Rebellion; and it was order'd, that his Proceſs ſhould be made according to the Canons. Atto, Biſhop of Verdun, was ſummoned, becauſe his Ordination was accuſed as faulty. They alſo charged the Biſhops of Bretany not to withdraw themſelves from the Juriſdiction of the Archbiſhop of Tours, their Metropolitan. They admoniſhed them not to communicate with Perſons under Excommunication; and to exhort their Prince Salomon, to be faithful to King Charles. They alſo allow the Perſons excommunicated till the next Council, to amend and reform themſelves; and, if they did not do it, they would pronounce a ſolemn Anathema upon them at the next General Council. This Synod earneſtly intreats the King, and Ralph, Archbiſhop of Bourges, to maintain the Privileges of the Abby of St. Benedict, which that Archbiſhop had poſſeſſed himſelf of, upon Condition, that that if the Abbot were found negligent, or irregular, by the King's Commiſſioners, he ſhould be depoſed, and another put in his Place. They ſet in Order ſeveral other private Affairs, of which there is no Mention in the Canons, and ordered Prayers. This Synod was very numerous: At it were eight Metropolitans, and moſt of the Biſhops of the twelve Provinces of France. We have, beſides the thirteen Canons, or Articles, already mention'd, three Letters, one to Wenilo, Archbiſhop of Sens, and two others to the Bretons, with a Remonſtrance, containing an Accuſation of that Archbiſhop, brought againſt him by Charles the Bald.

They read alſo in this Council the ſix Conſtitutions of Valence about Grace; and ten other Canons made fifteen days before, by ſome Biſhops met at Langres. We will not repeat what we have ſaid about the Conſtitutions of the Council of Valence, and how Hincmarus oppoſed the Reception of them; but we will give the Subſtance of the other ten Canons.

The 1ſt. imports, that they would petition their Kings to call Synods every Year in every Province, and every ſecond Year a General Council in their Palaces.

The 2d. ordains, that the Biſhops ſhould be ordained according to the Canonical Laws; that is to ſay, by the Judgment of the Metropolitan, and neighbouring Biſhops; and ſuch Perſons ſhould be choſen, as are of good Life, and known Probity.

The Council of Savonieres.

The 3d. commands, that Biſhops viſit Religious Houſes, and take Care, that all Things be managed and diſpoſed in good Order.

The 4th. enjoyns them to ſet up Schools, or teach the Holy Scripture, and good Learning.

The 5th. requires them to repair their Churches.

The 6th. orders, that every Congregation ſhould have an Head of their Profeſſion.

The 7th. declares, that the alienated Revenues of the Church ſhall pay their Ninth and Tenth Parts, and that for the Future, Nothing ſhall be taken from the Church.

The 8th. enjoyns, that the Revenues of Hoſpitals ſhall be employed according to the Intent of the Founders.

The 9th. declares, that they will cauſe Juſtice to be done to the Poor by the Civil Judges.

The 10th. contains their Reſolve to puniſh Raviſhers and Adulterers.

The Council of Coblentz.

Of Coblentz.

THE Peace which was made between the Kings at the Council of Savonieres in 859. was confirmed and ſworn to, Anno 860. at an Aſſembly held at Coblentz; at which, ten Biſhops, and ſeveral Lords were preſent. In it was agreed, that Publick Sinners ſhould be put to Penance; and, that no Biſhop ſhould excommunicate any Man, till after Admonition and Reproof; That they would pardon thoſe Rebels that accepted a Pardon, and promiſed Fidelity for the Future; That they would put the Laws and Canons againſt Criminals in Execution. Some other Eccleſiaſtical Laws and Civil Conſtitutions were made in it.

The ſecond Council of Tullium, or Toul.

Of Tullium, or Toul.

IN October 860. a General Council was held at Touſſy, in the Province of Toul. There were preſent almoſt ſixty Biſhops out of twelve or fourteen Provinces of France. They compoſed a Paſtoral Letter againſt thoſe that invaded the Churches Revenues; and, becauſe it ſeemed too tedious to ſome of them, they made five Canons, which were ſigned by all the Biſhops.

In the 1ſt. they excommunicate, and deprive of Burial all thoſe, that take, or receive the Oblations of the Church without the Conſent of the Biſhop, or the Perſon, who is entruſted with the Care of the Church-Revenues; and condemn thoſe of the Clergy or Laity who ſhall do it, to reſtore three or four-fold.

In the 2d. it is ordained, that Widows, or Virgins, devoted to the Service of God, who marry, or ſuffer themſelves to be deflowered, ſhall be impriſoned, and put to Penance till their Death: And they that ſo debauch them, ſhall alſo be forced to undergo Penance.

The 3d. pronounces Excommunication againſt all perjured Perſons, and falſe Witneſſes.

The 4th. excludes from the Communion of the Faithful, and from Divine Service, all Raviſhers and Man-ſlayers, till they ſhall ſubmit to a Courſe of Penance.

The 5th. enjoyns all wandring Clergymen, and Monks, which are out of Employ, becauſe their Churches, or Monaſteries, are burnt by the Normans, to betake themſelves to their Duties, and ſubmit themſelves to their Abbots, or Biſhops.

Of Tullium, or Toul.

We have ſpoken about the Conteſt between the two Hincmarus's, concerning theſe Canons; the Archbiſhop of Rheims maintaining, that they were not made by a Council, and that he did not ſign them: The Biſhop of Laon affirming the contrary. It is probable, that Hincmarus, Archbiſhop of Rheims, compoſed the large Letter; but, that not being liked, ſome others digeſted the five Canons, which were ſigned by ſeveral of them. This Council order'd Hincmarus to write to the Archbiſhops of Bourges, and Bourdeaux, and Biſhops of their Provinces, about the Affair of Earl Raimond, which we have explained in the Hiſtory of Hincmarus's Works. And becauſe we have alſo ſpoken of the Councils of Aix la Chapelle, Metz and Rome, held about the Divorce of Lotharius and Thietberga, we ſhall paſs them over here; as alſo thoſe held about the Buſineſs of Rothadus, Hincmarus of Laon, Ebbo, Wulfadus, of which we have ſpoken in the Hiſtory of the Controverſies, in which Hincmarus was chiefly concerned.

The Council of Worms.

Of Worms.

IN 868. in June, Lewis King of Germany, aſſembled a General Council of his Kingdom at Worms: In it, the Biſhops firſt of all compoſed a Confeſſion of their Faith; in which they aſſerted the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt from the Father, and the Son; and rejected the Opinion of thoſe, who affirmed, that it proceeded from the Father by the Son, or from the Son only. They deliver, that the Reſurrection ſhall be in the ſame Fleſh, in which we live, and that the Catholick Church ſhall reign with Jeſus Chriſt for ever.

Of Worms.

After they had made this Confeſſion of Faith, they compoſed, or rather revived ſeveral Canons. The 1ſt. imports, that Baptiſm ſhall be ſolemnly adminiſtred only at Eaſter and Whitſuntide. The 2d. that it belongs to the Biſhop only to conſecrate the Chriſm. The 3d. that a Biſhop ſhall not require any Preſent for the Conſecration of Churches; and that they ſhall uſe Nothing but Bread and Wine, mingled with Water, in the Sacrament of the Altar. The 5th. contains a Rule of St. Gregory, about Dipping once, or thrice in Baptiſm. The 6th. that the Diſpoſal of the Church-Revenues belongs to the Biſhops, and not to the Founders. The 7th. that they ſhall divide the Church-Revenues into four Parts. The 8th. is an Extract of the ſeventh Canon of the 2d. Council of Sevile. The 9th. contains a Law of Celibacy, for all in ſacred Orders. The 10th. concerns a Biſhop accuſed of a Crime. The 11th. declares, that Prieſts, who have been guilty of Carnal Sins, ought not to enjoy their Dignity. The 12th. that they that are accuſed of that Crime, but can't be convicted, ſhall clear themſelves by their Oath. The 13th. that Biſhops ſhall not excommunicate any Man for ſmall Faults. The 14th. that if they do, their neighbouring Biſhops ſhall not communicate with them, till a Synod ſhall meet. The 15th. orders, that if there be any Robbery done in any Monaſtery, and the Author is not known, all the Brethren ſhall communicate at one Maſs, that by that Means it may be known that they are innocent. The 16th. excommunicates the Biſhops that refuſe to come to a Synod, or withdraw before 'tis ended. The 17th. forbids Clergymen keeping Hunting-dogs, or Hawks. The 18th. orders, that ſtrange Clergymen ſhall not be ſuffer'd to exerciſe their Eccleſiaſtical Functions, unleſs they have a Letter from their Biſhop. The 19th. ſays, that thoſe that will not obey their Biſhops, nor execute their Miniſtry diligently, in the Church which ſhall be allotted them, ſhall be excommunicated and degraded. The 20th. appoints, that thoſe Women, who are devoted to God by the ſacred Veil, and fall into any Carnal Crimes, ſhall not leave their Profeſſion, but ſhall be put to ſevere Penance. The 21ſt. obliges thoſe Widows, who have taken the Veil, and have prayed in the Church among the profeſſed Nuns, offer'd Oblations with them, and promis'd to continue in that Eſtate, never to leave it. The 22d. holds, that it is not lawful for them, who have by their Parents been put into the Monaſteries in their Infancy, and have been brought up in a Regular Diſcipline, to leave or forſake that ſort of Life, when they are come to a riper Age. The 23d. revives that Maxim of the Councils of Spain, that a Man may be made a Monk, either by the Devotion of his Parents, or by his own proper Profeſſion; and declares, that both Ways equally oblige: And thoſe, that are made ſo either Way, may not return to a Secular Life. The 24th. is againſt them that do any Injury to Clergymen or Churches. The 25th.

The Council of Worms.

commands Priests to impose Penances proportionable to Mens Crimes, and agreeable to the Laws of the Church. The following Canons contain the Punishments of different sorts of Manslaughter. The 31*st*. gives Lepers a Liberty of receiving the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ, but not with those that are in perfect Health. The 32*d*. says, that the Number of Children, which a Man may have, can't be determin'd; yet no Man may marry his near Relations. The 33*d*. forbids marrying two Sisters. The 34*th*. a God-mother, or God daughter. The 35*th*. condemns to the Penance of Murtherers, those Women, who cause Abortions in themselves; and those to something less Punishments, who smother their Children in their Sleep, though not thinking of it. The 36*th*. subjects to Penance, and separates him from his Wife, who hath layn with his Wife's Daughter by another Husband. The 37*th*. imports that married Persons, though under Penance, are not to be parted. The 38*th*. and 39*th*. impose Penance upon those that kill their Slaves. The 40*th*. appoints, that a Bishop, who ordains a Slave, knowing him to be such, without the Consent of his Master, shall pay double the Worth of him to his Master; but, if he were ignorant of it, the Sum shall be paid by them who were Witnesses for him. The 41*st*. orders, that they shall be excommunicated who live in Enmity, and will not be reconciled. The 42*d*. constitutes, that no Man shall be condemned, who is not formally convicted. The 43*d*. sentences them to Deprivation of their Goods, and Excommunication till Death, who side with the Enemies of the State. The 44*th*. condemns Adulterers to a seven Years Penance. The Council of Worms.

These are the 44 Canons, which are all, but the 40*th*. in an Ancient MS. under the Name of the Council of Worms. There are also 36 other Canons, that bear the Name of this Council. But since they are not to be found in any Ancient MS. and some of them are already among the 44 preceding; and Labbe hath assured us, that the Order of the first is very different in a MS. which he hath consulted; and there are some Canons cited by Ivo Carnutensis, under the Name of the Council of Worms, which are not found among these Latter; it may be rationally doubted, whether this Collection of 44, or 80 Canons, were made in this Council of Worms. However that be, these Canons are, almost all of them, found either in more Ancient Councils, or in those about this Time.

The second Council of Douzy.

Of Douzy.

AN Assembly of Bishops, who met the 13*th*. of June 876. at Douzy, in the Diocess of Rheims, wrote a Circular Letter to the Bishops of Aquitain, which contains some Laws of the Councils and Popes about Marriages between Relations, and against them who possessed themselves of the Churches-Revenues, that they might deter the Great Lords from those two Disorders, which reigned among them. This Assembly also tried Duda the Nun, who, being ambitious to become an Abbess, combined with the Priest Huntbertus, and engaged him to write slanderous Libels against her Abbess, and present them to the King's Commissioners, by whom he was convicted of Falsehood and Calumny. After this, he returned to his Monastery, and had such private Commerce with the said Nun, that she became with Child by him: She confessed her Fault, and said, that it was done by the Priest Huntbertus; but he denied it. The Council, in the first place, declared, that that Priest, being already convicted of Perjury, and to be a False Accuser, ought not to be believed upon his Denial, nor ought they to refer themselves to his bare Affirmation. Secondly, That before he be judged in the Place, where the Crime was committed, the King should send certain Commissioners into the Monastery, who may examine all the Nuns apart, and enquire out particularly of Duda, the Time and Place, where she committed the Crime with Huntbertus; who may also examine her Companions, and so make that Priest sensible that his Oath is not to be trusted; that if he persist in the Denial, they shall bring him before the Deputies of the Synod, King's Commissioners, Priests, and Clergy of the Monastery, with the Abbess, and her Society. That Duda, and her Companions, being also summon'd thither, shall endeavour to make him own his Crime. But, if he still resolutely deny it, they shall swear Duda and her Companions, and make them bear Witness against him; that, upon their Testimony, he shall be deposed by the Deputies of the Synod, banished by the King's Commissioners, and imprisoned in some Monastery. As for Duda, they ordered, that she should be put to Penance, and scourged by the Abbess, in the Presence of her Sister-Nuns, and shall not be received into Communion till after seven Years Penance. And, as for the two Nuns, who being conscious of Duda's Fault, did not discover it, they judged them Blameworthy; because the Priests, to whom they discovered that Sin, by secret Confession, are obliged to keep it secret; yet there is not the same Obligation of Secresie upon them, who attain the Knowledge of others Crimes some other Way. Nevertheless, they dealt more mildly with these Nuns, and ordered, that after they have been moderately chastised with a Rod, they shall endure but three Years Penance. This is the Substance of the Relation of this Council, which is full of choice Passages out of the Councils and Fathers, very handsomely and fitly alledged. Of Douzy.

The Council of Ravenna.

Of Ravenna.

JOhn the Eighth appointed a Council at Ravenna, where he was to meet the Bishops at the End of May, 877. He came and held a Council there in the Beginning of August, where they made nineteen Canons for the Good of the Church.

The 1*st*. enjoyns, and obligeth all Metropolitans within three Months after their Ordination, to send a Confession of their Faith to the Holy See, and demand the Pall; and they that shall neglect this Duty, shall have no Power to ordain Bishops till they have performed it; and that other Metropolitans shall have Liberty to ordain the Bishops of their Province, after three Admonitions, and having taken the Advice of the Pope,

The 2*d*. orders, that if those who are chosen Bishops do not procure Ordination within three Months after their Election, they shall be excommunicated till they do; and if they do not do it within five Months, they shall neither be ordained for the Church, to which they are chosen, nor to any other.

In the 3*d*. 'tis forbidden to make use of the Pall in the Streets in Procession, or in any other Ceremonies, than what are appointed by St. Gregory.

The 4*th*. forbids the Nobles and Judges to contemn or abuse the Bishops, or exact any Thing of them. It reserves the Cognizance of the Causes of the Clergy, Nuns, Orphans and Widows, to the Bishops.

The 5*th*. is against those that take away the Revenues of the Church.

The 6*th*. is against Ravishers.

The 7*th*. is against Murtherers, and Incendiaries.

The 8*th*. is against those that pillage and steal other Mens Goods.

The 9*th*. declares them Excommunicate, who voluntarily keep Company with Persons excommunicated; and requires, that all Audience be denied them who are excommunicated a whole Year, and trouble not themselves to take off their Excommunication; if they die in that Condition, it forbids to accept them to Communion. Of Ravenna.

That the former Decree may be put in Execution, it is ordered in the following Article, that all the Bishops should send to their Neighbours, and People of their Dioceses, the Names of such as are excommunicated, and cause them to set up a List of them upon their Church-doors.

The 11*th*. imports, that those, who, to avoid deserved Punishment, fly to other Lords, shall not be received, till their Master hath Justice done him.

The 12*th*. is, that they that absent themselves three Sundays together from the Assemblies of the Faithful in their Parishes, shall be excommunicated.

The 13*th*. enjoyns the Defenders, Preservers and Managers of Church-Revenues, to do their Duty, under the Pain of Excommunication.

The 14*th*. shews, that he shall not be ordained a Priest, that is not diligent in the Service of the Church.

The three following are for the Preservation of the Laws and Revenues of the Church of Rome.

The 18*th*. orders, that Tythes shall be paid to the Priest that serves the Parish; and forbids the Priest of another Dioceses, or Parish, to meddle with them.

The 19*th*. forbids the Judges, or King's Commissioners to hold any Pleas, or Lodge in Churches.

At this Council there were present, besides the Pope, the Archbishop of Ravenna, Patriarch of Grado, Bishop of Verona, and six and forty other Bishops of Italy; who signed a Grant, by which they confirmed the Donation of certain Lands and Revenues given to the Church of Autun by King Charles.

The

The Council of Troyes.

Of Troyes

JOhn the Eighth being come into France, to desire the Assistance of Charles the Emperor, called a Council at Troyes in 878. at which were present with the Bishop of Porto, and three other Bishops of Italy, the Archbishops of Rheims, Sens, Lyons, Narbonne, Arles, Tours, Besancon, Vienna, and eighteen other Bishops of France. In it they treated of several Matters. The Bishops approved of the Excommunication of Lambert, and Adelbert; and declared, that they would look upon all those as excommunicated, who had been so by the Pope. They pronounced an Excommunication against those, that had invaded the Goods of the Church. They confirmed the Judgment given against Formosus. They made a Canon, forbidding all Christians to marry a second Wife, while the first is living; and Bishops removing from one Church to another; and, in the Conclusion, made seven Canons. In the first it is commanded, that Secular Noble-men should should pay Respect to the Bishops, by not sitting down before them; and, that Laymen should not meddle with Church-Revenues. The second enforces the same Prohibition. The third orders, that the Canons made the Year before at Ravenna, should be observed. The fourth enjoyns the Bishops to assist each other in the Defence of the Revenues and Interests of their Churches. The fifth requires, that those Persons, who have been excommunicated, or subjected to Penance by one Bishop, shall not be received by his Brethren. The sixth asserts, that they will not receive another Man's Servant without his Consent. The seventh says, that they will not entertain a private Accusation against any Man. The Pope having seen the Body of the Gothick and Spanish Laws, brought by the Archbishop of Narbonne, and finding no Law in it against Sacrilege, wrote to them to observe the Law made by Charles the Emperor; who fined such as were guilty of it thirty Pounds. He sent also a Letter to the Bishop of Poictiers forbidding him to encroach upon the Revenues of his Church; and, enjoyning all those, that had invaded it, to make Restitution. By another Letter he confirms the Privileges of the Church of Tours, and grants a Privilege to the Monastery of Fleury. Hincmarus, Bishop of Laon, presented a Petition to this Synod, and his Affair was here determined, as we have said. In this Synod King Lewis the Stammerer was crowned by the Pope. They made a Motion to put out Gozelin, Abbot of St. Denys, but 'twas not put in Execution. Lastly, They determined some Affairs concerning the Bishops of Avignon, Troyes, and Besancon. This Council was ended at five Sessions, or Actions, which we have abridged with the seven Canons, and the Decisions of John the Eighth, of which we have spoken.

The Council of Fismes.

Of Fismes.

IN 881. several Bishops of France met at Fismes, April the 2*d*. where, after they had recited that excellent Passage of Gelasius, about the Distinction between the Ecclesiastical and Civil Power; and, another Place out of St. Gregory, concerning the Episcopal Vigilance, they admonish King Lewis to preserve, and increase the Honour and Revenues of the Church, and to maintain the Authority of the Bishops. They require, that Monasteries and Nunneries be visited by the King's Commissioners, who shall represent the State of those Places. They exhort the King to punish Ravishers severely. They also exhort the King's Officers and Judges to hinder Disorders, and punish Crimes. They invite Sinners to Penance; and, Lastly, addressing their Speech to the King, they advise him to provide wise, discreet, and impartial Counsellors, who love Justice and Religion, and will employ their Knowledge and Zeal to suppress Vice.

The Council of Cologne.

Of Cologne.

IN the Year 887. there was an Assembly held at Cologne, made up of the Archbishops of Mentz and Cologne, four or five Bishops, some Abbots, several Priests and Deacons, and some Laymen, in which Drogo, Bishop of Metz was ordained. Afterward they renewed some Constitutions made against them, who had taken away some Revenues belonging to the Church. Nevertheless they gave them to the End of June, to be received to Penance, if they would come in. They also revived divers other Canons of Councils about unlawful Marriages.

Of Cologne.

The Council of Mentz in 888.

Of Mentz.

THis Council was called by King Arnoldus at that Time, when Germany was much afflicted by the Inroads of the Normans. The Archbishops of Mentz, Cologne, and Treves were at it, with several of their Suffragans: In it, after they had declared, by way of Preface, the miserable Condition that Germany was reduced to, they made the following Canons.

The 1*st*. obliges, to pray continually in the Church for King Arnoldus, his Queen, and all Christians.

In the 2*d*. they give the King a short Abridgment of the chief Duties incumbent on him.

The 3*d*. shews him, that he is obliged to administer Justice impartially both to Great and Small.

The 4*th*. says, that they who are Founders of Churches, should leave the Disposal of the Revenues they give, to the Bishops, according to the nineteenth Canon of the third Council of Toledo.

The 5*th*. enjoyns, that no Priests be put into any Church, without the Permission of the Bishop.

The 6*th*. requires, that those shall be punished as Murtherers of the Poor, who detain the Revenues of Churches, Monasteries, or Hospitals.

The 7*th*. declares, that those, who do any Injury to Clergymen, shall be put out of the Church, till they have made a proportionable Satisfaction.

The 8*th*. orders, that they who had cut off the Nose of a Priest of the Church of Wirtzburg, should be excommunicated.

The 9*th*. commands, that Masses shall not be celebrated in all Places; but either in such Places as are consecrated by the Bishop, or are allowed by him for that Use. That in the Places, or Churches burnt by the Normans, Mass may be celebrated in the Chappels, till they are re-built; and that in a Journey, if Men can't find a Church, they may say it in the open Field, or in a Tent, provided they have a consecrated Table for an Altar, and other Things necessary for that Service.

The 10*th*. enjoyns Clergymen absolutely to have no Woman to co-habit with them.

The 11*th*. says, that all that invade the Lands of the Church, shall be excommunicated and banish'd.

The 12*th*. is a Canon falsely attributed to Pope Silvester, about the Accusations of Clergymen.

The 13*th*. imports, that Ancient Churches shall not be deprived of their Tythes and Revenues to endow new Chappels.

The 14*th*. holds, that no Bishop can retain, ordain, or judge a Person, that belongs to another Bishop's Dioceses.

The 15*th*. asserts, that he that doth so, shall not be received at a Council, till he hath had a Reproof.

The 16*th*. imposes a severe and long Penance upon him that shall kill a Priest.

The 17*th*. orders the Payment of Tythes.

The 18*th*. is against a Person that had married his Godmother, and being divorced from her, had taken her again.

The 19*th*. revives some old Laws against unchaste Priests.

The 20*th*. is against them, who, by their Petitions, get the Revenues of the Church into their Possession by a precarious Title.

The one and twentieth revives the Prohibitions made by Charles the Great, to hold Meetings about Secular Affairs in the Churches, or Church-porches.

The two and twentieth is against those, who defraud the Church of Part of their Tythes.

The three and twentieth ordains, that Ecclesiastical Causes shall be judged by the Bishop, either according to the Deposition of Witnesses, or by the Oath of the Accused, and none shall be admitted for a Witness, unless they be fourteen Years of Age.

The four and twentieth recommends Peace, Unity, and Loyalty to their Prince.

The five and twentieth orders those, who have the Patronage of Monasteries committed to them, to place such Superiors over them as may do their Duty, and will govern such as are subject to their Power, as they ought.

The six and twentieth forbids, that Widows should be easily admitted to the Veil; and declares, that they ought to be left at Liberty, either to marry, or embrace a single Life, till their Converſation be approved. If they embrace a ſingle Life, it orders, that they be put into the Monaſteries, where they ſhall live regularly with the Nuns. The Council of Metz.

Of Metz.

I Place this Council after the preceding, becauſe we do not preciſely know the Year of its Meeting; yet it was held under the ſame Prince by Rathbodus, Biſhop of Treves, and Robert, Biſhop of Metz. The Biſhops of Verdun, and Toul, were preſent at it, with one Abbot, and ſeveral Prieſts. Many Earls, Lords, and other Perſons of Worth were alſo at it. The following Conſtitutions were made at it.

The 1ſt. is a Reſolution to endeavour to eſtabliſh Peace in the Church, promote Piety and Diſcipline, and hinder the Poor from being pillaged.

The 2d. provides, that Tythes ſhall be paid to the Prieſt that ſerves the Church, to which they were anciently due, to maintain him; to furniſh the Church with Lights, and Ornaments, and to make neceſſary Repairs for the Buildings.

The 3d. requires, that every Prieſt ſhall have but one Church, unleſs there hath been a Chappel annexed to it, Time out of Mind.

The 4th. forbids, that any Tribute ſhall be exacted for a Farm, or for Slaves belonging to the Church, or for Lands given for a Burial-place; and that Nothing ſhall be paid for a Burial.

The 5th. orders, that Prieſts ſhall have no Women with them; no, not ſo much as their Mother or Siſter.

The 6th. enjoyns, that Prieſts ſhall ſhew their Biſhop the Books, and Sacerdotal Habits; that they ſhall keep the Throne under a Key; that Clergymen ſhall not bear Arms, nor wear Laymens Habits; nor Laymen Prieſts; that none ſhall be admitted for God-fathers, but ſuch as underſtand the Confeſſion of Faith; and, that one God-father is ſufficient.

Of Metz.

The 7th. forbids Chriſtians eating with Jews.

The 8th. orders, that Maſs ſhall not be celebrated in Places which are not conſecrated; and that Biſhops ſhall conſecrate thoſe Churches a-new, which have been conſecrated by Suffragan Biſhops only.

The 9th. commands, that they ſhall veil, and ſhut up, in ſome Monaſtery, two Nuns of the Monaſtery of St. Peter, who had been put out of it, and unveiled for their Crimes; and that a Deacon convicted of Sacrilege ſhall be put in Priſon.

The 10th. pronounces Excommunication againſt ſome Perſons who had guelt a Prieſt, who would oblige one of their Kinſwomen to return to her Husband.

The 11th. excommunicates thoſe Perſons, who exerciſed pillaging in the Province, and did not come to the Synod to acknowledge their Crime. It iſſues out, in particular, an Excommunication againſt two private Perſons, the one guilty of a Rape committed upon a Nun, the other of Man-ſlaughter.

The 12th. aſſerts it to be unlawful to communicate with excommunicated Perſons, or give any Tokens of Communion to thoſe, who died under the Bonds of Excommunication.

The 13th. orders Prayers to be made for King Arnoldus, with a Faſt of three days, and ſome Proceſſions to obtain of God the Peace and Quiet of the State.

The Council of Vienna.

Of Vienna

THE Biſhops of the Province of Arles made, in 892. ſome Conſtitutions like thoſe, which had been made in Germany. Two Legates from Pope Formoſus were preſent at that Aſſembly. In it they excommunicated, 1ſt. thoſe who invaded, or unjuſtly detained the Revenues of the Church. 2dly. Thoſe, who injured, or abuſed the Clergy. 3dly. Thoſe, who miſemployed the Alms given by a Biſhop, or Prieſt, in their Sickneſs. 4thly. It was forbidden Secular Perſons to beſtow Churches without the Conſent of the Dioceſan, and to exact any Preſent of the Prieſts they put into them. By the 5th. 'tis ordered, that Prieſts have no Women with them.

Of Vienna

The Council of Tribur.

Of Tribur.

OF all the Councils held at this Time, there were none ſo numerous, or that made more conſiderable Conſtitutions, than this, which was held in 895. under King Arnoldus, at his Palace called Tribur, ſituate near Mentz. The Archbiſhops of Mentz, Cologne, and Treves were at it, with 19 German Biſhops. The Conſtitutions of it are contained in 58 Articles, or Canons, which are ſet after a long Preface.

The 1ſt. is only an Invocation of the Spirit of Peace.

In the 2d. upon Occaſion of a Prieſt, who complained, that a Layman had put out his Eyes, and his Biſhop pronounced him innocent, and becauſe the Layman would not appear before him, nor undergo Penance for his Crime, they renewed the Canons which forbid to receive Perſons excommunicated by their Biſhop, or communicate with them. And, in the following Article they enjoyn all the Counts to apprehend the Excommunicate, who will not ſubmit themſelves to Penance, and bring them before their Biſhop; that thoſe who are not afraid of the Judgments of God, may be terrified by the Severities of Men. They promiſe Impunity to them, who ſlay them, when they defend themſelves againſt their Apprehenſion, and will not have them obliged to pay the Fine in that Caſe uſually impoſed.

The 4th. directs, how the Fine which is to be paid, for hurting and wounding a Prieſt, ſhall be employed. If he ſurvive, he ſhall have it all; if he dies, it ſhall be divided into three Parts, and given, one Part to the Church, in which he was ordained, the other to his Biſhop, and the third to his Relations.

In the 5th. they impoſe upon him that kills a Prieſt, five Years Penance; during which Time he ſhall eat no Meat, nor drink any Wine, unleſs it be on Feſtivals and Sundays. He ſhall carry no Arms, go always on Foot, and never come into the Church. After theſe Years are expired, he may come into the Church, but ſhall not communicate till five Years more be expired; in which Time he ſhall keep three Days of Abſtinence weekly.

The 6th. condemns him, as guilty of Sacrilege, who enters into the Church-porch with a naked Sword.

The 7th. is againſt ſuch as violently extort the Goods of the Church.

The 8th. is againſt thoſe, that will not perform the Penance impoſed on them by the Biſhop.

The 9th. ſhews, that if the Biſhop and Count call an Aſſembly both in one day, it is juſt that the People and Count both ſhould meet at the Biſhops; nevertheleſs, to prevent ſuch an Accident, and for the Good of Peace, it was ordained, without any Prejudice to the Power and Dignity of the Biſhop, that he that firſt ſends out his Summons, ſhall hold his Court.

Of Tribur.

The 10th. renews the Canon of the Council of Carthage, which orders, that no Biſhop ſhall be depoſed, unleſs it be by twelve others, a Prieſt by ſix, and a Deacon by three.

The 11th. inflicts the Puniſhment of Depoſition upon thoſe Deacons and Prieſts, who have committed Murther, although againſt their Wills.

The 12th. orders, that the Sacrament of Baptiſm ſhall not be adminiſtred but at the Solemn Times, i. e. at Eaſter and Whitſuntide.

The 13th. commands, that the Tythes and Oblations of the Church ſhall be divided into four Parts, one for the Biſhop, two for the Clergy, the third for the Poor, and a fourth for the Reparation of the Church.

The 14th. preſerves the Tythes to the ancient Churches, and annexes the Tythes of new broken-up Lands to them; but if new Houſes be built four Miles from other Churches, in a Wood, or other Place, and a Church be built there by the Conſent of the Biſhop, they may put in a Prieſt, and give him the new Tythes.

The 15th. ſays, that the Dead ſhall be buried, if poſſible, in the City, or ſome Monaſteries: But, if that can't eaſily be done, then in the Church, to which they pay their Tythes.

The 16th. forbids exacting any Thing for a Burial.

And the 17th. prohibits the Burying of Laymen in Churches.

The 18th. forbids the Uſe of Wooden Pattins and Chalices.

The 19th. orders, that Water and Wine be mixed in the Chalice, but twice as much Wine as Water.

The 20th. is againſt them that miſuſe Clergymen.

The 21ſt. provides, that no Oaths be required of Prieſts.

The 22d. ſays, that thoſe that are accuſed of any Crime which they have no Proof of, ſhall clear themſelves by Oath. But if there be any juſt Cauſe of Suſpicion, they ſhall undergo the Proof of Red-hot Iron, in the Preſence of the Biſhop or his Commiſſioner.

The

The Council of Tribur.

The three and twentieth revives the Laws againſt thoſe who marry Virgins conſecrated to God.

The four and twentieth imports, that a Maid, who hath taken the Veil by her own Deſire, and without any Conſtraint, before ſhe is twelve Years old, ſhe is obliged to retain her Virginity, if ſhe hath worn that Habit a Year and a Day, and no Body may take her out of the Monaſtery.

The twenty fifth forbids Biſhops to give the Veil to Widows, and obliges them to a ſingle Life, who have taken it before.

The twenty ſixth allows Monks, who will not go out of their Monaſtery to preſerve themſelves, or others, to do it with the Conſent of the Biſhop, Abbot, and their Brethren; but orders thoſe to be puniſhed, who get out to avoid the Severity of the Diſcipline.

The twenty ſeventh forbids the Clergy to forſake their Office, and gives the Biſhops Power to keep them to it, and take them up, if they are fled to take a Secular Habit.

The twenty ninth forbids that a Slave be ordained till he hath gotten perfect Liberty.

The thirtieth appoints, that in Memory of St. Peter, the Holy Roman and Apoſtolick See ought be honoured, it being juſt, that that Church, which is the Mother of the Prieſtly Dignity, ſhould be the Miſtreſs of Eccleſiaſtical Order, ſo that 'tis fit, that Men bear and endure the Yoke ſhe lays upon them, although it be almoſt inſupportable. Nevertheleſs 'tis ordered, that if any Prieſt or Deacon be accuſed of carrying forged Letters from the Pope to ſtir up any Troubles, or lay any Snares for the Miniſters of the Church, the Biſhop may, with due Reſpect to the Pope, ſtop his Proceedings, till he hath written to the Holy See.

The thirty firſt is againſt Thieves.

The thirty ſecond orders, that if the Right of Patronage to any Church be diſputed by ſeveral Co-heirs which can't agree, to hinder the Diſorders which may follow upon it, the Biſhop ſhall remove the Reliques out of the Church, ſhut it up, and provide that no Maſs be celebrated in it, till all the Heirs ſhall agree together to preſent one Prieſt, and that they ſhall neither put in, nor remove any Prieſt without the Biſhop's Conſent.

The thirty third revives thoſe Canons, which exclude ſuch Perſons from Holy Orders, as have made themſelves Eunuchs, or maimed themſelves; but it excepts ſuch from this Law, as have loſt any of their Members, or are made lame by any Diſtemper, or other Accident.

The thirty fourth treats thoſe Men gently, who in the Wars with Barbarians have ſlain by Chance ſome Chriſtians, which they took for Pagans, by impoſing on them only forty days Penance.

The thirty fifth forbids that any Pleadings or other Civil Aſſemblies be held on Sundays, Holy-days, Faſts, or in Lent, and commands that all Chriſtians be preſent on Holy-days and Sundays, at the Vigils, Divine Service, and Maſs; and that in Lent, and other Faſts, they faſt with Devotion, pray with Zeal and Fervor, and give Alms according to their Abilities.

The thirty ſixth declares, that if it happens that a Man, who is cutting down a Tree, and ſeeing it ready to fall, bids his Companion ſtand out of the Way, and he doth not do it, but it falls upon him, he that cut down the Tree ſhall not be reproved or blamed for it.

The thirty ſeventh is a like Caſe: If a Woman leaves her Child near boiling Water, and the Water ſtill boiling ſcalds the Child, the Woman ſhall be put to Penance for her Negligence, but ſhe that ſet the Water on the Fire hath committed no Fault.

The thirty eighth orders, that every Free-man that marries a Woman made free, ſhall keep her as his Wife.

The thirty ninth orders the ſame Thing to ſuch as marry Strangers.

The fortieth declares the Marriage of a Man and a Widow null, who have committed Adultery together in the Life of her Husband, if he hath promiſed to marry her at that Time.

The forty firſt imports, that if a Perſon who is unable to do the Duties of Marriage, marry a Woman, and his Brother abuſe her, they ſhall be parted, and ſhe ſhall not have Commerce with either of them; nevertheleſs the Biſhop may permit her to marry again, after the guilty Perſon hath done Penance. The Council of Tribur.

The forty ſecond aſſerts, that if any Perſon change his Dioceſs, after he hath committed Inceſt, he ſhall be taken up, and put to Penance by the Biſhop of the Place where he committed it.

The forty third is, that if a Perſon commit Fornication with a Woman, who hath had Carnal Knowledge of his Son or Brother without his Knowledge, and he depoſeth upon Oath, that he is not conſcious of any ſuch Thing, he may be allowed to marry, after he hath done Penance.

The forty fourth ſays, that if one Brother marry a Woman, with whom another Brother hath had Carnal Commerce, a ſevere Penance ſhall be impoſed upon this laſt, becauſe he did not tell his Brother of it, after which they may marry. As to the Woman, they revived upon her Account the Law of the Council of Neocæſarea.

The forty fifth orders, that he that lies with two Siſters, and the Siſter which lies with him laſt, if ſhe knows that he hath had Commerce with her Siſter, ſhall be put to Penance, and obliged to live a ſingle Life to their Death.

The forty ſixth importeth, that if a Woman be proſecuted at Law by her Husband for Adultery, and ſhe hath Recourſe to the Biſhop, he ſhall endeavour to obtain of her Husband not to put her to Death, but if he can't prevail, he ſhall not deliver her into her Husband's Power, but ſend her whither ſhe deſires for her Safety.

The forty ſeventh allows him, who is God-father to a Man's Child, to marry his Widow, if ſhe was not his God-mother.

The forty eighth imports, that if a Man by Chance marry the Daughter of his God-mother, he may keep her and live with her, as with his Wife.

The forty ninth forbids, that ſuch as have committed Adultery together, ſhould ever marry, dwell, or have Society together. If they have any Eſtate, it ſhall be preſerved for the Adulterous Off-Spring.

The fiftieth is againſt thoſe who pervert Chriſtians, and deſtroy them by their evil Arts.

The fifty firſt repeats the Prohibitions made to an Adulterer, to marry the Woman with whom he hath committed Adultery, after her Husband's Death.

The fifty ſecond leaves it in the Power of the Biſhop, to regulate the Time of Penance for involuntary Man-ſlayers.

The fifty fourth to the fifty eighth, which is the laſt, appoint the Time and Manner of Penance for wilful Murtherers, viz. ſeven Years. For the firſt forty days, the Guilty ſhall not go into the Church, eat Nothing but Bread and Salt, and drink Nothing but Water. He ſhall go bare footed, having his Thighs only covered, he ſhall not lie with his Wife, he ſhall not converſe with other Men; after this, he ſhall not enter into the Church for a whole Year, all which Time, he ſhall abſtain from Meat, Cheeſe, drinking Wine, Metheglin and Beer, unleſs upon Holy-days, or in a Journey, or in Sickneſs, in which Caſe he ſhall buy off the Faſts of Tueſday, Thurſday and Saturday, by giving a Penny to the Poor, and maintaining three poor People. After this Year, he may go into the Church, with other Penitents, but he ſhall obſerve the ſame Abſtinences, for the ſecond and third Years, ſaving that he may for all that Time buy off the three days aforeſaid. In the four laſt Years, he ſhall make three Lents, the one before Eaſter, in which he ſhall abſtain from Cheeſe, Fiſh and Wine. The ſecond before the Nativity of St. John Baptiſt, and the third before the Nativity of Chriſt, in which he ſhall practiſe the ſame Abſtinences. He may eat the reſt of the Year, what he pleaſes, on Tueſdays, Thurſdays and Saturdays, and buy off Monday and Wedneſday for a Penny, but he ſhall keep a ſtrict Faſt on Friday. When the ſeven Years are over, if he hath obſerved theſe Penances exactly, he ſhall be reconciled as the Penitents are, and be admitted to partake of the Communion.

The Council of Nantes.

Of Nantes

THE Canons which bear the name of the Council of Nantes, are only a Collection of ſeveral Conſtitutions made at different Places.

The firſt orders, that the Prieſts on Sundays and Holy-days ſhall demand of the People before they ſay Maſs, whether there be any Perſon of another Pariſh, who is come to hear Maſs in Contempt of his own Prieſt; and if they find any, they ſhall put them out of the Church, and oblige them to return to their own Pariſh. They ſhall alſo ask, if there be any Perſon at Variance, and in Quarrels, and if they find any, they ſhall cauſe them to be reconciled immediately, which if they refuſe to be, they ſhall alſo put them out of the Church, till they ſhall be reconciled, becauſe they cannot bring their Offering to the Altar, till they be reconciled to their Brother. This being done, the Prieſt ſhall ſay Maſs. Of Nantes

The 2*d*. forbids all Prieſts to receive the Pariſhioners of another, unleſs he be in a Voyage, or come to ſome Court.

The 3*d*. forbids a Prieſt to have any Woman with him, yea, thoſe that are accepted by the Canons. It forbids alſo Women to approach the Altar, officiate as Prieſts, or to ſit within the Rails.

The 4*th*. contains Directions, what a Prieſt ought to do when he hears that any Perſon is ſick in his Pariſh. He ought to go immediately to ſee him, and when he enters into his Chamber, ſprinkle Holy-Water, ſinging the Anthem, Aſperges me Domine, Thou ſhalt ſprinkle me, O Lord, &c. Pſal. 51. 7. Then he ſhall ſay the Lord's Prayer, the Seven Pſalms, and the Prayers for the Sick. After this, he ſhall cauſe all that are in the Chamber to go out, and coming to the Bed of the Sick-man, he ſhall ſpeak comfortably to him, and exhort him to put his whole Truſt in God, to bear patiently the Afflictions he hath laid upon him, to confeſs his Sins, and to reſolve fully upon a thorough Converſion; if God reſtores him to his Health, to promiſe, that he will do Penance, to diſpoſe of his Goods, and ſet his Worldly Affairs in Order, while he is of a ſound Mind, to redeem his Sins by Alms, to pardon thoſe that have injured him, to make a Confeſſion of the Faith of the Church, and not to deſpair of the Mercy of God. After he hath given him theſe Exhortations, he ſhall give him his Bleſſing, and then ſhall retire to leave the Sick-man to think of his Sins.

The 5*th.* imports, that the Prieſt who ſhall receive the Confeſſion of a Sick-man, ſhall not beſtow Abſolution upon him, but upon Condition, that if God ſhall reſtore him to his Health, he will undergo Penance proportionable to his Faults.

The 6*th.* forbids taking any Thing for Burials, and burying in the Church, near the Altar.

The 7*th.* forbids all Miniſters of the Church to favour ſecret and clandeſtine Ordinations of any of the Clergy of another Dioceſs.

The 8*th.* forbids a Prieſt to have more than one Church, unleſs he have other Prieſts under him in every of thoſe Churches, who ſhall recite the Office day and night, and celebrate Maſs in them every day.

The 9*th.* commands, that the Bread be bleſſed that is diſtributed to the People. This is one of the Articles of Hincmarus's Conſtitutions made 852.

The 10*th.* is about the Revenues of the Church, what Uſe they ought to be put to, and how diſtributed into four Parts.

The 11*th.* orders, that when the Biſhop deſigns to make an Ordination, he ſhall cauſe all thoſe who are to be ordained, to come to the City the Wedneſday before the Ordination, with the Archprieſts who are to preſent them. That afterward he ſhall ſend ſome Prieſts, and other diſcreet Perſons, to get Information of their Life, Education, Birth, Manners, and Capacity; that he ſhall have them examined three days together, and on Saturday ordain thoſe he finds worthy. The Council of Nantes.

The 12*th.* allows a Man to put away his Wife for Adultery, but not to marry another in her Life-time. He may be reconciled to her, but on Condition that he do Penance with her.

The 13*th.* impoſes three Years Penance for ſingle Fornication.

The 14*th.* impoſes ſeven Years Penance upon a married Perſon, that hath committed Adultery; and five on him that is not married.

The 15*th.* regulates the Practices of Fraternities, and takes away Abuſes. This is copied out of Hincmarus's Conſtitutions.

The next is an Extract from the ſame Author: In it a Prieſt is forbidden to ſue for another Church beſides what he has, and give Preſents to the Lord to attain it.

The 17*th.* lays 14 Years Penance upon a voluntary and publick Murtherer, viz. five Years in which he ſhall be ſeparated from the Church; the reſt of the Time he may be at Prayers, but without Offering, or Communicating.

The 18*th.* impoſeth five Years Penance upon an involuntary Murtherer; forty days Faſt with Bread and Water, two Years Separation from the Prayers of the Faithful, and three Years without Communicating. It leaves it to the Prieſt to preſcribe the Abſtinence as he thinks convenient.

The 19*th.* forbids Nuns and Widows to be preſent at Pleadings, or any publick Aſſemblies, if they are not ſummon'd by the Prince or Biſhop, or have no neceſſary Buſineſs, in which Caſe they ought to have the Permiſſion of the Biſhop.

The 20*th.* commands, that Biſhops and their Miniſters ſhould uſe their utmoſt Endeavours to aboliſh the Remainders of Idolatry in all Places.

A Letter from the Clergy of Ravenna to Charles the Younger.

A Letter from the Clergy of Ravenna to Charles the Younger

CHarles the Younger had conſulted the Clergy of Ravenna, to know, whether the Monks, which were raiſed to Eccleſiaſtical Dignities, ought to wear Clergymens Habit, or keep to their Monks Garb. In Anſwer to him, they brought ſeveral Authorities of the Popes, to ſhew, that Clergymen and Monks ought not ſo much to be diſtinguiſhed by their Habits, as by their holy Lives and Profeſſion. Then they ſay, that it doth not ſeem contrary to the Laws of the Church, that the Monks who are made Biſhops, may wear the ſame Habits with other Biſhops, according to the Practice of the Church of Rome; and they think, that ſuch an Uniformity is much better, than if they were diſtinguiſhed, as they are in the Greek Church. That nevertheleſs they do not think that it ought to be a Law to all Churches, becauſe every one may have its particular Cuſtoms. But yet they can't condemn the Practice of the Italian Biſhops, and that it is convenient to uphold it, and to oblige all Monks that are ordained Biſhops, to wear the Stole, i. e. a long Garment, in Honour to the Prieſthood; although they are not thereby diſpenſed with to neglect the Practice of their Rule. Laſtly, That we muſt follow in ſuch Things the Cuſtom that is anciently ſettled in the Church, A Letter from the Clergy of Ravenna to Charles the Younger

The Letter of the Biſhops of Germany to John (a) IX.

The Letter of the Biſhops of Germany to John IX.

THis Letter is written in the Name of the Biſhops, Clergy, and People of Bavaria. They tell the Pope, that having heard of their Predeceſſors, that the Biſhop of Rome hath been always careful to promote the Peace, Union, and Diſcipline of every Church; they cannot believe that which is daily reported, That there is lately come out from the Holy Apoſtolick See, which is the Original of the Chriſtian Religion, and the Source of the Prieſtly Dignity, a Decree both unjuſt in it ſelf, and contrary to the Doctrine and Authority of the Church; but that three Biſhops, who pretend themſelves his Legates to the Sclavonians and Moravians, have raiſed that Report. That theſe People were heretofore ſubject to their Prince and the Biſhops, that had converted them; That the Biſhop of Paſſau had always converſed freely with them, and held Synods there, till they revolted, and forſook Chriſtianity; That ſince they brag, that they have obtained of the Pope, by their Money, to ſend three Biſhops, who have attempted to do a Thing in the Biſhoprick of Paſſau, which they could not think the Holy See would be the Author of, and which is directly contrary to the Order of the Canons, viz. To divide that Biſhoprick into five Parts, and place an Archbiſhop, and three Biſhops in that Dioceſs; without the Conſent of the Biſhop. They cite the two Canons of a Council of Africa, and ſome Places in the Popes, Leo, and Celeſtine's Letters. They add, that his Predeceſſor conſecrated Wicherius Biſhop at the Deſire of the Duke Zuetbaldus; but that he ſent him into a conquer'd Country, and not into the Dutchy of Paſſau. They complain alſo, that his Legates giving Credit to the Relations of the Sclavonians, accuſed them of many falſe Things. They take Notice, that their Prince is deſcended of the Family of the Kings of France, who are Chriſtians; whereas the Moravians and Sclavonians are originally Pagans, and Enemies to the Chriſtian Religion. They commend their King Lewis, and ſhew the great Inclination he hath to the Holy See, and for Religion. They confute the Reports the Sclavonians had given out, that they had made a League, in a profane Manner, with the Hungarians, who have pillaged, burnt and ſacked the Country. That, on the contrary, they had a Deſign of hindring them from entring into Italy, and to ſend ſome Succours into Lombardy; and to put themſelves into a Condition to do it, they had deſired a League with the Sclavonians, but could not obtain it. They conclude, with an earneſt Requeſt to the Pope, not to believe the Calumnies which the Sclavonians ſpread abroad againſt them, and to endeavour the Peace of the Church. The Letter of the Biſhops of Germany to John IX.

(a) For altho' the Title bears John VIII. this Letter cou'd not have been directed to any other than John IX. becauſe Mention is there made of Zuentibaud, who had demanded a Biſhop from the Predeceſſor of the Pope, to whom the Letter was written. Zuentibaud, or Zuentibold was not elected King of Lorrain till the Year 895. after the Pontificate of John VIII.

The Constitutions of some Bishops, and Collections of Canons, concerning the Discipline of the Church.

Of the Constitutions and Canons concerning the Discipline of the Church

BEsides the Constitutions made by the Bishops assembled in Councils for the Reformation of Church-Discipline, several Bishops were at the Pains to make particular Constitutions for their own Dioceses, and Treatises for the Instruction of their Clergy. They also, at the same Time, made several Collections of Canons about Penance, and other Ecclesiastical Matters. The chief Tracts, which relate to the Matters, and the Authors of this Age, which composed them, are these that follow.

Hatto.

Hatto, or Hetto, chosen in 796. Abbot of the Monastery of Augia Dives, of which he was a Monk, and afterwards Bishop of Basil in 801. was sent by Charles the Great, in the Year 811. to the Greek Emperor, to make a Peace, and settle the Bounds of both Empires. He wrote a Relation of his Voyage, but it is lost. He composed a Book of Constitutions for the Instruction of the Priests of his Diocess, put out by Father Dacherius, in Tom. 6. of his Spicilegium, and inserted in the last Collection of the Councils.

This Book contains 25 Articles. 1. That Priests shall understand well the Doctrine of the Faith. 2. That they shall teach the People the Creed, and Lord's Prayer in Latin, and their Mother-Tongue. 3. That they shall teach them to say the Responses after the Priest in Divine Service. 4. That the Priests shall understand the Nature of the Sacraments of Baptism, Confirmation, and the Lord's Supper; and that by the mysterious Use of a visible Creature, the Salvation of the Soul is further'd. 5. That they shall have Books necessary for their Office, viz. A Book for Celebration of Sacraments, a Book of the Lessons, Anthems, Administration of Baptism, a Calendar, and Homilies for all the Year. 6. That they shall recite St. Athanasius's Creed at the Prime. 7. That they shall have Notice of the solemn Times for Baptism, as Holy Saturday, and the Saturday before Whitsuntide, although in Cases of Necessity, Baptism may be administred at all Times. He observes, that they used three Dippings, and had in their Fonts a Vessel, which they used only to baptize in. 8. That they should know all the Days in the Year, which they are to keep Holy, viz. All the Sundays in the Year, from Morning to Night; our Lord's Nativity, St. Stephen's, St. John's, St. Innocent's, Circumcision, Epiphany, Purification, Easter, Ascension, Holy Saturday, Whitsuntide, St. John Baptist, the XII Apostles, and chiefly St. Peter and St. Paul; the Assumption of the Virgin Mary, the Dedication of St. Michael's Church, and all other Churches; the Feast of every Saint, in Honour of whom any Church is founded. That they ought to observe the Fasts appointed by the Prince; but as to the Festivals of St. Remedius, St Maurice, and St. Martin, the People ought not to be forced to keep them, nor hindred, if their Devotion leads them to it. 9. That Clergymen ought not to have Women, that are related to them, with them. 10. Nor go to Taverns. 11. Nor frequent Courts of Judicature, nor be Bail, nor go a Hunting. 12. That they should know, that none ought to be ordained for Money, and if any Man be, he ought to be deposed, as well as he that ordained him. 13. That no Body ought to receive, nor employ a Clergyman of another Diocess, without the Consent of his Bishop. 14. That they ought not to celebrate Mass in private Houses, or unconsecrated Churches, unless in Respect to the Sick. 15. That Tythes ought to be paid, the third Part of which belongs to the Bishop, according to the Council of Toledo; that, as for himself, he was contented with a fourth Part, according to the Constitutions of the Roman Bishops, and the Use of the Church of Rome. 16. That Women ought not to come near the Altar, nor do any Offices about it. That when they are to wash the Vessels, and Church, the Clerks shall take them from the Altar, and deliver them to the Women at the Rails of the Altar, whither they shall bring them again; and the Priests shall also receive there the Offerings of the Women, to carry them to the Altar. 17. That Priests shall preach both by their Word and Example, that Men ought not to be Usurers. 18. That no Clergyman, ordained, or to be ordained, shall go out of his own Diocess, either to Rome, or to Court, or to obtain Absolution, without the Allowance of his Bishop; and that they shall admonish them, that will go to Rome out of Devotion, that they ought not to go, till they have confessed their Sins in their Diocess, because they ought to be bound, or loosed by their own Bishop, and not by a Stranger. 19. That Nothing shall be sung, or read in the Church, which is not taken out of Scripture, or the Writings of the Orthodox Fathers. That they shall not honour any unknown Angels, but only St. Michael, St. Gabriel, and St. Raphael. That Priests shall all have one Way of Administring Penance, and shall impose it according to the Nature of Mens Faults. 20. That they shall put the Offerings of the Faithful to a good Use. 21. That they shall not suffer a Contract of Marriage between Relations to the fifth Degree; but nevertheless those that are married in the fourth Degree shall not be parted, but put to Penance so long as they continue together. That it is not lawful to marry the Relations of a first Husband, or first Wife; also a God-son, or God-daughter at Baptism, or Confirmation: That they who have committed Fornication with a Relation in the first Degree, may not continue together, that they shall be put to Penance, and parted; but they may marry others. That Slaves may not marry, without the Consent of their Masters; and if they do, the Marriage is null. 22. That Priests shall teach their People to do Works of Mercy, instruct them in Virtue, and win them from Vice, but chiefly from Perjury. 23. That they shall officiate in the Churches they are appointed. 24. That they shall not fail to say the Canonical Hours both by day and night. 25. That they shall admonish God-fathers and God-mothers, that they are obliged to make their God-sons and God-daughters, when they are at Age of Discretion, to be sensible of the Promise they have made for them. These Constitutions shew, how prudent and wise a Man this good Bishop Hatto was. Being very aged, he laid down the Government both of his Diocess and Monastery, which he had always held with it, in 823. and lived a private Monk the rest of his Life. He died in 836. He also wrote a Relation of the Visions of St. Wettinus, or Guettinus, a Monk of the same Abby, which are also mention'd by Strabo. [This Tract is printed among the Visions of Hildegardes, and other Religious Men, at Paris, 1513. and by F. Mabillon, Sæc. Benedict. 4. p. 1.

Of the Constitutions and Canons concerning the Discipline of the Church

This is a proper Place to treat of the Writings of Agobardus, which, for the most Part, concern the Discipline of the Church. The Life of this Author is very obscure; some think him a Frenchman, though they have no clear Proof of it. He was Coadjutor (a) or rather a Suffragan of Leidradus, Archbishop of Lyons; who being desirous to retreat into the Monastery of Soissons, in the Beginning of the Empire of Lewis the Godly, Agobardus was put in his Place by the Consent of the Emperor, and (b) a whole Synod of France, which approved of the Choice, that Leidradus had made of him for his Successor. But this Ordination was afterward found Fault with, because 'tis against the Canons for a Bishop to choose his Successor; a Rule, which it is very dangerous to break. Nevertheless Agobard enjoyed his See peaceably, till he was put out by Lewis the Godly for taking Part with his Son Lotharius, and having been one of the principal Authors of his Deposition, at an Assembly of Bishops held at Compeigne, in 833. for Lewis the Godly punishing the Injustice, and Violence, which had been done to him by Lotharius, and the Bishops of his Party, had a Process drawn up against them at a Council of Thionville held in 835. Ebbo, who was Archbishop of Rheims, was forced to confess his Fault, and submit himself to his Deposition. Agobardus, who fled into Italy, with the other Bishops of his Party, was cited to the Council three Times; and, not appearing, was deposed. The Examination of their Cause was begun the next Year, at an Assembly held near Lyons, but was left undetermined, by Reason of the Absence of the Bishops, to whom alone it belonged to depose their Brethren. Lastly, The Children of Lewis the Godly having made Peace with him; they obtained, that Agobardus should be restored; and he was present at a Synod held at Paris, by the Order of Lewis the Godly. He likewise obtained the Favour of that Emperor, with whom he died at Xaintonge in 840. on the 15*th*. day of June.

Agobard.

This Bishop had no less Share in the Affairs of the Church of his Time, than in those of the Empire, and hath shewn, by his Writings and Government, that he was not more learned and skilful in Divinity, than expert in Politick Affairs. The Catalogue, and Extract of his Works follow.

(a) Or rather a Suffragan.] We ought to read Chorepiscopus in Ado, as it is in the Chronicon of Hugo Flaviniacensis, and not Co-episcopus; because if he had been Co-episcopus, or Coadjutor, there had been no need of ordaining him a-new, when Leidradus retired. And 'tis certain there were at this Time Suffragans in France.

(b) A whole Synod.] What Synod it was is not known. M. Baluzius believes it was that of Mentz, in 813. but this Synod was under Charles the Great; and Leidradus did not retire, and so Agobard could not be ordained, till the Reign of Lewis the Godly

Of the Conſtitutions and Canons concerning the Diſcipline of the Church

His Treatiſe againſt Felix Orgelitanus is dedicated to Lewis the Godly. In it he explains the Tract of Felix, which he compoſed by Way of Queſtion and Anſwer, and publiſhed, againſt what Agobardus had aſſerted in the City of Lyons, where he was then in Baniſhment, after the Recantation he had made of his Error at the Council of Aix la Chapelle. Agobard obſerves, that Felix had ſuppreſſed ſeveral Expreſſions, which he had uſed before, and had added new Errors. He acknowledged, that that Biſhop lived a very holy Life; but ſays, that we muſt judge of a Man's Faith, not by the Holineſs of his Life, but of his Manners by his Faith. Non eſt vitæ hominis metienda fides, ſed ex fide probanda eſt vita. He excuſes the Plainneſs of his Style, and prays them, who will take the Pains to read his Writings, to content themſelves with the Conſideration of the Paſſages of the Fathers which he hath cited, and to compare Felix's Opinion with them. After he hath ſpoken in general of the Error of Neſtorius and Eutyches, he ſays, that he hath heard that Felix, in his Life-time, did teach, That Jeſus Chriſt, as Man, was ignorant of many Things; as of the Place where Lazarus was buried; becauſe he aſked his Siſters, where they had laid him; the Day of Judgment; the Diſcourſe which the Diſciples, that went to Emmaus, had together; the Love St. Peter had for him. That Agobard, knowing that he taught theſe Things, found them out, reproved him for them, explained thoſe Places to him, and ſent him ſeveral Paſſages of the Fathers, contrary to thoſe Errors; that having read them, he promiſed to amend them; that Things remaining thus, he did not think it his Duty to publiſh the Errors aſſerted by him, becauſe it did not concern him to do it. But after his Death, ſome of the Faithful told him, that he had aſſerted, That it was not certain that the Son of God ſuffer'd, or was fixed to the Croſs, but that ought to be affirmed of the Manhood only, which he had aſſumed; an Error, which ariſes from the Ignorance of the Subſtantial Union of the Word with the Fleſh, although he ſeemed to admit but one Perſon only in the Perſon of Jeſus Chriſt. He ſhews, that Neſtorius ſpake after the ſame Manner. He conſults that Aſſertion of Felix, That in the Nativity of the true Son of God, of the Subſtance of his Father, his Nature preceded his Will; ſo that he is neceſſarily the Son of God: But in his Humane Nativity, it was from his Will, and not from Neceſſity, that he was the Son of God.—Agobardus affirms, that this Expreſſion makes Jeſus Chriſt to be believed not to be the true and natural Son of God. He alſo blames Felix for teaching, that though the Virgin Mary be the Mother of God, yet ſhe is otherwiſe the Mother of the Man, than of God. He ſays, that this Expreſſion is not only new, and not heard of before, but impious. That the Virgin can't be one Way the Mother of the Godhead, and another of the Manhood in Jeſus Chriſt, ſince ſhe was the Mother of a God-Man at the ſame Time, and the Divinity and Humanity make but one Perſon in Jeſus Chriſt. He alſo oppoſes that Opinion of Felix, that Jeſus Chriſt was different Ways the Son of God according to his different Natures; That according to his Divinity, he was a Son by Nature, in Truth and Subſtance, whereas according to his Humanity, he was a Son only by Grace, Election, Will, Predeſtination and Aſſumption. From this Principle he draws this Conſequence, That ſince Jeſus Chriſt is a Natural Son in one Senſe, and an Adoptive in another, we muſt acknowledge two Sons and two Perſons. 'Tis true, that Felix diſowns this Conſequence, but Agobard affirms it to follow directly from his Doctrine, and ſays, that Neſtorius uſed that very Expreſſion. He confutes this Principle, and the Conſequences Felix draws from it by ſeveral Paſſages of the Fathers. And laſtly, anſwers to thoſe that Felix had alledged to prove the Adoption of Jeſus Chriſt; ſhewing that the Fathers never ſaid, that Jeſus Chriſt was an Adoptive Son, but that the Humane Nature was adopted by the Divine, i. e. the Divine Nature was united with the Humane, ſo that the Perſon made up of both Natures, was the true and natural Son of God, and not meerly by Adoption and Grace.

The Book of Agobard concerning the Inſolence of the Jews, is a Petition addreſſed to Lewis the Godly, in which he complains, that the Commiſſioners which he had ſent to Lyons, took Part with the Jews againſt the Church, and had ſealed Letters and Ordinances bearing his Name, which were favourable to them. They had carried the Buſineſs ſo far, that they ſpoke openly in Favour of the Jews, and ſo threatned ſome Biſhops. Agobard, who was abſent when this happened, being gone to the Monaſtery of Nantone to accommodate a Difference that had happened among the Monks, wrote about it to the Commiſſioners, but they had no Regard to his Letters; whereupon he addreſſed himſelf to the Emperor, and repreſented it to him, that the Jews did perſecute him and his Fellow-Biſhops, becauſe he preached to the Chriſtians, that they ſhould not ſell any Slaves to the Jews, nor ſuffer the Jews to ſell Chriſtians into Spain, nor keep Chriſtians for their Houſhold Servants, not to ſuffer Chriſtian Women to keep the Jewiſh Sabbath, nor the Jews to labour or wade on the Lord's Day, not to eat in Lent with them, not to eat any Fleſh they have killed, nor drink any Wine that they ſell. Laſtly, not to converſe familiarly with them, nor trade with them, becauſe they daily blaſpheme the Name of Chriſt. Then he deſcribes the Inſolence of the Jews, becauſe they found themſelves upheld by the Authority of the Commiſſioners. He beſeeches him to hear the humble Entreaty of himſelf and Brethren, and rectifie this Diſorder.

Of the Conſtitutions and Canons concerning the Diſcipline of the Church

To this Petition he joyns a Letter written in his Name, and in the Name of Bernard, Archbiſhop of Vienna, and another Biſhop called Eaof or Taof, in which they produce the Authorities of the Fathers and Scripture, to juſtifie the Severity they treated the Jews withal. They relate the Example of St. Hilary, who would not ſalute them; of St. Ambroſe, who writes, that he would rather ſuffer Death, than rebuild a Synagogue of the Jews, which the Chriſtians had burnt. They add to theſe two Fathers St. Cyprian and St. Athanaſius, who wrote againſt the Jews: Then they alledge the Canons of the Councils of Spain and Agda, which forbid Chriſtians to eat with the Jews, and the Conſtitutions of the firſt Council of Maſcon, which declare, that according to the Edict of Childebert, it is not permitted to the Jews to be Judges, or Receivers of the Publick Revenues, nor to appear in Publick in the Holy Week, and renew the Prohibition given the Chriſtians not to eat with them. This is confirmed by the Canons of the firſt and third Councils of Orleans, and the Council of Laodicea, which forbids Chriſtians to converſe with them. They forget not the Action of St. John, who fled from the Bath, in which he ſaw Cerinthus the Heretick entered, who was an Heretick of the Sect of the Jews. They accuſe the Jews of their Time to be worſe than Cerinthus, becauſe they believed God Corporeal, and had groſs and falſe Notions of the Divinity, allowed an infinite Number of Letters, and believed the Law to be written ſeveral Years before the World, were perſuaded that there are ſeveral Worlds and Earths, introduced many Fables about the Old Teſtament, and uttered Blaſphemy againſt Jeſus Chriſt, publiſhed the falſe Acts of Pilate, uſed the Chriſtians as Idolaters, becauſe they hated the Saints, and did infamous Actions in their Synagogues, from whence they conclude, that if they ought to ſeparate themſelves from Hereticks, they ought with more Reaſon to have no Commerce with the Jews, which they maintain by ſeveral Paſſages of Holy Scripture.

'Tis very probable, that Agobard went to Court about this Buſineſs. He apply'd himſelf to three Perſons, who were in great Favour at Court, viz. Adelardus Abbot of Corbey, Vala the Son of Bernard, Brother of Pepin, and a Relation to the Emperor, and Heleſacharius Abbot of St. Maximus at Treves, having complained before them of thoſe that defended the Jews, they brought him into the King's Preſence to relate it, but he received no Satisfaction, and was ordered to withdraw. Being returned, he conſulted thoſe three Perſons by a Letter, what he ſhould do with thoſe Jewiſh Slaves, who deſired to become Chriſtians and be baptized. He ſhews by ſeveral Reaſons that he could not refuſe to do it; and that the Jews might have no Ground of Complaint, he ſays that he offer'd to pay them for thoſe Slaves, what was ordered by the ancient Laws. But ſince the Jews would not receive that Price, becauſe they were perſuaded that the Court Officers were their Friends, he prays them to whom he wrote to direct him what to do upon that Occaſion, about which he was much perplexed, fearing on the one Side Damnation, if he deny'd Baptiſm to the Jews, or their Slaves who deſired it; and on the other Side, being fearful of offending the great Men, if he granted it to them.

In Agobard's Letter to Nebridius Archbiſhop of Narbonne, he ſhews how dangerous it is to hold a familiar Converſe with the Jews, and tells him, that he hath admoniſhed his People of it all along his Viſitation of his Dioceſs, and boldly oppoſed the Attempts of the Emperor's Commiſſioners.

Agobard preſented another Petition to Lewis the Godly, in which he prays him to aboliſh the Law of Gundobadus, which ordered, that private Contentions and Differences ſhould be decided by a ſingle Combate, or ſome other Proofs, rather than by the Depoſition of Witneſſes. He ſhews, that that Law which was made by an Arian Prince, is contrary to the Spirit of the Goſpel; to that Charity that Chriſtians ought to have one for another, and to the Peace both of Church and State. He obſerves, that it came neither from the Law nor Goſpel; That the Chriſtian Religion was not eſtabliſhed by ſuch Sort of Combates; but on the Contrary, by the Death of him that preached it; That the moſt Wicked and Guilty have often overcome the more Juſt and Innocent. He adds, that Avitus Biſhop of Vienna, who had ſome Conferences about Religion with Gundobadus, and converted his Son Sigiſmond, diſallowed this Cuſtom. He complains of the little Regard had to the Canons of the Church of France. Laſtly, he ſays, he could wiſh that all the King's Subjects had but one Law, but becauſe he believed that impoſſible, he deſired he would aboliſh at leaſt that Cuſtom, which was ſo unjuſt and ſo prejudicial to the State.

In the Treatiſe of the Privileges and Rights of the Prieſthood, dedicated to Bernard Biſhop of Vienna. Agobard treats of

of the Excellency of the Priesthood. He says, that all Christians being Members of Jesus Christ, who is our chief Priest, are Kings and Priests of the Lord. That in the Beginning of the World, the First-born were Priests, and Sacrificers. There he produces several Examples taken out of the Holy Scripture, and many Authorities to shew that God hath often heard wicked Priests, and had no Regard to the Sacrifices of good ones, because he looks chiefly upon the Dispositions of the Heart of those for whom they offer Sacrifices, and that otherwise 'tis not the Merit of the Priest, nor his Person that God respects, but his Ministry and Priesthood. For this Reason it is, that wicked Priests may administer Sacraments, which the most holy Laymen cannot do. And upon this Account, Men ought to hear and believe what the Priest teacheth, if he do not corrupt the Doctrine of Jesus Christ, for if he teach any Thing that Christ hath not commanded, he that hears him, saith Agobard, is a Leper, that follows another Leper, a blind Man, led by another blind Man, and consequently both of them ought to be driven out of the Camp, and shall both fall into the Ditch. This gives him Occasion to cite several Texts of Scripture, to exhort the Priests of the New Testament to behave themselves worthy of their Ministry, and to complain of the Irregularities of his Time. He observes that the great Lords of his Time kept Domestick Priests in their Houses, not to obey them, but to employ them as they pleased, as well in Temporal as Spiritual Services; insomuch says he, that some Priests wait at Table, provide Meat and Drink, look after Dogs and Horses, and take Care of their Farms in the Country. And because they can't find any good Clergymen, who will so dishonour their Calling, they take such as come next, without regarding whether they are ignorant and worthless, and guilty of many Crimes. They only desire to have some Priests with them, that they may leave the Churches and Publick Offices to them. And when they have a mind to have them ordained, they come and say in an imperious Way, I have a little Clergyman whom I have brought up, who is the Son of one of my Waiting-men or Tenants, I desire you to make him a Priest, and when they have got him ordained, they think that they have no need of the Curates, and never come to the Service of a Parish-Church, nor Exhortations made there. He crys out against this Abuse, and bewails the Badness of his Time, in which the Bishops were not allowed to reprove their Irregularities, as by their Office they are obliged. Lastly, he exhorts the Laity to have Respect to the Sacraments, which are administred by the Priests. For says he, the Holy Sacraments, Baptism, and the Consecration of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, and the rest, which give Life and Salvation to the Faithful, are so Great and Holy, that they cannot become more excellent, by Reason of the Holiness of good Ministers, nor worse by the Impiety of wicked ones, because they operate not by the Vertue of Men, but by the Majesty of the Holy Spirit, when the Priest hath made his Invocation; whereupon he cites several Passages of St. Austine, Gelasius and Pope Anastasius, and advises the Bishops to be careful, that they be not Partakers of other Mens Sins, by ordaining such Persons Priests, as are vicious, ignorant, and unable to discharge their Ministry well. He says, that the Learning of Ministers is more to be regarded than their Manners, because though a Priest ought to be blameless in both, yet 'tis less dangerous, to have a Priest that teaches well and lives ill, than to have the Ignorant though they live well. Lastly, he distinguishes Ministers into four Sorts, 1. Such as are to be loved, who live well and teach well. 2. Tolerable, such as teach well but live ill, or who live well, but have not Learning enough to instruct others. 3. The Contemptible, who live ill and are ignorant. 4. Such as are accursed, who live either well or ill, and teach Heresies. In the Conclusion, he prays God to pour his Graces upon the Priests of his Church, that they may carry themselves so, as becomes their Ministry.

Nothing is more judicious, than the next Treatise of Agobard's, which he wrote to undeceive the People, and remove the Opinions they had, that Sorcerers could raise Tempests, cause Thunder, and bring Hail by their Inchantments. He proves by several Texts of Scripture, that it is great Folly, and a Kind of Sacrilege to attribute to Men, that which belongs to God. He laughs at the Fancy of some, who supposed that there was a Region in the Air, whither they convey'd the Corn and Fruit, which the Hail beat down. He shews by several Texts of Scripture, that God only is the Cause of Thunder and Hail, that he punishes Men by these Plagues; That all that is done in the Air, is the Effect of his Power, whether done by Himself, or Angels, or Men; That he alone is the Mover and Creator of the Universe; That if wicked Men had Power to afflict and destroy other Men, all their Enemies would be so dealt with; That he understood not how Men had Power to disturb the Air, or Heaven, whose Nature they are ignorant of; That most of the Histories written upon this Subject being examined, will be found false, although there be some People so ignorant as to expose themselves to Death to maintain them, as it happen'd a little before, when they accused Grimoaldus Duke of Beneventum, of having scattered a Powder through the whole Country, which made all the Oxen die. As if, says he, he could make a Powder, which should kill Oxen only, and not other Beasts, or could make such Quantities of it, and have Sowers enough to scatter it through the whole Country.

Of the Constitutions and Canons concerning the Discipline of the Church.

Fredegisus, Abbot of St. Martin's at Tours, having found Fault with some Passages in one of Agobard's Books, he thought himself obliged to defend himself and answer that Abbot's Objections. The first Expression of Agobard's which he reproved was, that the humble Man who hath mean Thoughts of himself, is subject to Error. Fredegisus says, That Jesus Christ was humble, and yet 'tis certain, he was not subject to Error. Agobard answers, That his Maxim ought not to be understood of Jesus Christ, who abased and humbled himself voluntarily without ceasing to be omnipotent and sinless; but he confirms it in respect of all other Men, who are subject to Error and Sin.

Secondly, Fredegisus accuses him of weakening the Authority of Scripture, and of the Interpretation of it, because he had observed, that they did not always observe the Rules of Grammar. Agobard answers, That that ought not to make those Things doubted of, which are related in Holy Scripture, that the Interpreters have used so to do, either to accommodate themselves to the Capacity of the Simple, or to express the Sense of the Original the better. That it is not allowable to doubt of the Authority of those Authors, of whom the Holy Spirit hath made Use to write the Canonical Books, or believe that they ought to have written otherwise than they have. That, next to the Original, the Authority of the Translation of the Seventy ought to be acknowledged, and the Fidelity of St. Jerome's Latin Version upon the Hebrew Text, and that the Latin Versions made by Orthodox Christians out of the Seventy, are not to be contemned, but there are several Translations which are justly to be corrected and reproved, as those of those famous Hereticks, and Bastard Jews, Aquila, Theodotion, and Symmachus, as also certain Latin Interpreters reproved by St. Jerome. And Lastly, as to Commentators, Men ought to follow the Rule of St. Austine, who gives all Liberty to judge of them, and reject what is not Orthodox and True in their Writings. Afterwards examining particularly the Question about the Holy Books, he says, 'tis absurd to believe, that the Holy Ghost did inspire the Prophets and Apostles, with the Words and Terms which they used; and to prove this, he alledgeth the Example of Moses, who says, that he was of a slow Speech. He produces the Testimonies of St. Jerome, who acknowledgeth, that there is a Difference in the Style in the Writings of the Prophets and Apostles, some of whom wrote more loftily and eloquently, others with less Elegancy and Loftiness, and sometimes there is the same Difference in different Writings. This Difference may not be attributed to the Holy Spirit, but to Men, and consequently 'tis they, not the Spirit, which are the Authors of the Words and Expressions which they use, although he inspires them with the Sense and Doctrine they ought to write.

In his Answer to the third Objection, he opposeth the Opinion of his Adversary, who maintain'd, that the Souls of Men were created, separated from the Bodies; he affirms, that we ought to believe, that they are created in and with the Body, although the Philosophers delivered the contrary, and Austine doubts of it.

In the next Place he answers a Question put to him by his Adversary, whether Truth be any Thing but God. He answers, That Truth is not always taken for God himself, although 'tis not to be doubted, but that God is Truth. The fourth Question concerns the righteous Men of the Old Law. Agobard maintains that they may be called Christians, although they were not called so, because they believed in Jesus Christ, and belonged to him, being anointed with the invisible Ointment of his Grace, as well as those who were good Men among the Gentiles.

The Jews who were in Credit at Court, because they had Money, obtained an Edict from the Emperor, which contained many Things in their Favour, and among the rest, that none of their Slaves should be baptized, but with their Masters Consent. This Edict being very prejudicial to Religion, and contrary to Christian Piety, Agobard addressed a Writing to Hilduin the King's great Chaplain, and to the Abbot Vala, who was at Court, in which he shews the Injustice and Impiety of that Prohibition, being evidently contrary to the Design of the Gospel, and the Intention of Jesus Christ, who will have all Men to be saved, and hath commanded his Apostles to preach the Gospel to all Creatures, and baptize all that believe, whether Bond or Free. He desires them to whom he writes, to endeavour all they can to get this Edict recall'd, which he hoped might be done more easily, because he offered to pay the Jews the Ransom of those Slaves, according to the Appointment of the Canons made in that Case.

In the Letter written by Agobard in his own Name, and Hildegisus and Florus's, who were Clergymen of Lyons, to

Of the Conſtitutions and Canons concerning the Diſcipline of the Church.

Bartholomew Biſhop of Narbonne, he ſpeaks of a certain Diſtemper, which took Men ſuddenly, and threw them down like the Falling-Sickneſs. Some alſo felt a ſudden Burning, which left an incurable Wound. This ordinarily happen'd in Churches, and the aſtoniſh'd People to guard themſelves from it, gave conſiderable Gifts to the Churches to ſecure them. Agobard diſallows this Practice, and ſearching into the Cauſe of this Plague, he ſays, 'twas Nothing elſe but the Will of God, who puniſheth Men by the Miniſtry of an Angel. After which, he relates ſeveral Examples of the like Chaſtiſements out of Scripture, in which God hath exerciſed his Juſtice by Angels and other Creatures. He affirms, That theſe Sort of Inflictions are not from the Power of the Devil, although he owns that God ſometimes ſuffers the Devil to diſquiet and torment Men. Returning then to the Queſtion of Bartholomew, viz. What we ought to think of the Practice of thoſe, who coming into the Churches, where they were ſeized with this Diſtemper, bring Preſents to them. He ſays, That Fear cauſes theſe People to do what they ought not, and hinders them from doing what they ought; for it were better, ſays he, to give Alms to the Poor, or Strangers, to addreſs themſelves to the Prieſt to receive Unction, according to the Command of the Goſpel and of the Apoſtle, to faſt and pray, and do Works of Charity. It is true, adds he, that if the Offerings given to the Church be employed as they ought, they are an Action of Charity, but becauſe at preſent, they are uſed only to ſatisfie the Covetouſneſs and Avarice of Men, and not to honour God, or relieve the Poor, it is a Shame to give them to ſuch covetous Wretches to be kept, or ill employed by them.

The Injuſtice and Violence which were practiſed among the People of Lyons, and could not be reſtrained, obliged Agobard to write to Matfridus, a powerful Man in the Emperor's Court. He begs of him to uſe his Intereſt with his Prince, to hinder thoſe Diſorders, and cauſe Juſtice to be done. This Compliment is ſhort, but urgent. The Letter to the Clergy of Lyons concerning the Manner how the Biſhops and Paſtors ought to govern, is an excellent Inſtruction for them. He ſays, That thoſe who are entruſted with the Government of the Church, the Spouſe of Chriſt, who is Peace, Truth, Juſtice, and the Author of all Good, ought to love that his Spouſe ſingularly as himſelf, and apply himſelf entirely to the ſpiritual Good of his only Spouſe. That thoſe who neglect to do their Duty, and place all their Pleaſures and Affections upon Riches, Finery, Hunting, and Debauchery, are the Deſtroyers of God's Work, and the Aſſiſtants of Antichriſt; That though they ſeem to be Biſhops in the Eyes of Men, they are not ſo in the Eyes of God, no more than Hypocrites, who affect to appear outwardly Holy, but whoſe Heart is full of Impurity, who ſeek not the Edification and Inſtruction of the Faithful, but their own Intereſt and Glory: Such are thoſe, who ſeek to get into the ſacred Miniſtry, only to obtain Honour and Riches, or to live finely. He adds, That all thoſe, that make it their main Buſineſs to gain themſelves the Love and Reſpect of thoſe that are under their Charge, and not to make Jeſus Chriſt be loved and honoured by them, who is the only Spouſe of the Church, are Adulterers and unworthy of the ſacred Miniſtry, becauſe they deſign rather to feed themſelves than their Flock. Nevertheleſs he adviſes, that the Sheep ſhould endure wicked Paſtors, through Prudence, when they can't reform them.

His Book concerning the Diſpenſing of Eccleſiaſtical Revenues, was not written againſt the ill Uſage, which Clergymen might make of them, but againſt the Laity, who took them away and kept them unjuſtly. Lewis the Godly, having called an Aſſembly of Clergymen and Lords at Attigny, in 822. for the Reformation of Church and State, Agobard adviſes Adelardus Abbot of Corby, and another Abbot called Heliſſicarius, that they ought to rectifie the Diſorder, that was in the Church about the Eccleſiaſtical Revenues, which the Laity had appropriated to themſelves, that they might ſpeak to the Emperor of it. He zealouſly repreſents to them, that the Churches having been enriched by the Gifts of the Emperors, Princes and Biſhops, had made an Abundance of Laws and Canons for the Preſervation of the Revenues, and to hinder Laymen from encroaching upon them; That the Neceſſity which they alledged, was not a ſufficient Reaſon to over-look thoſe Laws, nor to authorize the Uſurpations they had made of them. The Year following, this Matter was more fully debated in an Aſſembly held at Compeigne, where the Clergy again repreſented that the Laity were not to be ſuffered in the quiet Poſſeſſion of the Revenues of the Church, which they had uſurped. The Lords would not agree to the Reſtitution of them. The Emperor thought to accommodate the Matter between the Biſhops and Nobles, by cauſing a Part to be reſtored only, but the Nobles not contented with it, declared at length, that they would not hear of any Accommodation, and complained grievouſly againſt Agobard, as a Man who had raiſed a Queſtion, which was fit to trouble both Church and State. In this Book he defends himſelf by bringing Authorities out of the Old and New Teſtament, to ſhew, that it is a great Crime to meddle with the Goods conſecrated to the Temple, Altars, Maintenance of Miniſters, and Relief of the Poor. To them he joyns the Authority of the Canons, and chiefly thoſe of the French Church. He obſerves, That ſome would not receive them, becauſe the Popes and Emperors Deputies were not preſent at the Councils that made them, but 'tis his Judgment, that whereever Orthodox Biſhops are met in the Name of Jeſus Chriſt for the Good of the Church, the Deciſions they make ought to be reſpected and followed, which, ſays he, is eſtabliſhed upon the Authority of the Popes, who have ordained that every two Years, two Councils ſhall be held in every Province, and have commended great Councils. Laſtly, Agobard not only condemns the Laymen, who make Uſe of the Revenues of the Church to maintain Dogs and Horſes, and great Retinues of Servants, or to ſatisfie their Pleaſures and Paſſions, or ſpend them in Sports and ſuperfluous Gallantry, but he involves in the ſame Condemnation the Biſhops, Abbots and Clergymen, who put thoſe Revenues to any other Uſe, than is allowed by the Laws of the Church and Doctrine of the Fathers.

Of the Conſtitutions and Canons concerning the Diſcipline of the Church.

Agobard's Treatiſe againſt the Judgment of God (i. e. the Proofs made of Mens Innocency, either by ſingle Combate, or by holding a red-hot-Iron, or by ſtanding immoveable by a Croſs, or by any other Proof of like Nature) contains ſeveral Maxims taken out of the Holy Scripture, and chiefly out of the New Teſtament; by which he proves, that this Uſage is contrary to the Goſpel, Chriſtian Charity, Right Reaſon, and the Principles of our Religion.

In his Diſcourſe of the Faith, Agobard runs through the chief Articles of our Belief, as the Trinity, Incarnation, Redemption; the Union of Jeſus Chriſt with his Church; the Neceſſity of the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt to do Good, and reſiſt Temptations; Patience in Adverſity; Obligation to Prayer, &c. and ſets down on every Point Texts of Scripture, or Fathers: 'Tis rather a Sermon, than a Doctrinal Treatiſe.

The Letter of Lamentation about the Diviſion of Europe, dedicated to Lewis the Godly, was written by Agobard in 833. when that Emperor made War againſt his Children. Agobard, who wiſhed for Peace, although he was of Lotharius's Party, ſent this Letter to him. He firſt of all repreſents to him, that it is the Duty of a faithful Subject, and chiefly of a Prelate, to admoniſh his Prince, when he ſees him ready to engage in a bad Cauſe, where his Soul is endanger'd. He calls God to witneſs, that this was the only Cauſe of his writing to Lewis the Godly. Laſtly, after he hath lamented the Calamities and Diſorders which the War had cauſed, he tells him, that he did ſome Time ſince part his Country between his Children, and made Lotharius a Partner in the Empire: That it was done with all the Solemnity poſſible, and with the Conſent of the Nobles and Biſhops; That to conſult the Will of God about it, he had commanded a Faſt, continual Prayers, and Alms for three Days; That the Thing being finiſhed, he ſent the Act to Rome, to have it confirmed by the Pope. Laſtly, that he he obliged them all to ſwear, that they approved the Election of Lotharius, and Diviſion of the Empire. That, at firſt, all Letters and Edicts bore the Name of the two Emperors in the Front of them; but afterward he put out the Name of Lotharius without any Reaſon, and attempted to diſpoſſeſs him of it. He beſeeches Lewis the Godly not to perſiſt in that Deſign. He lets him know, that the Oath he had taken obliged him to be of Lotharius's Party; and he endeavours to terrifie that Prince, who was of a fearful Spirit, by threatning the Judgments of God, and Hatred of Men upon him.

About the ſame Time he ſent a Treatiſe to Lotharius, intitled A Compariſon between the Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Government; in Anſwer to an Order, which the Emperor had given to the Nobles, as well of the Clergy as Laity, to be ready to fight for him; the one with the Sword, and the other with the Tongue. Agobard tells him, that he ought in War to put his Truſt in God's Help, more than his own Forces; and that in all Diſputes we ſhould ſeek the Truth, rather than Eloquence. Since he was one of thoſe that Lotharius had commanded, not daring to come himſelf, he admoniſhed him by Writing, of the Reſpect he ought to give the Holy See; and, to perſuade him to it, he cites a Paſſage of Pope Pelagius, againſt ſome Biſhops, who would not recite the Pope's Name at Maſs: And another Paſſage out of St. Leo, about the Primacy of Peter. Agobard touched upon this String, becauſe Lotharius carried Pope Gregory IV. along with him, to authorize his own Party, and make his Father's odious. He knew what the other Biſhops of France ſaid, that if he came to excommunicate them, he ſhould return excommunicated himſelf. Si excommunicaturus veniret, excommunicatus abiret. Agobardus owned, That if Gregory came, with an ill Deſign, to foment War, he deſerved to be ſent away with Diſgrace: But he maintains, that if he came to procure the Peace and Quiet of the Empire, they ought to obey him, and not reſiſt him. Now, he affirms, that this is the End of his Voyage, ſince he he came to settle what was done by the Will of Lewis, and Consent of all the Members of the Empire; and confirmed by the Authority of the Holy See. He adds, That he had received Letters from him, commanding, that Prayers and Fasting be made for the Restoration of the Peace, and Agreement of the Empire, and in the Emperor's Family. Lastly, Agobard exhorts Lewis the Godly to be of that Mind.

This Writing is followed by a Letter, or rather a Fragment of a Letter of Gregory the Fourth to the Bishops of France, who would not receive him. It serves for an Answer to the Letter which they wrote to him. In the Beginning of it he finds Fault, that they had called him Father, and Pope, in the Superscription of their Letter. He requires them to give him only the Name of Father, as if the Bishops were not his Brethren, and had not that Title given upon many Occasions; yea, in those very Letters he sent to them. The second Thing that Gregory finds Fault with in the French Bishops Letter, is, that they declare their Joy for his Arrival; being perswaded, that it would be profitable for their Prince and his Subjects; and that they would have paid their Respects to him, had they not been prevented by an Express Order from the Emperor. He complains, That they preferred the Order of their Prince, before their Respect due to him; and maintains, that the Matter of Fact was not true, for they had Notice of his Arrival, before they had any such Command from the Emperor. He adds, That they ought to know, that the Spiritual Government of Souls is more excellent, than the Temporal Government of Princes, as St. Gregory Nazianzen boldly told the same Emperor: That they ought to imitate the Liberty of Gregory the Great, who told the Emperor, that he was one of his Sheep, and that he ought to hear and believe him in Things that belong to the Faith. That, instead of those foolish Flatteries which they used to ingratiate themselves with the Prince, they ought to consider St. Austine's Words, in Chap. 24. l. 5. of his Civitate Dei; where he gives Christian Princes excellent Advice. All this is very good, but it hinders not, but that though Bishops have received an Order from their Prince not to go to the Pope, yet they ought to do their Duty; for that Prohibition is concerning a Thing purely Civil and Politick, in which they are obliged to obey him, when it is not contrary to the Essential Duties of Religion.

In the third Place, Pope Gregory complains, that the Bishops of France, after they had declared their Joy for the News of his Arrival in France, say, That they were much troubled when they heard that he came to pronounce a presumptuous Excommunication, without any Reason, to the Dishonour of the Imperial Power, and Contempt of the Episcopal Authority. He reproves their Inconstancy, and asks them, whether the Actions committed by the Emperor, which are really worthy of Excommunication, be not a greater Disgrace to his Imperial Majesty, than Excommunication if inflicted would be. But it doth not appear that he had good Grounds for his Reproof or Question. Only those are justly charged with Inconstancy, who change without Reason; and, in the same Posture of Affairs: For that which made the Bishops of France alter their Mind, was, the News they had heard, that Gregory would excommunicate their Prince. They rejoyced at his Arrival, because they believed he came to settle Peace; but when they saw he came to increase their Trouble, by an unjust Excommunication, they were the more disturbed; because they foresaw, that it would tend to his Disgrace both before God and Man, to take the Part of Rebellious Children against their Father. And, for this Reason 'tis, that Gregory had no good Grounds for this Question. Whether the Emperor did not dishonour himself more, by doing Things worthy of Excommunication, than he could do by Excommunicating him; for although perhaps it may happen, that such an Extremity may be used against a King of France, yet Lewis the Godly deserved not Excommunication. He was a Prince of great Piety and Religion in Agobard's Opinion; he had done Nothing against the Law of God, or the Church: The Controversie he was engaged in, was about the Division of his Empire, which did not at all belong to the Vicar of Jesus Christ to take Cognizance of, since the Chief Pastor himself would not meddle with such Matters, while he was upon Earth; and if it had been allowed him to intermeddle with such Affairs, he ought to have endeavour'd to make Peace, and re-unite the Father and Children, and not increase the Division by a rash Excommunication; he ought not to have favoured a Rebellion of the Children against the Father, nor their Intrigues and Devices to dethrone him, as unjust, and ill an Action as a Man can be guilty of. In the fourth Place, this Pope blames that Distinction between the Holy See and his Person; and that they might bear a due Respect to that, though they condemned his Actions. He says, they ought to respect the Person for the See's sake. This is true; but that Respect ought not to proceed so far, as to approve Things, which he doth, contrary to the Honour of his See, and Spirit of Jesus Christ and his Church: They respected his See, and his Person for its sake; but they condemned and disapproved the Personal Faults which he committed, and the Errors he was fallen into.

Of the Constitutions and Canons concerning the Discipline of the Church

The Bishops of France, in Justification of themselves, had written, that they could not break the Oath they had taken to the Emperor without Sin, nor deny him their Allegiance. Gregory affirms, that it was he that was faithful to him, because he reproved his Actions against Religion and the Church; but, as for them, they denied him the Faith they ow'd him, by suffering his Disorders. If the Quarrel had been about Religion, or the Manners of that Prince, 'tis true, the Bishops had been defective in their Duty, if they had not admonish'd him of it; but, when the whole Contest was about the Division of the Empire, it did not belong either to the Bishops or Pope to meddle with it. They had taken an Oath to Lewis the Godly (which the Pope did not deny) and they ought to obey him: They also ow'd the same to his Children, but after their Father, whose Interests ought to be preferred before those of his Children. If the Pope had come with this Intention, the Bishops of France would have received him honourably, as they told him in their Epistle. This Expression offended him farther. He told them, that they acted by Humane Motives, and to get a Reward in this World. None but God knew their Intention; but, their Action was accounted by Men as an Effect of their true Christian Generosity and Fidelity. At last, the Pope comes to the Matter of the Quarrel, which was about the Parting of the Empire. The Bishops of France held, that the Division made in 817. might be altered for the Good of the State. The Pope maintained, that this Change was so far from being advantageous to the State, that it caused infinite Troubles to it, and so could not be said to be according to God's Will. The Bishops of France invited him to come to the Emperor, that he might know the Truth of the Thing. Gregory rejected that Proposition with Disdain, believing it evident, that the Change was unjust, because it was the Cause of so great Troubles; as if God did not sometimes permit just Attempts to meet with unfortunate Events. And besides, it was not the Alteration which was made in parting the Empire, which disturbed the State, but the Division it self, which Lewis the Godly had made among his Children; for, from that Time, there was no Union among them, and they sought all Ways to prejudice one another, and dispossess their Father, by raising, daily, Wars destructive to the State.

The Bishops of France added, That if the Pope came with Intentions, contrary to what they hoped, they would not endure him to dispose of any Thing in their Dioceses, or excommunicate any Man. Gregory wonders, that they would hinder him from settling Peace in their Churches; That indeed they might separate themselves from the Unity of the Church, but could not separate the Churches of Jesus Christ from the See Apostolick; as if that were to separate themselves from the Holy See, to make the ancient Canons to be observed, which forbid all Bishops, as well those of the Apostolick Sees as others, to do any Thing in the Dioceses of their Brethren, without their Permission. Lastly, the Bishops of France tell him in their Letter, That they thought themselves obliged to declare to him, what they could much rather have kept to themselves, that if he would not follow their Counsel, he would be in Danger of losing his Dignity. The Pope denies not but if he were guilty of some great Crime, as Murther, Sacrilege, or Theft, he might be degraded: But, he says, Nothing is more ridiculous, than to threaten him with that Punishment, because he would not agree to their Judgment. The Bishops of France labour'd to insinuate, that he deserved to be deposed for Perjury, of which they affirm he was guilty, in taking Part against Lewis the Godly, to whom he had taken an Oath of Allegiance, as is evident from the Sequel of the Letter; which put Gregory into so great a Passion. He says, That if he were perjured, he could not be depos'd by those, who were equally guilty of that Sin, but they could not prove him so. They added, That as to the Bishops, that followed Gregory's Party, they should be judged with the greatest Severity, irretractabiliter. The Pope accuses them of Presumption, to believe, that their Judgment might not be examined a-new, in a General Council, apud Universitatem; or by more Judicious Persons, who have more equal Intentions; Or, Lastly, at the Tribunal of Jesus Christ. But 'tis evident, that the Bishops of France spoke only of Humane Judgments, which were according to the Ancient Discipline established by the Council of Nice, strongly defended in Africa, and maintained in France; according to which, the Judgment given by the Bishops of a Country against the Clergy, or Bishops of it, is of unalterable Force, and cannot receive any Change. For this Reason the Bishops of France did so vigorously maintain the Rights and Liberties of their Churches; and discharged their Duty of Fidelity and Obedience to their King, according to their Oath, without denying a due Respect to the Holy Apostolick See.

Although the Cause of Lewis the Godly's Children was very heinous, yet Agobard endeavours to make it plausible in his Manifesto [or Apology for them.] The Pretence of their their Rebellion was, the Good of the State: Their Design, if we may believe them, was to purge the Court of Plots, and Debaucheries, and settle Union and firm Correspondence between their Father and themselves; and chiefly to repress the Publick Disorders of their Mother-in-Law, whom they had once imprisoned; but, being after released, was always possessing their Father's Mind against them, and creating Disturbances. They declare, That Lewis the Godly caused an Oath first to be made to himself, then to his Son Lotharius, and after that to Pepin, and, last of all, had compelled almost all the World to promise Fidelity to a Babe; (i. e. to Charles the Bald, the Son of his second Wife, to whom he gave Austria, after he had taken it from Pepin.) That he had raised Troops, which ought rather to be employ'd against the Barbarians; That he did all this by the Advice of some Men, who justled for the Destruction of his Children, that they might more easily compass his own; That the Queen did many indecent Things in the Sight of all the World, yea, and of the Bishops themselves. He adds, That 'tis for the Publick Interest to labour for the Peace and Quiet of the State; That to do this effectually, they ought to have Recourse to the Original of these Grievances, which is no other Thing but the Irregularities, Debaucheries and Ambition of the Queen; who, like another Jezabel, or Dalilah, having entirely engrossed the Affections of the King, did make him do much Injustice and Wrong, for which he ought to put himself into a State of Penance, and leave his Throne to his Son. These last Words shew, that this Book was made some Time after Lewis the Godly was deposed, and put to Penance, in 833. as it is related in the Memoir, according to Agobard; where he says, That he was present at the Assembly of Bishops and Lords, held in the Royal Palace of Compeigne, in the 4*th*. Month, 833 to consider the Danger the Kingdom was in, by Reason of the Negligence, Cowardice, and Irregularities of the Emperor Lewis; and that he approved all that was done for the Good of the State, and for the Amendment and Ease of Lewis's Soul, which made him admonish him of his Faults, by his Commissioners, and exhort him to Repentance; and, for that End, he gave him a Schedule of his Crimes, that he might see the Foulness of his Actions; That all the Bishops had met him, and compassionating his Weakness and Miseries, had begged of God to deliver him from his Misfortunes, and pardon his Sins; that so his Soul being raised by the true Contrition of an humble Heart, and humbling himself before them, had acknowledged and confessed his Crimes several Times; That he had begged Pardon, and undergone the Penance imposed on him; That, lastly, going to the Church, in the Presence of the People, he had prostrated himself before the Altar and Tombs of the Saints; and lying in Sackcloath, had confessed aloud, three or four Times, his Crimes, with Abundance of Tears; and, pouring out his Tears at the Bottom of the Altar, he was put to Publick Penance, by the Imposition of the Hands of the Bishop, with Singing of Psalms and Prayer.

The Book dedicated to Ebbo, Archbishop of Rheims, contains a Collection of Texts of Scripture, about Hope and Fear, but we have Nothing remaining at present but only the Preface.

The Works of Agobard conclude with two Pieces of Poetry; the one an Epitaph upon Charles the Great; the other is some Verses upon the Translation of the Relicks of St. Cyprian, St. Speratus, and Pantaleo, brought out of Africa and Arles to Lyons.

Agobard writes in a plain Style, intelligible and natural, but something flat, and without Ornament: His Discourse is mingled with several Citations, long Passages of Scripture and Fathers, according to the Custom of his Time. He argues very rationally about the Matters he treats of, and writes like a Man well versed in the Doctrine of the Fathers, and Discipline of the Church.

His Works are published by Papirius Massonus, and printed at Paris in 1605. in Octavo, out of a MS. which he found by Chance in a Book-binder's Shop at Lyons, which he designed to use as Waste-paper; and which his Brother, after his Death, put into the King's Library. But though Massonus was a very learned Man, yet he left many Faults in his Edition, which have been since corrected by M. Baluzius, in his Edition of Agobard's Works, printed by Maguet at Paris, 1666. in two Vol. Octavo, revised by the same MS. with great Exactness, who hath added a Treatise of Agobard's to it, against the Book of Offices, made by Amalarius, taken out of a MS. which was communicated to him by F. Chiffletius. [This Edition is put into the last Edition of the Biblioth. Patrum, Tom. 14. p. 234.]

Amulo.

Amolo, Amulo, or Amulus, a Deacon of the Church of Lyons, under Agobard, succeeded him in 841. He was in great Reputation and Favour with Charles the Bald. He was President in a Council held at Lyons, 845.

We have already spoken of this Letter to Gotteschalcus about the Question of Predestination and Grace: But we must here give an Extract of another Letter written to Theoboldus, or Theobaldus, Bishop of Langres; who consulted him about some Abuses committed in the Church of St. Benignus at Dijon, as to the Relicks shewed then: Two Monks had brought some Bones of a pretended Martyr, which they said came from Rome, and some other Place of Italy; but that which was most pleasant, was, that these impudent Monks were not ashamed to say, That they had forgotten the Name of the Saint: As if, says Amulo, it were credible, that they could be ignorant of the Name of a Saint, famous in the Place from whence they had him; or could forget his Name in the Way, whom they looked upon as their Patron, and whom they ought continually to pray to. The Bishop of Langres used much Prudence upon this Occasion; and imitating St. Martin in a like Case, determined, That they ought not to receive those Relicks, which were not well attested; but yet they might not use them with Contempt. Then he thought it fit to oblige those who had brought them, to procure authentick Proofs from the Place where they had them. Indeed, one of them went away with a Pretence to get some Proofs, but never returned; and the other died a little Time after at Dijon. Nevertheless they laid up these pretended Relicks in the Church, by the Body of the Holy Martyr, and affirmed they did many Miracles: No sick Persons were cured by them; but, on the Contrary, some Women fell upon the Ground, beat themselves, and made a Show as if they were plagued by them. This brought many to that Place. Amulo observes, that there were many Persons who were seized with the same Distemper, and, upon that Account, were obliged to stay in the Church, or to return again assoon as they were gone out of it: That this Distemper happened in other Places, particularly in the Village of Saulieu, in the Dioceses of Autun, where the Bodies of the Holy Martyrs, Andochius, Thyrsus, and Felix lay.

Amolo hereupon advises the Bishop of Langres to remove these Bones out of the Church, and bury them in some decent Place at a Distance from it, in the Presence of some few Persons; for, says he, since 'tis said, They are the Bones of some Saint, we ought not to deprive them of all Respect; but yet we ought not to give an Occasion to the People to fall into an Error and Superstition. Nor may we fear, adds he, lest our Scrupulousness be the Cause of Scandal; since God hath commanded us to be sincere, and prudent in Things which concern his Service. Whereupon he alledges the Example of St. Martin, and the Decree of Pope Gelasius. He says, That if there were any miraculous Cures done in the Church of St. Benignus, they ought to be attributed to God, and the Merits of his Saints, without approving other Signs, done in the Church or elsewhere. That it is likely, that the Fallings and Beatings of Men and Women, were the Effect of the Wickedness of those miserable Beggars, who pretended themselves to be so afflicted, only to get Money. That he never heard any such Miracles spoken of, as to make sound Men sick; part Daughters from their Parents, and Women from their Husbands, by obliging them to continue in the Church, and hindring their Return to their Houses. That these Things are the Effect, either of Humane Malice, or Diabolical Illusions. Upon this Occasion he relates two Examples of Things of like Nature, which happen'd under his Predecessor Agobard, of which he found out the Cheat. He advises the Bishop of Langres to banish that Superstition out of his Dioceses, to dissuade the People from it; and exhort them earnestly not to assemble so unprofitably in that Place, but every one to remain in his Parish, and frequent the Service of that Church, where he received his Baptism, as well as the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, where he useth to hear Solemn Masses, from whose Priest they receive Penance, are assisted in their Sickness, and are buried after their Death; to whom they pay their Tythes, and bring their Offerings, to which they go to hear saving Instructions. That in these Churches it is, they must meet to pay their Vows and Prayers to God, to beg the Prayers of the Saints, to give Alms to the poor Widows and Orphans: That this is the lawful and regular Discipline of the Church, and the ancient Practice of the Faithful. That if it happens that Christians fall into any Weakness or Sickness, they ought to follow the Command of St. James, to call the Priests to pray over them, and anoint them with Oil in the Name of the Lord. He doubts not but if this were put in Practice, all these pretended Miracles would cease: And he likewise advises him, that if any of these Wretches prove obstinate, to have them scourged, till they shall confess the Truth. He adds, That since these Distempers happened, through the Illusion of the Devil, they would do better to implore the Help of the Lord of their Churches, than to remain in a distant Church; and that one Saint will not contradict the Honour given to another, because they are all united in the same Love. If they will go to visit the Churches of the Martyrs, they ought to do it at those Times, which are appointed for it by the Church, viz. In the Rogations, Lent, and Festivals of the Martyrs. Nevertheless he doth not condemn those who do it at other Times out of Devotion, provided they do it without Ostentation and Tumult; but he finds Fault with them them for neglecting to do it upon the solemn Days set apart by the Church; and tells them, they do it at other Times to no Purpose, through Vanity and Ostentation. Lastly, Since there are some People really possessed, they ought to be used by the Priests of the Place, or neighbouring Chappels of the Martyrs, in Private, with Gentleness, and not be exposed to the Throng and Tumult of the People. These are the principal Arguments of Amulo in this Letter, which prove, that this Bishop had much Sincerity, Knowledge, Prudence, Zeal, and Eloquence. He is also the Genuine Author of a Treatise against the Jews, published by Father Chiffletius, under the Name of Rabanus [at Dijon, 1656.] for Trithemius [De Script. Eccles.] attributes it to Amulo, and it is found under his Name in a MS. in the Library of M. Colbert. [Baluzius published the rest at the End of Agobard's Works.]

Adelardus. Adelardus, the Son of Count Bernard, Brother of Pepin, Grandson of Charles Martellus, great Master of the French, and Abbot of Corbey, was sent to Rome to Pope Leo, about the Question concerning the Procession of the Holy Ghost. Having joyn'd with Bernard King of Italy, in the Conspiracy against Lewis the Godly, he was forced to fly into Aquitain, to the Monastery of St. Philibert, but he was recalled in 822. and restored to his Monastery. He made some Statutes for the Church of Corbey, published by Father Dacherius, Tom. 4. of his Spicilegium. He died in 826. His Life is written by Paschasius Rathbertus, Abbot of Corbey.

Ansegisus. Ansegisus, Abbot of St. Wandrillus, is the Author of the Collection of the Constitutions of Charles the Great, and Lewis the Godly, of which we have already spoken. He died in 834.

Halitgarius. Halitgarius succeeded Hildegaldus in the Bishoprick of Cambray, in 816. He was sent with Ebbo of Rheims to preach the Gospel in Denmark; and, by Lewis the Godly, Ambassador to Michael Balbus, the Emperor of Greece, Anno 828. Being returned from that Embassy, he died in 830. June 25. He composed a Work intitled, Of Vices, and their Remedies: Of Virtues, and the Order and Judgments of Penance. 'Tis a long Penitential, divided into six Books, which is found in Tom. 5. of the Collection of Canisius, and in the Biblioth. Patrum [Tom. 14.] This Work is also attributed to Rabanus.

Isaac. Isaac, firnamed the Good, a Scholar of Hilduin, and Deacon of Pardulus, Bishop of Laon, who was preferred to the Bishoprick of Langres, and present at the Council of Savonieres in 859. and the following Councils; made a Collection of Ecclesiastical Laws, taken out of the Canons of the Councils, held by Boniface Archbishop of Mentz, and confirmed by Pope Zachary; and out of the Constitutions of the French Kings; chiefly out of the three Books, which the Deacon Benedict hath added to the Collection of Ansegisus. This Collection is published by Father Sirmondus, in the ninth Tome of the Councils of France; and by M. Baluzius, Tome 1. of the Capitularies. Father Dacherius hath published a small Tract about the Canon of the Mass, which bears Isaac's Name. But M. Baluzius tells us, That 'tis not Isaac Bishop of Langres's, but another Isaac's, who was Abbot of Stella, whose Name it bears in some MSS. and under whose Name it hath been published in Tom. 6. of the Biblioth. Cistertiorum.

Herard. Herard, made Archbishop of Tours in 855. made a Collection of Ecclesiastical Laws in 856. taken out of the Capitularies, which he propounded to a Synod of Priests, held in May the same Year. This Collection is in Tom. 8. of the Councils of the last Edition, and at the End of Tom. 1. of M. Baluzius's Capitularies. This Archbishop died in 871.

Wanterius. Wanterius, or Gauterius, Bishop of Orleans, about the Year 870. made also a like Collection of Canons for his Diocess, which is printed Tom. 8. of the Councils.

Wulfadus. Wulfadus having been ordained, as we have said, by Ebbo, and molested by Hincmarus, was made Archbishop of Bourges, in 866. He hath left a Pastoral Letter, directed to the Priests of his Diocess, which Father Mabillon hath put out in Tom. 4. Analect. This Bishop died in 876.

Riculphus. Riculphus, who was Bishop of Soissons, about the End of the ninth Age, sent, in 889. a Pastoral Letter to the Curates of his Diocess, containing 28 very useful Constitutions for ordering their Discipline and Manners. He exhorts them to labour after the Sanctity of their People, by their good Example and Knowledge: He advises them to be constant in Divine Service, and exhort their Parishioners to be there as often as they can; but to be sure not to be absent on Festivals and Sundays. He requires them to say by heart the Psalms, Canon of the Mass, Creed, Quicunque, &c. That they should be skilled also in Singing, and the Calendar; That they should have Rituals to administer Baptism, a Missal, a Book of the Lessons, a Book of the Gospels, a Martyr-Book, a Book of Anthems, a Psalter, and a Copy of St. Gregory's forty Homilies. He also prescribes what Ornaments they ought to have, and orders them to take Care of them, to keep them neat, as well as the Holy Places. He orders them to instruct the Catechumens in Lent, that they may be baptized, and receive the Eucharist at Easter. He commands them to have a Care of the Publick Penitents, and not to receive them to Absolution, till they have performed the Time of their Penance; and if it happens that they are forced to it by Necessity, or any other Reason, he desires them to have particular Care of them. He orders them to administer to the Sick the Holy Unction, after Confession, and Absolution, but before Communion. He allows them to give Absolution to the Sick, that have lost their Speech, if there be any that can witness that they desired it. He puts them in mind of the Division of the Churches Revenues into four Parts, and requires an Account of that, which is to be employ'd for the Service of the Church. He exhorts them to have two or three Clergymen to celebrate Masses, i. e. Divine Service with him; and forbids them to celebrate it alone. He advises them to be charitable and hospitable. He forbids them going to Inns, suffer Wine to be sold in the Church, to dwell with any Women, or be familiar with them; to be Farmers, or Men of Business. He forbids Usury, and orders them to keep the Sunday Holy. He requires them to take Nothing for the Burial of the Dead, but allows them to take any Free-gifts. He orders the Deans to call Assemblies of the Curates every Month, on the first Day of it, but forbids Feasting at them; and enjoyns them to have Conferences about what concerns their Ministry, and the Occasions of their Parishes. He orders them to reconcile those that are Enemies, or excommunicate them if they refuse. He enjoyns them to give Notice of the Fasts, he hath appointed, to the People. This Letter is published by Condesius, with Hincmarus's Works [at Paris, 1615.] and is printed in Tom. 9. of the Councils.

Of the Constitutions and Canons concerning the Discipline of the Church

Elias. Elias, Bishop of Jerusalem, wrote in 887. a Letter to Charles the Gross, the Clergy, and Lords of the Kingdom of France, to desire of him some Relief for the Churches of his Country; He tells him, That the Prince under whose Government they were, being become a Christian, had allowed them to rebuild, and repair their Churches, which were either quite ruin'd, or ready to fall; That to do it, they were forc'd to mortgage their Lands and Revenues, so that they had Nothing to purchase Oil, Ornaments, and holy Vessels for Divine Service: Then he exhorts this Prince, and the French, to exercise their Charity upon this Occasion, and to bestow something upon the two Monks which he would send to gather their Alms. This Letter is in Latin in Tom. 2. of Dacherius's Spicilegium. It is well written, but very short.

Luitbertus. Luitbertus, Archbishop of Mentz, hath written a Letter to King Lewis; In which he tells that Prince, That seeing the Danger their Churches were exposed to, he was obliged to speak, because the Primacy and Dignity of St. Peter is assaulted and dishonoured by those who ought to be the Leaders of the People of God, who prefer Humane Things before Divine; insomuch, that he is afraid, that the Evil, which is in the Head, will spread it self into all the Members, unless a Remedy be timely provided. He tells the King, that there is present Danger, because those that ought to watch for the Salvation of others, destroy themselves, and dig a Pit of Destruction for those that follow them. He exhorts him to confer with those, that know the Law of God, that he may remove these Scandals, and settle Peace in the Church. He adds, That it is so much the easier, because all the Body of the Church is not corrupted as yet; That there are some Members weakened by the Wound in the Head, but may be cured with suitable Medicines; That it seems necessary and profitable, that King Charles call a Council soon; that the Bishops of his Kingdom, which are not infected with the Disease, might joyn with the Bishops of Germany and him, to restore the Peace and Agreement of the Catholick Church, assoon as he returns from the Voyage he was about to take. This Letter seems to relate to the Troubles, which happened after the Death of Lotharius, about the Kingdom of Lorrain, which Pope Adrian claimed for the Emperor Lewis; threatning Excommunication to Charles, and to the rest who were in Possession of it.

Of all Authors of this Age, there is none that hath taken more Pains about the Canons than Regino. He was chosen Abbot of Prom, about 892. after Farabertus had voluntarily resigned it, but he enjoy'd it not long, being deprived of it in 899. by the Arts of his Enemies, who put Richarius, the Brother of the Counts Gerhardus and Montfredus, into his Place. He endured this Injustice, with a great deal of Patience, and lived a Private Monk, in the Abby of Prom. In this Time he composed his Collection of Canons, and Ecclesiastical Constitutions at the Desire of Ratboldus, Archbishop of Treves. He finished it in 906. He also composed a Chronicon, which ends in 908. dedicated to Adelbertus Bishop of Metz. We do not exactly know to what Age he lived.

His Collection of Canons is intitled, A Treatise of Ecclesiastical Discipline and of the Christian Religion, collected by the Order of Ratboldus, Archbishop of Treves, by Regino, heretofore Abbot of Prom, and taken out of the Fathers,

Of the Conſtitutions and Canons concerning the Diſcipline of the Church.

Councils and Popes. It is divided into two Books. In the firſt he ſets down the Canons, which concern Eccleſiaſtical Perſons; and in the ſecond, thoſe that concern the Laity. Theſe two Books begin each of them, with a Form of ſuch Things, as Biſhops or Miniſters ought to be informed in, when they make their Viſits. That which is at the Beginning of the firſt, concerns the Clergy; and that which is at the Beginning of the ſecond, concerns the Laity. Then he confirms the Articles of the firſt by the Canons and Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitutions. He quotes the Canons of the Councils, and particularly thoſe of France, the Conſtitutions of the Kings, the genuine Decretals of the Popes, and ſometimes the falſe; ſome Paſſages of the Fathers and Eccleſiaſtical Authors. This Collection is very large, and exact. Burchardus, Ivo Carnutenſis, and the other Collectors of Canons that follow him, have made Uſe of it, and often copy it out. It hath been publiſhed from a MS. of Flaccus Illyricus, and printed at Helmſtadt, 1659; and ſince M. Baluzius hath taken Care to print it at Paris, by Muguet, 1671. having received it by a very Ancient MS. in the Library of the Fathers of the Oratory at Paris. He hath ſet down in the Margin, the Places from which the Canons and Paſſages of that Collection are taken, and where the Articles of Burchardus's Collection are found.

Regino's Chronicon is divided into two Books. It was printed at Francfort in 1583. Trithemius aſſures us, that this Author wrote ſeveral Sermons, ſome Letters, and other Works, which never came to his Hands. He much commends his Ingenuity, Learning and Piety; and ſays, that he is the beſt of the German Writers of his Time.

Laſtly, we have another Author of this Age, who treats of a very curious Subject of Diſcipline, and that is Auxilius, who maintains the Validity of the Ordinations made by Pope Formoſus. He was (a) ordained by this Pope, and 'twas his Intereſt to defend it. He hath made two ſmall Treatiſes upon that Subject, in which he ſhews a great deal of Learning for the Age he lived in.

The firſt is a Collection of Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitutions and Paſſages of Fathers, to prove that a Biſhop deprived of his Biſhoprick may be dignified in another Church, when it is for the Good and Advantage of the Church, and with the Pope's Permiſſion. This Collection was deſigned to prove the Tranſlation of Formoſus, from the Biſhoprick of Oſtia to the Roman See, lawful. Then he adds ſome other Teſtimonies to ſhew, that though the Ordination of Formoſus was not lawful, yet the Ordinations made by him were valid. Upon the firſt Head, he brings a Paſſage out of the falſe Decretal of Anterus, the Example and Authority of St. Gregory Nazianzen, the Examples of ſome Tranſlations alledged by Socrates, and what is obſerved in the Greek Book, about the Tranſlation of St. German of Cyzicum to Conſtantinople. Then he ſhews, That the Canons of the Council of Nice, do not forbid all Tranſlations, but thoſe only, that are made through Ambition, and to diſturb the Church. He approves the Law, which Hoſius propounded in the Council of Sardica, which forbids thoſe Tranſlations which are made for Avarice, Ambition, or Dominion; but he diſapproves what is added, that thoſe who paſs from one See to another, ſhall be reduced to Lay-Communion. He affirms this Law, comes near the Rigour of the Novatians condemned by St. Auſtine, that it was not approved by the Holy See; and that Hoſius was of no great Authority, having fallen into Hereſie. He ought to have obſerved, that all the Biſhops of the Council approved the Opinion of Hoſius.

Auxilius then paſſeth to the ſecond Head; which concerns the Validity of the Ordinations made by Photius, and alledgeth the Teſtimonies of St. Innocent, St. Auſtine, St. Leo, St. Gregory, and St. Anaſtaſius, to ſhew that the Ordinations made by unlawful Biſhops are valid, and ought not to be repeated. He confirms this Doctrine by a Canon of the Council of Nice, which accepted the Ordinations made by the Novatians. He ſays, That ſince the Ordinations of Pope Liberius, who was an Heretick, and Vigilius who was an Uſurper, guilty of Simony and Murther, were well approved, there is much greater Reaſon to allow of thoſe made by Formoſus. He proves, That it will caſt the Church of Italy into ſtrange Confuſion, and the Faithful into inexpreſſible Trouble. He obſerves, That if there was any Default in the Tranſlation of Formoſus, it did not belong to him, who accepted it, but to the Clergy and Nobles of Rome, who choſe him, and acknowledged him for their Biſhop. Laſtly, he proves, That they who ſwear, that their Ordination is void, are guilty of Sacrilege, and they are not obliged thereby to obey the Commands of their Superiors, nor of the Pope who exacts it, becauſe they ought not to execute thoſe Commands of Superiors, which are contrary to Juſtice, and the Law of God; That their Excommunication ought to be feared or obſerved, but when it is juſt; That we ought to diſtinguiſh between the Papal See, and the Perſons who preſide in it; That we ought to reſpect the Sees, but not follow thoſe that preſide in them, if they depart from the Faith or Religion, although they are obliged to obey them in thoſe Things, they order well, although they would not do it. In Concluſion, He adviſes, "That this Collection of Teſtimonies "may perhaps ſeem needleſs to ſeveral Perſons, becauſe "there are few People, that will judge of their Affair with "Equity, and that he did not hope to carry his Cauſe in "the Judgment of thoſe, who are both Judges, Advocates "and Witneſſes, but that according to the Opinion of St. "Jerome, he wrote both for himſelf, and for them which "were of his Judgment, that they might be courageous, "ſeeing they do not ground their Belief upon their own "Senſe, but the Holy Fathers, and that they obſerve that "which is written; That if a Multitude riſe up againſt "you, you ſhould not fear, and that they ſhould hold faſt "what they have received, leſt you loſe your Crown. "That continuing in the ſacred Vocation you have recei-"ved, they may wait for the Impartial Examination of a "General Council, under the Protection of which they "may put themſelves with thoſe Words. Liſt up thy Self "O Lord, judge thine own Cauſe.

Of the Conſtitutions and Canons concerning the Diſcipline of the Church.

The ſecond Treatiſe of Auxilius, ſaith Sigibert, in his Catalogue of Eccleſiaſtical Writers, is written in Form of a Dialogue, by way of Queſtion and Anſwer. It was compoſed at the Deſire of Leo, Biſhop of Nola, who had been ordained by Formoſus, who being urged to acknowledge, that the Prieſthood which he had received from Pope Formoſus, is null; firſt conſulted the French Biſhops, and the Biſhop of Beneventum about it, who anſwered him, that he ought not to do it, and then ſent his Requeſt to Auxilius, to anſwer the Objections made againſt the Ordinations of Formoſus. At the Beginning of this Treatiſe is propounded a general Queſtion, which ſerves as a Preface to it, viz. Whether thoſe who have been ordained againſt their own Conſent, but afterwards yield to their Ordination, ought to be re-ordained. To which he anſwers, that as we do not re-baptize Infants, nor ſuch as have been baptized by Force; no more ought we to re-ordain them who have been involuntarily ordained. This Preface is accompanied with a Letter of Auxilius's to Leo Biſhop of Nola, in which he tells him, that he made this Treatiſe to ſatisfie him, and had ſet down the Objections under the Name of the Objecter, and anſwers under the Name of the Defender. That he ought not to expect in his Writings Syllogiſms in Form, no Logical Subtleties, being the Scholar of a Fiſher, i. e. St. Peter. That 'tis true, though he is in his Bark, he is in a Tempeſt, but he prayed the Lord of all to command the Winds and Seas, and make a Calm.

The firſt Objection made by the Objecter, is about the Tranſlation of Formoſus. He ſays, having left his Wife, i. e. Biſhoprick, he hath taken away the Holy See from them, who ought to be ordained in it; ſo that he is a Reprobate and Hypocrite. The Defender ſays, That he did not trouble himſelf with what Formoſus was, but he maintained that the Ordinations of Formoſus made by him were valid and lawful. The Objecter inſiſts and ſays, that Formoſus not being Pope, all the Ordinations made by him are null. All that Chapter contains this Difficulty. The Defender maintains, that his Ordinations may be valid, ſince St. Leo acknowledgeth the Ordinations of falſe Biſhops to be ſo; That Anaſtaſius allowed Acacius's, and no Man ever doubted of Liberius and Vigilius's. The Objecter replies, That the Council of Nice declared their Ordinations void; and that Pope Innocent aſſerts, that an Hypocrite and Reprobate can't confer Ordination, becauſe he hath none. The Defender replies, that this ought to be underſtood of ſome, and not all Hereticks, ſince he approved of thoſe that Bonoſus ordained. The Objecter inſiſts upon his Principle, and demands how it can be, that the Ordinations of a Reprobate can be valid, ſince the Members can't exiſt without the Head; and to urge it the farther, he asks to whom Formoſus's Crime ought to be imputed; if his Ordinations are of Force, the Defender ſays, it belongs to the Clergy and People of Rome, and not to a Clergyman, who being a Stranger, came far with a good Intention to receive Ordination from him, whom he ſaw ſettled on the Holy See. Then he proves by the Teſtimonies of Anaſtaſius and St. Auſtine, that a Reprobate and an Hypocrite may adminiſter Sacraments effectually, and conſequently Ordinations. That Objecter urges the Example of Conſtantine the Anti- pope,

(a) Ordained by this Pope.] He ſays it plainly at the End of his firſt Treatiſe, in which, having ſpoken of the Validity of the Ordinations of this Pope; He adds, That he continued in the Order which he had received by Conſecration, waiting for the equitable Judgment of a General Council. In the thirty firſt Chapter of his ſecond Treatiſe, His Adverſary objects, that he was a Stranger: and at firſt he don't deny it, but about the End he puts in a Doubt: ſaying, 'twas a Fiction of his Adverſaries. He ſays alſo in the ſame Place, that he was ordained a Prieſt by Formoſus. In the Chapter of the ſecond Book, he ſays alſo, that he was ordained by Formoſus, and was come to Rome from his own Country.

pope, whose Ordinations were declared null, and the Persons ordained by him re-ordained. The Defender condemns this Action, and opposes the Authority of St. Leo, Anastasius, &c. Then he proves by some Passages of the Popes and Fathers, that Re-ordinations are no less faulty, than Re-baptizations. The Objecter says, That if it were so, a great Number of Men are Condemnable, because the Number of them that believe Formosus's Ordination null, is very great. This Inconvenience doth not at all touch the Defender He says, God regards not great or small Numbers, but Justice; That his Flock is small; That he never hath, nor will pardon a Multitude of Sinners, though never so great, which he clears by the Example of the Deluge; People of the Jews, and the small Number of those that remained Faithful under the Persecution of Antiochus; adding to these Examples of the Old Testament, that in St Athanasius's Time almost all the World embrac'd Arianism, and there was but a very small Number of Persons that continued in the Catholick Faith, and did obtain the Crown. The Defender having asserted, that those who are ordained a second Time ought to be excluded for ever from the sacred Ministry. The Objecter propounds two Difficulties against the Propositions. The first, That they are not deprived of Christianity, who have been re-baptized. The second is, that Clergymen who have fallen into Idolatry, may do their Duty, and perform their Functions, and therefore 'tis probable, that the same Thing may be allowed to those who are re-ordained. The Defender answers to the first, that a Minister's Function is not like the Title of a Christian, that this is necessary, but that the other is not. To the second he says, that they have been deposed without all hopes of Restoration, who have voluntarily renounced the Faith, and no Mercy hath been shewed, but only to those who have done it through the Violence of Torments. The Obedience due to the Pope, and the Oath which he required, to acknowledge that the Ordinations of Formosus are null, create new Difficulties. The Defender strongly maintains, that Superiors ought not to be obeyed, when that which they command is forbidden, and that the Oaths taken in such Cases oblige not. He takes himself not to be obliged to go to the Synod, which the Pope had appointed, and treats the Bishops, that were at it, as Wolves. He adds, That it is sometimes convenient to discover the Faults of Superiors, especially when they are prejudicial to the Church, and they can't be remedied any other Way; and in fine, insists upon the Fact that 'tis a Fault, which is published, and aggravated by those that defend it. He proceeds yet farther: He says, that we ought not to fear or regard the Excommunication that is unjustly pronounced. He repeats what he had said in his first Treatise about the Distinction of Sees, and them that sit in them. He comes next to the Examination of the Affair of Formosus; and says, as he was deposed, so also he was absolved by the Pope; that the Oath which they made him take never to come to Rome, or to return to his Bishoprick, was a Cruelty and an unheard of Violence; That he did it only by Constraint. He brings several Examples of Bishops condemned and deposed, who have been restored again. He adds, That Formosus having been restored by the Pope, his first Deposition could not be alledged as an Obstacle to his Promotion to the Popedom; That only God knows, whether it was through Ambition that he was raised to the Holy See, and so it belongs only to him to judge of it. That all the City of Rome, and neighbouring Provinces did bear Witness of his Piety, except some who had the Boldness to blast his Reputation. He endeavours to justifie his Translation by the Example of several others, of whom he makes a long List. He answers as he had done in the other Treatise to to the Law propounded in the Council of Sardica, approving the first, and condemning the second Part. The Council of Africa was objected, which forbids him who doth the Office of a Clergyman in one Church, to pass to another. He replies, that it is only forbidden by that Canon, to receive the Clergy of another Bishop He explains the Canons, which forbid Translations, of such as are through a kind of Ambitious Avarice or Dominion, and proves that they do not comprehend those which are made for the Necessity, and Profit of the Church. He adds, That it belongs to the People of Rome to answer for the Necessity and Advantage there was in Translating of Formosus to the See. It was objected, that although Formosus might be excused as to those Points, yet the Blow he had received by suffering himself to be re-ordained, was not to be covered. This Objection much puzzled Auxilius, and to answer it, he supposeth that the Priests and Bishops are not essentially distinct, and endeavours to prove it by the famous Passage of St. Jerome, from whence he concludes, that as a Priest is consecrated to make a Bishop, without any Intention of consecrating him a Priest anew, but only adding the Episcopal Title: In like Manner Formosus by his second Ordination, did not lose the Title of Bishop he had before, but only received the Addition of the Apostolick Dignity. This Sophistical Answer of Auxilius, did not excuse Formosus, if the Matter of Fact were true; but he maintains immediately, that it was very false, and that he was informed by those, that were present at the Instalment of Formosus, that he did not receive a new Ordination, but was conducted to the Holy Apostolick See, by singing of Prayers, and was installed with a Speech proper for that Occasion. He adds, That none but his Enemies, and others, that had a present Quarrel with him, Said, that he was ordained a second Time, whose Testimony was not worthy of Credit. That to pass a true Judgment of this Matter, a general Council ought to be called, which might easily remove the Scandal, and settle Peace in the Church; That the Synod held at Ravenna had confirmed the Ordination of Formosus, for which indeed the Bishops were accused of Bribery, but very unjustly. He aggravates the Cruelty exercised by Pope Stephen against Formosus, whose Corpse he took up and brought it to a Council, where having stripp'd him of his Pontifical Habits, he caused a Lay-Garb to be put on him, and having cut off two Fingers of his Right-Hand, he caused him to be buried in the Church-Yard for Strangers, from whence he was after thrown into the Tiber. Auxilius says, that they that exercised this Piece of Inhumanity upon him, acted like Savage Beasts; That this their Action was contrary to Heathen Morality, which obliges us to spare the Dead; That although the Translation of Formosus had been contrary to the Laws of the Church, it ought to have been tolerated with a Christian Compassion, and not aggravated with an unheard of Cruelty. That all that could have been done, had been to have called a Council to forbid the People of Rome making the like Elections for the future. Auxilius after this is reproved by his Adversary, for saying, that it did not belong to him, who was a Stranger, to find Fault with the Opinion they had in Italy, about the Ordination of Formosus, and takes an Occasion from hence to shew, that he hath Reason to defend the Cause of Formosus. Lastly, to invalidate the Oath, which was required to destroy the Ordination of Formosus, he proves, that those Oaths ought not to be kept, that oblige a Man to do Evil. This is the Sum of the two Treatises of Auxilius, which are written with a great deal of Boldness and Freedom. [The former of them is published by Morinus at the End of his Work, De S S. Ordinationibus, and from thence put into the Biblioth. Patrum Tom. XVII. p. 1. The other is printed by F. Mabillon, Analect. Tom. IV. p. 610.]

CHAP. XIII.

Certain Queſtions about the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church.

Certain Queſtions about the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church.

THERE has been no Age in which a great Number of Perſons have applyed themſelves to regulate and explain the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church than the Ninth. Princes, Biſhops, and other learned Men have ſet themſelves about it with great Emulation. At the Beginning of this Century, the Emperor Charles the Great writ a Circular Letter to all the Archbiſhops of France, [directed to Odilbert, Archbiſhop of Milan] commanding them to inform him after what Manner they and their Suffragans taught and inſtructed their Prieſts and People about the Sacrament of Baptiſm. Alſo why an Infant is rank'd amongſt the Catechumens? What it is to be a Catechumen? And what is the Signification of the other Ceremonies? What means the Scrutiny? How the Creed is to be explained? How we are to underſtand the Renouncing of the Devil, his Works, and his Pomps? What are the Works and Pomps which are renounced? For what Reaſon they breathe upon the Infant, and why they exorciſe him? What is the Reaſon they give him Salt? Why they touch his Noſtrils? Why they anoint his Breaſt with Oyl? Why they cloth him in White? Wherefore they pour on him the Oyl of the Chriſm? Why they cover him with a myſterious Veil? And, Laſtly, Wherefore they give him the Body and Blood of the Lord? All theſe Queſtions Charles the Great commanded his Metropolitans to anſwer particularly and fully.

[This Letter of Charles the Great is put out by F. Mabillon in his Analect. Tom. I. p. 21.]

Inſufflation and Exorciſing.]

Theſe Ceremonies and various other Rites were uſed by the Church in Baptiſm in this Age, as in the former they had been, not as neceſſary Ingredients in Baptiſm, becauſe they are not enjoyned by the Word of God, but as uſeful to beget a Reverence to this Sacrament in the Minds of the illiterate Vulgar, and expreſs to them the Vertue and Efficacy of it; for they Sometimes aboliſhed Part of them, and always declared, that they attributed no Efficacy or Energy to them, but expected that from the joynt Prayers of the Church. This ſhews how differently they were uſed from the Uſe of them in the Roman Church, who place a ſacred Operation in them, and make them neceſſary to Baptiſm.

Amalarius

The Archbiſhops of France, in Obedience to this Order, compoſed, and cauſed to be compoſed ſeveral Books upon theſe Subjects, all which they dedicated to the Emperor. Amongſt others, Amalarius Fortunatus, Archbiſhop of Treves, writ a Treatiſe upon that Subject, which is to be found in the fifteenth Tome of Caniſius's Collection, under the Name of Alcuin, to whom that Author attributes it upon a bare Conjecture only, without having any ſufficient Proof; for in his MS. and ſome others there was no Name of of any Author: But in another ancient Manuſcript of Father Petavius it bears the Name of Amalarius. For indeed it is impoſſible it ſhould be Alcuin's, for he dyed in 804. and this was written in Anſwer to a Letter in 811. This Amalarius was he that was ſent the ſame Year along with Peter, the Abbot of Nonantula, to the Greek Emperor, Michael Curolopates. He was choſen Archbiſhop of Treves, and dyed in the Year 814.

Jeſſe.

Jeſſe, Biſhop of Amiens, writ alſo an Anſwer to the Emperor's Letter, in which he relates very exactly and clearly all the Ceremonies of Baptiſm, with a very natural Comment upon every one of them. He ſpeaks alſo of Confirmation, and the Euchariſt conferred upon Infants at the Time of their Baptiſm. Cordeſius, who was the firſt that publiſh'd this Letter of Jeſſé at the End of Hincmarus's Works [at Paris 1615.] added thereto a ſhort Explanation of the Manner of Adminiſtring Baptiſm, and of the Terms which are made uſe of in the Prayers, together with nine Canons or Inſtructions for Prieſts; but it is very plain this Addition does not belong to Jeſſé, for it has no Relation to the Matter he treats of. His Letter ends at the Chapter of the Euchariſt. What follows as far as the Canons, is the Work of another Author, whoſe Notions and Method are very different from his. The Canons are a Capitulary or Remonſtrance for the Inſtruction of Charles the Great, which is to be found amongſt the Collection of Conſtitutions, publiſh'd by M. Baluzius, pag. 531. This Letter of Jeſſé is alſo extant in the Bibliotheca Patrum, [Tom. 14. pag. 67.] This Biſhop was ſent by Charles the Great in the Year 802. to Irene, Empreſs of the Eaſt, and afterwards depoſed in 831. by Ebbo, Archbiſhop of Rheims, in a Synod held at Nimiguen.

Odilbert.

Odilbert, Archbiſhop of Milan, writ alſo upon the ſame Subject, whoſe Book was never yet printed. It is a Manuſcript in the Abby of Richemont. Father Mabillon, in the fourth Tome of his Analects, he publiſh'd the Letter, which ſerves for a Preface to the Treatiſe, with an Extract of the Treatiſe it ſelf.

Theodulphus, Biſhop of Orleans, writ alſo an Anſwer by the expreſs Command of his Metropolitan, Magnus, Archbiſhop of Sens, to whom he dedicated it; and who alſo writ a ſmall Treatiſe upon the ſame Subject, [Printed with ſome other Pieces of his by Father Sirmondus at Paris, 1646.]

Certain Queſtions about the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church.

Theodulphus.

The Church of Lyons was too conſiderable, and its Ceremonies too authentick, not to explain it ſelf upon this Occaſion. Whereupon Leidradus, Archbiſhop there, undertook to compoſe an Anſwer to the Emperor's Letter. This Letter has been put out lately by Father Mabillon, in the third Tome of his Analects. To which is annexed another private one to the Emperor; and likewiſe a ſmall ſeparate Treatiſe upon the Renunciations made at the Time of Baptiſm. We have over and above theſe, two other Letters of Leidradus. The firſt written alſo to the Emperor, where he gives him an Account of the Uſe he had made of the ancient Revenues of the Church of Lyons, which had been reſtored to him by his Orders. He ſays, he has eſtabliſhed a Quire there, and whatever elſe is neceſſary to celebrate Divine Service. He acquaints him, that he had gotten Schools of Singers, who are very excellent in their Art, and are able to inſtruct others. That he has Readers, who not only read publickly, but are fit to expound and interpret. That he has cauſed a great many Eccleſiaſtical Authors to be tranſcribed; rebuilt and beautified a great many Monaſteries, and other Religious Houſes; and likewiſe erected a Cloyſter for the Canons and Prebendaries, and many other Things both of Uſe and Profit. The ſecond Letter of Leidradus is conſolatory to his Siſter upon the Death of her Son and Brother. The Works of Leidradus are in a plain and natural Style, but have nevertheleſs a great deal of Good Senſe and very Chriſtian Thoughts. Theſe two laſt Letters are in the Bibliotheca Patrum, [Tom. 10. p. 232.] Papyrius Maſſonus and M. Baluzius have joyned them to the Works of Agobardus, to whom Leidradus reſigned his See to retire into the Monaſtery of St. Martin at Soiſſons. There are other Anonymous Anſwers given to the Queſtions propoſed by Charles the Great in his Letter. All theſe Authors give an Account of the Ceremonies of Baptiſm, and put a myſtical Senſe upon them, for the Inſtruction and Edification of Prieſts and Believers.

Leidradus.

Amalarius

Lewis, firnamed the Kind or Godly, was not leſs curious than his Father, in endeavouring to underſtand the Ceremonies of the Church. Amalarius, a Deacon of Metz, to whom is alſo given the Title of Abbot in ancient Manuſcripts, and whom ſome have called Suffragan, dedicated to him four Books of the Eccleſiaſtical Office, in his Preface of which he gives him great Commendations, concluding it with many Wiſhes for his long and happy Life. In theſe Books he relates the Ceremonies and Cuſtoms of the Church, according to the Roman Eſtabliſhment, and gives myſtical Reaſons for them, which are in no wiſe to be thought the true Reaſons for the Inſtitution of theſe Ceremonies, but humane Inventions, and for the moſt part groundleſs Suppoſitions, and which I do not think my ſelf obliged to give any Account of; therefore ſhall only take Notice of a few Points of Diſcipline in them, which are the moſt conſiderable. The firſt Book is about the Service of the Church from Septuageſima to Penteceſt: Where he teaches us, that from Septuageſima to Eaſter, neither Hallelujah, nor Gloria in Excelſis were ſung in Churches; that Lent began the Wedneſday after Quinquageſima. That on Holy-Thurſday they conſecrated Oyls for the Sick, for the Catechumens, and thoſe that were confirmed. That theſe three Oyls had three different Conſecrations. That they mingled Balm with that uſed for Confirmation. That on Good-Friday they worſhipped the Croſs, and after they had brought out the Body of Chriſt (reſerved the day before) they mixt it with unconſecrated Wine, which they thought ſufficiently conſecrated by this Mixture, and ſo gave it immediately to the People. But he takes Notice at the ſame Time, that in the Church of Rome the Prieſts only communicated. That the Service of Saturday was for Saturday Night till Sunday, and that they bleſt the Wax Candle. He ſpeaks of ſome of the Ceremonies of Baptiſm made uſe of at that Time, and principally of the Unction, which was pour'd by the Prieſts on the Top of the Novice's Head. He ſeems to diſapprove of the Faſt upon Rogation, which he ſays, was inſtituted by St. Mamertus, and was never in uſe with the Eaſtern Churches. In the ſecond Book he treats of the twelve Leſſons of Divine Service, of the Faſt of the four Ember

Weeks,

Questions about the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church.

Weeks, of the several Orders and * Habits of Priests, of which he gives very mystical Significations. The Priest's Vest signifies the right Management of the Voice, his Albe the Subduing of the Passions; his Shoes, upright Walking; his Cope, Good Works; his Stole, the Yoke of Jesus Christ; the Surplise, Readiness to serve his Neighbour; his Handkerchief, good Thoughts; and the Pallium, Preaching. The third Book treats of the Method observed in Celebrating Mass; of the Habits, of the Office of the Singers, of the Manner of the Bishop's going to the Altar; of the Place where he sits, of the Presenting of the Chalice by the Acolythus to the Subdeacon, who receives it; of the Mixing of the Sacramental Bread with the Consecrated Wine; and lastly of the Kiss of Peace. He discourses at the same Time of the Prayers which are said, viz. † Of the Introitus, the Kyrie Eleison, the Gloria, the Collects, the Tractus, the Responses, the Hallelujah, the Offertory, the Secret Prayers, the Preface, the Canon, the Lord's Prayer, the Agnus Dei, and the Blessings, which are given at the End of the Mass. He also adds some Reflections upon the Masses and Service used on All-Saints-Day, the Advent, Christmas-Day, and the Purification; upon the Hour of Celebrating Mass, and the Differences between the Masses for the Dead. We may thereby learn, that the Practice in his Time of Celebrating Mass was not different from what it is at present. But the mystical Reflections he makes upon these Ceremonies and Prayers are so far-fetched and incongruous, that there is no great Use to be made of them. He has one particular Observation to himself about the Body of Jesus Christ, which he divides into three States or Conditions. 1. Of Jesus Christ risen again, represented by that Part of the Eucharist which is put into the Chalice. 2. Of Jesus Christ upon Earth, represented by that which is consumed by the Priest. And, 3. The Body of Jesus Christ in the Tomb, represented by that Part which remains on the Altar. The last Book is upon the other Parts of the Divine Service; * As the Prayers for the First, Third, Sixth, None Hours, Vespers, Complectorum, and Night-Office, as well for Sundays and Holy-days, as other principal Feasts of the Year. F. Mabillon, in the second Tome of his Analects, has printed a Supplement to this fourth Book attributed to Amalarius. But it appears by Agobard's Book, writ against this Work, that the last Chapter of the 4*th*. Book, was the same with the last and 47*th*. in the Vulgar Editions: Also 'tis certain, that this Supplement is rather added by the Monk Ademarus, than the Work of Amalarius. Moreover 'tis plain, this Addition has no Connection or Conformity with the other Parts of that Treatise.

* Of the Habits of Priests, see Durand. Ration. l. 3.

† Concerning these Parts of the Mass (533) if any desire to be exactly informed, let him consult Durand. Ration. l. 4.

* These Hours of Prayer, and the Reasons of their Institution, are at large explained by Durand. in his Rationale Divin. Of. l. 5. c. 3.—10.

The same Author has writ another Book, called * The Order of the Book of Anthems, where he gives a Reason for the Order he has observed in the Book of Anthems, which he made for the Churches of France, in so disposing the Anthems, Responses and Psalms. Ademarus informs us, That Amalarius was also Author of a Treatise, named, A Rule for the Canons and Canonesses, published in the Council of Aix-la-Chapelle, which consists of nothing else but a Collection of Precepts and Canons, gathered from the Fathers and Councils, relating to the Lives of Clergymen and Monks. The Deacon Florus makes Mention of two other Books of Amalarius, made before the former, and adds a third, called An Introduction or Preface to his Works; but this we have altogether lost.

Mon. Baluzius amongst the Pieces which are at the End of the second Volume of his Capitulary, hath published some Eclogues of choice Reflections, upon some Places of the Roman Order, concerning the Ceremonies of the Mass, which go under the Name of Amalarius: But altho' this Work be very full of Reflections, much like those of Amalarius, yet it is very dubious whether they be his or no; for besides that it is not likely he would treat a second Time of the same Thing, only after a different Manner, of which he had spoken before in the third Book of his Divine Offices: It appears to me, that this Author's Style and Manner of Writing is something different from that of Amalarius.

There are five Letters of this Author's, in the seventh Tome of Dacherius's Spicilegium, [Tom. 6.] The first is directed to Terence, Archbishop of Sens, concerning the Manner of writing the Name of Jesus Christ, together with Terence's Answer. The second is on the same Subject, writ to Jonas Bishop of Orleans, with that Bishop's Answer. The third is to Rancarius Bishop of Noyon, about the Meaning of these Words in the Gospel; This is the Cup of my Blood, of the new and eternal Testament.

The fourth is to the Monk Hetton, who was Abbot of Fulda, after Rabanus, about the Word Seraphim, whether it be of the Masculine or Neuter Gender; And the fifth is to Gontard, where he treats of this Question, viz. Whether a Person may be allowed to spit just after receiving the Holy Eucharist. It seems by this last Letter, that he believed that there was no Harm in Spitting some Time after, when one cannot easily forbear longer: And if it should happen that without their Knowledge or Will, they should let drop some of the Eucharist, they need not much trouble themselves about it: Also, That he doubted whether Christ's Body once received did incorporate with ours, and accompany it to Death; or whether it evaporated through the Pores, or was exhaled in Air, or converted into Blood, or went into the Draught; so that this has given Occasion to some, to accuse him of the Error of the Stercoranists, as Heribald and Rabanus were. The Books of Amalarius were very ill receiv'd in France, and chiefly by the Church of Lyons, which would by no Means endure them. Agobardus, Bishop of this See, wrote three Treatises against his Offices and Book. Florus, a Deacon of the same Church, attack'd him very vigorously, and accused him in the Councils of Cressi and Thionville: First, about his Opinion of the Body of Christ, under three Forms, represented by three Pieces of the Sacramental Bread: Secondly, about his moral and mystical Significations of the Ceremonies of the Church, which he look'd upon as false Opinions and Imaginations without Grounds. Thirdly, Because he insisted only upon the Roman Order, and expounded it Word for Word; altho' he knew that this Book was unknown to the Archdeacon of Rome, of whom he had many Traditions.

Amalarius thus having attacked the Customs of the Church of Lyons, Agobard, who was their Archbishop, defended them in his Correction of the Anthem Book, to which his Treatise, of the Manner of singing Psalms in the Church of Lyons, serves for a Preface. He observes that the particular Customs of some Churches ought not to be reflected on. He approves of that of the Church of Lyons, in not singing new and fantastical Psalms, in not making use of Poetry in Divine Service, and by keeping exactly to the Scriptures. This was what Amalarius quarrell'd with, but Agobard vigorously defended it, and proved it highly reasonable and conformable to the Sense of the Church.

This Correction of the Anthem Book is dedicated to all Believers, but principally to the Singing-men of the Church of Lyons: He there gives Reasons for the Corrections he has made, and shews that he has only retrench'd all that was not taken from the Holy Scriptures: He gives particular Reasons for leaving out some Anthems, and proves that they were contrary to the Truth, and did not at all agree with Mysteries. He afterwards quotes several Places in the Fathers, to shew that it is necessary to endeavour to reform the Service, and to retrench those Errors and Abuses which are slid into it, either by Malice, Ignorance or Simplicity. He complains that there are some Clergymen, that spend their Lives more in learning to sing, than in studying the Holy Scriptures, and other Matters that relate to their Ministry: He says that the Ancients, to avoid this Disorder, chose rather to repeat the Psalm often, than to charge the Minds of those that sung with a great many superfluous Pieces. And lastly he concludes, That as the Church has a Mass-Book whose Doctrine is very pure, and a Collection of Lessons taken wholly out of the Holy Scriptures, so it ought also to have an Anthem-Book purged from all Errors and Humane Inventions, and composed out of nothing but the Bible.

Questions about the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church.

This Treatise is followed by another against some Passages of Amalarius's Book, concerning the Divine Service: He reproves what Amalarius maintains, That on the twenty fifth of April might be used Litanies or Rogations, without Fasts and Abstinence; he laugh'd at what Amalarius had asserted, that upon that day they prayed publickly for Eggs, Bread and Fish. He finds Fault with Amalarius's Explanation of the Passage of St. Paul. He reproves divers Expressions and Notions of this Author; as when he says, that the Holy Ghost did drive all carnal Desires out of the Apostles Hearts: That Man, and by Consequence Jesus Christ, was created out of the four Elements; That Jesus Christ dyed for the Just and Unjust; That there are two Sacrifices, the one general for all Men, and the other particular only for the Saints: That the first is the Death of Jesus Christ, and the second the Prayers of the Just, which are united to the Sacrifices of the Angels: This Treatise of Agobard seems imperfect.

Rabanus or Herbanus, surnamed Maurus and Magnentius, has made himself very famous by his Works, which he has written concerning the Ceremonies and Discipline of the Church. He was born at Mayence, in the Year 788. He was put very young into the Monastery of Fulda, where he was brought up; from thence he was sent to Tours, where he study'd some Time under the famous Alcuin: He returned afterwards into Germany to his Monastery, where he was entrusted with the Government of the younger Monks, and was afterwards ordain'd Priest in the Year 814. and at last chosen Abbot of Fulda in 822. After having managed this Charge twenty Years, he voluntarily quitted it to satisfie his Monks, who accused him, that he applied himself too much to Study, and neglected the Affairs of the Monastery. He retired to the Mount of St. Peter, and was at last chosen Archbishop of Mayence, in the Year 847. He held a Council the same Year for the Reformation of Discipline, he condemned Gotteschalcus a Monk of Corbey in another Council, and ſent him to Hincmarus Archbiſhop of Rheims; he dyed in the Year 856.

He excell'd all in the common Learning of thoſe Times, ſuch as expounding the Principles of Arts, as the Rules of Grammar and Rhetorick; in a Readineſs of collecting from the Fathers of the Church, common Places upon the Holy Scriptures. In inventing Allegories upon the Hiſtories of the Bible; in the Expoſition of the myſtical Reaſons of the Ceremonies; in a Knack of turning Proſe into Verſe, and in the Manner of reducing his common Places into Precepts and Inſtructions. All the Works of Rabanus are of this Kind.

I ſhall not ſpeak of the Grammar that is attributed to him, and which is nothing elſe but an Extract of Priſcian, becauſe theſe Kind of Works do not relate to our Subject; and that thoſe that have writ his Life, and the Catalogue of his Books, have not mentioned it.

His Treatiſe, De Univerſo, or of the Signification and Propriety of Words, compoſed for Haymon Biſhop of Halberſtat, and ſent to Lewis the Godly, is nothing but a Collection of common Places, about a great Number of Things. It is divided into twenty two Books, of which there are but the five firſt, which have any Relation to Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, the others being all about the Sciences and profane Arts. The firſt Book is concerning the three Perſons in the Godhead; in the firſt Chapter he explains the ſeveral Names of God, and gives the Sence of ſuch Expreſſions in the Scripture, as attributes the Members and Actions of Man to him. In the ſecond he conſiders the different Names which are given to the Son of God, in the Old and New Teſtament. In the third he explains what relates to the Holy Ghoſt, which he affirms to proceed from the Father and the Son. In the fourth he treats of the Myſtery of the Trinity, and in the laſt of the Names of Angels, and of their different Orders. In the ſecond and third Books he ſearches into the Significations of the Names of the Patriarchs and Prophets, and other remarkable Perſons in the Old Law. The fourth concerns the Church only; he there explains the Names and Parables in the New Teſtament, he takes Notice of the Signification and Etimology of the Words which are made uſe of in the Affairs of the Church, ſuch as Clerk, Biſhop, Martyr, &c. Alſo he diſtinguiſhes the different Sorts of Monks: he ſpeaks of Hereſies, and concludes with an Expoſition of the Doctrine of the Church, which is taken, or rather copied out of the Treatiſe of Gennadius, upon Eccleſiaſtical Opinions. In the fifth he diſcourſes of the Books of the Holy Scriptures; he makes a Catalogue of them, and adds moreover to thoſe the Church has received as Canonical, ſome that have not been allowed by the Canon of the Jews. He ſets down thoſe that he believes to have been the Authors of the Old and New Teſtament, and makes an Abbridgment of their Works. He ſpeaks alſo of the Reſtoration of the Holy Books by Eſdras, of the Libraries of the Verſion of the Septuagint, and of other Verſions of the Holy Scriptures; he extreamly commends that of St. Jerome, and prefers it before all others, as being the moſt literal and clear. Verborum tenacior & perſpicuitate Sententiæ Clarior. He treats alſo in the ſame Book of other Eccleſiaſtical Writings of Canons, or of Concordances of the Evangeliſts, of Definitions of General Councils, and of Eccleſiaſtical Offices. He comes at laſt to the Sacraments, and other Means of ſanctifying us. He ſays, That Sacraments are Things which ought to be received holily; That Baptiſm, Chriſm, the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, are called Sacraments, becauſe the Divine Grace works in them by the viſible Signs; that they have their Effect, whether they be adminiſtred by good or bad Men; that Baptiſm remits Sins; that there are ſeveral Sorts of Baptiſms, as that of the Holy Ghoſt, and that of Martyrdome, &c. That there are in the Church other Means of purifying our ſelves from our Sins, and principally Confeſſion, Penance and Tears; that Chriſm or Unction ſanctifies us, and that the Prieſt lays his Hands upon us to endue us with the Holy Ghoſt; That as to the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, God has choſen Bread and Wine to ſhew us that his Body and his Blood is for our common Nouriſhment; That the Sacraments give Life to ſome and Death to others, becauſe all receive them, tho' few have the Virtue and Benefit of them. He ſpeaks laſtly of Exorciſms, the Creed, the Lord's Prayer, Lent, Publick Penance, and Littanies or Proceſſions.

Rabanus's Work in Praiſe of the Holy Croſs, is of a very particular Kind; it muſt needs have coſt him a great deal of Pains and Study, tho' it be but of little Uſe. The Body of the Work is compoſed of Letters divided from one another, and ranged over againſt one another in Lines. In reading from the Right-hand to the Left, every Line contains an Hexameter Verſe. Theſe Letters thus rang'd in Lines, make a ſort of a Draught or Platform, on which there are Figures or Simbols of the Croſs painted; the Letters encloſed in theſe Figures make alſo Verſes, which have ſome Relation to the Figure. There are 28 Figures in 28 Tables, the Verſes are copy'd entire; afterwards at the End of every Table, and the Myſtery explained in Proſe. The firſt Table contains the Image of Chriſt, extending his Arms in the Form of a Croſs. The 47 Verſes read long-ways, from the Right-hand to the Left, ſhow the ſeveral Names that have been given to Chriſt, in the Old and New Teſtament. The Letters compriz'd in the Draught of the Figure compoſe other Verſes; as for Example, Thoſe that meet in the Crown about his Head, read round, make exactly this Verſe, Rex Regum Dominus Dominantium. In the other Tables he repreſents many different Things upon the Croſs, as the Angels, the Virtues, the Elements, Cyphers, Myſtical Numbers, Gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, the Beatitudes, Books of Moſes, Names of Adam, Allelujah, Amen, &c. In the laſt he repreſents a Croſs, at the Foot of which is painted a Monk worſhipping it, and in it theſe Words, Rabanum memet clemens rogo, Chriſte tuere, O Pie, Judicio. This firſt Book is explained by a ſecond, which contains 28 Chapters in Proſe. Rabanus undertook this Work at thirty Years of Age, and preſented it a great while afterwards to Gregory the Fourth, to whom it was recommended as a wonderful Piece of Art by Alcuinus, who had been Rabanus's Maſter.

Queſtions about the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church.

Theſe are the Contents of the firſt Tome of Rabanus's Works; the ſecond conſiſts of four Books of Commentaries upon Geneſis, four upon Exodus, ſeven upon Leviticus, with an Abridgment of them by Strabo his Scholar, four upon Numbers, and as many upon Deuteronomy. All theſe Commentaries are dedicated to Freculphus Biſhop of Lyſieux, at whoſe Deſire he undertook them. Rabanus in his Epiſtle entreats him to examine them; and tells him, That he ought not to expect any Thing extraordinary from one that was more fit to work for his Living, than to write Books for the Uſe of the Learned, and beſides, whoſe Charge of Abbot allowed him but little Leiſure. The third Tome contains two Books of Commentaries upon Judges, dedicated to Humbertus Biſhop of Wirtzbourgh. One on the Hiſtory of Ruth, four on the four Books of Kings, dedicated to Hilduin, four others upon the two Books of Chronicles, dedicated to Lewis Emperor of Germany. One Commentary upon the Hiſtory of Judith, and another upon Heſter. Theſe two are dedicated to the Empreſs Judith. A Comment upon the Canticles, which is compoſed into Morning Hymns, for every Day of the Week, dedicated to Lewis King of Germany. Three Books of Commentaries on the Proverbs of Solomon, as many on the Book of Wiſdom, and two upon Eccleſiaſtes. Theſe two laſt are dedicated to Otgarus Archbiſhop of Mayence. The fourth Tome conſiſts of nineteen Books of Commentaries upon the Propheſie of Jeremiah and his Lamentations, twenty upon Ezekiel, dedicated to the Emperor Lotharius. And two more on the two Books of Maccabees; the firſt is to Lewis King of Germany, and the other to Geroldus Archdeacon of that King's Chappel. The fifth Tome contains eight Books of Commentaries upon the Goſpel of St. Matthew, directed to Aiſtulphus Archbiſhop of Mayence: And laſtly, thirty Books of Commentaries upon the Epiſtles of St. Paul, written at the Requeſt of Lupus of Ferrara, and dedicated to the Biſhop Samuel. Many Homilies upon the Sundays, Feaſts and Holydays of the Year, and alſo upon divers Points of Morality, dedicated to Aiſtulphus and Lotharius. A Treatiſe of Allegories upon all the Scripture, where, after having explained the Difference between Tropology, Analogy, and Allegory, he ranks in Alphabetical Order, many Words of the Holy Scriptures, to all which he gives an Allegorical or Myſtical Senſe.

Thoſe Authors that have mentioned Rabanus's Works, add to theſe ſeveral other Commentaries, upon Joſhua, Eſdras, Tobit, Job, the Pſalms, Iſaiah, Daniel, the Minor Prophets, the Goſpels of St. Mark, St. Luke, and St. John, the Acts of the Apoſtles, and Canonical Epiſtles, and ſome others which have never yet been printed. All theſe Commentaries conſiſt of Nothing elſe but Collections out of other Mens Works, which be copy'd from them without any exact Choice or Diſtinction.

The ſixth Tome of Rabanus's Works contains many Books; the firſt and moſt conſiderable of all theſe, is his Treatiſe of Inſtruction of Clerks, divided into three Books. He compos'd it for the Monks of Fulda, who propounded to him divers Queſtions about their Duty, and dedicated it in the Year 819. to Aiſtulphus Archbiſhop of Mayence. The firſt Book treats of the ſeveral Eccleſiaſtical Degrees and Habits of Clergymen; alſo of the four Sacraments of the Church, as Baptiſm, Chriſm, the Body and Blood of Chriſt, and the Service of the Maſs according to the Roman Order. The ſecond is upon the Liturgy it ſelf, the Canonical Hours, Faſts, Confeſſions, Penance, Holydays, the Rule of Faith, and about Hereſies; the laſt is of Eccleſiaſtical Knowledge and Studies.

In the firſt, after having obſerved that the Church is an Aſſembly of Believers, he divides it into three Sorts of Members; firſt Laymen, ſecondly Monks, and thirdly Clerks: He obſerves, That the Clergy are admitted into it by Shaving the Crown, which is a Ceremony that demonſtrates, that they ought then to part with all Vice and diſorderly Living. It ſeems they did not then content themſelves to cut off a little Hair, but ſhav'd all the Top of their Heads, leaving only a Circle round about, which Rabanus believes to

to have been a Mark of the Royalty of the Christian Priesthood. He reckons up eight Ecclesiastical Orders; the Porter, the Quiristèr, the Reader, the Exorcist, the Acolythus, the Subdeacon, the Deacon, the Priest, and Bishop. He says, That this last must be ordained, not by one Bishop only, but by all those of his Province; lest so great Power being trusted to a single Person, he should undertake any Thing prejudicial to the Faith. He adds, That in consecrating him he has a Staff put into his Hand to admonish, that he is not only to guide, but correct the People committed to his Charge; and a Ring, to denote either the Honour of the Priesthood, or the Secrets he is to keep. He counts three Sorts of Bishops; first Patriarchs, secondly, Archbishops or Metropolitans, and thirdly, single Bishops. He adds moreover Suffragans, which he compares to Christ's Disciples, who could do nothing without their Master's Orders. These Sorts of Bishops were Establish'd for the Sake of the Poor in the Country, that they might not be depriv'd of Confirmation, which these Suffragans had Power to confer upon them, tho' they were ordained by one Bishop only, as the Priests are. He tells us, that these last were also called Bishops, and that they had the Power almost equal to theirs, for they could consecrate the Eucharist, confer Baptism, and preach. But nevertheless they had not the chief Dignity of Priesthood, Pontificatûs Apicem, since they could not anoint the Forehead with Chrism, and bestow the Holy Ghost, which two only belong to the Bishops, as it appears by the Acts of the Apostles; neither can they confer Holy Orders, which is also reserved to the Bishops. The Deacons are Ministers of sacred Things, they have Right to baptize, they are necessary in the Service of the Altar, for the Priest cannot take the Chalice from thence, but must receive it from the Hands of the Deacon. The Subdeacons are under them; these take the Offerings of the People, and carry them to the Deacons, who place them upon the Altar; they are oblig'd to live unmarried: These are not ordain'd by Imposition of Hands, but only by receiving the Cover and Chalice from the Hands of the Bishop; and the Christal Bottle and Napkin from the Archdeacon. He says nothing particular of the lesser and inferior Orders. I shall pass by the Remarks he makes upon the Likeness of our Ministers with those of the Old Testament, and the Mystical Significations he gives to the Bishops Habits. To come to what he teaches concerning the Sacraments, he says, That Baptism, Chrism, and the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ are called Sacraments; because that under the Vail of Corporal Things, the Divine Power produces Salvation and Grace after a secret Manner, by the Power of the Holy Ghost, which works this Effect, insomuch that they are equally efficacious, whether they be administred by the Good or the Bad. That Baptism is the first, because it must be received before Confirmation, and before the Receiving the Body and Blood of our Lord. That in this Sacrament Men are dipt in Water, to denote, that as Water outwardly purifies the Body, so Grace inwardly does the Soul, into which the Holy Ghost descends. He relates afterwards the Order of Administration, and the Ceremonies of Baptism; and from thence passing to Confirmation, he remarks, that the Bishop dispenses the Holy Ghost by Imposition of his Hands; and that he anoints the Believer a second Time with the same Chrism the Priest had done before, with this Difference only, that his Anointing is on the Forehead, whereas the Priest's was on the Crown of the Head. He attributes to this last Unction the Sanctification and Grace of the Holy Ghost. At last speaking of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, which he considers as two different Sacraments; He asks the Question, Why Jesus Christ has comprehended the Mystery of the Body and Blood under Things which we eat and drink? And why of all these Sorts of Food we eat, he has made Choice of Bread and Wine? To which he answers, That Jesus Christ has given us his Body and Blood in the Form of Nourishment, because effectively his Flesh is such and his Blood Drink. That he hath made use of the Fruits of Earth, because he was upon Earth, and that he has chosen Bread and Wine to accomplish the Sacrifice of Melchisedech, and to show that as Bread and Wine consists of many Particles, which together make but one Substance, so we are all united into the same Church by the same Charity, being all made Members of the same Body by this Sacrament. He adds, That this Sacrament serves for Nourishment to our Flesh, and converts it self into our Substance, and that by Vertue of this Sacrament we are changed into Jesus Christ. That we participate of his Spirit and Grace; and in a Word, that we become his very Members. That the Bread which is made use of is without Leaven, to denote, that those which approach it ought to be exempt from all Impurities. That Water is mixt with the Wine, because we read in the Gospel, That Blood and Water came out of the Side of our Saviour. And that as it is good for them that are not separated from it by their Sins, often to approach this Sacrament, so it is very dangerous for such as have committed such Crimes as debar them from it, to receive it before they have repented. After having treated of the Sacraments, he speaks of the Celebration of Mass, which he believes to have been so called, because of the Dismissing of the Catechumens with these Words, Ite, Missa est. He says, That the Mass is a Sacrifice which the Priest offers to God, instituted by Jesus Christ, practised by the Apostles, and used by all the Church. He acknowledges that at first they did not sing as they do at present; but he believes they read the Gospel and the Epistles of the Apostles; he ends this Book with a short Exposition of the Ceremonies and Prayers of the Mass.

Questions about the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church.

In the second Book, after he hath spoken of the Hours for Divine Service, and the different Sorts of Prayer, he treats of the Confession, the Litanies or Publick Prayers, and the divers Kinds of Fasts. He distinguishes three Sorts of Lent; the first, that which precedes Easter; the second, the Fast observed after Pentecost; and the third, that which begins in November and ends at Christmas-day. He notes, that the Custom of his Time was to fast Friday and Saturday. He does not forget to speak of the Fasts of the four Ember-weeks. He approves of other Fasts ordered by the Bishop on any particular Occasion, or practis'd thro' Devotion by Christians. In speaking of abstaining from Wine and Flesh, he observes, that Birds are allowed to those who are forbid to eat of any four-footed Creature, because that 'tis thought, they were formed out of Water as well as Fish.

He distinguishes two different Sorts of Alms, and ranks amongst this Number the good Works we do for our Salvation, which are as Alms we bestow upon our selves. He defines Penance; a Punishment, by which a Man corrects himself for what he has done amiss. He says, that Penitents let their Hair and Beards grow, wear Sackcloth, throw themselves on their Faces on the Ground, and besprinkle their Bodies with Ashes. That Repentance is a second Remedy for our Sins, after Baptism. That to effect a true Repentance, it does not suffice only to bewail one's Sins past, but we must never commit them again. That this is the Satisfaction, followed by Reconciliation. That Penance and Reconciliation ought to be publick, for publick Transgressions; but as to those whose Sins are conceal'd, and who have confest them secretly to a Priest or a Bishop, they may do private Penance, such as the Priest or Bishop will order; and afterwards be reconciled when they have performed their Penance. That the ordinary Time for Reconciliation is Holy-Thursday, but Absolution may be granted at other Times to those that are in Danger of their Lives. He afterwards treats copiously of the solemn Celebration of Feasts and Sundays. He speaks by the By of the Oblation of the Sacrifice of the Mass for the Dead, of the Dedicating of Churches, the Prayers of Divine Service, the Songs, the Psalms, Hymns, Anthems, Responses, and Lessons. He makes a Catalogue of Canonical Books, which comprehends all that are at present acknowledged for such. He tells you those that he believes to have been Authors of the greatest Part of them. He speaks of Ecclesiastical Benedictions, viz. That of Oil, and that of Salt and Water, which he says, are made use of to comfort the Sick against the Illusions of the Devil, to heal the Flock, and to drive away Distempers. At last, having spoken of the Apostles Creed, and given an Abridgment of the Doctrines agreeable to the Faith, he sets down a very imperfect Catalogue of Heresies, in which he forgets some, and reckons others which are altogether unknown; as the Canonians and Metangismonites.

The last Book is concerning the Learning of Clergymen. He says, they are not allowed to be ignorant of any thing they should teach others, and which is necessary to render them capable of instructing them. That they ought to understand very well the Holy Scriptures, not only the Historical Part, but be able to expound the Figures and Mystical Sense of it. That it is good for them to have a Tincture of other Arts and Sciences. That they be civil and Regular in their Manners, and affable and courteous in their Speech. That they be of an acute Judgment, and know how to apply proper Remedies to the different Diseases of the Soul. He afterwards makes Use of the Words of St. Gregory the Great, to reprove those who undertake to teach others, and cure Souls, without being very well instructed in their Duty themselves; I mean such as enter into the Ministry meerly through the Prospect of Interest or Ambition, and those that dishonour God by an irregular Life, whose Deportment does not answer their Doctrine. He says, That the Ground and Perfection of Wisdom is the Knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, which is an Emanation of the eternal Wisdom of God, and a Participation of his Truth. That all the Wisdom and Truth that Men have, and all that is to be found profitable in Profane Writers, is to be attributed to the Divine Wisdom, which gave it a Beginning. That the Scripture has its Obscurities, which are good to exercise Mens Wits: But there are scarce any Truths contained in one Place, which are not explained in another, Nihil autem de illis obscuritatibus eruitur quod non plenissimè dictum alibi reperiatur. This is taken from St. Austine's Treatise of Christian Doctrine, as well as the rest of this Book; which is nothing but an Extract from this Father, excepting what he ſays upon the ſeven Liberal Arts, upon which he quotes a Paſſage taken out of the Paſtoral of St. Gregory.

Queſtions about the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church.

The Book of Orders, Holy Sacraments, and Prieſts Habits, which followeth this, is almoſt nothing elſe but a Copy of the firſt of the three foregoing Books: It is very near the ſame with the three Books of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline; for the two firſt are nothing but an Abridgment of thoſe of the Inſtruction of Clerks, to which he has added ſome Paſſages out of St. Auſtine. In the laſt, which is about the Chriſtian Warfare, he treats of Virtues and Vices.

* Dr. Cave adds a 3*d*. De Puritate Cordis: Or, The Purity of the Heart.

* The two Books dedicated to the Abbot Bonoſus, of which the firſt is about the Viſion of God, and the ſecond upon Penance, are made up of Paſſages out of the Fathers upon theſe Subjects.

The three Books of Queſtions about the Rules of Penance, do not belong to Rabanus. The firſt and ſecond are Halitgarius's, Biſhop of Cambray, and the third an unknown Author's.

The three Books of Virtues and Vices belong to the ſame Halitgarius, who has alſo made a Penitential at the Requeſt of Ebbo, Archbiſhop of Rheims, divided into five Books, and publiſhed under his Name by Caniſius. Theſe are not much different from the five Books, which here bear the Name of Rabanus.

But the Penitential dedicated to Otgarus, Archbiſhop of Mayence, is certainly the Work of Rabanus, which he compoſed towards the Year 841. before he was Biſhop of Mayence. [This Tract is printed alone at Venice, 1584. Quarto.]

The Name of a Penitential has alſo been given to the Letter which he wrote to Heribaldus, Biſhop of Auxerre, publiſhed by Stewart in his Addition to the Antiquities of Caniſius [at Ingoldſtat, 1616.] and by M. Baluſius, at the End of Regino, [at Paris, 1671.] But this is a Canonical Letter, in Anſwer to ſome Queſtions propounded by that Biſhop. It is divided into Articles, and quoted by Regino and the Collectors of Canons. He there gathers together many Canons concerning the Penances of Homicides, Adulterers, Forſworn People, Sorcerers; and about the Puniſhments of thoſe that commit any great Crimes after they are admitted into Holy Orders, and about other Circumſtances of Penance and Abſolution. But towards the End he treats about two Queſtions much debated in his Time. The firſt about the Euchariſt, Whether it goes into the Draught? A Queſtion that has been ſpoken of before. And the ſecond about Ebbo, old Archbiſhop of Rheims, who after his Depoſition, retired to Hildeſheim in Saxony, where he exerciſed his Epiſcopal Functions. He ſays, that he knows not whether he was juſtly or unjuſtly depoſed; but nevertheleſs that it did not hinder him from doing the Duty of that Office: For he had heard that he was afterwards re-eſtabliſhed by the Holy See. He adds, That he had lately written thereupon to Hincmarus, after he underſtood that he had removed from the Prieſthood and Clerkſhip, all thoſe who had been ordained by Ebbo after his being depoſed. This Letter of Rabanus was written about the Year 853. a long Time after the Penitential, of which we have ſpoken before.

Rabanus's Letter to Humbert, about the Degrees of Conſanguinity, within which 'tis forbidden to contract Marriage, is alſo a Work of the ſame Nature. In it after he hath related the Opinions of Theodorus, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Iſidorus, he ſays, 'tis his Judgment, that a Man may marry after the fifth Degree of Conſanguinity: And that if there be any Marriages found within that Degree, without their Knowledge they were ſo near of Kin, they might be ſuffered to continue married, only enjoyning them Penance, and exhorting them to live in Abſtinence from the Marriage-Bed.

Humbertus not being ſatisfied with this ſhort Anſwer, ſent him ſome new Queſtions about this Subject; and alſo ask'd him what he thought of Fortune-tellers Divinations? Rabanus anſwers him in a longer Letter, in which he ſhews, that he was in the Right to make uſe of the Chapter in Leviticus to regulate the Degrees of Conſanguinity, within which it is forbidden to marry: Becauſe that this Law related to Manners, and that the Precepts of this Kind have not been aboliſh'd by Jeſus Chriſt. He afterwards relates a Paſſage of St. Auſtine, which explains the Paſſage of Leviticus. Another Paſſage in the Anſwer of St. Gregory to Auſtine the Monk; and a great many Canons concerning the Degrees of Conſanguinity, in which it is forbidden to contract Marriage. In the ſecond Part, after having ſpoken of the Artifices of Magicians or Sorcerers, he concludes, That we ought to take Care how we apply our ſelves to them for the Cure of any Diſtemper, or to find Things that are ſtollen or loſt.

In his Book of the Soul, he treats briefly, contrary to his ordinary Cuſtom, about ſuch Queſtions that reſpect the Original and Nature of our Souls. He ſays alſo, that it is a diſputable Point, whether God created it to be infuſed into our Bodies, or whether it be produced from the Souls of our Fathers and Mothers. He maintains, that it is altogether Spiritual, and has no particular Figure, although its principal Seat be in the Head. He ſays, it is not leſs in Infants than more aged Perſons; and that it is of the ſame Nature in all Men, though the Inequality of Organs hinders it from acting every where alike. He treats afterwards of the principal Virtues of the Soul, of the Form of the Body, and of the Senſes.

Queſtions about the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church.

The Treatiſe of the Riſe, Life, and Manners of Anti-Chriſt, contains a Deſcription of his Life and Actions, framed out of what is ſaid of him in the Holy Scriptures: That he ſhould be of the Race of the Jews, and of the Tribe of Dan: That he ſhould be born according to the Order of Nature, of a Father and Mother: That at the very Minute of his Conception the Devil ſhould enter into his Body, and always dwell there: That he ſhould be born in Babylon: That he ſhould extend his Dominion to a great Diſtance. That he ſhould do Signs and Prodigies. That he ſhould ſtir up a great Perſecution againſt all Chriſtians. That when he ſhould come, the Roman Empire would be entirely ruined, and Judgment would be at hand. That he ſhould call himſelf Chriſt, and draw all the Jews after him. That he ſhould alſo ſit in the Temple of God, that is to ſay, the Church. That he ſhould have Elias and Enoch for his Forerunners. That they ſhould be killed after three Years and a half's Preaching. That the great Perſecution of Anti-Chriſt ſhould commence from their Death, and that it ſhould continue three Years and an half; but that although the Anger of God ſhould be enflamed againſt him, and that he ſhould be ſlain by Jeſus Chriſt, or the Angel Michael armed with his Power. That 'tis thought this ſhall be on the Mount of Olives. That the Judgment ſhall not follow his Death immediately, but that God ſhould grant ſome Time to thoſe that have been ſeduced, to repent, and acknowledge their Tranſgreſſions.

At the End of theſe Works we find Rabanus's Verſes, in which he confeſſes, that his Writings are only Collections and Compoſures out of other's Writings.

The Martyrology attributed to Rabanus, is very ſhort, and ſeems to be a Genuine Piece: It has already been publiſhed by Caniſius, [Antiq. Lect. Tom. VI.] We owe to the Jeſuit Bronverus the Collection of Rabanus's Poetry, where there is Sence and Wit, although it is every where full of Barbarous Terms, and have neither Elegance nor Politeneſs.

The Commentary upon the Rules of St. Benedict, attributed to Rabanus, belongs to the Abbot Smaragdus, as we have noted before.

The Liſt of ſome Latin Words rendred into High Dutch Terms, and the Figures of the Letters or Characters of the Hebrew, Greek, Latin, and Teutonick Tongues, are taken from the ſecond Tome of the Hiſtory of Germany, compoſed by Goldaſtus, which are ſuch ancient Pieces, that they may very well be attributed to Rabanus. Theſe are the whole Contents of the ſix Tomes of this Author, printed at Antwerp in the Year 1626. bound in three Volumes in Folio. [And by the Care of Georgius Colvenerius, at Colen, 1627. Fol. Vol. 3.]

There have been ſince publiſhed ſome other Works of Rabanus. For without reckoning the three Letters of Predeſtination and Grace, written againſt Goteſchalcus, and publiſhed by Sirmondus [at Paris, 1647. Octavo.] of which we have ſpoken, M. Baluſius has given us in the laſt Edition of the Works of M. de Marca, two Treatiſes, which without Doubt do belong to Rabanus, and which are moſt elaborate, uſeful, and better written than any of his other Works. The firſt is dedicated to Drogo Biſhop of Metz, which is concerning Suffragans. Opinions were then divided in the Galliean Church, about the Dignity and Power of Suffragans; ſome affirmed they were real Biſhops by their Ordination, and that they might ordain Prieſts and Deacons, confirm, conſecrate Altars, and do all the Office of a Biſhop: But others denied this, and affirmed that their Ordinations and Confirmations were null and void. Charles the Great conſulted Pope Leo the Third upon this Queſtion, who anſwered, That he was certain that Suffragans had not this Power, and that all they had done belonging to Biſhops, was ipſo facto void, and that they ought to be deprived of any ſuch Power. The Council of Ratisbon followed the Pope's Advice, and ordered them to remain in the Rank of Prieſts.

This Deciſion did not hinder, but that there were yet Suffragans in many Dioceſes, and that the Biſhops did ſtill allow them Privileges which belonged only to them. There has always been many Churches, and chiefly in Italy and Spain, where Suffragans have been eſteemed no more than ordinary Prieſts, where they re-ordained ſuch as were made Prieſts or Deacons by them, confirmed anew thoſe they had been confirmed by, and conſecrated anew ſuch Churches as they had conſecrated. Rabanus having underſtood this, undertook to defend the Suffragans. He ſays, that their Order had its Original from the Times of the Apoſtles; and that they had ſuch Aſſiſtants who could Ordain and do the ſame Offices with them. He believes that St. Linus and St. Cletus were Suffragans to St. Peter and St. Paul in the Church of Rome. He accuſes thoſe Biſhops that undervalue Suffragans, and who look upon them no more than ordinary Priests, of overthrowing the Order by their Ambition. He endeavours to prove by the Canons of the Councils of Ancyra and Antioch, that Suffragans might Ordain thro' the permission of their Bishops, and that they have received the Episcopal Consecration and Ordination. He asserts, That if Suffragans had not this Right, they would be of no Use to the Bishops as they now are: And upon what was objected against him, that it is said in the Acts, that the Apostles themselves had been sent into Samaria, to bestow the Holy Ghost on those that were newly baptiz'd; He answered, that the Apostles were sent thither, because there was then no Suffragan at Samaria but only the Deacon Philip, who had baptiz'd them. The rest of the Treatise contains some Admonitions to the Bishops about Humility.

The other Treatise of Rabanus, publish'd by M. Baluzius, is concerning the respect Children owe to their Parents, and Subjects to their Prince: It was writ upon the occasion of the Conspiracy of Lewis the Godly's Children against their Father. Rabanus there quotes several places in the Scripture, which prove, that every one ought to obey his Prince and his Parents. He confirms these Truths by Examples, and shews in particular, that it was never permitted to a Subject, to take Arms against his Sovereign upon what account soever. He mightily condemns those Children who would deprive their Parents of their Estates. He speaks against unjust and rash Judgments, openly blaming that which the Bishops pronounc'd against Lewis the Godly. He shews plainly that Clergymen ought not to meddle with Secular or Temporal Affairs. He maintains, That none can Condemn or put to publick Penance, a Sinner that accuses himself, unless he be otherwise convicted. He adds, That those that are sorry for their Sins and are converted, deserve forgiveness. At last addressing himself to the Emperor, he exhorts him to despise the false Judgments given against him; and advertises him, that he may nevertheless with good Works * merit Heaven. He counsels him, not to be surprized at the attempts of his Enemies, but to be encourag'd by the truth of the Gospel, and to believe in his Judge and his King, who has given him a Crown on Earth, and promised him one in Heaven. He tells him, that if the Conspiracy of his Enemies have done him any wrong, he should trouble himself but little about it, but be thankful to his Defender and Saviour Jesus Christ, who afflicts and chastizes all those that he loves. He exhorts him in fine, not to seek after any Revenge, but heartily to forgive all such as have offended him. This Treatise is Elegant and well Written.

* Merit Pardon—— Heaven.] Under the word Merit, which is often met with in the Fathers, The Church of Rome, which generally couches her new and false Doctrines, under old Names, would have us understand a Merit ex condigno, whereby we deserve Heaven as a just reward of our Works; whereas they mean a Merit of impetration, as a conditional qualification for happiness.

M. Baluzius, has also published in the first Tome of his Miscellaneous Works, his Treatise about the account of Time, directed to Macarius. Rabanus writ this when he was a private Monk, in the Year 820. This Book is written by way of Questions and Answers. It treats of all that relates to the Kalendar; as Days, Months, Years, Epacts, Cycles and Easter. These Matters, tho' they be very obscure, are here treated of with a great deal of Exactness and Method.

The same M. Baluzius hath put out in another of his Works, (viz. his Collection of some ancient Acts, which he has put at the end of his Capitularies) a Letter of Rabanus's to Regenbaldus, Suffragan of Mayence, about some Questions, that Regenbaldus had propounded to him, about several cases. The first is concerning a Person who having beaten his Wife, had caused her to bring forth a dead Child. He answers, he ought to be dealt with as a Man-slayer. The second is about a Person, who having been bit by a Dog, applyed immediately some of his Liver to the Wound, as most likely to heal it. He excuses him that did this through Ignorance; but he says, he ought to be forwarn'd of committing the like again. The third is concerning such as are guilty of the Sin of Bestiality. He condemns them to suffer the Punishments specified in the ancient Canons. The fourth is, Whether it be lawful to eat the Calves brought forth by Cows polluted with the Abominations of Men? He Answers, that that is not forbid to his knowledge. The fifth is concerning the Penance of those that have voluntarily, involuntarily, or otherwise killed their Parents and other Relations. He refers these to what has been said about Homicides. In the Conclusion he tells this Suffragan, that he may moderate Canonical Punishments with Prudence and Discretion.

There is at the end of the eighth Volume of Councils, in the last Edition, another Letter of Rabanus's to the same Reginbold or Reginbald, about other Questions of like nature with the former. The first is concerning those that carry away and sell Christians to Pagans. He Answers, that they ought to be subjected to the Penance of Homicides. The second is about Infants, who are stifled by lying with their Fathers and Mothers. He says, that although these Children came by their Death, contrary to the knowledge of them that were the cause of it; nevertheless they ought not to be exempt from doing some Penance; and if they knew it, they ought to have been punish'd as Homicides. The third is about the degrees of Consanguinity, within which it is forbid to Marry. He sends him upon this Question, the letter which he writ to Humbert. The fourth is concerning the Sins of Fornication or Adultery amongst Relations; Rabanus hereupon quotes divers Canons. The fifth is, whether it be lawful to pray for a dead Slave, who had run away from his Master. Rabanus says, that we ought not to refuse to pray for him, if he had committed no other Crime; but withal, that we ought to admonish other Slaves not to commit the like. The sixth is concerning a Man, who pleading to be a Priest, altho' he was none, had administred the Sacrament of Baptism. Rabanus says, it ought not to be reiterated, if it was conferred in the Name of the Holy Trinity. The last is about those that eat Flesh in Lent, and who swear by Relicks. Rabanus answers, that they do very ill, and that they ought to be made to do Penance for their Crime.

Walafridus Strabo, (so called, as some think, because he was Squint-Ey'd) a Monk of Fulda, Scholar of Rabanus; afterwards Dean of St. Gallus, and Abbot of Richenou; followed and imitated his Master, not only in Composing a Gloss upon the whole Bible, collected principally out of his Commentaries: But also in making a Treatise about the Beginning and Progress of Divine Worship, dedicated to Reginbert, in which he explains particularly what relates to the Ceremonies of the Church. This Work has been printed in the Collections of Writers concerning Divine Offices, [by Cochlæus at Mentz, 1549. and Hittorpius at Paris, 1610.] and also in the Bibliotheca Patrum, [Tom. XV.] The principal Points which he handles in this Book are these:

He says about the Original of Altars and Temples, that Noah, Abraham and Isaac, erected them in Honour of God. That Moses was the first that Built a Tabernacle for the People to Worship God in. That Solomon afterwards Built a Temple, which was preserved a great while by the Jews. That Pagans, and Authors of false Religions, have imitated in this the Worship of the True God; in honouring Devils and false Gods with the like Ceremonies. That when Christians, who are the true Worshippers of God in Spirit and Truth, began to set up Places for their Worship, they always sought out pure Places, distant from the Noise and Hubbub of the World; where they might quietly offer God their Prayers, Celebrate the Holy Mysteries, and Comfort one another. That they have sometimes made Use of their Houses for that Purpose, but the Number of them encreasing, they were forced to build Churches. That oftentimes to avoid Persecution, they have met together in Caves, Caverns, Church-Yards, and other private Places; but at length, Religion being fully Established, they Built new Churches, and turn'd the Temples of their false Gods, into those of the True. That they then did not much mind in what Scituation their Churches were Built, although the common custom has been since, to turn towards the East to Pray. That at first they had no Signal to call them to the Assemblies. That some were led thither by their Devotion, others had notice of the Day and Hour at their last Meeting, and others by reading it upon certain Tables, set up in their Assemblies for that purpose. That they afterwards made use of an Horn and Trumpet, and at last of Bells, the larger of which are called Campanæ, and the lesser Nolæ; so named from the Town of Nola, where they were first used. Having explained the Names of Church, Temple, Basilick, and their parts, together with the Barbarous name of the Ostieon, he goes on to Discourse of Images, the Abstracts of which, I shall for some Reasons forbear to set down here.

He proves afterwards, that Altars ought to be consecrated, and so passes from the material Parts of Churches, to what is to be done in them. He says, that Praises ought there to be Sung to God, the Gospel Preach'd, and Baptism Administred. That a great deal of Care ought to be taken, to keep them from Profane Uses. That Prayers there ought to be short and pure, and accompany'd with Tears; and that they ought to proceed from Hearts worthy to be the Habitation of God, who loves the Offerings of Virtues better then any Corporeal Gifts. That nevertheless God accepted the Oblations of the Patriarchs, and the Sacrifices of the Jews, till such time as Christ, which they represented, was come. That he by his coming, has caused all Sacrifices to cease, and has established new Mysteries, having given the Sacrament of his Body and Blood to his Disciples; and commanded them at the same time to Celebrate it in Commemoration of his Passion. That he has chosen for this Mystery, the Species of Bread and Wine, to signify the Union betwixt the Head and its Members; and that Water is mixt with the Wine, to shew, that the

Questions about the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church.

People ought not to be separated from Jesus Christ. That these Mysteries are called Sacraments, because of the Secret Virtue, by which they work our Sanctification. That it is for this Reason, that such as cease to be Members of Jesus Christ, by committing Capital Crimes, are excluded from these Sacraments, for fear that if they should approach them, they should be made worse, or be Corporally punish'd: and to the end, that the terror of this Separation might engage them to Repentance. He takes notice, that heretofore other things than Bread and Wine were offered upon the Altar; and that in some Places at Easter, they sacrific'd a Lamb, which was laid upon the Altar, or the side of it, and which they afterwards eat; but he altogether disapproves of this Practice. He afterwards shews there was great reason, that the Eucharist should be received in Lent.

As to what relates to frequent Communion, he observes, that some have thought it enough to Communicate once a Year, and that others communicated every Sunday, and many upon all Holy-days; that afterwards they added some solemn Days for Fasting. He approves of their Practice, that communicate and say Mass every Day, provided they be free from great Sins. He adds also, that there were some Priests that would not celebrate Mass above once a Day, and that there were others, who believed themselves obliged to say it three or four times; for according to the Church of Rome, there are sometimes two or three Masses appointed for one Day, as for Christmas-day and some Feasts of Saints. He gives every Priest the liberty of using them as they think fit, provided they don't condemn each others Practice. As to the Prayers of the Mass, he says, that no body knows by whom they were established, as they now are; and that the Apostles celebrated it, after a plainer and most unaffected manner: Quod nunc Agimus multiplici Orationum, Lectionum, Cantilenarum, & Consecrationum Officio, totum hoc Apostoli, & post ipsos proximi (ut creditur) Orationibus & Commemoratione Passionis Dominicæ, sicut ipse præcepit, Agebant simplicitèr. That the Ancients say, that they did, as we do now on Holy [or Good] Friday; and that after they had repeated the Lord's Prayer, and made Commemoration of Christ's Passion, they received the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ. That afterwards the Offices of the Church were enlarged, as well as the Ceremonies. That the Romans added to what they received from St. Peter, what else they thought fit. That their usage was admired by so many People, because they were a famous Nation, and were taught by St. Peter himself, the Head of the Apostles; and because there never was a Church in the World so free from Heresies. That St. Ambrose compos'd a Form of Prayer for his Church, and for the Churches of Liguria. He fixes upon the Roman Order, and explains the parts of it, taking notice of the Popes, to whom some attribute the Institution of them. He wishes, that they would Communicate at every Mass; and observes, that the time of communion is before the Prayer, which is said at the end of the Mass, in which they commonly Pray for those that have communicated. And although he acknowledges, that Priests may offer and communicate alone; nevertheless he says, Illam esse legitimam Missam cui interfunt Sacerdos, Respondens, Offerens & Communicans. As to the hour of the Mass, he observes it is different, according as the Solemnities of the day will permit; that sometimes it is before Noon, sometimes towards three a Clock in the After-noon, sometimes in the Evening, and sometimes at Night, but never before nine a Clock in the Morning. He speaks afterwards of Holy Vessels and Priests Habits. He makes several Remarks upon the Hours of Divine Service, of which these are some of the most considerable. That the Irish kneeled down often; that the Distribution of the Psalms into many Parts of the Service, was not begun before the time of Theodosius. That about the same time they began to Sing Hymns in the Church of Milan, and to celebrate Vigils. That St. Ignatius goes for the Institutor of Anthems. That the name of Hymns may be given to all Psalms of Praise, altho' they be not in Verse. That there are a great many Churches, where they are never sung in Verse. That St. Ambrose was not the Author of them all. That the Gloria Patri is differently express. That the Spaniards Sing it thus; Gloria & Honor Patri, & Filio, & Spiritui sancto in sæcula sæculorum, Amen. And the Grecians, Gloria Patri, & Filio, & Spiritui sancto, & nunc & semper, & in sæcula sæculorum, Amen. That the Latins add, Sicut erat in Principio. That 'tis thought to be the Council of Nice that instituted this Hymn, that many put it at the end of those Hymns which they divide into a great many Parts, as those which follow the Service of St. Benedict. That the Romans use it not so often in their Psalms, as they do in their Responses: That all the Offices begin with, Deus in Adjutorium, except that for the Dead, and that for the Holy Week, [or Week before Easter.] That the Romans still Sing the Psalms, according to the Edition of the Septuagint, but the French and some of the Germans, according to the Correction of St. Jerome; that Stephen the III. coming into France, introduced the Roman way of Singing there.

Questions about the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church.

Strabo, after having finish'd what related to the Divine Service and its several Parts, treats of the Administration of Baptism. He says, That the Ceremonies of Baptism have been encreased by little and little, that the Unction of Chrism was added to it, which no body doubts but 'twas taken from the Old Law. That from the very first, Confirmation was administred by Imposition of Hands, which was then always conferr'd by the Bishops, and so is still. That the solemn times of administring Baptism, are Easter and Whitsuntide, that some have added Christmas-day and the Epiphany. That in case of necessity Persons may be baptized at any time. That they may be baptized by Dipping Sprinkling, or Plunging the Infant in the Water once or thrice. That at the beginning of the Church, Baptizing of Adult Persons was more frequent; because that those which were converted, were capable of being instructed in the Principles of Religion, and in answering for themselves. That as for Infants, they had God-fathers and God-mothers to answer in their Names, who are obliged to put them in mind, when they come to have the use of their Reason, of the Promise, that they have made for them.

He passes afterwards to Tythes, and shews that they ought to be given to the Clergy, who must divide them into four Parts, whereof one is for the Bishop, another for the Clerk, a third for the Poor, and the last reserved for the Buildings of the Church. He does not forget to speak of the Litanies or Processions, used in the Days of Rogations, establish'd by Mamertus; but he observes, that some keep them between Easter and Whitsuntide, according to the Council of Orleans; but the Spaniards defer them till after Whitsuntide, and others to December. He adds, That the Name of the Litany does not only signifie, that Prayer by which the Saints are invoked, but also every sort of Prayer, by which we ask any favour of God. He speaks afterwards of the Sprinkling of the Holy Water, of the Consecrating of Wax-Candles, and ends with an enumeration of the several Orders of Clergy, which he compares to Civil Employments. These are the several Orders of the Clergy. The Supreme Bishop who enjoys the See of Rome, and holds the place of St. Peter, being rais'd to the Dignity of the Head of the Church. The Patriarchs of other Churches, who are equal in Dignity to the See of Rome, which are of Antioch in Asia, and Alexandria in Africa; besides these three Patriarchs, there are many others which are Inferior to them [as the Patriarchs of Constantinople and Ephesus.] The Archbishops are above the Metropolitans, to whom succeed in order the Metropolitans, Bishops, Abbots, Great Chaplains, Little Chaplains, Suffragans, Priests that are possessed of Churches where they administer Baptism, and Priests who have the Government of private Chappels, Arch-Priests that have the charge over Canons, Arch-Deacons who have care of the Bishop's Family. Then Deacons, Sub-Deacons, Exorcists, Porters, Acolythus's, Readers, and Singing-men. This is an exact Abridgment of this Work of Walafridus Strabo, which treats of Matters very rationally. He seems to have read a great deal. He often quotes the false Decretals of the Popes, and sometimes cites Apocryphal Histories. There is another small Treatise of this Author's, upon the Destruction of Jerusalem, and a great deal of Poetry, publish'd by Canisius [Antiq. Lec. Tom. 6.] The Lives and Miracles of St. Gallus and Othmarus, publish'd by Surius [Oct. 16. & Nov. 16.] The Life of Blainaus Abbot of Isi, and the Visions of St. Wittinus in Sæc. Benedict. IV. of Father Mabillon. Walafridus dyed in the Year 849.

Such Orders and Constitutions relating to a Monastick Life, as were made by the Authors of this Age.

Orders relating to a Monastick Life.

Benedict Abbot of Aniana.

Benedict, Native of Languedoc, Son of Aigulphus, Earl of Maguelone, having past some time at the Court of Charles the Great, retired into the Abbey of St. Sequanus, in the Diocess of Langres. The Abbot of this Monastery being dead, they would have chosen him in his Room, but he refused it, and returned to Languedoc, where he erected near the River Aniana a Monastery, which afterwards became very considerable. The Reputation of this Holy Abbot was so great, that he was chosen to govern divers Monasteries, and to effect a Refor-

Reformation in all the Abbies of France. Being invited to the Court of Lewis the Godly, he Built the Monastery of Indus, near Aix-la Chapelle; he was present at the Council held in 817. in that City, and framed Statutes for the Monks. He dyed in his Monastery of Indus in the Year 821. He has made a Collection of all the Rules and Orders of Monks, both of the East and West; and another Work, in which he shews the Conformity of other Orders with that of St. Benedict. The first is entituled Codex Regularum, i. e. a Book of Rules; and the second, Concordia Regularum, or an Harmony of Rules. The first has been publish'd at Rome by Holstenius [1661.] and since printed at Paris in Quarto, in the Year 1663. by Billaine. And the second publish'd by Father Menardus, and printed at Paris in 1648. At the end of the first, there is a Collection of Works of Fathers, proper for Monks. It is composed out of the Pious Treatises of St. Athanasius, St. Basil, Evagrius and Faustus; also out of other writings about a Monastick Life. There is also another Collection of Passages of the Fathers, which also bears the name of Benedict of Aniana, composed of Extracts, out of the Works of St. Jerome, St. Austine, St. Ephraim, St. Cesarius, Cassian, St. Fulgentius, &c. There are also some other small Treatises of this Abbot, as a Penitential printed in the Addition of Capitularies [by M. Baluzius.] A Confession of Faith, which is to be seen no where but in Manuscripts, and a few Letters.

Ardo Smaragdus.

Ardo Smaragdus, a Scholar of St. Benedict of Aniana, and a Monk of his Monastery, has written the life of his Master, publish'd by Father Menard, and inserted in the first Tome of F. Mabillon's Sæc. Benedict. IV.

Smaragdus.

We ought not to confound another Smaragdus with the foregoing. This was Abbot of St. Michael, in Lorraine; he taught humane Learning to his Society, as it appears by his Commentaries upon Donatus, and other Profane Authors. He wrote a Book concerning the Duty of a Prince, under the Title of Via Regia, i. e. The King's way, which he dedicated to Lewis the Godly, who was made King of Aquitain, by his Father Charles the Great. He has also written Sermons upon the Epistles and Gospels, throughout the whole Year, collected for the most part out of the Fathers: Likewise a little Treatise for Instruction of Monks, entituled Diadema Monachorum, or Monk's Crown, and a Commentary upon the Rule of St. Benedict, which he explains and confirms in many Places by other Rules. Charles the Great made use of him to write to Pope Leo, about the procession of the Holy Ghost. And also writ the Acts of the Conference, held at Rome in the Year 809. and upon the same Subject. The Book intituled, The way of Kings, was publish'd in the fifth Tome of Dacherius's Spicilegium. His Sermons were printed at Frankfort, in the Year 1536. The Monk's Crown at Antwerp, in 1540. And the Commentary upon the Rule of St. Benedict, is published amongst the Works of Rabanus, printed at Colen, in the Year 1625. (where it was printed before in 1575.)

Hildemarus.

Hildemarus a French Monk, called into Italy about the Year 830. by Rampertus Bishop of Bresse, who committed to him and Leutgrius, the care of Rebuilding the Church of St. Faustinus and St. Jovitus. He has written a Commentary upon the Rule of St. Benedict. This Work has never yet appeared in Print. Some have attributed it to Paul the Deacon, but it is none of his, and it ought to be restored, according to the Manuscript of Dijon, to Hildemarus. There is also in the thirty eighth Chapter, a Letter writ by Hildemarus to Ursus Bishop of Beneventum. This Author dyed in the Year 840.

Lupus Abbot of Ferrara.

We may also place amongst those Authors that have written concerning Monastical Discipline, Lupus, Abbot of Ferrara, whose Letters contain divers Laws and Instructions for a Monastical Life. He was Born about the beginning of the ninth Century. He was certainly of the Province of Sens, and of a very considerable Family. He was brought up to Learning, and was admitted betimes into the Abbey of Ferrara, where he was soon after Profest under Aldricus, who was then Abbot, and afterward Archbishop of Sens. He was sent into Germany to the Abbey of Fulda, there to Study the Holy Scriptures under the famous Rabanus, who at his desire, compos'd his Commentaries upon the Epistles of St. Paul. Lupus, who was then but Deacon, made great Progress in Ecclesiastical Knowledge, under so able a Master, and returned to France with great Reputation, in the Year 830. He was presented to Lewis the Godly, by the Empress Judith, and stayed some time at Court, in hopes of obtaining some Abbey. It was at this time that he receiv'd the Order of Priesthood: Afterwards he was chosen by Charles the Bald, to supply the place of Odo Abbot of Ferrara, whom this Prince resolv'd to deprive of his Monastery, because he had favoured the Party of Lotharius. Being come thither by the King's Order, he was received for Abbot in November 842. and drove out Odo from the Abbey in the Year 844. He assisted at the Council of Verneuil, and was ordered to compile the Canons. He assisted at divers other Assemblies of Bishops, and was sent to Pope Leo the IV. by Charles the Bald. He assisted at the Council of Soissons in the Year 853. and lived in great Reputation for Knowledge and Piety, till the 862.

Orders relating to a Monastick Life.

There has been a Collection made of 130 Letters of this Abbot's, upon different Subjects. There are divers upon the difficulties of Grammar, and other Civil Matters; but there are some which relate to Ecclesiastical Affairs, and which treat of some points of Doctrine, Discipline, and Morality.

The fourth is a very Christian Consolation to Eginhardus, upon the death of his Wife, who was Daughter to Charles the Great. This is an answer to the third Letter of Eginhardus, written to him; in which he declared, that he was not capable of Comfort under his Loss. He says, That it afflicted him most, that the hopes he had put in the Intercessions and Prayers of the Martyrs were all in vain. Lupus answers him in that point, that his Vows and Prayers, that have not been heard for a Temporal Good, will serve to procure him Eternal Life; and that he does not in the least doubt, but that this Death will be Advantagious both to him and his Wife; because it was more convenient that he should die last, it being likely that he had the greatest Strength to bear this Affliction, and to resist the troubles that are suffered in the World: That oftentimes God does not grant us what we ask, but what is most fitting and convenient for us. That God perhaps had taken away his Wife, to reconcile the Division that was in his Heart, between Her and the Lord, and to Unite all his Love in this only Object. He tells him at length, that tho' it be seemingly out of his Power to end his Grief, yet he ought to have recourse to the Goodness and Mercy of God, and resign himself entirely to this Sovereign Physician, who easily heals those Wounds that men think most Incurable. Then he Exhorts him, to ask of God Eternal Happiness for his Wife; and for himself Perseverance in good Works, growth in a Spiritual Life, and Christian Consolation. About the end he speaks of a Book of Eginhard's, upon the Adoration of the Cross, and thanks him for dedicating it to him. We have lost this Work.

In the eleventh Letter he Petitions Lotharius, in the Name of the Monks of Ferrara, to let them enjoy the Revenue of the Monastery of St. Josse, upon the Sea, which Charles the Great had given to Alcuin, and to the Monks of Ferrara, to maintain Pilgrims, and relieve their Necessities. Rhodingus obtain'd it of Lotharius by Surprize: He begs of him to restore it; and conjures him to it by the respect he owes to the Holy Virgin, St. Peter and St. Paul, through whose Intercession they daily pray God for his Health and Salvation.

In the twelfth, writ to Pardulus Bishop of Laon; he desires this Bishop to use his Interest with the King, in favour of the Monks, of the Monastery of St. Columbus of Sens, who were going to Court, to recover the Privilege of Exemption, which had been granted them by the Archbishop of Sens, and by the Kings. M. Baluzius observes upon this Letter, that the Kings were then able to Exempt Abbies from ordinary Jurisdiction. That that of St. Columbus had been put under the Jurisdiction of Jeremy Archbishop of Sens, by Lewis the Godly, and afterwards taken from him. That after this it lost its Liberty again, under Charles the Bald, but soon recovered it again; as it appear'd, by a Charter from this Charles, dated the 13*th.* of November, 847. which serves to fix the date of this Letter. M. Baluzius adds also many other Examples to shew, that the Exemptions of the Monasteries of France, were granted and settled by the Authority of Kings, who took them into their Care, Management and Protection, sub tuitione.

It appears by Lupus's 18*th.* Letter, that he was charged with care of the Abbey of St. Amandus, without ever seeking it: That he was glad when he was rid of it; and that he was sent to a General Assembly called by the King, near Paris.

In the 19*th.* Lupus being informed of the Poverty of a Monastery, of the Diocese of Auxerre, by a Monk of the same Monastery, who was come into his; gave Heribald Bishop of Auxerre notice of it, and desired him to remedy it.

The 20*th.* is about some difficulties of Grammar; he takes notice towards the end of a very remarkable thing, which was, that Probus a Priest of Mayence had begun a Book, in which he placed Cicero, Virgil and others, that he believ'd to have lived well, amongst the number of the Elect; for fear it should be said, that Jesus Christ had unprofitably shed his Blood, and did nothing when he was in Hell. These are his Words, An certè inchoatam Satyram, quod magis existimo, Scribens Ciceronem & Virgilium, Cæteroſq; opinione ejus probatissimos viros, in Electorum Collegium admittat, ne frustra Dominus sanguinem fuderit, & in Inferno otium triverit. It is to be thought, that this Probus did not speak this seriously, as you will be convinced, if you please to consult M. Baluzius's Notes upon it.

The 21*st.* Epistle of this Lupus's is an Excuse to Jonas Bishop of Orleans, that he had accused Agus his Kinsman of having having wrong'd the Eſtate that his Monaſtery had in his Dioceſs. He makes an Apology alſo for taking his Predeceſſor Odo's place. The 23*d*. 24*th*. 25*th*. 26*th*. 27*th*. and 28*th*. are ſome Letters of this Odo about Affairs relating to his Monaſtery.

The 29*th*. Letter, dedicated to Wenilo Archbiſhop of Sens, is very remarkable. Two Prieſts of this Dioceſs, one call'd Adegarius, and the other Baudrius, having a deſign to turn Monks, had deſired of the Archbiſhop that they might leave their Churches or Cures, titulos, to enter into the Order of St. Benedict. Wenilo anſwer'd them, That he would not give them this permiſſion, unleſs Lupus, into whoſe Monaſtery they were to be admitted, would ſatisfie him it might be done regularly and lawfully. Lupus writ him word, that he had never heard it queſtion'd; and that without doubt it might be done. That Jeſus Chriſt having taught that the perfection of a Chriſtian Life conſiſts in quitting all, and leaving the World, Clergymen ſure ought not to be hindred embracing that perfection which Jeſus Chriſt propoſed even to Laymen. Hereupon he makes a ſtrong Objection, and anſwers it. You will object perhaps, ſays he, that as none are allow'd to break the carnal Union of Marriage, unleſs it be for Fornication; ſo none are permitted to quit the Paſtoral Charge, which they have once undertaken, as long as they are able to labour for the edification and ſalvation of their Flock. This is true, anſwers he, unleſs he that has eſtabliſh'd the Marriage does break it himſelf, or he that has charg'd us with the Government of others, does ſecretly command us to quit it. For he that has forbidden any man to put aſunder thoſe whom he has joyn'd together, the ſame great God hath made this ſeparation himſelf when he has pleas'd, becauſe he is God. For we have many Examples of vertuous Perſons of both Sexes, that have quitted all carnal Commerce to ſerve the Lord in holy places. He adds, That there has ſcarce been any Monaſtery whereinto ſome Prieſts have not retired. He quotes amongſt the reſt one of his Predeceſſors, an Abbot of Ferrara, call'd Frigulphus, who had quitted the Habit of Canon, to take upon him the Profeſſion of a Monk. He ſays that Aldricus, the Predeceſſor of Wenilo had reſolv'd before his death to leave his Archbiſhoprick and retire into a Monaſtery. That it is not to be thought that theſe great men were ignorant of the Canons and Rules of the Church. That the Apoſtles and Clergy of the Primitive Church had in ſome meaſure practis'd a Monaſtical Life, by putting their Goods in Common. That there may be bad Monks among them, but that he ought to have Epiſcopal Compaſſion for them. And, in fine, that there is no ſurer way to Salvation, than by entring into that religious Order preſcrib'd by St. Benedict. Whoſe Conſtitution, ſo much commended and approved by St. Gregory the Great, ſhews that we may, and we ought to receive Prieſts into our Monaſteries, ſince he allows them to enter, and the Abbot to receive them, altho' with greater difficulty and precaution than others. Then he entreats Wenilo to allow theſe two Prieſts that Liberty they had deſired. This Letter teaches us, firſt, That Prieſts, who had Eccleſiaſtical Charges, ought not to quit them to become Monks, without leave of their Biſhop. And M. Baluſius confirms this in his Annotations by an Example of a like permiſſion requeſted and granted by Arnoldus Biſhop of Liſieux. Secondly, That Biſhops might give this permiſſion, or refuſe it. Thirdly, That Curates were ſo cloſely link'd to their Churches, that it was not in their power to leave them, nor in the Biſhops to take them away from them at their pleaſure; which M. Baluſius confirms in his Notes by divers Canons and very curious Remarks.

The 30*th*. directed to Goteſcalcus, contains an Explanation of the Paſſage of St. Auſtine concerning Happineſs. He ſhews that this Saint believed, that God would make himſelf clearly known to the Bleſſed, and that this knowledge would engage them inviolably to him. That this knowledge of the divine Subſtance belong'd only to the Soul, but that the Eyes of the Body ſhould perceive his preſence by the admirable Effects it ſhould work upon the Creatures. Thus he expounds what St. Auſtine ſays, that God ſhall be ſeen by the Eyes of the Body. He adviſes Goteſcalchus not to perplex his mind with ſuch Queſtions, for fear they make him uncapable of underſtanding and teaching Matters of better uſe.

The 35*th*. Letter contains an handſome Reflection on the ſtudy of good Literature. He obſerves that it ought to be joyn'd with the ſtudy of Wiſdom and Virtue. That if we labour to correct the Defects of the Tongue, we ought not to be leſs diligent to reform the Vices of our Manners. That if one has a great deal of care to poliſh his Diſcourſe, he ought to apply himſelf more vigorouſly to acquire Virtue and Goodneſs. He exhorts him to whom he writes, to live like a Chriſtian in whatever Condition he engages in, and to make often and ſerious Reflections on his Duty towards God.

In the 42*d*. and 43*d*. Letters written to Hincmarus, he employs his Intereſt with Charles the Bald, to get the Revenue of St. Joſſe reſtored to him, making uſe of the Poverty of his Monaſtery to perſuade him to it. He alſo recommends it to King Charles in the 45*th*. Letter, and humbly ſhews him, that for fifteen Years, or thereabouts, ſeventy two Monks of his Monaſtery, that prayed continually for his Health and Proſperity, had endured great want of Habits, Peaſe and Fiſh, (M. Baluſius concludes from hence that they eat no Fleſh) and that they could not relieve the Poor and Pilgrims. He entreats him to conſider ſeriouſly upon their Wants, and to beſtow ſome Charity upon them. He mentions in the 42*d*. Letter, a Vow that Charles had made by Hincmarus's ſolicitations, in the Church of St. Dennis. He alſo there tells us that he compiled the Canons of the Council of Verneuil.

Orders relating to a Monaſtick Life.

In the 51*ſt*. Letter he writs to his Monks that he had ſome hopes to recover the Revenue of St. Joſſe. Where you may meet with this fine thought, that the Abbot ought to have the Charge and Government of the Revenues of the Monaſtery, but the Enjoyment of them only in common with the other Monks.

In the 53*d*. Epiſtle he preſſes King Charles vigorouſly to reſtore him this Revenue; and the better to engage him to it, he informs him, that his ancient Monks have obſerved, and heard of their Predeceſſours, that all that have ever done any conſiderable damage or wrong to their Monaſtery, have been puniſh'd either by the loſs of their Eſtates, their Health, or their Lives. He exhorts him to perform the Vows he has made; and moreover, threatens him with the Judgment of God if he doth not.

In the 55*th*. Letter to Marcuadus Abbot of Provins, he entreats this Abbot to come to Court to aſſiſt him in obtaining the Reſtitution of the Revenue of St. Joſſe. He informs him, that he came thither the laſt of November, and has continued there with a great deal of expence and trouble. That the King endeavours to elude his Demands, and always delays him, becauſe that Odulphus, (who then was poſſeſt of St. Joſſe) was abſent and ſick, as he was inform'd, but not very grievouſly (ſays he) ſo that this ſickneſs may ſerve to humble and correct him: Nor ſo dangerouſly as to be the cauſe of his death, for which he ſhould be ſorry, becauſe 'tis certain he would be damn'd if he ſhould die, in the unjuſt poſſeſſion of the Revenue of the Church. At length Lupus, after many delays and put-offs obtain'd the Reſtitution of the Revenue of St. Joſſe, as it appears by the 61*ſt*. and 62*d*. Letters. The 64*th*. Letter is an Inſtruction to King Charles concerning his duty.

The 79*th*. contains an Extract of a Letter written to Hincmarus, by which he recommends his Kinſman Hilmeradus to him, who was named by the King to be Biſhop of Amiens; affirming, that tho' he had not much Learning, yet he might be made ſerviceable to the Church by following his directions. And that if he was not well fitted for Teaching the Word of God, yet he might do Works that might ſave him, and thoſe that ſhould imitate him. M. Baluſius in his Notes declares himſelf of a different Opinion with his Author, and ſays, that in this he has hearkned more to the Sentiments of Nature, than the Principles of Reaſon.

The 81*ſt*. Letter is written in the name of Wenilo Archbiſhop of Sens and Count Girard, who were ſent to Amolo Archbiſhop of Lyons, by the King's Orders, to command him to Ordain Bernus Biſhop of Autun. They repreſent to him, that 'twas not a new thing for the King to make Courtiers Biſhops of the principal Churches. That Pepin had in the like Caſe the Conſent of Pope Zachary in a Synod, where Boniface Biſhop of Mayence aſſiſted. They alſo deſired the ſame thing of him for Godeſeldus, named by the King Biſhop of Chalons.

The 82*d*. Letter is written to Wenilo in favour of a Prieſt, accuſed and ſuſpended from the exerciſe of his Function. Lupus deſires Wenilo to give him liberty to exerciſe his Duty, till a Synod were call'd, in which he hoped to clear himſelf of the Charge brought againſt him.

The 84*th*. is a Synodical Epiſtle of a Council held in the Year 849, conſiſting of the Metropolitans of Tours, Rheims, Rouen, and about twenty of their Suffragans, whoſe names are ſet down at the beginning of this Letter, directed to Nomenoius Duke of Breton, about the Diſorders he had committed. They reprove and blame him for having laid waſte the Lands belonging to the Chriſtians, for having deſtroy'd, pillag'd, and burnt ſeveral Churches, together with the Reliques of Saints, for ſeizing upon the Revenues of the Church, which are the Vows of the Faithful, the Satisfaction of Sins, and the Patrimony of the Poor, for having taken away rich mens Eſtates, and kill'd and enſlaved a great Number of Chriſtians, for driving the Biſhops from their Churches, and robbing them of their Goods, &c. But principally for having ſlighted the many Letters of Leo the 4*th*. Succeſſor to St. Peter, to whom God hath given Supreme Power over all the Church. Of having entertained Lambert Count of Nantes, a Rebel againſt the King. They exhort him to do Penance, and to ſatisfie that which the Pope writ to him about. And finally, they declared those excommunicate that shall communicate with Lambert.

The 93*d*. is an Instruction to King Charles, to whom he proposes Trajan and Theodosius, as two Patterns worthy of his Imitation.

In the 94*th*. he shows, That Afflictions and Sufferings are advantageous to good Men.

The 98*th*. is a Letter written in the Name of the Cathedral Church of Paris, of the Abbies of St. German, St. Denis, St. Geneva, St. Maurus des Fossez, and other Monasteries, to Wenilo, Archbishop of Sens, and to the other Bishops of that Province, acquainting them that after the Death of their Bishop Ercanradus, they had chosen Æneas, who had been nam'd to them by King Charles, whom they desired them to ordain assoon as they could. This Letter is followed by an Answer written in the Name of the Bishop of Sens, and his Suffragans, testifying their Approbation of their Election of Æneas.

The 100*th*. Letter is an Admonition to the People, wherein they are exhorted to do Penance, to avoid Rebellions and Factions, to imbrace a Peace, to forbear Robberies and Plunder, to think of nothing but Publick Good, and to live in Union with one another.

The 101*st*. is a Letter of Recommendation, written in the Name of Wenilo, to the Bishops of France and Italy, in Favour of two Monks of Ferrara, who went to Rome, desiring them to afford them an Hospitable Reception by the Way. This is followed by a Letter written in the Name of Lupus upon the same Account.

By the 103*d*. Letter he recommends these two Monks to Pope Benedict, to whom he sent them. He entreats him to instruct them in the Customs of the Church of Rome, and to send him the Commentaries of St. Jerom upon Jeremiah, from the fifth Book to the End, being not able to find them any where in France. He adds to this, the Book of Cicero de Oratore, Quintilian's Institutions, and Donatus's Commentaries upon Terence, &c.

In the 105*th*. he promises to receive and deal mercifully with a Monk that had quitted his Habit and Order, provided he would amend, and behave himself better for the Future.

In the 108*th*. he thanks Lotharius for sending him this converted Monk. And excuses himself for not letting him be his Secretary, because there was no Likelyhood that a Monk, who had not all imaginable Diligence, would ever be able to do his Duty in the midst of the Affairs and hurries of the World. Quoniam propositum nostrum vix mediocriter intra Claustra Monasterii custoditur, vedum inter tumultus Mundanos à quolibet præsertim non satis cauto valeat adimpleri. The following Letter is also about the Return of this Monk. It is to be noted that Lupus says in the first Letter upon this Subject, that he could not receive him without the Consent of his Brethren.

In the 112*th*. Letter Lupus condemns those that in commending Virginity blame Marriage.

In the 124*th*. he clears himself to Wenilo of the Accusation that Erard had preferred against him in the Synod of Savoniers.

The 128*th*. and 129*th*. Letters are those mention'd before, which Lupus sent to answer the Questions concerning Predestination and Grace.

The last is a Fragment of an Epistle written in the Name of Wenilo Archbishop of Sens, to Pope Nicholas I. concerning Herimannus Bishop of Nevers, who was Non compos mentis. He there alledges that Pope Miltiades was of Opinion, that a Bishop could not be deposed without the Consent of the Pope. He desires Nicholas to send him this Decree of Miltiades, such as it is at Rome; and he assures him he will wait his Judgment, how to make use of it against this Bishop, Whether he shall keep to the Moderation observed by St. Gregory towards the Bishop of Rimini, or whether he should immediately depose him according to the Decree of Gelasius.

Pope Nicholas did not answer this Question about the Decree of Miltiades; but having enlarg'd upon the Commendation of the Archbishop of Sens's Conduct, he acquaints him concerning Heriman, that he is not enough instructed in his Business; that tho' Heriman be Non compos, he ought not to be allow'd to come to the Synod; that if he has no other Defect than a Weakness of Mind, he ought to be pitied rather than punish'd. And that as to the Lewdness and Extravagancies he us'd to be guilty of, he ought not to condemn him for them, as well because he is absent, as because he is not inform'd what those Extravagancies are; and then, whether he committed them in his right Wits, or when he was not himself. This Letter in the MS. from whence Father Sirmondus took it, bears the Name of Servatus Lupus; which shows that 'tis the Abbot of Ferrara's, who is so called, and by Consequence that the Treatise about the three Questions of Gotescbalcus, belongs also to him; besides, that this Book and these Letters are of the same Style, and that the same Doctrine is expounded in the 128*th*. and 129*th*. Letters, which are as it were an Abridgment of the other Work. Insomuch that there is no Reason to believe that Lupus Servatus was any other but the Abbot of Ferrara. 'Tis likewise believ'd that he took this Sirname after he had been cured of a very dangerous disease, thro' Intercession of St. Faron, as it is related in his Life, written by Hildegarius Bishop of Meaux, a Cotemporary Author.

Orders relating to a Monastick Life.

I have already given you an Extract of Lupus's Writings upon Predestination and Grace. He has also written the Lives of St. Maximinus Bishop of Treves, of St. Wigbert an Abbot, with two Homilies and two Hymns upon the same Saint.

Two great Men of our Age have given very different Judgments of Lupus Abbot of Ferrara, in Relation to a Monastical Life. One blames the inordinate Love he had for curious Learning, and his great Inclination for prophane Sciences, which, he says, is a Study unworthy of a Monk; and it would have much better become him to have lamented his own and the World's Sins in his Cloyster, and to have supported his Brothers, than to hunt after, and study with so much Diligence the Works of profane Writers. This is the Judgment given of him by the Abbot de la Frappe. Father Mabillon on the contrary thinks him an Ornament of the Monastical Order; a Man that was not less to be esteemed for his Piety, than his solid Doctrine. So well known and valued in his Time, that there was no Council held without him; and whom they always imployed in the most important Affairs, as the best Instrument and Secretary of the Bishops, and chiefest Churches of France. A Man extreamly well versed in the Fathers; and who in short was to be admired both for his Religion and Holiness, and the great Veneration he brought to the Monks of his Monastery; as Hildegarius observes; Pastor modò pro Religione Sanctitatis in Monasterio famosissimo Ferrariensi, ubi Cœtus Monachorum in Christo cum illo toto Orbe est venerandus.

It does not belong to me to judge of the Monastical Conduct of Lupus Abbot of Ferrara, neither am I fit to decide the Judgments of two Persons so learned as the Abbot de la Frappe and Father Mabillon, for both of which I have a very singular Respect. But in keeping to my Subject, that is, considering Lupus as an Ecclesiastical Writer, I may say, That he was not only very knowing in general Learning and prophane Sciences, but in the Doctrine and Discipline of the Church, and the Works of the Latin Fathers. And that he writ, not only with Elegancy, Pleasantness and Politeness, but also with a great deal of Solidity and Exactness.

His Letters were publish'd the first Time by Papirius Massonus out of a Manuscript of the Abby of Ferrara, and printed in the Year 1597. This Edition is very erroneous. M. Du-chesnius has since obliged us with one more correct, [In his Collection of French Historians, Tom. 3.] The Treatise of the three Questions, and the Letters about Predestination and Grace, have been printed at Paris in 1648. from an ancient Manuscript of St. Amandus, and since by M. Maugninus, together with a Collection of Fathers upon the same Subject. Father Sirmondus has publish'd the two Letters, and the Book of the three Questions [in 1650.] The same Author has put out a Fragment of the 130*th*. Letter, taken out of a Manuscript of the Abby of Fleury, which was communicated to him by Father Dacherius. The Life of St. Maximin, with that of St. Wigbert, has been publish'd by Buseus, who had caused it to be printed with the Letters of Hincmarus at Mayence, in the Year 1602. and the two Homilies upon this Saint in 1604. At last M. Baluzius publish'd a very fair Edition of all Lupus's Works, enrich'd with learned Notes, and many Pieces added at the End of the Volume in Octavo, printed for Muguet in 1664. [From whom it is put into the Biblioth. Patrum, Tom. 14. p. 1.]

CHAP. XV.

Commentaries upon the Holy Scriptures written in the Ninth Century.

The Nature of the Commentaries upon the Holy Scriptures, composed in the Ninth Century.

SUCH as in this Century have apply'd themselves to the Study of the Holy Scriptures, have rarely produced any Thing of their own, but only made Collections out of the Commentaries of the Fathers. After this Manner are those of Rabanus, Paschasius, and the ordinary Gloss of Walafridus Strabo composed; of all which we have spoken before. Florus a Deacon of the Church of Lyons, followed the same Method, and gathered together a great many Books, out of which he made divers Collections. And amongst others, a large Commentary upon the Epistles of St. Paul, taken from fourteen Latin Fathers, and which has never yet been printed. Another Commentary upon St. Paul, composed of Extracts out of St. Austine, commonly attributed to Bede, altho' it really belonged to Florus. It is printed amongst the Works of Bede. He has beside this composed a Treatise about the Celebration of the Mass, entitled, De Actione Missarum, which is a Comment upon the Canon of the Mass printed in the Biblioth. Patrum [Tom. 15. p. 62.] Also two Discourses upon Predestination; and another upon the same Subject against Johannes Scotus.

The Commentaries of Florus.

Florus's Writings.

You meet some Fragments of the first Discourse in Hincmarus. The second has been publish'd by Father Cellot and Monsieur Mauguin. This last has also oblig'd us with Florus's Book against Johannes Scotus, spoken of before, [Both at Paris 1650.] He has also made a Collection of Ecclesiastical Laws, of which there are two considerable Fragments quoted in another Collection of Manuscripts, whereof the first was publish'd by Father Ducherius in the 12*th*. Tome of his Spicilegium; and the other by M. Baluzius at the End of Agobardus's Works. The first consists of Laws and Canons against the Jews, and the Judgments of the Bishops. The second is concerning the Elections of Bishops, which he proves ought to be made by the Clergy and People. Lastly, Florus is Author of some Poetry, and there is a great deal of Likelyhood, that those which go under the Name of Drepanius Florus in the Biblioth. Patrum belong to him. For there is one Poem inscrib'd to Modoinus Bishop of Autun, and another to Walsinus, who both lived in the ninth Century. So that it must needs be acknowledg'd, that the true Author of these Poems was Florus the Deacon of Lyons, whom we now speak of. Father Mabillon has also publish'd in the first Tome of his Analects some other Poetry of this Author's, of the same Nature with the former. The first Poem is a Complaint about the Division of the Kingdom, after the Death of Lewis the Godly. The second is a Letter to Modoinus Bishop of Autun, in which he complains that this Bishop suffer'd the Church of Lyons to be abused. The third is in Honour of two Martyrs, call'd St. John and St. Paul. The fourth is in Honour of St. Stephen the Proto-Martyr. The fifth is concerning the Reliques of St. Cyprian, which are generally believed to be at Lyons. And the last is the Inscription of an Altar, under which there were some Reliques of certain Martyrs; and upon it was pourtrayed Christ, the Apostles, and St. John Baptist. There was also a third Piece dedicated to Modoinus, of which Father Sirmondus published the Beginning in his Notes upon Theodulphus, [at Paris 1646. which are also in Biblioth. Patrum, Tom. 14.]

These are very near all the Works of Florus which we have extant. He made a great many Collections, reason'd very properly, and writ tolerably well. He past for one of the best Writers in his Time.

Commentaries of Haymo of Halberstadt.

Haymo [Aimo] or Hemmo, (a) a Monk of Fulda, or of Hersfield, a Scholar of Alcuin, who was chosen Bishop of Halberstadt in Saxony, in the Year 841. is one of the Authors of this Century, that has writ the most Commentaries. In the Year 847. he assisted at the Condemnation of Gotescbalcus in the Council of Mayence, and died in the Year 853. He has written Comments upon almost all the Books of the Holy Scriptures, both of the Old and New Testament, collected according to the Custom of this Time out of the Commentaries of the Fathers, whose Expositions he does but copy and abridge. We have those upon the Psalms printed at Paris, in 1533. [at Friburg the same Year.] Those which he composed upon the major Prophets, and the twelve minor, printed at Colen, in 1573. Seven Books upon the Apocalypse at Paris, in 1540. and at Colen, in 1529. [and 1531.] One Book upon the Acts, and seven upon the Canonical Epistles, at Colen in 1573. [at Paris 1556. and under Remigius's Name at Mentz 1614.] There is at last a Commentary upon the Epistles of St. Paul, which some attribute to Remigius of Auxerre, which is certainly Haymo's. It was printed at first at Rome in 1598. under the Name of Remigius Archbishop of Rheims, by the Care of the Jesuit Villalpandus, known by his Commentary upon Ezekiel, and afterwards reprinted at Mayence, in 1614. Villalpandus attributed it to St. Remigius Archbishop of Rheims, who baptized Lewis; but all the Criticks easily discovered, that this Opinion was not maintainable: For how could St. Remigius, that dyed in the Beginning of the sixth Century, cite the Order of St. Benedict, Bede, the Life of Cæsarius Bishop of Arles, &c. His Style and Manner of Writing easily shows, he was of the ninth Century; but yet they don't agree to what Author it ought to be attributed. Some give it to Remigius d' Auxerre, others to Remigius of Lyons, but the greatest Part to Haymo of Halberstadt; which Name it goes under in many Manuscripts, and in two Paris Editions, 1556. and 1608. This last Opinion seems most reasonable; for it is certain, by the Testimony of Sigebert and Trithemius, that Haymo did write a Commentary upon St. Paul: Besides, this is very like his other Commentaries; there is the same Method, the same Manner of Writing, the same Expression, and in the greatest Part of the Manuscripts of it, it bears his Name. Lastly, it was attributed to him 100 Years after his Death, in the Times of Folbertus and Carnutensis. On the Contrary, there are but very few Manuscripts that attribute it to Remigius of Auxerre, and Sigebert that writes of this last, has not numbred it amongst his Works. It is therefore more reasonable to attribute it to Haymo, than Remigius.

The Nature of the Commentaries upon the Holy Scriptures, composed in the Ninth Century.

We have besides these Commentaries, two Tomes of Homilies upon the Evangelists, Printed at Colen in 1532. and 1540. and at Antwerp in 1559. An Abridgment of the Ecclesiastical History, printed with Sulpitius Severus, and with Notes of Galesinius at Colen, in 1531. and reprinted at the same Place in 1573.

Other Works of Haymo.

In fine, Ducherius hath published in the twelfth Tome of his Spicilegium, a small Work concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour, which is apparently a Fragment of a Homily of this Bishop's: He there teaches the real and substantial Conversion of the Bread and Wine, into the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ.

Angelomus a Monk of Luxeuil, has also written large Commentaries upon the four Books of Kings, taken out of the Works of the Fathers, and upon the Song of Songs; they are entitled Stromates, because they are woven up of many Passages of divers Fathers: The first is divided into four Books, which he wrote by command of Drogo or Drenx his Abbot; but he did not finish it till after the Abbot's Death, in 855. And the second is dedicated to the Emperor Lotharius, before he was deprived of the Empire, which happened in 855. These Commentaries are Allegorical and Mystical; they are printed in the Biblioth. Patrum [Tom. 15.] and have been printed separately at Colen, in 1530. and at Rome in 1665. Trithemius mentions another Treatise of this Author's, bearing the Title Of Divine Offices.

The Commentaries of Angelomus.

The Commentaries of Sedulius

Some Time before these Authors, of whom we have been speaking, and at the Beginning of this Century, one Sedulius a Scotsman, writ the like Commentary upon St. Paul's Epistles, which are nothing else but Collections out of the Commentaries of other Authors. It is thought that this Sedulius was also Author of the like Collections upon St. Matthew. [His Collection on St. Paul's Epistles is printed at Basil, 1528. 1534. and in Biblioth. Patrum. Tom. 6.]

The Commentaries of Druthmarus.

We must add to these Christianus Druthmarus, a Monk and Priest of Corbie, who lived about the End of the ninth Century. He has made a Commentary upon the Gospel of St. Matthew, addressed to the Monks of Stavelo and Malmedy. He tells us in his Preface, that he compos'd it for the Use of the young Monks; because that he observes, after he had expounded to them twice the Gospel of St. Matthew, they had forgot what he had taught them. He says, he expres't himself in Terms easie enough to be understood; that he endeavoured to clear all difficulties, that he kept to the Literal and Historical Sense, because that the Letter is the Ground of other Senses, and that without it they could not be well understood. He promises a Commentary upon the Gospel of St. John, for that of St. Mark, he refers to one of Bede. This Author performs his Design well enough; his Expositions are short, historical, easie, and without Allegories or Tropes. There are also two Expositions of the same Author, upon some Places of St. Luke and St. John. This Commentary has been printed at Haguenau, in the Year 1550. [1530.] in the Biblioth. Patrum.

(a) A Monk of Fulda, or Hersfield.] Some make him Abbot of Hersfield; but M. Bulteau believes that he was no more than a Monk of this Monastery, as well because he has no other Character given him in the Chronicle of Saxony, as that Hui who was Abbot of Hersfield in 831. did not die till 846. when he was succeeded by Bruvardus.

This

The Nature of the Commentaries upon the Holy Scriptures, composed in the Ninth Century.

This Author was called The Grammarian, becauſe he was very skilful in the Languages, and underſtood Greek and Latin admirably well, and always kept to the literal Senſe.

Laſtly, Remigius, a Monk of St. German's of Auxerre, was called to Rheims to fix his Studies there, by Fulkgrew who ſucceeded Hincmarus [in that See, and had lately erected a School at Rheims] in the Year 882. He was reputed to have been very learned in prophane Sciences, ſays Sigebert; but yet he imploy'd himſelf more profitably in expounding the Holy Scripture. We have one of his * Commentaries upon the Pſalms, collected out of thoſe of St. Ambroſe, St. Auguſtine, Caſſiodore, and an Expoſition of the twelve minor Prophets, printed at Antwerp, in 1545. and in the Bib. Patrum [Tom. 16.] Sigebert makes no Mention of theſe two Books: Some deprive him of the firſt, and beſtow it upon one Monegondus; but Trithemius attributes it to Remigius of Auxerre. This ſame Author makes Mention of a Commentary of Remigius's upon St. Matthew. We have obſerved, that the Commentary upon the Epiſtles of St. Paul, which ſome attribute to Remigius of Auxerre, does rather belong to Haymo of Halberſtadt. Both Sigebert and Trithemius place among his Works, a Commentary on the Song of Songs, which was never printed. But in the Biblioth. Patrum, we have the Expoſition of the Canon of the Maſs, of which the ſame Author ſpeaks: They alſo ſay he wrote a Book of Divine Offices, a Treatiſe of all the Feaſts of the Saints, an Anſwer to Gualo Biſhop of Autun, who had propoſed two Queſtions to him; one upon the Conteſt of St. Michael the Archangel, with the Devil about the Body of Moſes, ſpoken of in the Epiſtle of St. Jude; and the other upon theſe Words of God to Job, Lo, the Behemoth that I have made with you, &c. and ſome other Treatiſes. Trithemius adds, that he Compos'd a great many learned Books, and amongſt the reſt, a Commentary upon Donatus, and other Ancients. Neither of theſe Treatiſes or the foregoing, have been yet Printed, no more than his Sermons.

CHAP. XVI.

The Hiſtory of the Popes, that enjoy'd the Holy See during the Ninth Century.

Of the Popes during the 9th Century.

LEO III. who had been rais'd to the Holy See, about the End of the foregoing Century, dying in the Year 816. he was ſucceeded by Stephen IV. Soon after his Exaltation he impoſed an Oath of Fidelity upon the People of Rome, to be true to Lewis the Godly, and then went into France to viſit this Emperor, where he was very honourably receiv'd: and after he had obtain'd Liberty for ſome Priſoners, and a Return for ſome Perſons that were then in Baniſhment, he returned to Rome, where he dyed a little while after, in the ſeventh Month of his Pontificate.

Stephen IV.

Paſchal I. Paſchal the firſt of that Name, who ſucceeded him, was rais'd to the See of Rome in the Year 817. He immediately gave Notice of his Elevation to Lewis the Godly, according to the Cuſtom of thoſe Times. Having received Letters from Theodorus Studita, and other Defenders of Images perſecuted in the Eaſt; he writ them back a Letter, to comfort them in their Sufferings. There are three Letters which go under his Name, but which are very faulty, and much to be ſuſpected. The firſt is about a Privilege granted to the Church of Ravenna. The ſecond is an Account of the Invention of the Relicks of St. Cecilia. By the third he grants the Pall to the Archbiſhop of Vienna. The two firſt are not worthy of Credit, and the third is doubtful: [They are extant in Tom. 7. of the Councils.]

Eugenius II. Eugenius II. ſucceeded Pope Paſchal in the Year 824. There goes under his Name a Bull, ſent to the Biſhops and Lords of the Army of the Huns, which does not ſeem a very authentick Monument. There are alſo attributed to him ſome Canons, but without doubt they belong to a Council of Rheims, and not to this Pope. There is alſo a Letter under his Name to Bernard, Archbiſhop of Vienna, which has little more to be ſaid for it than the former. [This with another Letter attributed to him, is extant Tom. 7. of the Councils.]

Valentinus, Gregory IV. Valentinus who ſucceeded Eugenius in the Year 827. having lived but few Months, Gregory IV. was raiſed to this Dignity, at the Beginning of the following Year. He came into France to favour the Undertakings of the Children of Lewis the Godly, againſt their Father; threatning to excommunicate the Biſhops that would not be of his Side. But the Biſhops anſwered him boldly, that if he came to excommunicate them, he ſhould return excommunicated by them. We have ſpoken of an Extract of a Letter, which this Pope writ upon this Subject, which is to be found amongſt Agobard's Works. There are alſo two other Letters of this Pope, one upon the Affair of Adlricus Biſhop of Mans, whoſe Cauſe he would have had brought before him, and in the mean Time his Title of Biſhop to ceaſe: And the other upon the Depoſing of Ebbo, which he diſapproves of, and condemns of Violence. [This Pope's Letters are in Tom. 7. of the Councils.]

Sergius II. Sergius II. ſucceeded Pope Gregory IV. in the Year 844. We have but one Letter of this Pope's, by which he makes Drogo Biſhop of Metz his Vicar general in the Countries, on the other ſide of the Alps, in Conſideration that he was Uncle to the Children of Lewis the Godly, and beſides was very fit for that Office. He gives him Power to aſſemble the National Councils of all that Country; to examine the Cauſes of thoſe that ſhall appeal to the Holy See, and to prepare thoſe of Abbots and Biſhops. He forbids any to appeal to Rome, that have not firſt had their Cauſe examined in a Provincial Synod, or in that of the Vicar General; becauſe an Affair may be better underſtood in a Place where it is tranſacted, than any where elſe. This Letter is directed to all the Biſhops on the other ſide the Alpes; 'tis written with a great deal of Weight and worth. [This Letter is printed in Tom 7. of the Councils, p. 1799.]

Of the Popes during the 9th Century.

Leo IV. Leo IV. was choſen Pope, after the Death of Sergius II. the 12*th*. of April, in the Year 847. He governed the Church of Rome eight Years, three Months, and ſome Days; during this Time he wrote divers Letters, but there are but two of them come to us entire, and it is not very certain they are his.

The firſt is a ſhort Letter directed to Prudentius Biſhop of Troyes, by which he commands him to conſecrate an Abby for Ademarus and his Monks, which was to depend upon the Holy See.
